THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF THIS SYSTEM.

SOME years ago, the Author was extensively engaged as a Public Speaker; and, in consequence of the habit of speaking, principally, with the muscles of the throat and breast, he finally broke down,—falling senseless, after speaking about an hour and a half: that was followed by a protracted illness; during which, he providentially discovered the Causes, and also the Remedies, of the difficulties under which he had labored; and now, for months in succession, by the aid of these principles, he often speaks from six to ten hours a day, without the least inconvenience: the principal cause of which is, that the effort is made from the dorsal and abdominal region. Few are aware of the comprehensive nature of the principles here partially unfolded; and probably the Author would now be in a similar state, had it not been for the teachings afforded by children and Indians. To secure a perfectly healthy distribution of the vital fluids throughout the body, and a free and powerful activity of the mind, there must be a full and synchronous action in the brain, the lungs, and the viscera of the abdomen; the soul operating, naturally, on the dorsal and abdominal muscles, and thus setting in motion the whole body.

That he was the first to teach the specific use of those muscles, for a healthy breathing, and the exercise of the vocal organs, as well as blowing on wind instruments for hours together, without injury, he has not the least doubt; and, if any person will produce evidence to the contrary, from any medical writer, or teacher of elocution, previous to 1830, he shall be handsomely rewarded. The time is fast approaching, when this, and its kindred subjects, will be duly appreciated; and it will be seen and felt, that without a practical knowledge of these important principles, no one can become a successful speaker, or teacher: and the opinion is advisedly expressed, that they will produce as great a revolution in regard to the promotion of health, the art of reading and speaking with science and effect, and the perfect development and cultivation of mind, voice, and ear,—as the discovery of the mariner's compass, or the invention of the steam engine, in navigation, manufacture, and travel;—and, to be the medium of introducing such a system, by which so many thousands have been greatly benefited, and hundreds of lives saved, is the occasion of devout gratitude to the INFINITE AUTHOR of all that is GOOD and TRUE.

Testimonials and References.

Five classes were formed in the Academical department of Yale College, and three in the Theological Department. The following is an extract from the testimonials of the latter:

Resolved, That we consider his system exceedingly well adapted to develop and train the voice, and give expression to the passions; and we believe it calculated to promote the health of public speakers. Being persuaded that we have derived essential advantage from his instructions, we hereby express our thanks for the assiduity and skill with which he has directed us in our practice, and most cordially recommend him to the patronage of all who would cultivate their voices with a view to public speaking.

EXTRACT—From Professors of Princeton College and Theological Seminary, N. J.—“We have had good opportunities for witnessing the success of Mr. Bronson. His method of using the organs of speech with most advantage, is preferable to any we have known. He is distinguished from other teachers of elocution by the fact, that instead of trying to impart his own style of declamation, he aims at cultivating the voice, and then leaves the pupil to nature.”

EXTRACT—From the Rev. Mr. Bingham, Marietta, O. to Professor Stuart, Andover, Mass.—“Will you permit me to introduce to your acquaintance, Prof. Bronson, a popular and successful Lecturer on Elocution. He has been for some time past, lecturing to the Professors and students in this College. As a Lecturer on Elocution I have never seen his superior. Our Professors, who have been under the instruction of Dr. Barber, say the same. He has made his subject one of very thorough study—and, what is best of all, he has studied Nature.”

EXTRACT—From the Faculty of Marietta College, Ohio.—“Prof. Bronson has just closed a very successful course of instruction on Elocution in this institution. The principles which he teaches appear to be founded on a philosophical view of man. His illustrations are copious and pertinent; and in his labors to train the voice and develop and cultivate the affections and passions he is indefatigable. His whole course of instruction is marked by a rigid deference to Nature, and is truly simple and unaffected. We take pleasure in recommending him to an intelligent community.”

PROF. BRONSON is a gentleman of much originality of thought, extensive reading and remarkable powers. His Lectures, beyond the charm of novelty, are very interesting.—Albany Evening Journal.

We warmly recommend Prof. Bronson's reading and recitations to the attention of all those who are partial to effectual and powerful elocution. They are an excellent substitute for dramatic exhibitions.—Daily Signal, N. Y.

We feel anxious that a knowledge of Mr. Bronson's peculiar views should be extended, believing them highly important, not only in juvenile education, but to the professional speaker.—National Gazette, Philadelphia.

Prof. Bronson's new theory in relation to the science of Elocution, is, in our judgment, founded in truth, the author being a practical illustration of the soundness of his doctrine.—Oneida Whig, (Utica) N. Y.

From the Philadelphia Daily World.

We render no more than justice in pronouncing Prof. Bronson's Recitations the best we ever heard. His recitation of “The Maniac,” by Lewis, was terrific. We never before saw confirmed, hopeless raving insanity so thoroughly counterfeited by any actor. In the course of his recitations he explains his discoveries (for such they are,) in Elocution.

From the Rev. Mr. Cook, of Hartford, Conn., who received only twelve lessons.

PROF. BRONSON—Dear Sir—My Physician, Dr. Sherwood, of N. Y., directed me to you for aid in recovering the use of my voice. A habit of speaking solely with the muscles of my breast and throat, attributable in part at least to Dr. Barber's instruction, combined with other causes, produced bronchitis, from which I have been suffering more than 18 months. By your directions, I can speak and sing freely without irritating my throat. My voice has its natural tone and compass; and I have the delightful prospect of soon resuming my accustomed labors.

“Professor Bronson's Recitations are the best we ever heard.”—National Intelligencer.

Prof. Bronson's Lectures and Recitations, have given universal delight.—Louisville Journal.

“The Recitations of Mr. Bronson, are almost perfect.”—Baltimore Atheneum and Visitor.

“Mr. Bronson's success has been most complete.”—U. S. Gazette.

“Mr. B. exhibits with surprising ease and power the wonderful capabilities of the human voice, and illustrates convincingly the practicability and importance of cultivating its powers.—Teachers, public speakers, and the youth of both sexes, should avail themselves of this opportunity.”—Newark Adv.

“His superior as a speaker, we have yet to meet, either at the bar, in the pulpit, or on the floor of a legislative body.”—Ohio State Journal, Columbus.

A lady, (Mrs. G. of Boston,) says—“Having been much injured by tight lacing when very young and also by keeping in a bent position at school for years, I was bent forward in such a manner as to suppose I was afflicted with permanent distortion of the spine. Still I resolved to join the class, and prove the truth or falsehood of professor B's predictions, that I should become straight by faithfully attending to the principles. In a few days I was restored.”

EXTRACT—Letter from a distinguished lady in Boston. “Prof. Bronson; Sir—I wish to express to you my grateful acknowledgements for the great benefit I have received from your system. I have for many years been afflicted with extreme weakness of the lungs, which fatigue, either in exercise, conversation or reading, produced not only hoarseness, but loss of voice. I have found, upon trial, my expectations more than realized. I can now, with perfect ease, converse, or read aloud, hour after hour without the least fatigue.”

At the close of his Lectures in the Apollo, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by a crowded house of ticket-holders:

Resolved, That the thanks of the members of this meeting be presented to PROF. BRONSON for his successful efforts (in connection with Mr. F. H. Nash, his Assistant,) to interest, amuse and instruct them. They conclude, by expressing their high admiration of Prof. Bronson's sincerity, zeal and ability in the cause of truth and humanity, and tendering to him their best wishes, that success and prosperity may attend him in his noble and generous enterprise. AMOS BELDEN, Chairman.

E. PARMLY, Secretary.

At a meeting of the Classes, the Rev. CHARLES G. SOMMERS, Chairman, and DR. AMOS JOHNSON, Secretary, the following Resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Ladies and Gentlemen, who have attended a series of Lessons and Lectures, by Prof. Bronson, on Elocution, Music and Physiology, feel great pleasure in expressing their high sense of his urbanity, uncompromising regard for truth, as the basis of Religion and sound Philosophy; as well as their entire belief that his method of imparting knowledge is as natural and interesting, as it is novel; and that it is admirably calculated to promote the health of the Body, and the improvement of the Mind. The Classes desire also to express their indebtedness to Mr. NASH, Prof. B.'s accomplished Associate, whose critical knowledge of VOCAL SCIENCE, so happily connected with unusual Melody and Power of Voice, eminently qualifies him for an Instructor in Music.

PREFACE

TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

IN this work, the Author has given some of the results of his study and practice, in the department of Mental and Vocal Philosophy, for the last fifteen years. Persons, who are familiar with the subjects discussed, can see how much he is indebted to books, and how much to investigation and experience. Whatever is GOOD and TRUE in it, belongs to ALL; for it is from ABOVE. If there be anything false and evil, the Author holds himself responsible for it. His endeavor has been, to furnish a book, which may be useful to every one. He believes that a greater variety will be found in this, than in any other work on the subject;—a variety, too, which will induce deep and careful thinking, and right feeling; and which tends directly, to the end in view, to wit: the development and application, of those principles of MIND and VOICE, which the Author has been engaged in practicing and teaching, in our principal towns and cities, and Institutions of Learning: notices of which may be seen among the accompanying testimonials.

This work is an abridgment of what the Author has written, in three connected, yet separate volumes, as yet unpublished, embracing the subjects of Body and Mind, their natures, relations, and destinies: the work, next in order, is PHYSIOLOGY and PSYCHOLOGY, which, it is expected, will be published the coming year.

One reason why no more quotations are made from the Bible is, that the SACRED VOLUME is nearly ready for the press,—prepared with such a notation as will aid the reader, to pronounce and emphasize it, at sight—it being both a Pronouncing and Rhetorical Bible: it was commenced several years ago, at the request of clergymen and others, who have attended the Author's Biblical Readings and Recitations; and would probably have been laid before the public before this, but for the destruction of a portion of it by fire.

The following work is now "cast upon the waters," in a stereotyped form, not likely soon to be changed. An affectionate Teacher's kindest regards to his Pupils, and respects to a candid and generous public.

NEW YORK, 1845.

PHYSIOLOGICAL INTRODUCTION.

1. Every ART, and SCIENCE, has its Externals, and its Internals, its Generals and Particulars; which must be understood Analytically, and Synthetically, if we would practice either successfully. The Internals of Elocution, are Thoughts and Feelings, and its Externals comprise all that is addressed to our five senses; its Generals are Mind and Body, with their various Languages, or modes of manifestation. Comparatively, Language—is the Tune, Body—the Instrument, and Mind—the Performer: hence, the necessity of becoming acquainted, theoretically and practically, with their NATURES, RELATIONS and USES.

2. As the subjects of MIND and LANGUAGE, are partially unfolded in the following work, in this part, something must be said of the BODY, the harp of ten thousand strings: particularly in regard to structure, position, and the organs to be used for the production and modification of sounds, in Speech and Song: also of Gestures, or Actions; illustrated by appropriate Engravings, which may be imitated by the Pupil, for the purpose of bringing the Body into subjection to the Mind; without, however, any reference to specific Recitations,—lest he should become artificial, instead of natural.

3. The more we contemplate MAN, the more we see and feel the truth, that he is a Microcosm indeed; a miniature-world,—an abstract of creation,—an epitome of the universe,—a finite representation of the INFINITE DEITY! Well saith the heathen motto, "KNOW THYSELF!" and the poet—

"THE PROPER STUDY OF MANKIND—IS MAN."

And it may truly be said, that there is nothing in the Mineral, Vegetable and Animal Kingdoms, that cannot be found, essentially, in the human body; and nothing in the world of Mind, that is not shadowed forth in his spiritual nature: hence, the grandeur, the magnificence—of our subjects, and our objects.

4. The three grand essentials of the Body proper, are the Osseus, or bony system, which fixes its form, and gives it stability: the Muscular, or fleshy system, which is designed to act on the Osseus; and Nervous system, acting on the Muscular: while the Mind, acts on and through the Nervous; receiving its life and power from Him, who is emphatically "THE LIFE:" thus, we can look through Nature, up to Nature's God. Observe, the Analytical course is from outermosts to innermosts, from effects to causes; and the Synthetical progress from innermosts to outermosts; or from causes to effects.

5. NERVES OF ORGANIC LIFE. Every thing must have a beginning: and nothing is made perfect at once. Now in the body, there is a certain portion, called Nerves of Organic Life; because they are the first formed, and constitute the grand medium, through which the soul builds up the Body, with the materials, furnished by the external world. The Soul is the architect, and the body its workmanship. Here is a good representation of this nervous mass, which is a kind of brain, (or series of brain,) that presides over those glands, or workshops, that take charge of the food, digest it, and watch over its changes, till it is made into blood, and then appropriated to the body. The nervous centre, called Semilunar Ganglion and Solar Plexus, may be seen at a, a, a, a; it is situated under the diaphragm and partly behind the stomach: other subordinate centres may be seen at e, e, e, e; also in other places, that need not be designated, as they are very numerous: these centres are like minor posts in a state, or kingdom. At i, is seen a pair of chords, called trisplanchnic nerves: and at o, o, are seen other nerves, with their little brains, or centres, where they come together, forming a line along the spine, from the bottom of the chest, to the top of the neck. From this large collection of Organic Nerves, others proceed to every part of the system, uniting in smaller centres, and forming ganglions in the palms of the hands, balls of the fingers, &c. Our Astronomical system is called the Solar System, because the Sun is its centre, watching over our planets; so, of these nervous centres of the grand and smaller departments of our miniature-universe. Owing to the intimate connection of these nerves with their numerous centres, and with the nerves of the whole body, they are sometimes called the Great Sympathetic Nerves, and Nerves of Vegetable Life. There are three orders of these Nerves: one going to the blood-vessels and other parts of the vascular system; one to the contractile tissues or muscles of involuntary motion; and one to the nerves of organic sensation, conveying the impressions made on the organs.

6. In this view of the Nerves of Respiration, (originating in the Medulla Oblongata, which is an extension of the Cerebellum, (b,) or seat of Voluntary Motion, and of the Cerebrum, (a,) or seat of Rationality,) may be seen the nerve (c,) that goes to the Diaphragm (i,) and is concerned in the office of breathing, which generally acts without the aid of the Will; but yet is controllable by the Will, to a certain extent; for we may breathe fast or slow, long or short. Next above this, is the Spinal Accessory Nerve, used in moving the breast, &c., in respiration; one of its fellow roots goes to the tongue, (d,) and is concerned in mastication, swallowing, speaking, &c. [Some nerves are thrown back, the better to be seen.] Next in order is the pneumogastric, or lungs-and-stomach nerve (f, g, h,) which sends a branch to the meat-pipe, larynx and wind-pipe, (e,) also to the cardiac, or heart plexus, just above, and a little at the right of (g); a recurrent branch goes to the larynx, &c.; other branches go to the face, to exhibit the feelings. All interweave, and bring the vocal organs into important relations with the heart and lungs, with feelings and thoughts; while the main body goes to the stomach, and unites with the great centre of organic life, or solar plexus. The roots of these nerves are in the cerebellum, the seat of motion, a receptacle of life. Now, we see why intensity of thought, carking cares, &c., impede respiration, and infringe on the laws of health, for want of the proper co-operation with the nerves of organic life; inducing dyspepsia, and even consumption; hence, the painful mode of teaching children to read by a book: away with this false system, unless you would inhumanly sacrifice the rising generation on the altar of evil; let the ear, or right feeling predominate: please work out the whole; for you can do it: a hint is sufficient for those who think.

7. Here is an excellent representation of the Nerves of Voluntary Motion, and of Sense, which, with the nerves of Organic Life, and the Respiratory Nerves, constitute the innmosts of the body; also, a posterior, or back view, of the two brains, which is the seat of the Mind, the constituents of which, are Will and Understanding. The letter c, indicates the cerebrum, or large brain, where the Understanding, Rationality, or thought is located; and cb, the cerebellum, or little brain, under, and adjoining the cerebrum, where the horizontal black line is: here is the seat of the Will, Affections, Passions or Emotions; also the seat of the Motive power of the body; and from these proceed the spinal marrow, (me.) enveloped in three different membranes, lying in the hollow of the back bone, and branching off by thirty pairs of spinal nerves into a great many ramifications over every part of the body; pb. the brachial plexus, a reunion or assemblage of the different nerves distributed to the arms, or upper extremities; and ps. the plexus, or folds of nerves, that form the great sciatic nerves, descending to the legs, or lower extremities. From the spinal marrow, the nerves arise by two sets, or bundles of roots; the front (anterior,) one serving for motion, and the back (posterior,) are the nerves of feeling, or sensibility. Now, in all voluntary actions of the body, whether reading, speaking, singing, or working, there should be a perfect harmony and co-operation of the Organic Nerves, Respiratory Nerves, and Motary Nerves; hence, the voluntary effort must be made from the abdomen, where is the great centre of Organic Nerves, in connection with those of Respiration.

8. Here is a striking view of the Muscular, or fleshy portions, that form the medium of communication between the Nerves and the Bones: there are several hundreds, acting on the bones like ropes on the masts of ships: let them be trained in perfect subjection to the Soul, through the Mind; so that whatever is felt & thought, may be bodied forth to the life. Now let us put these three systems, the Nerves, Muscles and Bones, together, and contemplate the whole as a unit, bound up in the skin, and acting in obedience to its rightful owner, the Mind; while that mind is subservient to the Creator of mind.

9. We now descend to the hard parts of the body, which have the least of life in them. This is a very correct representation of the Osseous system, or the bony parts which may be aptly called the basis, or foundation, of the splendid temple we live in; which is three stories high; viz. the cavity below the diaphragm, the one above it, and the skull. Examine minutely each part, the situation and attachment of the different bones of the head, the five short ribs, and the seven long ones, the breast-bone, &c. In a complete human frame, there are 250 bones: they afford us the means of locomotion. Do you see any analogy between the body and language?

10. ZOOLOGY—(the doctrine or science of life.) is a necessary element of education. Whose curiosity has not been excited by the innumerable living beings, and things, with which we are surrounded? Is it not desirable to scrutinize their interiors, and see how they are made, and understand their various uses? Look at a man, a fish, a spider, an oyster, a plant, a stone; observe their differences, in many respects, and their similarities in others: they all have essence, form, use. The tendency of the study of the three kingdoms of nature, the Animal, Vegetable, and Mineral, is to emancipate the human mind from the darkness and slavery of ignorance, into the light and liberty of rational humanity. The things of the Animal kingdom live, and move from an interior power; those of the Vegetable kingdom grow; and those of the Mineral kingdom do not live or grow; they simply exist.

11. Three objects are designed by this engraving: first, to show the body, clothed in its own beautiful envelop, the skin, which is the continent of our most wonderful piece of Mechanism: second, to call attention to the fact, that it is full of pores, or little holes, through which passes out of our systems more than half of what we eat and drink, in the form of what is called insensible perspiration, which is indicated by the cloudy mist, emanating from every part of the surface; and as our bodies wear out, by degrees, and are renewed every seven years, and the skin being the principal evacuating medium for the worn-out particles of the system; the great importance of keeping it in a clean, and consequent healthy condition, by daily washing in soft cold water, must be evident to every one of reflection, it being the safety-valve of the body: and thirdly, to indicate a higher truth, that of the passing off of a subtle and invisible fluid from the mind, in accordance with its state; which is often perceived when certain persons are present; also when powerful speakers are pouring forth their highly wrought affections, and brilliant thoughts; so as to give the mind a kind of ubiquity, co-extensive with their tones and audible words, ruling immense audiences with absolute sway, and demonstrating the power of truth and eloquence.

Animals and Plants increase by nutrition: Minerals by accretion. In infancy, we weigh but a few pounds: at adult age, we exceed one hundred pounds. Whence, but from foreign substances, are the materials of which our organs are composed? In sickness, extreme emaciation proves that our bodies may lose a portion of their bulk, and give back to the world what was once its own. Thus, composition and decomposition, constituting the nutritive function of which living bodies are the centre, are revealed to us by evidences too plain to be misunderstood: may we have power to appreciate them, being assured that all truths are in perfect harmony with each other.

12. Here is a representation of the Human Form clothed and engaged in some of the uses of Elocution. But it is necessary to enter more into the particulars of our subject; which is done in the succeeding parts of this introduction: however, let the reader bear in mind, that only the outlines of subjects are given in the book, designed for such as are determined to dig for truth and eternal principles, as for hidden treasures; whose motto is "Press On."

Animals and Plants endure for a time, and under specific forms, by making the external world a part of their own being; i. e. they have the power imparted to them of self-nourishment, and when this outward supply ceases they die, having completed their term of duration: hence, death, to material existences, is a necessary consequence of life. Not so with minerals: they exist so long as external forces do not destroy them: and if they increase, it is simply by the juxtaposition of other bodies; and if they diminish, it is by the action of a force, or power, from without. Has not every thing its circle? How interesting must be the history of all things, animate and inanimate! Oh that we had eyes to see, and ears to hear, every thing that is manifested around us, within us, and above us!

13. If we would have the Mind act on the Body, and the Body react on the Mind, in an orderly, and, consequently, beneficial manner, it is necessary that the body be in a natural and upright position. The following engraving represents the Thorax, or Chest, which contains the Heart and Lungs; and reason teaches, that no organs should be in the least infringed upon, either by compressions, or by sitting in a bent position. The Lungs are reservoirs for the air, out of which we make sounds, by condensation. All are familiar with the hand-bellows: observe the striking analogy between it and the body, in the act of speaking, singing and blowing. The wind-pipe is like its nose, the lungs like the sides, and the abdominal and dorsal muscles, like its handles; of course, to blow with ease and power, one must take hold of the handles; to speak and sing right, the lower muscles must be used; for there is only one right way of doing anything.

14. This is a view of a well developed and naturally proportioned chest; with space for the lungs, the short ribs thrown outwardly, affording ample room for the free action of the organs: it is the true model of the form of one who would live to a good old age.

15. TIGHT DRESSING. No one can enjoy good health, or perform any kind of labor with ease, or read, speak, or sing, when the thorax is habitually compressed. It diminishes the capacity of the lungs, for receiving the necessary quantity of air to purify the blood, and prevents the proper action of the diaphragm. The following engraving shows the alarming condition of the chest, when compressed by tight lacing; a practice that has hurried, and is now hurrying, hundreds of thousands to a premature grave; besides entailing upon the offspring an accumulation of evils, too awful to contemplate. What is the difference between killing one's self in five minutes with a razor, and doing it in five years by tight lacing, or any other bad habit? Our clothing should never be so tight as to prevent the air from coming between it and the body.

16. Here follows an outline of the chest, or thorax of a female, showing the condition of the bones of the body, as they appear after death, in every one who has habitually worn stays and corsets, enforced by tight lacing. 'But,' says one, 'I do not lace too tight.' If you lace at all, you most certainly do, and will, sooner or later, experience the dreadful consequences. Observe, all the short ribs, from the lower end of the breast-bone, are unnaturally cramped inwardly toward the spine, so that the liver, stomach, and other digestive organs in that vicinity, are pressed into such a small compass, that their functions are greatly interrupted, and all the vessels, bones and viscera are more or less distorted and enfeebled. Cease to do evil, and learn to do well.

17. This engraving, of a bell-shaped glass, C, C, shows how the air gets into the lungs, and some of its effects. A head is placed on the cork, T, representing the wind-pipe, and having a hole through it, L, represents a bladder, tied to the lower end of the cork, to indicate a lung. At D, is seen the diaphragm. The cavity of the bell represents the inside of the thorax, where the heart and lungs are: there is no communication with the external air, except through the hole in the cork; air, entering through that hole, can go only into the bladder. Now, when the centre of the diaphragm is raised to D, the bladder will be flaccid and devoid of air; but when it is dropped, to the situation of the dotted line, a tendency to a vacuum will be the consequence, which can be supplied with air, only through the hole in the cork; the air expanding the bladder to its full extent, is shown by the dotted circle, around L; and when the diaphragm is elevated again, the air will be forced from the bladder; thus, the lungs are inflated and exhausted by this alternate operation of the diaphragm, and of the contraction and elongation of the abdominal muscles; hence, the comparison between the vocal organs proper, and a pair of bellows, is distinctly seen.

MUSCULAR ACTION. These two engravings represent some muscular fibres in two states: the upper one at rest, with a relaxed nervous filament ramified through the fibres, as seen under the microscope; and the lower one in a state of contraction, and the fibres in zigzag lines, with a similar nervous filament passing over them: apply the principle to all muscles. The subject might be greatly extended; but for further information, see the Author's large work on Physiology and Psychology, which will be published as soon as convenient.

18. Here is a representation of the Air Cells in the Lungs, laid open and highly magnified. The body is formed by Blood, which consists of the nutritious portions of our food, and is in the form of very small globules, or little round balls: a representation of which is here presented as seen through a microscope, magnified one thousand times. Every three or four minutes, as a general rule, the blood flows throughout the whole body; and, of course, through the lungs, where it undergoes a purification: hence may be seen the importance of an upright position, and perfect inflation of the lungs; no one can live out his days without them.

19. Here are two attitudes, sitting, and standing, passive and active. Beware of too much stiffness, and too much laxity, of the muscles; be natural and easy. Avoid leaning backwards or forwards, to the right or left: and especially, of resting your head on your hand, with the elbow on something else: by which practice, many have caused a projection of one shoulder, induced spinal affections, &c. Beware of every thing that is improper: such as trying how much you can lift with one hand, &c.

20. Here follows a representation of the position of the diaphragm, and illustrations of its actions, in exhaling and inhaling. Figure 1, in the left engraving, represents the diaphragm in its greatest descent, when we draw in our breath: 2, muscles of the abdomen, when protruded to their full extent, in inhaling: 1, in the right engraving, the diaphragm in its greatest ascent in expiration: 2, the muscles of the abdomen in action, forcing the viscera and diaphragm upwards: the lungs co-operate with the diaphragm and abdominal muscles; or rather, the soul, mind, nerves and muscles act unitedly, and thence with ease, grace and effect. Observe, the Stomach, Liver, &c. are below the diaphragm, and are dependent on it, in a measure, for their actions.

21. Here is a view of the Heart, nearly surrounded by the Lungs, with the different blood-vessels going to, and from them: these organs are shown partially separated; tho' when in their natural positions, they are quite compact together, and wholly fill up the cavity of the chest: every one has two hearts, for the two different kinds of blood, and each heart has two rooms: a, right auricle, that receives all the blood from every part of the body, through the vena cava, or large vein, which is made up of the small veins, e, e, e, e, e; it thence passes into the right ventricle, i, thence into both lungs, where it is purified; after which it passes into the left auricle, and left ventricle, then into the aorta, o, and the carotid and subclavian arteries (u, and v.) to every part of the body; returning every three or four minutes.

22. This engraving represents the larynx, or vocal box, at 1, near the top of the wind-pipe, 2; the bronchial tubes, or branches of the trachea, 3, 4, going to each lung; the left lung is whole; the substance of the right one is removed, to show the ramifications of the bronchial twigs, terminating in the air-cells, 7, 7, 8, like leaves on the trees. The bronchial tubes are the three branches of the wind-pipe, and enter the lungs about one third of the distance from the upper end: hence, how foolish for persons having a sore throat, or larynx, to suppose they have the bronchitis; which consists in a diseased state of the bronchia; generally brought on by an improper mode of breathing, or speaking, &c., with exposure. The remedy may be found in the practice here recommended, with a free use of cold soft water over the whole body, and bandages wet with the same, placed about the chest and neck, to be removed every few hours, as they become dry.

23. Here is a horizontal view of the Glottis: N, F, are the arytenoid cartilages, connected with the chordæ vocales, (vocal cords, or ligaments,) T, V, stretching across from the top of the arytenoid to the point of the thyroid cartilage: these cords can be elongated, and enlarged to produce lower sounds, and contracted and diminished for higher ones: and, at the same time, separated from each other, and allowing more condensed air to pass for the former purposes; or brought nearer together, to favor the latter: there are a great many muscles attached to the larynx, to give variety to the modifications of voice in speech and song

24. Here is a front view of the Vocal Organs: e is the top of the wind-pipe, and within and a little above d is the larynx, or vocal box, where all voice sounds are made: the two horns at the top, represent the upper extremities of the thyroid cartilage: the tubes up and down, and transverse, are blood-vessels: be aware of having anything tight around the neck, also of bending the neck much, impeding the free circulation of the blood, and determining it to the head.

ORATORICAL AND POETICAL ACTION.

POSITIONS OF FEET AND HANDS.

Notes. The Elocutionary Engravings are designed for studies; they involve every variety of Thought and Feeling, and their modes of manifestation: some are to be imitated, others avoided, because of their awkwardness: judge ye. The dotted lines show the directions the hands have taken, till brought to their present position. Some paragraphs are transposed, and extra ones introduced, the better to accommodate the engravings. See the Passions, &c., for further information.

1. THIS SYSTEM unfolds the true Philosophy of MIND and VOICE, in accordance with the nature of Man, and the structure of Language. The Elements are first presented; then, the common combinations, followed by the more difficult ones; all of which are to be practiced in concert, and individually, after the Teacher. These exercises essentially aid in cultivating the Voice and Ear, for all the objects of Speech and Song: while the Principles and Practice tend to develop and perfect both mind and body, agreeably to the Laws, that should govern them. The Vowels must first be mastered, then the Consonants; and the exercises interspersed with reading, and rigid criticism on the Articulation and Pronunciation.

N. B. The words printed in italics and CAPITALS, are more or less emphatic; though other words may be made so, according to the desired effect: the dash (—) indicates a pause for inhalation: connecting words are sometimes excepted.

2. A has four regular sounds: First,

Name sound, or long: ALE; ate, a-zure; rare a-pri-cots; scarce pa-tri-ots; fair brace-lets for la-tent mus-ta-ches; hai-ry ma-gi and sa-pient liter-a-ti for pa-trons; na-tion-al ca-ter-er for ra-di-a-ted sta-mens, and sa-li-ent pas-try with the ha-lo gra-tis; the ra-tion-al plain-tiff tears the cam-bric, and dares the stairs for the sa-vor of rat-sins; they drain the cane-brakes and take the bears by the nape of the neck; the may-or's pray-er to Mayn-ton Sayre is—to be ware of the snares pre-par'd for the matron's shares: a-men has both syllables accented; but it should never be pronounced ah-men (2d a,) nor aw-men.

[A in ALE.]

3. Position. Sit, or stand erect, with the shoulders thrown back, so as to expand the chest, prevent the body from bending, and facilitate full and deep breathing. Open the mouth wide enough to admit two fingers, side-wise, between the teeth, and keep the lips free and limber, that the sounds may flow with clearness and precision; nor let there be too much, nor too little moisture in the mouth. A piece of hard wood, or ivory, an inch, or an inch and a half long, of the size of a pipe-stem, with a notch in each end, if placed between the teeth, perpendicularly, while practicing, will be found very useful in acquiring the habit of opening wide the mouth.

4. E has this sound in certain words; among which are the following: ere, ere-long; feint heirs; the hei-nous Bey pur-veys a bo-quet; (bo-ka;) they rein their prey in its ey-ry, and pay their freight by weight; hey-dey! o-bey the eyre, and do o-bei-sance to the Dey; they sit tete-a-tate (ta-tah-tate,) at troy; also, there and where, in all their compounds,—there-at, there-by, there-fore, there-in, there-on, there-with; where-at, where-by, where-fore, wherein, where-on, where-with, &c.: also, in the contraction of ever and never,—as where-e'er I go, where-e'er I am, I ne'er shall see thee more. "How blest is he, who ne'er consents, By ill advice to walk."

Anecdote. Plato—defines man—"An animal, having two legs, and no feathers." This very imperfect description attracted the ridicule of Di-og-e-nes; who, wittily, and in derision, introduced to his school—a fowl, stripped of its feathers, and contemptuously asked,—"Is this Plato's man?"

Notes. 1. Don't caricature this sound of a and e before r, by giving it undue stress and quantity, in such words as—air, (ay-ur,) pa-rent, (pae-reut,) dare, (day-ur,) chair, there, where, &c., nor give it a flat sound, as some do to e in lieat, pronouncing it blaat. To give this sound properly, separate the teeth an inch, project the lips, and bring forward the corners of the mouth, like a funnel. 2. It would be just as proper in prose, to say, where-ever I go, where-ever I am, I never shall see thee more; as to say in poetry, where-er I am, I near shall see thee more. 3. E in weight, whicy, (i, y, gh are silent,) and a in age, whale, &c., are just alike in sound; and as this sound of e does not occur among its natural, or regular sounds, as classed by our orthoepists, it is called "irregular;" i. e. it borrows this name sound of a; or is sounded like it. 4. Some try to make a distinction between a in fate, and a in fat, calling it a medial sound: which error is owing to t being an abrupt element, and r, a prolonged one; but no one can make a good sound of it, either in speech or song, when thus situated, by giving it a sound unlike the name sound of a; beware of unjust prejudices and prepossessions. I say ra-shun-al, ra-shun-al, &c., for the same reason that I say no-tional and de-notional; because of analogy and effect.

Proverbs. 1. Accusing—is proving, when malice and power sit as judges. 2. Adversity—may make one wise, but not rich. 3. Idle folks—take the most pains. 4. Every one is architect of his own fortune. 5. Fine feathers make fine birds. 6. Go into the country to hear the news of the town. 7. He is a good orator—who convinces himself. 8. If you cannot bite, never show your teeth. 9. Lawyers' houses—are built on the heads of fools. 10. Little, and often, fill the purse. 11. Much, would have more, and lost all. 12. Practice—makes perfect.

The Bible—requires, in its proper delivery, the most extensive practical knowledge of the principles of elocution, and of all the compositions in the world; a better impression may be made, from its correct reading, than from the most luminous commentary.

Varieties. 1. Love what you ought to do, and you can easily do it;—oiled wheels run freely. 2. Cicero says, that Roscius, a Roman orator, could express a sentence in as many different ways by his gestures, as he himself could by his words. 3. Why is the letter A, like a honey-suckle? Because a B follows it. 4. Never speak unless you have something to say, and always stop when you have done. 5. The most essential rule in delivery is—Be natural and in earnest. 6. Our education should be adapted to the full development of body and mind. 7. Truth can never contradict itself; but is eternal and immutable—the same in all ages: the states of men's reception of it—are as various as the principles and subjects of natural creation.

As good have no time, as make bad use of it.

5. Elocution—is an Art, that teaches me how to manifest my feelings and thoughts to others, in such a way as to give them a true idea, and expression of how, and what, I feel and think; and, in so doing, to make them feel and think, as I do. Its object is, to enable me to communicate to the hearers, the whole truth, just as it is; in other words, to give me the ability, to do perfect justice to the subject, to them, and to myself: thus, involving the philosophy of end, cause, and effect,—the correspondence of affection, thoughts and words.

6. The second sound of A is grave, or Italian. An; alms, far; papa calms ma-ma, and commands Charles to craunch the al-monds in the haun-tered paths; his ma-ster de-man-ded a haunch of par-tridge of father; aunt faun-tered the laundress for salve from the banana tree; Jar-vis farms sar-sa-pa-ril-la in Amer-ica; ma-nil-la balm is a charm to halve the qualms in Ra-ven-na; he a-bides in Chi-na, and vaunts to have saun-tered on the a-re-na, to guard the til-la hearths from harm-ful ef-flu-via; they jaun-tered on the so-fa, ar-gu-ing for Quarles' psalms, and for-mula for jaun-dice in Mec-ca or Me-di-na; a calf got the chol-e-ra in Cu-ba, and a-rose to run the gaunt-let for the ayes and noes in A-cel-da-ma.

[A in FAR.]

7. In making the vowel sounds, by expelling them, great care must be taken, to convert all the breath that is emitted, into pure sound, so as not to chafe the internal surface of the throat, and produce a tickling, or hoarseness. The happier and freer from restraint, the better: in laughing, the lower muscles are used involuntarily; hence the adage, 'laugh and be fat.' In breathing, reading, speaking, and singing, there should be no rising of the shoulders, or heaving of the bosom; both tend to error and ill health. Beware of using the lungs, as it is said; let them act, as they are acted upon by the lower muscles.

Notes. 1. This, strictly speaking, is the only natural sound in all languages, and is the easiest made: it merely requires the under jaw to be dropped, and a vocal sound to be produced: all other vowels are derived from it; or, rather, are modifications of it. 2. When a is an article, i. e. when used by itself, it always has this sound, but must not be accented; as, "a man saw a horse in a shop in a meadow;" except as contrasted with the; as, "I sold the man, not a man." 3. When a forms an unaccented syllable, it has this sound: as, a-wake, a-ble, a-like, a-ware, a-tone, a-way, &c. 4. It has a similar sound at the end of words, either with, or without an h: as, No-ah, Han-nah, Sa-rah, Af-rica, A-mer-ica, I-o-ta, dog-ma, &c. Beware of saying, No-er, Sa-rr, &c. 5. It generally has this sound, when followed by a single r in the same syllable: as, ar-son, ar-tis', &c.; also in star-ry, (full of stars), and tar-ry, (deserted with tar.)

Education. The derivation of this word will assist us in understanding its meaning; it being composed of the Latin word e-du-co, to lead or draw out. All developments, both of matter and spirit, are from within—out; not from without—in. The beautiful rose—does not grow by accretion, like the rocks; its life flows into it through the nutriment, imbibed from the earth, the air, and the water, which are incorporated with the very life-blood of the plant as a medium: it is a manifestation of the LIFE that fills all things, and flows into all things, according to their various forms. The analogy holds good as it respects the human mind; tho' vegetables are matter, and mind—is spirit; the former is of course much more confined than the latter. The powers of the mind—must be developed by a power from within, and above itself; and that is the best education, which will accomplish this most rapidly, and effectually, in accordance with the laws of God,—which always have reference to the greatest good and the most truth.

Anecdote. A clergyman, whose turn it was to preach in a certain church, happening to get wet, was standing before the session-room fire, to dry his clothes; and when his colleague came in, he asked him to preach for him; as he was very wet. "No Sir, I thank you;" was the prompt reply: "preach yourself; you will be dry enough in the pulpit."

Proverbs. 1. A burden that one chooses, is not felt. 2. A guilty conscience needs no accuser. 3. After-wit is every body's wit. 4. Enough—is as good as a feast. 5. All is but lip wisdom, that wants experience. 6. Better bend, than break. 7. Children and fools often speak the truth. 8. Out of debt, out of danger. 9. Wade not in unknown waters. 10. Do what you ought, and let come what will. 11. Empty vessels make the greatest sound. 12. Pause, before you follow an example.

Natural and Spiritual. Since we are possessed of both body and soul, it is of the first importance that we make use of natural and spiritual means for obtaining good; i. e. natural and spiritual truths. Our present and eternal destinies—should ever be kept in mind; and that, which is of the greatest moment, receive the principal attention: and, since death—is only a continuation of life, our education should be continuous: both states of being will be best attended to, when seen and attended to in connection.

Varieties. 1. Horses will often do more for a whistle, than a whip: as some youth are best governed by a rod of love. 2. Why is a bankrupt like a clock? Because he must either stop, or go on tick. 3. True reading is true exposition. 4. Conceive the intentions of the author, and enter into the character. 5. The sciences and mechanical arts are the ministers of wisdom, not the end. 6. Do we love our friends more when present, or absent? 7. All natural truths, which respect the works of God in creation, are not only real natural truths, but the glasses and containing principles of spiritual ones.

8. The means to be used, thus to make known my feelings and thoughts, are tones, words, looks, actions, expression, and silence: whence it appears, that the body is the grand medium of communication between myself and others; for by and through the body, are tones, words, looks, and gestures produced. Thus I perceive, that the mind, is the active agent, and the body, the passive agent; that this is the instrument, and that the performer: here I see the elements of mental and vocal philosophy.

9. The third sound of A is broad:

ALL, wall, auc-tion, aus-pice; his vault-ing daugh-ter hault'd the dau-phin in the sauce-pan; the pal-try sauce-box waltz'd in the tea-sau-cer; al-be-it, the mawk-ish au-thor, dined on nau-se-ous sau-sa-ges; the au-burn pal-frey drew lau-rel plau-dits; his naugh-ty dwarf got the groat through the fau-cit; he thwar-ter'd the fal-chion and salted the shawl in false wa-ter; the law-less gav-ky got in-stall'd in the au-tumn, and de-frau-ded the green sward of its bal-dric awn-ing.

[A in ALL.]

10. CURRAN, a celebrated Irish orator, presents us with a signal instance, of what can be accomplished by assiduity and perseverance: his enunciation was so precipitate and confused, that he was called "stuttering Jack Curran." To overcome his numerous defects, he devoted a portion of every day to reading and reciting aloud, slowly, and distinctly, some of the most eloquent extracts in our language: and his success was so complete, that among his excellencies as a speaker, was the clearness of his articulation, and an appropriate intonation, that melodized every sentence.

Notes. 1. To make this sound, drop and project the jaw, and shape the mouth as in the engraving; and when you wish to produce a very grave sound, in speech or song, in addition to the above, swell the windpipe, (which will elongate and enlarge the vocal chords,) and form the voice as low as possible in the larynx; for the longer and larger these chords are, the graver will be the voice; also, practice making sounds, while exhaling and inhaling, to deepen the tones. This sound is broader than the German a. 2. Sometimes has this sound: I thought he caught the cough, when he caught the cloth: he wrought, fought, and sought, but talked naught. 3. Beware of adding an r after a, as lawr, jawr, fawr, &c. 4. The Italian a in the following, is broad. All were appalled at the thralldom of Walter Raleigh, who was almost smothered in the caldron of boiling water.

Habits of thought. Thinking is to the mind what digestion is to the body. We may hear, read, and talk, till we are gray; but if we do not think, and analyze our subjects, and look at them in every aspect, and see the ends, causes, and effects, they will be of little use to us. In thinking, however, we must think clearly and without confusion, as we would examine objects of sight, in order to get a perfect idea of them. Thinking—is spiritually seeing; and we should always think of things so particularly, as to be able to describe them to others with as much accuracy as we do any external objects, which we have seen with our material eyes.

Anecdote. Wild Oats. After the first speech, made by the younger Pitt, in the House of Commons, an old member sarcastically remarked,—"I apprehend that the young gentleman has not yet sown all his wild oats." To which Mr. Pitt politely replied, in the course of an elaborate and eloquent rejoinder, "Age—has its privilege; and the gentleman himself—affords an ample illustration, that I retain food enough for geese to pick."

Proverbs. 1. A calumny, tho' known to be such, generally leaves a stain on the reputation. 2. A blow from a frying pan, tho' it does not hurt, sullies. 3. Fair and softly, go sure and far. 4. Keep your business and conscience well, and they will be sure to keep you well. 5. A man knows no more, to any purpose, than he practices. 6. Bells call others to church, but enter not themselves. 7. Revenge a wrong by forgiving it. 8. Venture not all you have at once. 9. Examine your accounts and your conduct every night. 10. Call me cousin, but don't cozen me. 11. Eagles—fly alone, but sheep flock together. 12. It is good to begin well, but better to end well.

Theology—includes all religions, both heathen and christian; and comprehends the study of the Divine Being, his laws and revelations, and our duty towards Him and our neighbor. It may be divided into four grand divisions; viz. Paganism, Mahomedanism, Judaism, and Christianity. The study of Theology is the highest and noblest in which we can be engaged; but a mere theoretical knowledge, like the sunbeam on the mountain glacier, may only dazzle—to blind; for, unless the heart is warmed with love to God, and love to man, the coldness and barrenness of eternal death will reign in the soul: hence, the all of Religion relates to life; and the life of Religion is—to do good—for the sake of good.

Varieties. He, who studies books alone, will know how things ought to be; and he who studies men, will know how things are. 2. If you would relish your food, labor for it: if you would enjoy your raiment, pay for it before you wear it; if you would sleep soundly, take a clear conscience to bed with you. 3. The more we follow nature, and obey her laws, the longer shall we live; and the farther we deviate from them, the sooner we shall die. 4. Always carry a few prayers with you for constant use. 5. Let compulsion be used when necessary; but deception—never. 6. In China, physicians are always under pay, except when their patrons are sick; then, their salaries are stopped till health is restored. 7. All things speak; note well the language, and gather wisdom from it.

Nature—is but a name for an effect,
Whose cause—is God.

11. Words, I see, are among the principal means used for these important purposes; and they are formed by the organs of voice: these two things, then, demand my first and particular attention, words and voice; words are composed of letters; and the voice, is the effect of the proper actions of certain parts of the body, called vocal organs, converting air into sound; which two mighty instruments, words and voice, must be examined analytically, and synthetically; without which process I cannot understand any thing.

12. The fourth sound of A is short:

AT, att, add; I had rath-er have a bar-rel of as-par-a-gus, than the en-am-el and ag-ate; the ea-bal for bade the mal-e-fac-tor his ap-par-el and jave-lin; Char-ity danc'd in the gran-ary with Cap-ri-corn; the mal-con-tents pass'd thro' Ath-ens in Feb-ru-ary; his cam-els quaff'd the As-phal-tic can-al with fa-cil-ity; plas-ter the ful-low-ground af-ter Jan-u-ary; the ad-vice an-swers on the com-rade's staff; the plaid tas-sel is man-u-fac-tur'd in France; he at-tack'd the tar-iff with rail-le-ry, af-ter he had scath'd the block and tack-le with his ac-id pag-en-try.

13. The more perfect the medium, the better will it subserve the uses of communication. Now, by analyzing the constituents of words and voice, I can ascertain whether they are in a condition, to answer the varied purposes for which they were given; and fortunately for me, while I am thus analyzing the sounds, of which words are composed, I shall, at the same time, become acquainted with the organs of voice and hearing, and gradually accustom them to the performance of their appropriate duties.

Notes. 1. To give the exact sounds of any of the vowels, take words, in which they are found at the beginning, and proceed as if you were going to pronounce the whole word, but stop the instant you have produced the vowel sound; and that is the true one. 2. Beware of clipping this, or any other sound, or changing it: not, I kn go, you kn see, they kn come; but, I can go; you can see; they can come. 3. A, in ate, in verbs, is generally long; but in other parts of speech of more than one syllable, it is usually short; unless under some accent: as—intimate that to my intimate friend; educate that delicate and obstinate child; he calculates to aggravate the case of his affectionate and unfortunate wife; the compassionate son meditates how he may alleviate the condition of his disconsolate mother; vindicate your consulate's honor; deprecate an unregenerate heart, by importunate prayer; the prelate and primate calculate to regulate the ultimates immediately. 4. Observe—that often the sounds of vowels are sometimes modified, or changed, by letters immediately preceding or succeeding; which may be seen, as it respects a, for instance, in ren-e-gade, mem-brane, rep-robate, can-didate, po-ten-tate, night-in-gale, &c.: some having a slight accent on the last syllable; and others having a pre-accent, or followed by a vocal consonant: see previous Note 3. 5. A letter is called short, when it cannot be prolonged in speech, (though it can in Song,) without altering its form; and long, when it can be prolonged without such change: therefore, we call a sound long, or short, because it is seen and felt to be so: as, cold, hot; pale, nat: in making a long sound the glottis is kept open indefinitely; and in making a short one, it is closed suddenly, producing an abrupt sound, like some of the consonants.

Anecdote. Saving Fuel. Some time ago, when modern stoves were first introduced, and offered for sale in a certain city, the render remarked, by way of recommending them, that one stove would save half the fuel. Mr. Y—— being present, replied, "Sir, I will buy two of them, if you please, and then I shall save the whole."

Proverbs. 1. All truths must not be told at all times. 2. A good servant makes a good master. 3. A man in distress, or despair, does as much as ten. 4. Before you make a friend, eat a peck of salt with him. 5. Passion—will master you, if you do not master your passion. 6. Form—is good, but not formality. 7. Every tub must stand on its own bottom. 8. First come, first serv'd. 9. Friendship—cannot stand all on one side. 10. Idleness—is the hot-bed of vice and ignorance. 11. He that will steal a pin, will steal a better thing. 12. If you lie upon roses when young, you will lie upon thorns when old.

Qualifications of Teachers. Inas-much as the nature of no one thing can be understood, without a knowledge of its origin, and the history of its formation, the qualifications of teachers are seen and felt to be so great, as to induce the truly conscientious to exclaim, in view of his duties, "Who is sufficient for these things?" How can we educate the child in a way appropriate to his state and relations, without a knowledge of his mental and physical structure? Is not a knowledge of psychology and physiology as necessary to the educator, as the knowledge of mechanics is to the maker or repairer of a watch? Who would permit a man even to repair a watch, (much less hire a man to make one,) who had only seen its externals? Alas! how poorly qualified are nine-tenths of our teachers for the stations they occupy! almost totally ignorant of the nature and origin of the human mind, and the science of physiology, which teaches us the structure and uses of the body. But how little they understand their calling, when they suppose it to be merely a teaching of book-knowledge; without any regard to the development of mind and body. A teacher should possess a good moral character, and entire self-control; a fund of knowledge, and ability to communicate it; a uniform temper, united with decision and firmness; a mind to discriminate character, and tact to illustrate simply the studies of his pupils; he should be patient and forbearing; pleasant and affectionate, and be capable of overcoming all difficulties, and showing the uses of knowledge.

Varieties. 1. If one were as eloquent as an angel, he would please some folks, much more by listening, than by speaking. 2. An upright politician asks—what recommends a man; a corrupt one—who recommends him. 3. Is any law independent of its maker? 4. Kind words—cost no more than unkind ones. 5. Is it not better to be wise than rich? 6. The power of emphasis—depends on concentration. 7. Manifested wisdom—infers design.

14. There are then, it appears, two kinds of language; an artificial, or conventional language, consisting of words; and a natural language, consisting of tones, looks, actions, expression, and silence; the former is addressed to the eye, by the book, and to the ear, by speech, and must thus be learned; the latter—addresses itself to both eye and ear, at the same moment, and must be thus acquired, so far as they can be acquired. To become an Elocutionist, I must learn both these languages; that of art and science, and that of the passions, to be used according to my subject and object.

15. E has two regular sounds; first, its name sound, or long: EEL; e-ra, e-vil; nei-ther de-ceive nor in-vi-gle the seam-stress; the sleek ne-gro bleats like a sheep; Cæ-sar's e-diet pre-cedes the e-poch of tre-mors; the sheik's beard stream'd like a me-te-or; the ea-gle shriek'd his pæ-an on the lea; the e-go-tist seem'd pleas'd with his ple-na-ry lei-sure to see the co-te-rie; Æ-ne-as Leigh reads Mo-sheim on the e-dile's heath; the peo-ple tre-pann'd the fiend for jeer-ing his pre-m-ier; his liege, at the or-gies, gave œ-il-iads at my niece, who beat him with her be-som, like a cav-a-lier in Greece.

16. Since the body is the grand medium, for communicating feelings and thoughts, (as above mentioned,) I must see to it, that each part performs its proper office, without infringement, or encroachment. By observation and experience, I perceive that the mind uses certain parts for specific purposes; that the larynx is the place where vocal sounds are made, and that the power to produce them, is derived from the combined action of the abdominal and dorsal muscles. Both body and mind are rendered healthy and strong, by a proper use of all their organs and faculties.

17. Irregular Sounds. I and Y often have this sound; as—an-tique, ton-tine; the po-lice of the bas-tile seized the man-da-rin for his ca-price at the mag-a-zine; the unique fi-nan-cier, fa-tigued with his bom-ba-zine va-lise, in his re-treat from Mo-bile, lay by the ma-rines in the ra-vine, and ate ver-di-gris to re-lieve him of the cri-tique. Sheridan, Walker and Perry say, yea yea, and may nay, making the e long; but Johnson, Entick, Jamieson and Webster, and the author, pronounce yea as if spelt yay. Words derived immediately from the French, according to the genius of that language, are accented on the last syllables;—ca-price, fa-tigue, po-lice, &c.

Sorrow—treads heavily, and leaves behind
A deep impression, e'en when she departs;
While Joy—trips by, with steps, as light as wind,
And scarcely leaves a trace upon our hearts
Of her faint foot-falls.

18. That the body may be free, to act in accordance with the dictates of the mind, all unnatural compressions and contractions must be avoided; particularly, cravats and stocks so tight around the neck, as to interfere with the proper action of the vocal organs, and the free circulation of the blood; also, tight waistcoats; double suspenders, made tighter with straps; elevating the feet to a point horizontal with, or above, the seat; and lacing, of any description, around the waist, impeding the freedom of breathing naturally and healthfully.

Anecdote. True Modesty. When Washington had closed his career, in the French and English war, and became a member of the House of Burgesses, in Virginia, the Speaker was directed, by a vote of the house, to return thanks to him, for the distinguished services he had rendered the country. As soon as Washington took his seat, as a member, Speaker Robinson proceeded to discharge the duty assigned him; which he did in such a manner as to confound the young hero, who rose to express his acknowledgments; but such was his confusion, that he was speechless; he blushed, stammered, and trembled for a short time; when the Speaker re-lieved him by saying—"Sit down, Mr. Washington; your modesty is equal to your rator; and that—surpasses the power of any language that I possess."

Proverbs. 1. A blithe heart makes a blooming visage. 2. A deed done has an end. 3. A great city, a great solitude. 4. Desperate cuts—must have desperate cures. 5. All men are not men. 6. A stumble—may prevent a fall. 7. A fool always comes short of his reckoning. 8. Beggars must not be choosers. 9. Better late, than never. 10. Birds of a feather flock together. 11. Nothing is lost in a good market. 12. All is well, that ends well. 13. Like priest, like people.

Varieties. 1. The triumphs of truth—are the most glorious, because they are bloodless; deriving their highest lustre—from the number of the saved, instead of the slain. 2. Wisdom—consists in employing the best means, to accomplish the most important ends. 3. He, who would take you to a place of rice, or immorality, is not your real friend. 4. If gratitude—is due from man—to man, how much more, from man—to his Maker! 5. Arbitrary power—no man can either give, or hold; even conquest cannot confer it: hence, law, and arbitrary power—are at eternal enmity. 6. They who take no delight in virtue, cannot take any—either in the employments, or the inhabitants of heaven. 7. Beware of violating the laws of Life, and you will always be met in mercy, and not in judgment.

The calm of that old reverend brow, the glow
Of its thin silver locks, was like a flash
Of sunlight—in the pauses of a storm.

19. Having examined the structure of the body, I see the necessity of standing, at first, on the left foot, and the right foot a few inches from it, (where it will naturally fall, when raised up,) and pointing its heel toward the hollow of the left foot; of throwing the shoulders back, so as to protrude the chest, that the air may have free access to the air-cells of the lungs; of having the upper part of the body quiescent, and the mind concentrated on the lower muscles, until they act voluntarily.

20. The second sound of E is short: ELL; edge, en; the democrat's ey-i-page was a leather eph-od; the es-quire leap'd from the ped-es-tal in the kettle of eggs; a lep-er clenched the eph-a, zeal-ous of the eb-on feath-er, and held it steady; get the non-pa-reil weap-ons for the rec-on-dite her-o-ine; the ap-pren-tice for-gets the shek-els lent the deaf pre-late for his her-o-ine; the clean-ly leg-ate held the tep-id mead-ow for a special home-stead; ster-e-o-type the pref-ace to the ten-ets as a pre-lude to our ed-i-ble re-tro-spec-tions; yes-ter-day I guess'd the fet-id yeast es-caped with an ep-i-sode from the ep-ic into the pet-als of the sen-na; the pres-age is im-press'd on his ret-i-na in-stead of the keg of phlegm.

21. In these peculiar exercises of voice—are contained all the elements, or principles of articulation, accent, emphasis and expression; and, by their aid, with but little exertion, I shall be enabled to economize my breath, for protracted vocal efforts, and impart all that animation, brilliancy and force, that reading, speaking and singing ever require.

22. Irregulars. A, I, U, and Y, sometimes have this sound: as—any, or many pan-e-gyr-ists of Mur-y-land said,—the bury-ing ground a-gainst the world; says the lan-cet to the trum-pet—get out of my way a-gain, else the bur-ial ser-vice will be said over you in the black-ness of dark-ness; there is sick-ness in the base-ment of our plan-et, from the use of as-sa-fet-i-da, in-stead of her-rings; never say sus-pect for ex-pect, busi-ness for busi-ness, pay-munt for pay-ment, nor gar-munts for gar-ments.

23. As much depends on the quality of which any thing is made, I must attend to the manner, in which these sounds are produced, and see that they are made just right; each having its appropriate weight, form, and quantity. Taking the above position, and opening the mouth wide, turning my lips a little out all round, trumpet fashion, and keeping my eyes on a horizontal level, and inhaling full breaths, I will expel these sixteen vowel sounds into the roof of my mouth, with a suddenness and force similar to the crack of a thong, or the sound of a gun.

An ape—is an ape, a varlet—is a varlet,
Let them be clothed in silk, or scarlet.

Notes. 1. To make this sound of E, drop the under jaw, open the mouth wide, as indicated by the engraving, so as to prevent it from becoming in the least nasal. 2. E, in ent, ence, and ess, generally has this sound; tho' sometimes it slides into short u. 3. When e precedes two r's (rr,) it should always have this sound: as err, er-ror, mer-it, cher-ry, wher-ry; but when followed by only one r, it glides into short u, tho' the under jaw should be much depressed: as—the mer-chant heard the clerk calling on the ser-geant for mer-cy; let the ter-ra-gant learn that the pearls were jerked from the rob-ber in the tax-ern. I is similarly situated in certain words: the girls and birds in a mirth-ful cir-cle, sug-dires to the virgin: see short u. 4. E is silent in the last syllable of—even the shov-els are broken in the oven; a weasel opens the nov-el, with a sick-ning sniv-el; driv-en by a deaf-ening tittle from heav-en, he was of-ten taken and shaken till he was softened and rip-ened seven, or eleven or a doz-en times. 5. The long vowels are open and continuous; the short ones are shut, abrupt, or discrete, and end as soon as made.

Anecdote. A lawyer, to avenge himself on an opponent, wrote "Rascal" in his hat. The owner of the hat took it up, looked rue-fully into it, and turning to the judge, ex-claimed, "I claim the protection of this hon-orable court;—for the opposing counsel has written his name in my hat, and I have strong suspicion that he intends to make off with it."

Proverbs. 1. Make both ends meet. 2. Fair play—is a jewel. 3. Proverbs existed before books. All blood is alike ancient. 5. Beauty—is only skin deep. 6. Handsome is, that handsome does. 7. One fool makes many. 8. Give every one his due. 9. No rose without a thorn. 10. Always have a few maxims on hand for change.

Sublimity and Pathos. As weak lights—are obscured, when surrounded by the daz-zling rays of the sun, so, sublimely, poured around on every side, overshadows the arti-fices of rhetoric: the like of which occurs in painting; for, tho' the light and shade, lie near each other, on the same ground, yet, the light first strikes the eye, and not only ap-pears projecting, but much nearer. Thus, too, in composition, the sublime and pathetic—being nearer our souls, on account of some natural connection and superior splendor, are always more conspicuous than figures; they conceal their art, and keep themselves veiled from our view.

Sounds. 1. The whole sound made is not in the whole air only; but the whole sound is in every particle of air: hence, all sound will enter a small cranny unconfused. 2. At too great a dis-tance, one may hear sounds of the voice, but not the words. 3. One articulate sound confounds another; as when many speak at once. 4. Ar-ticulation requires a mediocrity of loudness.

Varieties. 1. See how we apples swim. 2. He carries two faces. 3. Strain at a gate and swallow a saw-mill. 4. Who is the true gentleman? He whose actions make him such. 5. A sour countenance is a manifest sign of a froward disposition. 6. Speak—as you mean; do—as you profess, and perform what you promise. 7. To be as nothing, is an exalted state: the omnipotence of the heavens—exists in the truly humbled heart.

Whatever way you wend,
Consider well the end.

24. I observe that there are three distinct principles involved in oral words, which are their essences, or vowel sounds; their forms, or the consonants attached to them, and their meaning, or uses. By a quick, combined action of the lower muscles upon their contents, the diaphragm is elevated so as to force the air, or breath, from the lungs into the windpipe, and through the larynx, where it is converted into vowel sounds; which, as they pass out through the mouth, the glottis, epiglottis, palate, tongue, teeth, lips, and nose, make into words.

25. I has two regular sounds: First, its NAME sound, or long: ISLE; ire, i-o-dine: Gen-tiles ob-lige their wines to lie for sac-charine li-lacs to ex-pe-dite their fe-line gibes; the ob-lique grind-stone lies length-wise on the ho-ri-zon; a ti-ny le-vi-a-than, on the heights of the en-vi-rons of Ar-gives, as-pires to sigh through the mi-cro-scope; the e-dile likes spike-nard for his he-li-a-cal ti-a-ra; the mice, in tri-ads, hie from the aisle. si-ne di-e, by a vi-va vo-ce vote; the bi-na-ry di-gest of the chrys-ta-line ma-gi, was hir'd by the choir, as a si-ne-cure, for a li-vre.

[I is ISLE.]

26. These vocal gymnastics produce astonishing power and flexibility of voice, making it strong, clear, liquid, musical and governable; and they are as healthful as they are useful and amusing. As there is only one straight course to any point, so, there is but one right way of doing any thing, and every thing. If I wish to do any thing well, I must first learn how; and if I begin right, and keep so, every step will carry me forward in accomplishing my objects.

Notes. 1. I, in some words, has this sound; particularly, when accented, and at the end of certain nouns and verbs: the ly-cen-un's al-ty proph-e-cy to the dy-nas-ty to mag-ni-fy oth-er's faults, but min-i-fy its own. 2. This first diphthongal sound begins nearly like 21 A, as the engraving indicates, and ends with the name sound of e (a-c). 3. I is not used in any purely English word as a final letter; y being its representative in such a position. 4. When I commences a word, and is in a syllable by itself, if the accent be on the succeeding syllable, it is generally long: as, i-de-a, i-den-ti-fy, i-de-la-try, i-ras-ci-ble, i-ron-i-cal, i-ta-lie, i-tin-e-rant, &c. It is long in the first syllables of vi-tal-i-ty, di-am-eter, di-ur-nal, di-tem-er-a, bi-en-ni-al, cri-te-ri-on, chi-me-ra, bi-og-ra-phy, li-cen-tious, gi-gan-tic, pri-me-val, vi-bra-tion, &c. 5. In words derived from the Greek and Latin, the prefixes bi, (twice,) and tri, (thrice,) the i is generally long.

Anecdote. Seeing a Wind. "I never saw such a wind in all my life;" said a man, during a severe storm, as he entered a temperance hotel. "Saw a wind!" observed another,—"What did it look like?" "Like!" said the traveller, "why, like to have blown my hat off."

ON A MUMMY.

Why should this worthless tegument—endure,

If its undying guest—be lost forever?

O let us keep the soul—embalmed and pure

In living virtue; that when both must sever,
Although corruption—may our frame consume,
Th' immortal spirit—in the skies may bloom.

Proverbs. 1. A crowd, is not company. 2. A drowning man will catch at a straw. 3. Half a loaf is better than no bread. 4. An ill workman quarrels with his tools. 5. Better be alone than in bad company. 6. Count not your chickens before they are hatched. 7. Every body's business, is nobody's business. 8. Fools—make feasts, and wise men eat them. 9. He that will not be counselled, cannot be helped. 10. If it were not for hope, the heart would break. 11. Kindness will creep, when it cannot walk. 12. Oil and truth will get uppermost at last.

General Intelligence. It is a signal improvement of the present day, that the actions and reactions of book-learning, and of general intelligence—are so prompt, so intense, and so pervading all ranks of society. The moment a discovery is made, a principle demonstrated, or a proposition advanced, through the medium of the press, in every part of the world; it finds, immediately, a host, numberless as the sands of the sea, prepared to take it up, to canvass, confirm, refute, or pursue it. At every water-fall, on the line of every canal and rail-road, in the counting-room of every factory and mercantile establishment; on the quarter-deck of every ship that navigates the high seas; on the farm of every intelligent husbandman; in the workshop of every skillful mechanic; at the desk of every school-master; in the office of the lawyer; in the study of the physician and clergyman; at the fireside of every man who has the elements of a good education, not less than in the professed retreats of learning, there is an intellect to seize, to weigh, and to appropriate the suggestions, whether they belong to the world of science, of tenets, or of morals.

Varieties. 1. Ought women be allowed to vote? 2. Nothing is troublesome, that we do willingly. 3. There is a certain kind of pleasure in weeping; grief—is soothed and alleviated, by tears. 4. Labor hard in the field of observation, and turn every thing to a good account. 5. What is a more lovely sight, than that of a youth, growing up under the heavenly influence of goodness and truth? 6. To speak ill, from knowledge, shows a want of character; to speak ill—upon suspicion, shows a want of honest principle. 7. To be perfectly resigned in the whole life and in its every desire, to the will and governance of the Divine Providence, is a worship most pleasing in the sight of the Lord.

To me, tho' bath'd in sorrow's dew,

The dearer, far, art thou:

I lov'd thee, when thy woes were few:

And can I alter—now?

That face, in joy's bright hour, was fair;

Moreauteous, since grief is there;

Tho' somewhat pale thy brow;

And be it mine, to soothe the pain,

Thus pressing on thy heart and brain.

27. Articulation is the cutting out and shaping, in a perfectly distinct and appropriate manner, with the organs of speech, all the simple and compound sounds which our twenty-six letters represent. It is to the ear what a fair hand-writing is to the eye, and relates, of course, to the sounds, not to the names, of both vowels and consonants. It depends on the exact positions and correct operations, of the vocal powers, and on the ability to vary them with rapidity, precision and effect: thus, articulation is purely an intellectual act, and belongs not to any of the brute creation.

28. The second sound of I is short:

IL; inn, imp; the ser-vile spir-it of a rep-tile lib-er-tine is hos-tile to fem-i-nine fi-del-i-ty; the pu-er-ile dis-ci-pline of mer-can-tile chi-cane-ry, is the ar-tif-i-cer of mil-i-tary des-po-tism; the fer-tile eg-gan-tine is des-tin'd for a ju-ve-nile gift; the gen-u-ine pro-file of Cap-tain White-field is the an-tip-o-des of in-di-vi-si-bil-i-ty; the wind, in the vi-cin-i-ty of mount Lib-a-nus, is a me-di-ci-nal for the con-spir-a-cy of the brig-and; and the pris-tine foun-tains of the ad-a-man-tine spring is sul-lied with the guil-ty guil-o-tine; man is an ex-quis-ite e-pit-o-me of the in-fi-nite Di-vin-i-ty, and should be stud-ied as def-i-nite-ly as possible.

29. Two grand objects are, to correct bad habits, and form good ones; which may be done by the practice of analysis and synthesis: that is, taking compound sounds, syllables, words, and sentences into pieces; or, resolving them into their component parts, and then recombining, or putting them together again. Error must be eradicated, or truth cannot be received; we must cease to do evil, and learn to do well: what is true can be received only in proportion as its opposite false is removed.

30. Irregulars. A, E, O, U, and Y, in a few words, have this sound: as—the hom-age giv-en to pret-ty wom-en has been the rich-est busi-ness of pet-ty tyr-an-ny, since the English proph-e-cy of Py-thag-o-rus; the styg-i-an furnace of bus-y Wal-lace, in Hon-ey al-ley, is a med-ley of pyr-i-tes, and the treb-le cyn-o-sure of cyg-nets, hys-sop, and syn-o-nyms.

Notes. 1. Beware of Mr. Walker's error, in giving the sound of long E to the final unaccented I and Y of syllables and words, which is always short: as,—as-per-ee-tee, for as-per-i-ty, nee-mor-ee-tee, for mi-nor-i-ty; char-ee-tee for char-i-ty; pos-see-lee-tee, for pos-si-bil-i-ty, &c. 2. Some give the short sound of I to A in the unaccented syllables of—ad-age, cab-lage, post-age, low-dre, ves-age, &c., which is agreeable to the authorities, and to give the a as in at, savors of affectation. 3. I is silent in evil, devil, cousin, lasin, &c. 4. I, in final unaccented syllables, not ending a word, is generally short; si-mil-i-tude, fi-del-i-ty, mi-nor-i-ty.

A bark, at midnight, sent alone—
To drift upon a moonless sea,—
A late, whose leading chord—is gone,
A wounded bird, that has but one
Imperfect wing—to soar upon,—
Is like what I am—wi hout thee.

Anecdote. Accommodating. A Physician—advertised, that at the request of his friends, he had moved near the church-yard; and trusted that his removal would accommodate many of his patients. No doubt of it.

Proverbs. 1. A thousand probabilities will not make one truth. 2. A hand-saw is a good thing, but not to shave with. 3. Gentility, without ability, is worse than beggary. 4. A man may talk like a wise man, and yet act like a fool. 5. If we would succeed in any thing, we must use the proper means. 6. A liar should have a good memory. 7. Charity begins at home, but does not end there. 8. An ounce of mother wit is worth a pound of learning. 9. Short reckonings make long friends. 10. Custom is the plague of wise men, and the idol of fools. 11. Every one knows best where his own shoe pinches. A faint heart never won a fair lady.

Freedom. When freedom is spoken of, every one has an idea of what is meant; for every one has known what it is to live in freedom, and also what it is to live, and act under restraint. But then it is obvious that different persons feel in freedom, according to circumstances; things which restrain and infringe upon the freedom of some, have no such effect upon others. So that in the same situation in which one would feel free, another would feel himself in bondage. Hence, it is evident that tho' all have a general idea of what freedom is, yet all have not the same idea of it. For as different persons would not all be free in the same circumstances, it follows, that freedom itself is not the same thing to all. Of course, the kinds of freedom are as many and various as the kinds of love are by which we are all governed: and our freedom is genuine or not genuine, according as our ruling love is good or evil.

Varieties. 1. Did you ever consider how many millions of people—live, and die, ignorant of themselves and the world? 2. Stinginess soon becomes a confirmed habit, and increases with our years. 3. The man, who is just, and firm in his purpose, cannot be shaken in his determined mind, either by threats or promises. 4. By continually scolding children and domestics, for small faults, they finally become accustomed to it, and despise the reproof. 5. Good books—are not only a nourishment to the mind, but they enlighten and expand it. 6. Why do we turn from those living in this world, to those who have left it, for the evidences of genuine love? 7. All principles love their nearest relatives, and seek fellowship and conjunction with them.

There are some bosoms—dark and drear,
Which an unwater'd desert are;
Yet there, a curious eye, may trace
Some smiling spot, some verdant place,
Where little flowers, the weeds between
Spend their soft fragrance—all unseen.

31. The organs of speech are, the dorsal and abdominal muscles, the diaphragm and intercostal muscles, the thorax or chest, the lungs, the trachea or wind-pipe, the larynx, (composed of five elastic cartilages, the upper one being the epiglottis,) the glottis, palate, tongue, teeth, lips and nose: but, in all efforts, we must use the whole body. All vowel sounds are made in the larynx, or vocal box, and all the consonant sounds above this organ.

32. O has three regular sounds: first, its NAME sound, or long: OLD; the sloth-ful doge *co*pes with the flo-rist before Pha-raoh, and sows on-ly yai-low oats and o-sier; the home-ly por-trait of the a-tro-cious gold-smith is the yeo-nan-ry's pi-low; Job won't go [O in OLD.] to Rome and pour tal-low o-ver the broach of the pre-co-cious wid-ow Gross; the whole corps of for-gers tore the tro-phy from the fel-low's nose, and told him to store it under the po-ten-tate's so-fa, where the de-co-rus pa-trol pour'd the hou-ry min-nows.

33. A correct and pure articulation, is indispensable to the public speaker, and essential in private conversation: every one, therefore, should make himself master of it. All, who are resolved to acquire such an articulation, and faithfully use the means, (which are here furnished in abundance.) will most certainly succeed, though opposed by slight organic defects; for the mind may obtain supreme control over the whole body.

34. Irregulars. Au. Eau, and Ew, have this sound in a few words: The beau Ros-sau, with mourn-ful hau-teur, stole the haul-boy, bu-reau, cha-teau and flam-beau, and poked them into his port-manteau, before the belle sowed his toe to the har-row, for strew-ing the sheu-bread on the plat-eau.

Anecdote. A Narrow Escape. A pedantic English traveler, boasting that he had been so fortunate, as to escape Mr. Jefferson's celebrated non-importation law, was told by a Yankee lady, "he was a very lucky man: for she understood that the non-importation law prohibited the importing of goods, of which brass—was the chief composition."

Proverbs. 1. Affairs, like self-fish, should *h*ave a long time *soak*ing. 2. A fool's tongue, like a donkey's tail, designates the animal. 3. All are not thieves that *dog*s bark at. 4. An ant may work its heart out, but it can never make honey. 5. Better go around, than fall into the ditch. 6. Church work generally goes on slowly. 7. Those, whom guilt contaminates, it renders equal. 8. Force, without forecast, is little worth. 9. Gen-tleness, without ability, is worse than plain ber-gamy. 10. Invite, rather than avoid labor. 11. He'll go to law, at the wagging of a straw. 12. Hobson's choice,—that, or none.

'Tis not, indeed, my talent—to engage
In lofty trifles; or, to swell my page—
With wind, and noise.

Natural Philosophy—includes all substances that affect our five senses,—hearing, seeing, tasting, smelling and feeling; which substances are called matter, and exist in three states, or conditions,—solid, when the particles cohere together, so as not to be easily separated; as rocks, wood, trees, &c.: liquid, when they cohere slightly, and separate freely; as water: and gaseous, or aeriform state, when they not only separate freely, but tend to recede from each other, as far as the space they occupy, or their pressure will permit.—as air, &c.

Educators, and Education. We all must serve an apprenticeship to the five senses; and, at every step, we need assistance in learning our trade: gentleness, patience, and love—are almost every thing in education: they constitute a mild and blessed atmosphere, which enters into a child's soul, like sunshine into the ros-bud, slowly, but surely expanding it into vigor and beauty. Parents and Teachers must govern their own feelings, and keep their hearts and consciences pure, following principle, instead of impulse. The cultivation of the affections and the development of the body's senses, begin together. The first effort of intellect is to associate the names of objects with the sight of them; hence, the necessity of early habits of observation—of paying attention to surrounding things and events; and enquiring the whys and wherefores of every thing; this will lead to the qual-ities, shapes, and states of inanimate substances: such as hard, soft, round, square, hot, cold, swift, slow, &c.; then of vegetables, afterwards of animals; and finally, of men, angels, and God. In forming the human character, we must not proceed as the sculptor does, in the formation of a statue, working sometimes on one part, then on another; but as nature does in forming a flower, or any other production; throwing out altogether the whole system of being, and all the rudiments of every part.

Varieties. 1. The just man will flourish in spite of envy. 2. Disappointment and suffering, are the school of wisdom. 3. Is corporeal punishment necessary in the school, army and navy? 4. Every thing within the scope of human power, can be accomplished by well-directed efforts. 5. Woman—the morning-star of our youth, the day-star of our manhood, and the evening-star of our age. 6. When Newton was asked—by what means he made his discoveries in science; he replied, "by thinking." 7. Infinity—can never be received fully—by any recipient, either in heaven, or on earth.

The silver eel, in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropp'd with gold;
Round broken columns, clasping ivy twin'd,
And o'er the ruins—stalk'd the stately hind.

O cursed thirst of gold! when, for thy sake,
The fool—throws up his interest in both worlds;
First, starv'd in this, then, damn'd—in that to come.

35. Attend to the quantity and quality of the sounds, which you and others make; that is, the volume and purity of voice, the time occupied, and the manner of enunciating letters, words, and sentences: also, learn their differences and distinctions, and make your voice produce, and your ear observe them. Get clear and distinct ideas and conceptions of things and principles, both as respects spirit, and matter; or you will grope in darkness.

36. The second sound of O is close:

OOZE; do stoop, and choose to ac-cou-tre the gour-mand and trou-ba-dour, with boots and shoes; the soot-y cou-ri-er broods a youth-ful boor to gam-boge the goose for a dou-ceur; Brougham, (Broom,) proves the uncouth dra-goon to be a wound-ed tou-rist by his droop-ing sur-tout; it be-hoves the boo-by to shoot his bou-sy noo-dle soon, lest, buo-yant with soup, the fool moor his poor ca-noe to the roof of the moon.

[O in OOZE.]

37. The difference between expulsion and explosion is, that the latter calls into use, principally, the lungs, or thorax: i. e. the effort is made too much above the diaphragm: the former requires the combined action of the muscles below the midriff; this is favorable to voice and health; that is deleterious, generally, to both: many a one has injured his voice, by this unnatural process, and others have exploded their health, and some their life; beware of it.

Notes. 1. As, in some French words, have this sound; as—chef-d'eau-vre, (she-doovr, a master stroke); also, Eu; as—ma-nu-eure; coup-d'a'il, (coo-dale, first, or slight view); coup-de-main, (a sudden attack); and coup-de-grace, (coo-de-gras, the finishing stroke). 2. Beware of Walker's erroneous notation in pronouncing oo in book, cook, took, tooth, &c., like the second sound of o, as in boon, pool, tooth, &c. In these first examples, the oo is like u in pull; and in the latter the o is close. In the word to, in the following, when it constitutes a part of the verb, the o is close: as—"in the examples alluded to;" "attend t' the exceptions." 3. In concert practice, many will let out their voices, who would read so low as not to be heard, if reading individually.

Proverbs. 1. A fog—cannot be dispelled with a fan. 2. A good tale—is often marr'd in telling. 3. Diligence—makes all things appear easy. 4. A good name—is better than riches. 5. A man may even say his prayers out of time. 6. A pel-les—was not a painter in a day. 7. A plaster is a small amends for a broken head. 8. All are not saints that go to church. 9. A man may live upon little, but he cannot live upon nothing at all. 10. A rolling stone gathers no moss. 11. Patience—is a bitter seed; but it yields sweet fruit. 12. The longest life must have an end.

There is a pleasure—in the pathless woods,
There is a rapture—on the lonely shore,
There is society, where none intrudes,
By the deep Sea, and music—in its roar:
I love not Man—the less, but Nature—more,
From these our interviews, in which I steal
From all I may be, or have been before,
To mingle—with the Universe, and feel—
What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all conceal.

Causes of Greek Perfection. All Greek Philologists have failed to account satisfactorily, for the form, harmony, power, and superiority of that language. The reason seems to be, that they have sought for a thing where it is not to be found; they have look'd into books, to see—what was never written in books; but which alone could be heard. They learned to read by ear, and not by letters; and, instead of having manuscripts before them, they memorized their contents, and made the thoughts their own, by actual appropriation. When an author wished to have his work published, he used the living voice of himself, or of a public orator, for the printer and bookseller: and the public speaker, who was the best qualified for the task, would get the most business: the greater effect they produced, the higher their reputation. The human voice, being the grand instrument, was developed, cultivated, and tuned to the highest perfection. Beware of dead book knowledge, and seek for living, moving nature: touch the letter—only to make it alive with the eternal soul.

Anecdote. I hold a wolf by the ears: which is similar to the phrase—catching a Tartar; supposed to have arisen from a trooper, meeting a Tarter in the woods, and exclaiming, that he had caught one: to which his companion replied,—“Bring him along, then;”—he answered, “I can't;” “Then come yourself;”—“He won't let me.” The meaning of which is, to represent a man grappling with such difficulties, that he knows not how to advance or recede.

Varieties. 1. Is it not strange, that such beautiful flowers—should spring from the dust, on which we tread? 2. Patient, persevering thought—has done more to enlighten and improve mankind, than all the sudden and brilliant efforts of genius. 3. It is astonishing, how much a little added to a little, will, in time, amount to. 4. The happiest state of man—is—that of doing good, for its own sake. 5. It is much safer, to think—what we say, than to say—what we think. 6. In affairs of the heart, the only traffic is—love for love; and the exchange—all for all. 7. There are as many orders of truth, as there are of created objects of order in the world; and as many orders of good—proper to such truth.

There is a spell—in every flower,
A sweetness—in each spray,
And every simple bird—hath power—
To please me, with its lay.
And there is music—on the breeze,
Th't sports along the glade,
The crystal dew-drops—on the trees,
Are gems—by fancy made.
O, there is joy and happiness—
In every thing I see,
Which bids my soul rise up, and bless
The God, th't blesses me.

38. Oratory—in all its refinement, and necessary circumstances, belongs to no particular people, to the exclusion of others; nor is it the gift of nature alone; but, like other acquirements, it is the reward of arduous efforts, under the guidance of consummate skill. Perfection, in this art, as well as in all others, is the work of time and labor, prompted by true feeling, and guided by correct thought.

39. The third sound of O is short:

ON; fore-head, prod-uce; the dol-o-rous coll-ier trode on the bron-z'd ob-e-lisk, and his sol-ace was a com-bat for om-lets made of gor-geous cor-als; the vol-a-tile pro-cess of making [O in ON.] ros-in glob-ules of trop-i-cal mon-ads is extraor-di-na-ry; the doc-ile George for-got the joc-und copse in his som-bre prog-ress to the moss broth in yon-der trough of knowl-edge; beyond the flor-id frosts of morn-ing are the sop-o-rif-ic prod-ucts of the hol-y-days.

40. Dean Kirwan, a celebrated pulpit orator, was so thoroughly convinced of the importance of manner, as an instrument of doing good, that he carefully studied all his tones and gestures; and his well modulated and commanding voice, his striking attitudes, and his varied emphatic action, greatly aided his winged words, in instructing, melting, inflaming, terrifying and overwhelming his auditors.

41. Irregulars. A sometimes has this sound: For what was the wad-dling swan quar-rel-ing with the wasp wan-der-ing and wab-bling in the swamp? it was in a quan-da-ry for the quan-ti-ty of wars be-tween the squash and wash-tub, I war-rant you.

Notes. 1. The o in nor is like o in on and or; and the reason why it appears to be different, is that the letter, when smooth, partakes more of the properties of the vowel than the rest. 2. O is silent in the final syllables of prison, bison, dam-son, ma-son, par-son, sex-ton, ar-son, bla-son, glut-ton, par-don, but-ton, rea-son, mut-ton, la-con, trea-son, reck-on, sea-son, u-ai-son, ho-ri-zon, crim-son, les-son, per-son, Mil-ton, John-son, Thomp-son, &c.

Proverbs. 1. A man of gladness—seldom falls into madness. 2. A new broom sweeps clean. 3. A whetstone—can't itself cut, yet it makes tools cut. 4. Better go around, than fall into the ditch. 5. Religion—is an excellent armor, but a bad cloak. 6. The early bird—catches the worm. 7. Every one's faults are not written in their fore-heads. 8. Fire and water—are excellent servants, but bad masters. 9. Fools and obstinate people, make lawyers rich. 10. Good counsel—has no price. 11. Great barkers—are no biters. 12. Regard the interests of others, as well as your own.

'Tis liberty, alone, that gives the flower
Of fleeting life its lustre, and perfume;
And we are woe'd without it.

Man's soul—in a perpetual motion flows,
And to no outward cause—that motion owes.

Analogies. Light—is used in all languages, as the representative of truth in its power of illustrating the understanding. Sheep, lambs, doves, &c., are analogous to, or represent certain principles and affections of the mind, which are pure and innocent; and hence, we select them as fit representatives of such affections: while, on the other hand, bears, wolves, serpents, and the like, are thought to represent their like affections. In painting and sculpture it is the artist's great aim, to represent, by sensible colors, and to embody under material forms, certain ideas, or principles, which belong to the mind, and give form to his conceptions on canvass, or on marble: and, if his execution be equal to his conception, there will be a perfect correspondence, or analogy, between his picture, or statue, and the ideas, which he had endeavored therein to express. The works of the greatest masters in poetry, and those which will live the longest, contain the most of pure correspondences; for genuine poetry is identical with truth; and it is the truth, in such works, which is their living principle, and the source of their power over the mind.

Anecdote. Ready Wit. A boy, having been praised for his quickness of reply, a gentleman observed,—"When children are so keen in their youth, they are generally stupid when they become advanced in years." "What a very sensible boy you must have been, sir,"—replied the lad.

Varieties. 1. Why is a thinking person like a mirror? because he reflects. 2. Self-sufficiency—is a rock, on which thousands perish; while diffidence, with a proper sense of our strength, and worthiness, generally ensures success. 3. Industry—is the law of our being; it is the demand of nature, of reason, and of God. 4. The generality of mankind—spend the early part of their lives in contributing to render the latter part miserable. 5. When we do wrong, being convinced of it—is the first step towards amendment. 6. The style of writing, adopted by persons of equal education and intelligence, is the criterion of correct language. 7. To go against reason and its dictates, when pure, is to go against God: such reason—is the divine governor of man's life: it is the very voice of God.

THE EVENING BELLS.

Those evening bells, those evening bells!
How many a tale—their music tells
Of youth, and home, and native clime,
When I last heard their soothing chime.

Those pleasant hours have passed away,
And many a heart, that then was gay,
Within the tomb—now darkly dwells,
And hears no more those evening bells.
And so it wot be when I am gone;
That tuneful peal—will still ring on,
When other bards—shall walk these dells,
And sing your praise, sweet evening bells.

42. Yield implicit obedience to all rules and principles, that are founded in nature and science; because, ease, gracefulness, and efficiency, always follow accuracy; but rules may be dispensed with, when you have become divested of bad habits, and have perfected yourself in this useful art. Do not, however, destroy the scaffold, until you have erected the building; and do not raise the super-structure, till you have dug deep, and laid its foundation stones upon a rock.

43. U has three regular sounds: first, NAME sound, or long: MUTE; June re-fu-ses as-tute Ju-ly the juice due to cu-cum-ber; this feu-dal con-nois-sieur is a suit-a-ble co-ad-ju-tor for the cu-ri-ous man-tua-ma-ker; the a-gue and [U is MUTE.] fe-ver is a sin-gu-lar nuisance to the a-cu-men of the mu-lat-to; the cu-rate cal-cu-lates to ed-u-cate this lieu-ten-ant for the tribu-nal of the Duke's ju-di-cat-ure.

44. Elocution, is reading, and speaking, with science, and effect. It consists of two parts: the Science, or its true principles, and the Art, or the method of presenting them. Science is the knowledge of Art, and Art is the practice of Science. By science, or knowledge, we know how to do a thing; and the doing of it is the art. Or, science is the parent, and art is the offspring; or, science is the seed, and art the plant.

45. Irregulars. Ewe, has sometimes this diphthongal sound, which is made by commencing with a conformation of organs much like that required in short e, as in ell, terminating with the sound of o, in ooze; see the engraving. Re-view the dew-y Jew a-new, while the cat mews for the stew. In pronouncing the single sounds, the mouth is in one condition; but, in giving the diphthong, or double sound, it changes in conformity to them.

Notes. 1. U, when long, at the beginning of a word, or syllable, is preceded by the consonant sound of y: i. e. it has this consonant and its own vowel sound: as; u-ni-verse, (yu-ni-verse,) yu-ni-ry, (yen-yu-ry,) stat-u-a-ry, (stat-yu-a-ry,) ewe, (yu) vel-ume, (col-yu-ne,) na-ture, (nat-yu-ry) &c.: but not in col-um, al-um, &c., where the u is short. 2. Never pronounce duty, dooty; tune, toon; news, noos; blue, bloo; slew, sloo; dews, doos; Jews, Joos; Tuesday, Twosday; gratitude, gratitudo, &c. 3. Sound all the syllables full, for a time, regardless of sense, and make every letter that is not silent, tell truly and fully on the ear: there is no danger that you will not clip them enough in practice.

Anecdote. A Dear Wife. A certain extravagant speculator, who failed soon after, informed a relation one evening, that he had that day purchased an elegant set of jewels for his dear wife, which cost him two thousand dollars. "She is a dear wife, indeed,"—was the laconic reply.

Knowledge—dwells

In heads, replete with thoughts of other men;
Wisdom, in minds attentive to their own.

Proverbs. 1. Fools—make fashions, and other people follow them. 2. From nothing, nothing can come. 3. Give but rope enough, and he will hang himself. 4. Punishment—may be tardy, but it is sure to overtake the guilty. 5. He that plants trees, loves others, besides himself. 6. If a fool have success, it always ruins him. 7. It is more easy to threaten, than to do. 8. Learning—makes a man fit company for himself, as well as others. 9 Little strokes ie. great oaks. 10. Make the best of a bad bargain. 11. The more we have, the more we desire. 12. Gentee society—is not always good society.

The Innocent and Guilty. If those, only, who sow to the wind—reap the whirlwind, it would be well: but the mischief is—that the blindness of bigotry, the madness of ambition, and the miscalculation of diplomacy—seek their victims, principally, amongst the innocent and unoffending. The cottage—is sure to suffer, for every error of the court, the cabinet, or the camp. When error—sits in the seat of power and authority, and is generated in high places, it may be compared to that torrent, which originates indeed, in the mountain, but commits its devastation in the vale below.

Eternal Joy. The delight of the soul—is derived from love and wisdom from the Lord; and because love is effective through wisdom, they are both fixed in the effect, which is use: this delight from the Lord flows into the soul, and descends through the superiors and inferiors of the mind—to all the senses of the body, and fulfills itself in them; and thence joy—becomes joy, and also eternal—from the Eternal.

Varieties. 1. Gaming, like quicksand, may swallow up a man in a moment. 2. Real independence—is living within our means. 3. Envy—has slain its thousands; but neglect, its tens of thousands. 4. Is not a sectarian spirit—the devil's wedge—to separate christians from each other? 5. That man is little to be envied, whose patriotism—would not gain force on the plains of Marathon; or whose piety would not grow warmer among the ruins of Ionia. 6. Rational evidence—is stronger than any miracle whenever it convinces the understanding; which miracles do not. 7. Man, in his salvation, has the power of an omnipotent God to fight for him; but in his damnation, he must fight against it, as being ever in the effort to save him.

THE SEASONS.

These, as they change, Almighty Father! these Are but the varied God. The rolling year Is full of thee. Forth in the pleasing spring Thy beauty walks, thy tenderness and love. Wide flush the fields; the soft'ning air is balm; Echo the mountains round; the forest smiles, And ev'ry sense, and ev'ry heart is joy.

Even from the body's purity—the mind—
Receives a secret, sympathetic aid.

46. By ANALYSIS—sounds, syllables, words, and sentences are resolved into their constituent parts; to each is given its own peculiar sound, force, quality, and meaning; and thus, every shade of vocal coloring, of thought and feeling, may be seen and felt. By SYNTHESIS, these parts are again re-united, and presented in all their beautiful and harmonious combinations, exhibiting all the varieties of perception, thought, and emotion, that can be produced by the human mind.

47. The second sound of U is short : UP; an ul-tra numb-skull is a mur-ky scul-lion; she urged her cour-teous hus-band to coup-le himself to a tre-mendous tur-tle; the coun-try ur-chin pur-chased a bunch of [U in UP] mush and tur-nips, with an ef-ful-gent duc-at, and burst with the bulk of fun, because the um-pire de-murr-ed at the suc-co-tash.

48. Lord Mansfield, when quite young, used to recite the orations of Demosthenes, on his native mountains; he also practised before Mr. Pope, the poet, for the benefit of his criticisms; and the consequence was, his melodious voice and graceful diction, made as deep an impression, as the beauties of his style and the excellence of his matter; which obtained for him the appellation of "the silver-toned Murray."

49. Irregulars. A, E, I, O, and Y, occasionally have this sound: the wo-man's hus-band's clerk whirled his *com-ra*de into a bloody flood for mirth and mon-ey; sir squir-rel does noth-ing but shove on-ions up the col-lan-der; the sov-reign monk has just come to the col-ored mon-key, quoth my won-dering mother; this sar-geon bumbs the hor-ror-stricken bed-lam-ites, and cov-ets the com-pa-ny of mar-tyrs and rob-bers, to plun-der some tons of cous-ins of their gloves, com-fort, and hon-ey; the bird en-vel-ops some worms and pome-gran-ates in its stom-ach, a-bove the myr-tle, in front of the tav-ern, thus, tres-pass-ing on the *cov-er-ed vi-and*s; the wan-ton sex-ton en-com-pass-es the earth with gi-ant whirl-winds, and plun-ges its sons into the bot-tom-less o-cean with his shov-el.

Notes. 1. E and U, final, are silent in such words as, bogue, vague, eclogue, synagoge, plague, catalogue, rogue, demagogue, &c. 2. Do justice to every letter and word, and as soon think of stepping backward and forward in walking, as to re-produce your words in reading: nor should you call the words in-correctly, any sooner than you would put on your shoes for your hat, or your boinet for your shawl. 3. When e or i precedes one r, in the same syllable, it generally has this sound: berth, mirth, heard, vir-zin, &c., see N. p. 18. 4. Sometimes r is double in sound, though written single.

Could we—with ink—the ocean fill,

Were earth—of parchment made;

Were every single stick—a quill,

Each man—a scribe by trade;

To write the tricks—of half the sex,

Would drink the ocean dry:—

Gallants, beware, look sharp, take care,

The blind—eat many a fly.

Proverbs. 1. Like the dog in the manger; he will neither do, nor let do. 2. Many a slip between the cup and tip. 3. No great loss, but there is some small gain. 4. Nothing venture, nothing have. 5. One half the world knows not how the other half lives. 6. One story is good till another is told. 7. Pride—goes before, and shame—follows after. 8. Saying and doing, are two things. 9. Some—are wise, and some—are otherwise. 10. That is but an empty purse, that is full of other folk's money. 11. Common fame is generally considered a liar. 12. No weapon, but truth; no law, but love.

Anecdote. Lawyer's Mistake. When the regulations of West Boston bridge were drawn up, by two famous lawyers,—one section, it is said, was written, accepted, and now stands thus: "And the said proprietors shall meet annually, on the first Tues-day of June; provided, the same does not fall on Sunday."

Habits. If parents—only exercised the same forethought, and judgment, about the education of their children, as they do in reference to their shoemaker, carpenter, joiner, or even gardener, it would be much better for these precious ones. In all cases, what is learned, should be learned well: to do which, good teachers—should be preferred to cheap ones. Bad habits, once learned, are not easily corrected: it is better to learn one thing well, and thoroughly, than many things wrong, or imperfectly.

Varieties. 1. Is pride—an indication of talent? 2. A handsome woman—pleases the eye; but a good woman the heart: the former—is a jewel; the latter—a living treasure. 3. An ass—is the gravest beast; an owl—the gravest bird. 4. What a pity it is, when we are speaking of one who is beautiful and gifted, that we cannot add, that he or she is good, happy, and innocent! 5. Don't rely too much on the torches of others; light one of your own. 6. Ignorance—is like a blank sheet of paper, on which we may write; but error—is like a scribbled one. 7. All that the natural sun is to the natural world, that—is the Lord—to his spiritual creation and world, in which are our minds—and hence, he enlightens every man, that cometh into the world.

Our birth—is but a sleep, and a forgetting;
The soul, th't rises with us, our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere—its setting,
And cometh from afar;
Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory—do we come
From God, who is our home.

And 'tis remarkable, that they Talk most, that have the least to say.
Pity—is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants—use it cruelly.
'Tis the first sanction, nature gave to man,
Each other to assist, in what they can.

50. It is not the quantity read, but the manner of reading, and the acquisition of correct and efficient rules, with the ability to apply them, accurately, gracefully, and involuntarily, that indicate progress in these arts: therefore, take one principle, or combination of principles, at a time, and practice it till the object is accomplished: in this way, you may obtain a perfect mastery over your vocal powers, and all the elements of language.

51. The third sound of U is full: FULL; cru-el Bru-tus rued the crude fruit bruised for the pud-ding; the pru-dent ru-ler wound-ed this youth-ful cuck-oo, be-cause he would, could, or should not im-brue his hands in Ruth's gra-el, pre-par'd for a faith-ful [U in FULL] dru-id; the butch-er's bul-let push-ed poor puss on the sin-ful cush-ion, and grace-fully put this tru-ant Prus-sian into the pul-pit for cru-ci-fix-ion.

52. Avoid rapidity and indistinctness of utterance; also, a drawing, mincing, harsh, mouthing, artificial, rumbling, monotonous, whining, stately, pompous, unvaried, wavering, sleepy, boisterous, labored, formal, faltering, trembling, heavy, theatrical, affected, and self-complacent manner; and read, speak, sing, in such a clear, strong, melodious, flexible, winning, bold, sonorous, forcible, round, full, open, brilliant, natural, agreeable, or mellow tone, as the sentiment requires; which contains in itself so sweet a charm, that it almost atones for the absence of argument, sense, and fancy.

53. Irregulars. Ew, O, and Oo, occasionally have this sound: the shrewd woman es-chewed the wolf, which stood pul-ling Ruth's wol-sey, and shook Tru-man Wor-cester's crook, while the brew-er and his but-ly crew huz-z'd for all; you say it is your truth, and I say it is my truth; you may take care of your-self, and I will take care of my-self.

Notes. 1. Beware of omitting vowels occurring between consonants in unaccented syllables: as his'try, for his-to-ry; lit'ral for lit-er-al; vol'try, for vo-ta-ry; pas'tral, for pas-to-ral; num'bring, for num-ber-ing; cor'p'al, for cor-po-ral; gen'ral, for gen-er-al; mem'ry, for mem-ory, &c. Do not pronounce this sound of u like oo in hoon, nor like u in nute; but like u in full: as, chew, not chow, &c. 2. The design of the practice on the forty-four sounds of our letters, each in its turn, is, besides developing and training the voice and ear for all their duties, to exhibit the general laws and analogies of pronunciation, showing how a large number of words should be pronounced, which are often spoken incorrectly.

Anecdote. Stupidity. Said a testy lawyer,—"I believe the jury have been inoculated for stupidity." "That may be," replied his opponent; "but the bar, and the court, are of opinion, that you had it the natural way."

O there are hours, aye moments, that contain Feelings, that years may pass, and never bring.

The soul's dark cottage, batter'd, and decay'd.
Still lets in light, thro' chinks, that time has made.

Proverbs. 1. Away goes the devil, when the door is shut against him. 2. A liar is not to be believed when he speaks the truth. 3. Never speak ill of your neighbors. 4. Constant occupation, prevents temptation. 5. Courage—ought to have eyes, as well as ears. 6. Experience—keeps a dear school; but fools will learn in no other. 7. Follow the wise few, rather than the foolish many. 8. Good actions are the best sacrifice. 9. He who avoids the temptation, avoids the sin. 10. Knowledge—directs practice, yet practice increases knowledge.

Duties. Never cease to avail yourself of information: you must observe closely—read attentively, and digest what you read,—converse extensively with high and low, rich and poor, noble and ignoble, bond and free,—meditate closely and intensely on all the knowledge you acquire, and have it at perfect command. Obtain just conceptions of all you utter—and communicate every thing in its proper order, and clothe it in the most agreeable and effective language. Avoid all redundancy of expression; be neither too close, nor too diffuse,—and, especially, be as perfect as possible, in that branch of oratory, which Demosthenes declared to be the first, second, and third parts of the science,—action.—god-like action,—which relates to every thing seen and heard in the orator.

Elocution.—enables you, at all times, to command attention: its effect will be electric, and strike from heart to heart; and he must be a mere declaimer, who does not feel himself inspired—by the fostering meed of such approbation as mute attention,—and the return of his sentiments, fraught with the sympathy of his audience.

Varieties. 1. Have steamboats—been the occasion of more evil, than good? 2. Those that are idle, are generally troublesome to such as are industrious. 3. Plato says—God is truth, and light—is his shadow. 4. Mal-information—is more hopeless than non-information; for error—is always more difficult to overcome than ignorance. 5. He, that will not reason, is a bigot; he, that cannot reason, is a fool; and he, who dares not reason, is a slave. 6. There is a great difference between a well-spoken man and an orator. 7. The Word of God—is divine, and, in its principles, infinite: no part can really contradict another part, or have a meaning opposite—to what it asserts as true; although it may appear so in the letter: for the letter—killeth; but the spirit—giveth life.

They are sleeping! Who are sleeping?

Pause a moment, softly tread;

Anxious friends—are fondly keeping

Vigils—by the sleeper's bed!

Other hopes have all forsaken,—

One remains,—that slumber deep;

Speak not, lest the slumberer awaken

From that sweet, that saving sleep.

54. A Diphthong, or double sound, is the union of two vowel sounds in one syllable, pronounced by a single continuous effort of the voice. There are four diphthongal sounds, in our language; long i as in isle; oi, in oil; the pure, or long sound of u in lure, and ou in our; which include the same sounds under the forms of long y in rhyme; of oy in coy; of ew in few; and ow in how. These diphthongs are called pure, because they are all heard; and in speaking and singing, only the radical, (or opening fullness of the sound,) should be prolonged, or sung.

55. Diphthongs. Oi and Oy: OIL; broil the joint of loin in poi-son and oint-ment; spoil not the oysters for the boy-den; the boy pitch-es quoits a-droit-ly on the soil, and sub-joins the joists to the pur-loins, and em-plays the de-stroy'd toi-let to soil the res-er-voir, lest he be cloy'd with his me-moirs.

[OI in OIL]

56. The late Mr. Pitt. (Lord Chatham,) was taught to declaim, when a mere boy; and was, even then, much admired for his talent in recitation: the result of which was, that his ease, grace, power, self-possession, and imposing dignity, on his first appearance in the British Parliament, "drew audience and attention, still as night;" and the irresistible force of his action, and the power of his eye, carried conviction with his arguments.

Notes. 1. The radical, or root of this diphthong, commences nearly with 31 a, as in ail, and its vanish, or terminating point, with the name sound of e, as in col; the first of which is indicated by the engraving above. 2. Avoid the vulgar pronunciation of ile, for oil; jice, for joist; piint, for point; bile, for boil; jint, for joint; hist, for hoist; spile, for spoil; quate, for quoit; pur-line, for pur-loin; pi-zen, for poi-son; brile, for broil; chylde, for choyld, &c.: this sound, especially, when given with the jaw much dropp'd, and round'd lips, has in it a captivating nobleness; but beware of extremes. 3. The general rule for pronouncing the vowels is—they are open, continuous, or long, when final in accented words and syllables; as a-ble, fa-ther, aw-ful, me-tre, bi-ble, no-ble, nao-tyl, tu-mult, brutal, poi-son, en-ter-most; but they are shut, discrete, or short, when followed in the same syllable by a consonant; as, ap-ple, ser-er, lit-tle, put-ter, but-ton, sym-pa-thy. Examples of exceptions—ale, are, all, file, note, tune, &c. 4. Another general rule is—a vowel followed by two consonants, that are repeated in the pronunciation, is short; as, mat-ter, ped-lar, bit-ter, but-ter, &c.

Anecdote. The king's evil. A student of medicine, while attending medical lectures in London, and the subject of this evil being on hand, observed—"that the king's evil had been but little known in the United States, since the Revolution."

They are sleeping! Who are sleeping?

Misers, by their hoarded gold;

And, in fancy—now are heaping

Gems and pearls—of price untold.

Golden chains—their limbs encumber,

Diamonds—seem before them strown;

But they waken from their slumber,

And the splendid dream—is flown.

Compare each phrase, examine every line.

Weigh every word, and every thought refine.

Proverbs. 1. Home is home, if it be ever so hamely. 2. It is too late to complain when a thing is done. 3. In a thousand pounds of law, there is not an ounce of lace. 4. Many a true word is spoken in jest. 5. One man's meat is another man's poison. 6. Pride, perceiving humility—HONORABLE, often borrows her cloke. 7. Say-well—is good; but do-well—is better. 8. The eye, that sees all things, sees not itself. 9. The erow—thinks her own birds the whitest. 10. The tears of the congregation are the praises of the minister. 11. Evil to him that evil thinks. 12. Do good, if you expect to receive good.

Our Food. The laws of man's constitution and relation evidently show us, that the plainer, simpler and more natural our food is, the more perfectly these laws will be fulfilled, and the more healthy, vigorous, and long-lived our bodies will be, and consequently the more perfect our senses will be, and the more active and powerful may the intellectual and moral faculties be rendered by cultivation. By this, is not meant that we should eat grass, like the ox, or confine ourselves to any one article of food: by simple food, is meant that which is not compounded, and complicated, and dressed with pungent stimulants, seasoning, or condiments; such kind of food as the Creator designed for us, and in such condition as is best adapted to our anatomical and physiological powers. Some kinds of food are better than others, and adapted to sustain us in every condition; and such, whatever they may be, (and we should ascertain what they are,) should constitute our sustenance: thus shall we the more perfectly fulfil the laws of our being, and secure our best interests.

Varieties. 1. Was Eve, literally, made out of Adam's rib? 2. He—is doubly a conqueror, who, when a conqueror, can conquer himself. 3. People may be borne down by oppression for a time; but, in the end, vengeance will surely overtake their oppressors. 4. It is a great misfortune—not to be able to speak well; and a still greater one, not to know when to be silent. 5. In the hours of study, acquire knowledge that will be useful in after life. 6. Nature—reflects the light of revelation, as the moon does that of the sun. 7. Religion—is to be as much like God, as men can be like him: hence, there is nothing more contrary to religion, than angry disputes and contentions about it.

The waves, that brought them o'er,

Still roll in the bay, and throw their spray,

As they break along the shore:—

Still roll in the bay, as they roll'd that day,

When the May Flower moor'd below;

When the sea around, was black with storms,

And white the shore—with snow.

By reason, man—a Godhead can discern:

But how he should be worship'd, cannot learn.

57. There are no impure diphthongs or triphthongs, in which two or three vowels represent, or unite, in one sound; for all are silent except one; as in air, aunt, awl, plaid, steal, lead, curtain, soar, good, your, cough, feu-dal, dun-geon, beau-ty, a-dieu, view-ing. These silent letters, in connection with the vowels, should be called di-graphs and tri-graphs; that is, doubly and triple written: they sometimes merely indicate the sound of the accompanying vowel, and the derivation of the word. Let me beware of believing anything, unless I can see that it is true: and for the evidence of truth, I will look at the truth itself.

58. Diphthongs; Ou, and Ow: OUR;

Mr. Brown wound an ounce of sound a-round a cloud, and drowned a mouse in a pound of sour chow-der; a drow-sy mouse de-vour'd a house and howl'd a pow-wow a-bout the moun-tains; the gou-ty owl crouched in his tow-er, and the scowl-ing cow bowed down de-vout-ly in her bow-er; the giour (jower) en-shroud-ed in pow-er, en-dow-ed the count's prow-ess with a re-noun'd trow-el, and found him with a stout gown in the coun-ty town.

[OU in OUR]

59. Demosthenes, the Grecian orator, paid many thousands to a teacher in Elocution; and Cicero, the Roman orator, after having completed his education, in other respects, spent two whole years in recitation, under one of the most celebrated tragedians of antiquity. Brutus declared, that he would prefer the honor, of being esteemed the master of Roman eloquence, to the glory of many triumphs.

60. Notes. 1. Ou and ow are the only representatives of this diphthongal sound; the former generally in the middle of words, and the latter at the end: in blow, show, and low, o is silent. 2. There are 12 mono-thongal vowels, or single voice sounds, and 4 diphthongal vowels, or double voice sounds: these are heard in isle, tune, oil and out. 5. There is a very incorrect and offensive sound given by some to this diphthong, particularly in the Northern states, in consequence of drawing the corners of the mouth back, and keeping the teeth too close, while pronouncing it; it may be called a flat, nasal sound: in song it is worse than in speech. It may be represented as follows—heou, neou, goon, peour, deoun, keauty, sheower, &c. Good natured, laughing people, living in cold climates, where they wish to keep the mouth nearly closed, when talking, are often guilty of this vulgarity. It may be avoided by opening the mouth wide, projecting the under jaw and making the sound deep in the throat.

Anecdote. Woman as she should be. A young woman went into a public library, in a certain town, and asked for "Man as he is." "That is out, Miss," said the librarian; "but we have 'Woman as she should be.'" She took the book and the hint too.

Where are the heroes of the ages past: [ones
Where the brave chieftains—where the mighty
Who flourish'd in the infancy of days?

All to the grave gone down!—On their fall'n fame, Ezzulant, mocking at the pride of man,

Lies grim Forgetfulness. The warrior's arm

Lies nerveless on the pillow of its shame:

Hush'd is his stormy voice, and quenched the blaze
Of his red eye-ball.

Proverbs. 1. As you make your bed, so must you lie in it. 2. Be the character you would be called. 3. Choose a calling, th't is adapted to your inclination, and natural abilities. 4. Live—and let live; i. e. do as you would be done by. 5. Character—is the measure of the man. 6. Zealously keep down little expenses, and you will not be likely to incur large ones. 7. Every one knows how to find fault. 8. Fair words and foul play cheat both young and old. 9. Give a dog an ill name, and he will soon be shot. 10. He knows best what is good, who has endured evil. 11. Great pains and little gains, soon make man weary. 12. The fairest rose will wither at last.

Cause and Effect. The evils, which afflict the country, are the joint productions of all parties and all classes. They have been produced by over-banking, over-trading, over-spending, over-dashing, over-driving, over-reaching, over-borrowing, over-eating, over-drinking, over-thinking, over-playing, over-riding, and over-acting of every kind and description, except over-working. Industry is the foundation of society, and the corner-stone of civilization.

Recipients. We receive according to our states of mind and life: if we are in the love and practice of goodness and truth, we become the receivers of them in that proportion; but if otherwise, we form receptacles of their opposites,—falsity and evil. When we are under heavenly influences, we know that all things shall work together for our happiness; and when under infernal influences, they will work together for our misery. Let us then choose, this day, whom we will serve; and then shall we know—where-in consists the art of happiness, and the art of misery.

Varieties. 1. Is not the single fact, that the human mind has thought of another world, good proof that there is one? 2. Tolerance—is good for all, or it is good for none. 3. He who swallows up the substance of the poor, will, in the end, find that it contains a bone, which will choke him. 4. The greatest share of happiness is enjoyed by those, who possess affluence, without superfluity, and can command the comforts of life, without plunging into its luxuries. 5. Do not suppose that every thing is gold, which glitters; build not your hopes on a sandy foundation. 6. The world seems divided into two great classes, agitators and the non-agitators: why should those, who are established on the immutable rock of truth, fear agitation? 7. True humiliation—is a pearl of great price; for where there is no resistance, or obstacle, there,—heaven, and its influences must enter, enlighten, teach, purify, create and support.

The only prison, th't enslaves the soul,
Is the dark habitation, where she dwells,
As in a noisome dungeon.

59. Reading—by vowel sounds only, is analogous to singing by note, instead of by word. This is an exceedingly interesting and important exercise: it is done, simply, by omitting the consonants, and pronouncing the vowels, the same as in their respective words. First, pronounce one or more words, and then re-pronounce them, and leave off the consonants. The vowels constitute the essence of words, and the consonants give that material the proper form.

60 All the vowel sounds, thrice told,—James Parr; Hall Mann; Eve Prest; Ike Sill; Old Pool Forbs; Luke Munn Bull; Hoyle Prout—ate palms walnuts apples, peaches melons, ripe figs, cocoas goosberries hops, cucumbers prunes, and boiled sour-crout, to their entire satisfaction. Ale, ah, all, at; eel, ell; isle, ill; old, ooze, on; mute, up, full; oil, ounce. Now repeat all these vowel sounds consecutively; A, A, A, A; E, E; I, I; O, O, O; U, U, U; Oi. Ou.

61. Elocution—comprehends Expulsion of Sound, Articulation, Force, Time, Pronunciation, Accent, Pauses, Measure and Melody of Speech, Rhythm, Emphasis, the Eight Notes, Intonation, Pitch, Inflexions, Circumflexes, Cadences, Dynamics, Modulation, Style, the Passions, and Rhetorical Action. Reading and Speaking are inseparably connected with music; hence, every step taken in the former, according to this system, will advance one equally in the latter: for Music is but an elegant and refined species of Elocution.

62. CERTAIN VOWELS TO BE PRONOUNCED SEPARATELY. In reading the following, be very deliberate, so as to shape the sounds perfectly, and give each syllable clearly and distinctly; and in all the ex-am-ples, here and elsewhere, make those sounds, that are objects of attention, very prominent. Ba-al, the a-ri-ent a-e-ro-nant and cham-pi-on of fi-ery scor-pi-ons, took his a-e-ri-al flight into the ge-o-met-ri-cal em-py-re-an, and dropped a beau-ti-ful ri-o-let into the Ap-pi-i Forum, where they sung hy-me-ne-al re-qui-ems; Be-el-ze-bub ri-o-lent-ly rent the va-ri-e-ga-ted di-a-dem from his zo-o-log-i-cal cra-ni-um, and placed it on the Eu-ro-pe-an ge-ni-i, to me-li-o-rate their in-cho-ate i-de-a of cu-ring the pit-e-ous in-val-ids of Man-tu-a and Pom-pe-i, with the tri-en-ni-al pan-a-c-e-a of no-al-o-gy, or the lin-e-a-ment of a-ri-es.

Notes. 1. The constituent diphthongal sounds of I are nearly 31 a, and 18 e; those of u, approach to 21 e, and 21 o: those of e, to 31 a, and 21 i; and those of ou to 31 a, and 21 o: make and analyze them; and observe the funnel shape of the lips, which change with the changing sounds in passing from the radicals to their vanishes. 2. Preventives and curatives of incipient disease, may be found in these principles, positions and exercises.

Loveliness—

Needs not the aid of foreign ornament;
But is, when unadorned, adorned the most.

Proverbs. 1. A man is no better for liking himself, if nobody else likes him. 2. A white glove often conceals a dirty hand. 3. Better pass at once, than to be always in danger. 4. Misunderstandings—are often best prevented, by pen and ink. 5. Knowledge is treasure, and memory is the treasury. 6. Crosses—are ladders, leading to heaven. 7. Faint praise, is disparagement. 8. Deliver me from a person, who can talk only on one subject. 9. He who peeps through a key-hole may see what will rex him. 10. If shrewd men play the fosi, they do it with a vengeance. 11. Physicians rarely take medicines. 12. Curses, like chickens, generally come home to roost.

Anecdote. A get-off. Henry the Fourth was instigated to propose war against the Protestants, by the impertinence of his Parliament; whereupon, he declared that he would make every member a captain of a company in the army: the proposal was then unanimously negatived.

Contrasts. Our fair ladies laugh at the Chinese ladies, for depriving themselves of the use of their feet, by tight shoes and bandages, and whose character would be ruined in the estimation of their associates, if they were even suspected of being able to walk:—while they, by the more dangerous and destructive habits of tight-lacing, destroy functions of the body far more important, not only to themselves, but to their offspring; and whole troops of dandies, quite as taper-waisted, and almost as masculine as their mothers, are the natural results of such a gross absurdity. If to be admired—is the motive of such a custom, it is a most paradoxical mode of accomplishing this end; for that which is destructive of health, must be more destructive of beauty—that beauty, in a vain effort to preserve which, the victims of this fashion have devoted themselves to a joyless youth, and a premature decrepitude.

Varieties. 1. Is it best to divulge the truth to all, whatever may be their state of mind and life? 2. A good tale—is never the worse for being twice told. 3. Those who do not love anything, rarely experience great enjoyments; those who do love, often suffer deep griefs. 4. The way to heaven is delightful to those who love to walk in it; and the difficulties we meet with in endeavoring to keep it, do not spring from the nature of the way, but from the state of the traveler. 5. He, who wishes nothing, will gain nothing. 6. It is good to know a great deal; but it is better to make a good use of what we do know. 7. Every day—brings forth something for the mind to be exercised on, either of a mental, or external character; and to be faithful in it, and acquit ourselves with the advantage derived thereby, is both wisdom and duty.

Whether he knew things, or no,
His tongue eternally would go;
For he had impudence—at will.

62. Elocution and Music being inseparable in their nature, every one, of common organization, whether aware of it, or not, uses all the elements of Music in his daily intercourse with society. When we call to one at a distance, we raise the voice to the upper pitches: when to one near by, we drop it to the lower pitches; and when at a medium distance, we raise it to the middle pitches: that is, in the first case, the voice is on, or about the eighth note: in the second, on, or about the first note: and in the last place, on, or about the third or fifth note. In commencing to read or speak in public, one should never commence above his fifth note, or below his third note: and, to ascertain on what particular pitch the lowest natural note of the voice is, pronounce the word ave, by prolonging it, without feeling; and to get the upper one, sound eel, strongly.

64. Vocal Music. In the vowel sounds of our language, are involved all the elements of music; hence, every one who wishes, can learn to sing. These eight vowels, when naturally sounded, by a developed voice, will give the intonations of the notes in the scale, as follows, commencing at the bottom.

1st e in eel, 8	—O—	C note O-8-la-High.
1st i in Isle, 7	—O—	B note
		Tone.
2d o in ooze, 6	—O—	A note
		Tone.
1st o in old, 5	—O—	G note O-5-la-Medium.
		Tone.
4th a in at, 4	—O—	F note
		Half tone.
1st a in ale, 3	—O—	E note O-3-la-Medium.
		Tone.
2d a in ar, 2	—O—	D note
		Tone.
3d a in all, 1	—O—	C note O-1-la-Low.

65. This Diatonic Scale of eight notes, (though there are but seven, the eighth being a repetition of the first,) comprehends five whole tones, and two semi, or half tones. An erect ladder, with seven rounds, is a good representation of it; it stands on the ground, or floor, which is the tonic, or first note; the first round is the second note, or supertonic; the second round is the third note, or mediant; the third round, is the fourth note, or subdominant; between which, and the second round, there is a semitone; the fourth round is the fifth note, or dominant; the fifth round is the sixth note, or submediant; the sixth round is the seventh note, or subtonic; and the seventh round is the eighth note, or octave.

Keep one consistent plan—from end—to end.

Notes. 1. In Song, as well as in Speech, the Articulation, Pitch, Force, and Time, must be attended to; i. e. in both arts, master the right form of the elements, the degree of elevation and depression of the voice, the kind and degree of loudness of sounds, and their duration: there is nothing in singing that may not be found in speaking.

Anecdote. Musical Pun. A young Musician, remarkable for his modesty and sincerity, on his first appearance before the public, finding that he could not give the trills, effectively, assured the audience, by way of apology, "that he trembled so, that he could not shake."

Proverbs. 1. A word—is enough to the wise. 2. It is easier to resist our bad passions at first, than after indulgence. 3. Jokes—are bad coin to all but the jocular. 4. You may find your worst enemy, or best friend—in yourself. 5. Every one has his hobby. 6. Fools—have liberty to say what they please. 7. Give every one his due. 8. He who wants content, cannot find it in an easy chair. 9. Ill-will never spoke well. 10. Lawyer's gowns are lined with the witfulness of their clients. 11. Hunger—is an excellent sauce. 12. I confide, and am at rest.

True Wisdom. All have the faculty given them of growing wise, but not equally wise: by which faculty is not meant the ability to reason about truth and goodness from the sciences, and thus of confirming whatever any one pleases; but that of discerning what is true, choosing what is suitable, and applying it to the various uses of life. He is not the richest man, who is able to comprehend all about making money, and can count millions of dollars; but he, who is in possession of millions, and makes a proper use of them.

Varieties. 1. Does not life—beget life, and death—generate death? 2. The man, who is always complaining, and bewailing his misfortunes, not only feeds his own misery, but wearies and disgusts others. 3. We are apt to regulate our mode of living—more by the example of others, than by the dictates of reason and common sense. 4. Frequent recourse to artifice and cunning—is a proof of a want of capacity, as well as of an illiberal mind. 5. Every one, who does not grow better, as he grows older, is a spendthrift of that time, which is more precious than gold. 6. Do what you know, and you will know what to do. 7. As is the reception of truths, such is the perception of them in all minds. 8. Do you see more than your brother? then be more humble and thankful; hurt not him with thy meat, and strong food: when a man, he will be as able to eat it as yourself, and, perhaps, more so.

Walk with thy fellow creatures: note the hush
And whisperings amongst them. Not a spring
Or leaf—but hath his morning hymn; each bush
And oak—doth know I am. Canst thou not sing?
O leave thy cares and follies I go this way,
And thou art sure to prosper—all the day.

66. The twenty-eight consonant sounds. For the purpose of still further developing and training the voice, and ear, for reading, speaking, and singing, a systematic, and thorough practice, on the twenty-eight consonants, is absolutely essential: in which exercises, it is of the first importance, to make the effort properly, and observe the exact positions of the organs. These consonants are either single, double, or triple; and some of them are vocal sounds, (sub-tonics, or sub-vowels,) others, merely aspirates, breath sounds or atonics: let them be analyzed and presented according to their natures, and uses.

67. B has but one sound, which is its name sound: BA; baa, ball, bat; be, beg; hide, bid; bode, boon, boss; bute, buss, brute; boil, bound; a rob-in imbibed hub-bers from a bob-bin, and gob-bled for cab-bage; the rob-ber blabber-ba-rous-ly, and bam-boo-zled the tab-by na-bob; Ja-cob dab-bled in rib-bons, and played hob-nob with a cob-ler; the bab-oon ba-by gab-bled its gib-ber-ish, and made a hub-bub for its bib and black-ber-ries; the rab-ble's hob-by is, to brow-beat the brom-ble bushes for bil-ber-ries, and bribe the boo-by of his bom-bas-tic black-bird.

[B in BA.]

68. By obtaining correct ideas of the sounds of our letters, and their influences over each other; of the meaning and pronunciation of words, and their power over the understanding and will of man, when properly arranged into sentences, teeming with correct thought and genuine feeling, I may, with proper application and exercise, become a good reader, speaker, and writer.

Notes. 1. To get the vocal sound of b, speak its name, be, and then make a strong effort to pronounce it again, compressing the lips closely; and the moment you give the sound of be, when you get to e, stop, and you will have the right sound; or, pronounce ub, in the usual way, then, with the teeth shut, and the lips very close, prolonging the last sound; and, in both cases, let none of the sound of b, come into the mouth, or pass through the nose. 2. It was in analyzing and practicing the sounds of the letters, and the different pitches and qualities of voice, that the author became acquainted with the principles of VENTRILLOQUISM, (or vocal modulation, as it should be called,) which art is perfectly simple, and can be acquired and practiced by almost any one of common organization. Begin by swallowing the sound, suppressing and depressing it. 3. B is silent in debt, subtle, doubt, lamb, comb, dumb, thunder, limb, crumb, subtle, suc-cumb, blell-ium.

Anecdote. A beautiful English countess said, that the most agreeable compliment she ever had paid her, was from a sailor in the street; who looked at her, as if fascinated, and exclaimed, "Bless me! let me light my pipe at your eyes."

We rise—in glory, as we sink—in pride;
Where boasting—ends, there dignity—begins.

The true, and only friend—is he,
Who, like the Arbor-vitæ true,
Will bear our image—on his heart.
Whatever is excellent, in art, proceeds
From labor and endurance.

Proverbs. 1. Gentility, sent to market, will not buy even a peck of corn. 2. He, that is warm, thinks others so. 3. A true friend—should venture, sometimes, to be a little offensive. 4. It is easy to take a man's part; but the difficulty is to maintain it. 5. Misfortunes—seldom come alone. 6. Never quit certainly—for hope. 7. One—beats the bush, and another—catches the bird. 8. Plough, or not plough,—you must pay your rent. 9. Rome—was not built in a day. 10. Seek till you find, and you will not lose your labor. 11. An oak—is not felled by one stroke. 12. A display of courage—often causes real cowardice.

Party Spirit. The spirit of party—unquestionably, has its source in some of the native passions of the heart; and free governments naturally furnish more of its aliment, than those under which liberty of speech, and of the press is restrained, by the strong arm of power. But so naturally does party run into extremes; so unjust, cruel, and remorseless is it in its excess; so ruthless is the war which it wages against private character; so unscrupulous in the choice of means for the attainment of selfish ends; so sure is it, eventually, to dig the grave of those free institutions of which it pretends to be the necessary accompaniments; so invariably does it end in military despotism, and unmitigated tyranny; that I do not know how the voice and influence of a good man could, with more propriety, be exerted, than in the effort to assuage its violence.

Varieties. 1. Are our ideas innate, or acquired? 2. The mind that is conscious of its own rectitude, disregards the lies of common report. 3. Some—are very liberal, even to profuseness, when they can be so at the expense of others. 4. There are pure lives, else, there were nowhere titics. 5. The glory of wealth and external beauty—is transitory; but virtue—is everlasting. 6. We soon acquire the habits and practices, of those we live with; hence the importance of associating with the best company, and of carefully avoiding such as may corrupt and debase us. 7. The present state is totally different from what men suppose, and make, of it; the reason of our existence—is our growth in the life of heaven; and all things are moved and conspire unto it; and great might be the produce, if we were faithful to the ordinances of heaven.

In eastern lands, they talk in flower's,
And they tell, in a garland, their love and cares;
Each blossom, th't blooms in their garden bowers,

On its leaves, a mystic language bears;
Then gather a wreath from the garden bowers,
And tell the wish of thy heart—in flowers.
Praise, from a friend, or censure, from a foe,
Is lost—on hearers th't our merits know.

As full as an egg is of meat.

69. These arts, like all others, are made up of many little things; if I look well to them, all difficulties will vanish, or be easily overcome. Every youth ought to blush at the thought, of REMAINING ignorant, of the first principles of his native language. I can do almost ANY thing, if I only think so, and try; therefore, let me not say I CAN'T; but I WILL.

70. C has four regular sounds: first, name sound, or that of s, before e, i, and y; cede, ci-on, cy-press; rec-i-pe for cel-i-ba-cy (in the cit-y of Cin-cin-na-ti is a fas-ci-nat-ing sol-ace for civ-il [C in CEDE.] so-ci-e-ty; Cic-e-ro and Ce-cil-i-as, with tac-it re-ci-proc-i-ty di-lac-er-ate the a-cid pun-ice with the fa-cile pin-cers of the vice-ge-ncy; the a-ces-cen-cy of the cit-rons in the pla-cid cel-lar, and the im-bee-lic-lic-o-ric on the cor-nice of the prec-i-pice ex-cite the dis-ci-pline of the doc-ile di-oc-e-san.

71. Lisping—is caused by permitting the tongue to come against, or between the front teeth, when it should not; thus, substituting the breath sound of TH for that of s or sh. This bad habit may be avoided or overcome by practicing the above and similar combinations, with the teeth closely and firmly set; not allowing the tongue to press against the teeth, nor making the effort too near the front part of the mouth. The object to be attained is worthy of great efforts: many can be taught to do a thing, in a proper manner, which they would never find out of themselves.

72. Irregulars. S often has this sound; rise and pro-gress. The pre-cise Sal-lust, starts on stilts, and assists the earths in the u-ni-verse for con-science' sake: he spits base brass and subsists on stripes; the ma-gis-trates sought; So-lus boasts he twists the texts and suits the several sects; the strong masts stood still in the fin-est streets of Syr-a-cuse; Se-sos-tris, still strutting, persists the Swiss ship is sunk, while sweetness sits smiling on the lips. Swan swam over the sea; well swum swan; swan swam back again; well swum swan. Sam Slick sawed six sleek slim slippery saplings. Amidst the mists he thrust his fists against the posts, and insists he sees the ghosts in Sixth street.

Notes. 1. S has the above sound, at the beginning of words, and other situations, when preceded or followed by an aspiral, or a breath consonant. 2. To make this aspirate, place the organs as in the engraving, and begin to whisper the word see; but give none of the sound of c. Never permit sounds to coalesce, that ought to be heard distinctly; hosts, costs, &c. 4. Don't let the teeth remain together an instant, after the sound is made; rather not bring them quite together. 5. C is silent in the following: Czar, arbuscles, victuals, Czarina, (i long c.) muscle, indictable, and second c in Connecticut.

Hear, then, my argument; confess we must,

A God there is—supremely just;

If so, however things affect our sight,

(As sings the bard,) "whatever is—is right."

As the wind blows, you must set your sail.

Good measure, pressed down and running over.

Proverbs. 1. Building—is a sweet impoverishing. 2. Unmanliness—is not so impolite, as over-politeness. 3. Death—is deaf, and hears no denial. 4. Every good scholar is not a good schoolmaster. 5. Fair words break no bones; but foul words many a one. 6. He, who has not bread to spare, should not keep a dog. 7. If you had fewer pretended friends, and more enemies, you would have been a better man. 8. Lean liberty—is better than fat slavery. 9. Much coin—much care; much meat—much malady. 10. The submitting to one wrong—often brings another. 11. Consult your purse, before you do fancy. 12. Do what you ought, come what will.

Anecdote. The Psalter. The Rev. Mr. M—, paid his devours to a lady, who was prepossessed in favor of a Mr. Psalter: her partiality being very evident, the former took occasion to ask, (in a room full of company,) "Pray Miss, how far have you got in your Psalter?" The lady archly replied,—As far as "Blessed is the man."

Book Keeping—is the art of keeping accounts by the way of debt and credit. It teaches us all business transactions, in an exact manner, so that, at any time, the true state of our dealings may be easily known. Its principles are simple, its conclusions natural and certain, and the proportion of its parts complete. The person, who buys or receives, is Dr. (Debtor.) the one who sells, or parts with any thing, is Cr. (Creditor.) that is, Dr. means your charges against the person; and Cr. his against you: therefore, when you sell an article, in charging it, say, "To so and so," (mentioning the article, weight, quantity, number, amount, &c.) "so much:" but when you buy, or receive any thing, in giving credit for it, say, By so and so; mentioning particulars as before. A knowledge of Book-keeping is important to every one who is engaged in any kind of business; and it must be evident, that for the want of it—many losses have been sustained, great injustice done, and many law-suits entailed.

Varieties. 1. Ought lotteries to be abolished? 2. Carking cares, and anxious apprehensions are injurious to body and mind. 3. A good education—is a young man's best capital. 4. He, that is slow to wrath, is better than the mighty. 5. Three difficult things are—to keep a secret, to forget an injury, and make good use of leisure hours. 6. If one speaks from an evil affection, he may influence, but not enlighten; he may cause blind acquiescence, but not action from a conscious sense of right. 7. Men have just so much of life in them, as they have of pure truth and its good—implanted and growing in them.

Would you live an angel's days?

Be honest, just, and wise, always.

73. A perfect knowledge of these elementary and combined sounds, is essential to my becoming a good elocutionist, and is an excellent preparation for studying any of the modern languages: I must master them, or I cannot succeed in acquiring a distinct, appropriate, graceful and effective enunciation; but resolution, self-exertion and perseverance are almost omnipotent: I will try them and see.

74. The second sound of C, is hard, or like k, before a, o, u, k, l, r, t; and generally at the end of words and syllables. Came, car, call, cap; cove, coon, cot; cute cut, crude; coil, cloud; Clark comes to catch clams, crabs and craw-fish to cram his cow; the croak-ing scep-tic, in rac-coon moc-a-sins, suc-cumbs to the arc-tic spec-ta-cle, and ac-com-mo-dates his ac-counts to the oc-cult stuc-co of the e-clip-tic; the crowd claims the clocks, and climbs the cliffs to clutch the crows that craunched the bu-col-ics of the mi-cro-cosm.

[C in CAR.]

75. The chest should be comparatively quiescent, in breathing, speaking and singing; and the dorsal and abdominal muscles be principally used for these purposes. All children are naturally right, in this particular; but they become perverted, during their primary education: hence, the author introduces an entirely new mode of learning the letters, of spelling, and of teaching to read without a book, and then with a book; the same as we learn to talk. The effort—to produce sounds, and to breathe, must be made from the lower muscles, above alluded to: thus by the practice of expelling, (not exploding) the vowel sounds, we return to truth and nature.

76. Irregulars. Ch often have this sound; (the h is silent;) also q and k—always when not silent; the queer co-quette kicks the chi-mer-i-cal ar-chi-tect, for cat-e-chi-sing the crit-i-cal choir about the char-acter of the chro-matic cho-rus; Tieh-i-cus Schenck, the quid-nunc me-chan-ic of Mu-nich, qui-et-ly quits the or-chieves of the Tus-can mosque, on ac-count of the ca-chex-y of cac-o-tech-ny; the piq-want crit-ic quaked at the quilt-ing, and asked ques-tions of the quorum of quilt-ers.

77. The expression of affection is the legitimate function of sound, which is an element prior to, and within language. The affections produce the varieties of sound, whether of joy or of grief; and sound, in speech, manifests both the quality and quantity of the affection: hence, all the music is in the vowel sounds: because, all music is from the affectuous part of the mind, and vowels are its only mediums of manifestation. As music proceeds from affection and is addressed to the affection, a person does not truly sing, unless he sings from affection; nor does a person truly listen, and derive the greatest enjoyment from the music, unless he yields himself fully to the affection, which the music inspires.

Notes. 1. To produce this guttural aspirate, whisper the imaginary word huh, (u short;) or the word hook, in a whispering voice, and the last sound is the one required: the posterior, or root of the tongue being pressed against the uvula, or veil of the palate. 2. Observe the difference between the names of letters, and their peculiar sounds. In giving the names of consonants, we use one, or more vowels, which make no part of the consonant sound; thus, we call the letter C by the name see; but the ee make no part of its sound, which is simply a hiss, made by forcing the air from the lungs, through the teeth, when they are shut, as indicated by the engraving; similar facts attend the other consonants. 3. h is silent before n;—as the Anavish knight knuckled and kneeled to the knut knobs of the Anses' knick-knacks, &c.; gh, have this sound in lough, (loch, a lake; Irish;) ough, (heck, joint of a hind leg of a beast.)

Proverbs. 1. Every dog has his day, and every man his hour. 2. Forbid a fool a thing, and he'll do it. 3. He must rise betimes, that would please every body. 4. It is a long lane that has no turning. 5. Judge not of a ship, as she lies on the stocks. 6. Let them laugh that win. 7. No great loss but there is some small gain. 8. Never too old to learn. 9. No condition so low, but may have hopes; and none so high, but may have fears. 10. The wise man thinks he knows but little; the fool—thinks he knows all. 11. Idleness—is the mother of vice. 12. When tiquor is in, sense—is out.

Anecdote. William Penn—and Thomas Story, on the approach of a shower, took shelter in a tobacco-house; the owner of which—happened to be within: he said to the traveler,—"You enter without leave;—do you know who I am? I am a Justice of the Peace." To which Mr. Story replied—"My friend here—makes such things as thee;—he is Governor of Pennsylvania."

Eternal Progress. It is not only comforting, but encouraging, to think that mind—is awaking; that there is universal progress. Men are borne onward.—whether they will or not. It does not matter. whether they believe that it is an impulse from within, or above, that impels them forward; or, whether they acknowledge that it is the onward tendency of things, controlled by Divine Providence: onward they must go; and, in time, they will be blessed with a clearness of vision, that will leave them at no loss for the whys and the where-fores.

Varieties. 1. To pay great attention to trifles, is a sure sign of a little mind. 2. Which is worse, a bad education, or no education? 3. The mind must be occasionally indulged with relaxation, that it may return to study and reflection with increased vigor. 4. Love, and love only, is the loan for love. 5. To reform measures, there must be a change of men. 6. Sudden and violent changes—are not often productive of advantage—to either church, state or individual. 7. True and sound reason—must ever accord with scripture: he who appeals to one, must appeal to the other; for the word within us, and the word without us—are one, and bear testimony to each other.

78. These principles must be faithfully studied and practiced, with a particular reference to the expulsion of the short vowel sounds, and the prolongation of the long ones; which exhibit quantily in its elementary state. I must exercise my voice and mind, in every useful way, and labor to attain an intimate knowledge of my vocal and mental capacity; then I shall be able to see any defects, and govern myself accordingly.

79. The third sound of C, is like that of Z: suffice; the discerner at sice, dis-cern-i-bly dis-cerns dis-cern-i-ble things with dis-cern-ing dis-cern-ment, and dis-cern-i-ble-ness; the sac-ri-fi-er, in sac-ri-fi- (C in SICE.) cinz, sac-ri-fi-ces the sac-ri-fice on the altar of sac-ri-fice, and suf-fi-eth the law of sac-ri-fice. These are nearly all the words in our language, in which c, sounds like z.

80. Vowels—are the mediums of conveying the affections, which impart life and warmth to speech; and consonants, of the thoughts, which give light and form to it; hence, all letters that are not silent, should be given fully and distinctly. The reason—why the brute creation cannot speak, is, because they have no understanding, as men have; consequently, no thoughts, and of course, no articulating organs: therefore, they merely sound their affections, instead of speaking them; being guided and influenced by instinct, which is a power given them for their preservation and continuance.

81. Irregulars. S, Z, and X, sometimes are thus pronounced; as, the pres-i-dent re-signs his is-o-la-ted hou-ses, and ab-solves the grea-ty hus-sars of Is-lam-ism; the puz-zler puz-zles his brains with na-sal pains, buz-zes about the trees as much as he plea-ses, and re-sumes the zig-zag giz-zards of Xer-xes with dis-sol-ving huz-zas; Xan-thus and Xen-o-pho-n dis-band the pis-mires, which dis-dain to dis-guise their dis-mal phiz-es with their gris-ly beards; Zion's zeal breathes zeph-yrs upon the paths of truths, where re-sides the soul, which loves the tones of music coming up from Nat-ure's res-o-nant tem-ples.

Notes. 1. This vocal diphthongal sound is made by closing the teeth, as in making the name sound of C, and producing the 24 sound of a in the larynx, ending with a hissing sound; or it may be made by drawing out the sound of z in z-est. 2. S, following a vocal consonant, generally sounds like Z: tubs, adds; eggs; needs; pens; cars, &c.; but following an aspirate, or breath consonant, it sounds like c in ceut, facts, tips, muffs, cracks, &c.

Would you taste the tranquil scene?
Be sure—your bosom be serene:
Devoid of hate, devoid of strife,
Devoid of all, th't poisons life,
And much it 'rails you—in their place,
To graft the love of human race.

Be always as merry as ever you can,
For 'tis one delight in a sorrowful man.

82. The perfection of music, as well as of speech, depends upon giving the full and free expression of our thoughts and affections, so as to produce corresponding ones in the minds of others. This is not the work of a day, a month, or a year; but of a life; for it implies the full development of mind and body. The present age presents only a faint idea, of what music and oratory are capable of becoming; for we are surrounded, and loaded, with almost as many bad habits (which prevent the perfect cultivation of humanity,) as an Egyptian mummy is of folds of linen. Let the axe of truth, of principle, be laid at the root of every tree that does not bring forth good fruit. Which do we like better—error, or truth?

Proverbs. 1. A man may be strong, and not move well. 2. It is easier to keep out a bad associate, than to get rid of him, after he has been admitted. 3. Consider well what you do, whence you come, and whither you go. 4. Every fool can find faults, that a great many wise men cannot mend. 5. He who follows his own advice, must take the consequences. 6. In giving, and taking, it is easy mistaking. 7. Letters do not blush. 8. Murder—will out. 9. Nothing that is violent—is permanent. 10. Old foxes want no tutors. 11. The first chapter of fools is, to esteem themselves wise. 12. God—tempers the wind—to the shorn lamb.

Anecdote. Doctor-'em. A physician, having been out gaming, but without success, his servant said, he would go into the next field, and if the birds were there, he would 'doctor-'em.' "Doctor-'em,—what do you mean by that?" inquired his master: "Why, kill 'em, to be sure,"—replied the servant.

Varieties. 1. Which has caused most evil, intemperance, war, or famine? 2. Power, acquired by guilty means, never was, and never will be exercised—to promote good ends. 3. By applying ourselves diligently to any art, science, trade, or profession, we become expert in it. 4. To be fond of a great variety of dishes—is a sure proof of a perverted stomach. 5. Prosperity—often leads persons to give way to their passions, and causes them to forget whence they came, what they are, and whither they are going. 6. Evil persons—asperse the characters of the good, by malicious tales. 7. Every man and woman have a good—proper to them, which they are to perfect and fill up. To do this—is all that is required of them; they need not seek to be in the state of another.

In pleasure's dream, or sorrow's hour,
In crowded hall, or lonely bow'r,
The bus'ness of my soul—shall be—
Forever—to remember thee.

Who more than he is worth doth spend,
E'en makes a rope—his life to end.

83. Elocution or vocal delivery, relates to the propriety of utterance, and is exhibited by a proper enunciation, inflection and emphasis; and signifies—the manner of delivery. It is divided into two parts; the correct, which respects the meaning of what is read or spoken; that is, such a clear and accurate pronunciation of the words, as will render them perfectly intelligible; and the rhetorical, which supposes ficting; whose object is fully to convey, and enforce, the entire sense, with all the variety, strength, and beauty, that taste and emotion demand.

84. The fourth sound of C is SH; after the accent, followed by ea, ie, eo, eou, and iou; O-CEAN; ju-di-cious Pho-ci-on, te-na-cious of his lus-cious spe-cies, ap-pre-ci-ates his con-sci-en-tious as-so- [C in CIA.] ci-ate, who e-nun-ci-ates his sap-o-na-cious pre-science; a Gre-cian pro-fi-cient, with ca-pa-cious su-per-fi-cies and hal-cy-on pron-un-ci-a-tion, de-pre-ci-ates the fe-ro-cious gla-ciers, and ra-pa-cious pro-vin-cial-isms of Cap-a-do-cia.

85. The business of training youth in Elocution, should begin in childhood, before the contraction of bad habits, and while the character is in the rapid process of formation. The first school is the NURSERY: here, at least, may be formed a clear and distinct articulation; which is the first requisite for good reading, speaking and singing: nor can ease and grace, in eloquence and music, be separated from ease and grace in private life, and in the social circle.

86. Irregulars. S, t, and ch, in many words, are thus pronounced: the lus-cious notion of Cham-pagne and pre-cious sugar, in re-ver-sion for pa-tients, is sufficient for the ex-pul-sion of tran-sient ir-ra-tion-al-ity from the ju-di-cial chev-a-liers of Mich-i-gan, in Chi-ca-go; (She-caw-go,) the nau-se-a-ting ra-ci-oc-i-na-tions of sen-sual char-la-tans to pro-pi-ti-ate the pas-sion-ate mar-chion-ess of Che-mung, are mi-nu-ti-a for ra-tion-al fis-ures to make E-gyp-tian op-ti-cians of.

Notes. 1. This aspirate diphthongal sound may be made, by prolonging the letters sh, in a whisper, sh—ow. See engraving. 2. Beware of prolonging this sound too much. 3. Exercise all the muscular, or fleshy parts of the body, and let your efforts be made from the dorsal region; i. e. the small of the back; thus girling up the loins of the mind. 4. If you do not feel refreshed and invigorated by these exercises, after an hour's practice, rest assured you are not in nature's path: if you meet with difficulty, be particular to inform your teacher, who will point out the cause and the remedy. 5. C is silent in Czar, indict, Cue-us, Ctes-i-pho, science, muscle, sence, sceptre, &c.; S, do, in isle, vis-count, island, &c.; Ch, in schism, yacht, (yot), drachm.

True love's the gift, which God has given
To man alone, beneath the heaven.
It is the secret sympathy,
The silver chord, the silken tie,
Which, heart—to heart, and mind—to mind,
In body, and in soul—can bind.

Pleasant the sun,
When first on this delightful land he spreads
His orient beams.

Proverbs. 1. He who sows brambles, must not go barfoot. 2. It is better to do well, than to soy well. 3. Look before you leap. 4. Noth-ing is so bad as not to be good for some-thing. 5. One fool in a house is enough. 6. Put off your armor, and then show your courage. 7. A right choice is half the battle. 8. The fox—is very cunning; but he is more cunning, that catches him. 9. When a person is in fear, he is in no state for enjoyment. 10. When rogues fall out, honest men get their due. 11. Reward—is certain to the faithful. 12. Deceit—shows a little mind.

Anecdote. A gentleman, who had listened attentively to a long, diffuse and highly ornamented prayer, was asked, by one of the members, "if he did not think their minister was very gifted in prayer." "Yes;" he replied, "I think it as good a prayer as was ever offered to a congregation."

Our Persons. If our knowledge of the outlines, proportions, and symmetry of the human form, and of natural attitudes and appropriate gestures were as general as it ought to be, our exercises would be determined by considerations of health, grace and purity of mind; the subject of clothing would be studied in reference to its true purposes—protection against what is with-out, and a tasteful adornment of the person; decency would no longer be determined by fashion, nor the approved costumes of the day be at variance with personal comfort and ease of carriage; and in the place of fantastic figures, called fashionably dressed persons, moving in a constrained and artificial manner, we would be arrayed in vestments adapted to our size, shape, and undulating outline of form, and with drapery flowing in graceful folds, adding to the elasticity of our steps, and to the varied movements of the whole body.

Varieties. 1. The true statesman will never flatter the people; he will leave that for those, who mean to betray them. 2. Will dying for principles—prove any thing more than the sincerity of the martyr? 3. Which is the stronger passion, love, or anger? 4. Public speakers—ought to live longer, and enjoy better health, than others; and they will, if they speak right. 5. Mere imitation—is always fruitless; what we get from others, must be inborn in us, to produce the designed effects. 6. Times of general calamity, and revolution, have ever been productive of the greatest minds. 7. All mere external worship, in which the senses hear, and the mouth speaks, but in which the life—is unconcerned, is perfectly dead, and profiteth nothing.

Habitual evils—change not on a sudden;
But many days, and many sorrows,
Conscious remorse, and anguish—must be felt,
To curb desire, to break the stubborn will,
And work a second nature in the soul,
Ere virtue—can resume the place she lost.
Let the tenor of my life—speak for me.

87. Good reading and speaking is music; and he who can sit unmoved by their charms, is a stranger to correct taste, and lost in insensibility. A single exhibition of natural eloquence, may kindle a love of the art, in the bosom of an aspiring youth, which, in after life, will impel and animate him—through a long career of usefulness. Self-made men are the glory of the world.

88. D has two sounds; first, its name sound; DAME; dart, dawn, dab; deed, dead; die, did; dole, do, dog; duke, duck, druid; doit, doubt; a dan-dy de-fraud-ed his dad-dy of his sec-ond-hand-ed sad-dle, and dubbed the [D in DO.] had-dok a la-dy-bird; the doub-le hrod-ed pat-dy, nod-ding at noon-day, de-ter-mined to rid-dle ted-ded hay in the fields till dooms-day; the dog-ged dry-ads ad-dict-ed to depre-dations, robbed the day-dawn of its dread-ed di-a-dem, and erred and strayed a good deal the down-ward road to ad-cendum.

89. I must give all the sounds, particularly the final ones, with great care, and never run the words together, making one, out of three. And—is pronounced six different ways; only one of which is right. Some call it an, or en; others, un, 'nd, or n; and a few—and; thus good-an-bad caus-en-effect; loaves-en-fishes, hills-un groves; pen-un-ink, you-nd I, or youn-I; an-de-said; hooks-en-eyes, wor-sen-worse, pleasure-un-pain; cakes-n-beer, to-un-the; round'n-round, ol-d'n-young, voice-n-ear; bread-en-butter; vir-tu-n-vice; Jame-zen-John: solem-un-sub-lime, up-'n-down, pies'-n-cakes. I will avoid such glaring faults, and give to each letter its appropriate sound.

Notes. 1. Here the delicate ear may perceive the aspirate after the vocal part of d, as after b, and some other letters. The *v*ocal is made, (see engraving,) by pressing the tongue against the gums of the upper fore-teeth, (the incisors,) and the roof of the mouth, beginning to say d, without the c sound; and the aspirated part, by removing the tongue, and the organs taking their natural positions; but avoid giving the aspirate of the vocal consonants, any vocality. 2. By whispering the vocal consonants, the aspirate only is heard. 3. D is silent in haut-sel, hand-saw, hand-some, hand-ker-chief, and the first d in Wednes-day, stadt-hol-ler, and in Dnie-per, (Nee-per), and Danes-ter, (Nee-ter). 4. Do not give the sound of j to d in any word; as—grand-eur, sold-ier, vert-u-e, ed-u-cate, ob-di-rate, cred-u-lous, mol-u-late, &c.; but speak them as though written grand-yur, sold-yur, &c.; the same analogy prevails in na-ture, fort-u-ne, &c. 5. The following participles and adjectives, should be pronounced without abridgment; a bles-sed man gives unfeign-ed thanks to his learn-ed friend, and belov-ed lady; some wing-ed animals are cur-sed things; you say he curs'd and bles-s'd him, for he feign'd that he had learn'd his lesson. 6. Pronounce words in the Bible, the same as in other books.

Anecdote. Blushing. A certain fashionable and dissipated youth, more famed for his red nose, than for his wit, on approaching a female, who was highly rouged, said; "Miss; you blush from modesty." "Pardon me Sir,"—she replied, "I blush from reflection."

Kindness—in woman, not their beauteous looks
Should win my love.

90. As practicing on the gutturals very much improves the voice, by giving it depth of tone, and imparting to it smoothness and strength, I will repeat the following, with force and energy, and at the same time convert all the breath into sound: the dis-carded hands dread-ed the sounds of the muffled drums, that broke on the sad-den'd dream-er's ears, mad-dened by des-pair; the blood eb'b'd and flow'd from their double dy'd shields, and worlds on worlds, and friends on friends by thousands roll'd.

Proverbs. 1. An irritable and passionate man—is a downright drunkard. 2. Better go to heaven in rags, than to hell, in embroidery. 3. Common sense—is the growth of all countries, but very rare. 4. Death has nothing terrible in it, but what life has made so. 5. Every vice fights against nature. 6. Folly—is never long pleased with itself. 7. Guilt—is always jealous. 8. He that shows his passion, tells his enemy where to hit him. 9. It is pride, not nature, that craves much. 10. Keep out of broils, and you will neither be a principal nor a witness. 11. One dog barking, another soon joins him. 12. Money—is a good servant, but a bad master.

Charges. We see that all material objects around us are changing; their colors change just as the particles are disturbed in their relations. This result is not owing to any natural cause, but to the Divine Power. And are there not higher influences more potent, tho' invisible, acting on man's moral nature, pervading the deepest abysses of his affection, and the darkest recesses of his thoughts; to purify the one, and enlighten the other, and from the chaos of both—to educe order, beauty and happiness? And why is it not changed? Shall we deny to his moral nature, the powers and capacities which we assign to stocks and stones? Or is the Almighty less inclined to bring the most highly endowed of his creatures into the harmony and blessedness of his own Divine Order? To affirm either would be the grossest reflection on the character of God, and the nature of his works. If man, then, be not changed, so as to reflect the likeness and image of his Creator and Redeemer, it must be in consequence of his own depraved will, and blinded understanding.

Varieties. 1. Why is the letter D like a sailor? because it follows the C. 2. Books, (says Lord Bacon,) should have no patrons, but truth and reason. 3. Who follows not virtue in youth, cannot fly vice in old age. 4. Never buy—what you do not want, because it is cheap; it will be a dear article to you in the end. 5. Those—bear disappointments the best, who have been most used to them. 6. Confidence—produces more conversation than either wit or talent. 7. Attend well to all that is said; for nothing—exists in vain, either in outward creation, in the mind, in the speech, or in the actions.

Authors, before they write, should read.

91. Do not hurry your enunciation of words, precipitating syllable over syllable, and word over word; nor melt them together into a mass of confusion, in pronouncing them; do not abridge or prolong them too much, nor swallow nor force them; but deliver them from your vocal and articulating organs, as golden coins from the mint, accurately impressed, perfectly finished, neatly and elegantly struck, distinct, in due succession, and of full weight.

92. The second sound of D, is that of T; when at the end of words, after c, f, ss, p, q, o, x, ch, and sh, with silent e, under the accent; FAC'D: he curs'd his stuff'd shoe, and dipp'd it in D, in FAC'D, poach'd eggs, that escap'd from the vex'd cook, who watch'd the spic'd food with arch'd brow, tripp'd his crisp'd feet, and dash'd them on the mash'd hearth; she pip'd and wisp'd a tune for the watch'd thief who jump'd into the sack'd pan, and scratch'd his blanch'd face, which eclips'd the chaf'd horse, that was attach'd and wrapp'd for a tax'd scape-grace.

93. To read and speak with ease, accuracy, and effect, are great accomplishments; as elegant and dignified as they are useful, and important. Many covet the art, but few are willing to make the necessary application: and this makes good readers and speakers, so very rare. Success depends, principally, on the student's own exertions, uniting correct theory with faithful practice.

94. Irregulars. T—generally has this sound; the little tat-ler tit-tered at the taste-ful tea-pot, and caught a tempt-ing tar-tar by his sa-ti-e-ty; the stout Ti-tan took a tell-tale ter-magant and thrust her against the tat-ter-ing tow-ers, for twist-ing the frit-ters; Ti-tus takes the pet-u-lent out-casts, and tos-ses them into na-ture's pas-tures with the tar-tles; the guests of the hosts at-tract a great deal of at-ten-tion, and sub-sti-tute their pre-texts for tem-pests; the cor-et-ous part-ner, des-ti-tute of fort-une, states that when the steed is stol-en, he shuts the sta-ble door, lest the grav-i-ty of his ro-tun-di-ty tip his tac-tics into non-en-ti-ty.

When a twister, a twisting, will twist him a twist,
For twisting his twist, he three twines doth intwist;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.

Notes. 1. This dental-fricative sound may be made by whispering the imaginary word tuh, (short u) the tongue being pressed against the upper front teeth, and then suddenly removed, as indicated by the engraving. 2. T is silent when preceded by s, and followed by the abbreviated terminations en, le. Apostle, glister, fasten, episode, often, castle, pestle, soften, whistle, chasten, bustle, christen; in ecclat, bil-let-doux, debut, haut-boy, currants, de-pot, hostler, mortgage, Christmas, Tmolus, and the first t, in chest-nut and mis-le-toe. 3. The adjectives, blessed, curs'd, &c. are exceptions to the rule for pronouncing d. 4. Consonants are sometimes double in their pronunciation, although not found in the name spelling; pit-tied, (pit-ted), river, (riv-var), mon-ey, (&c.) etc. Beware of chewing your words, as vir-chu, na-chure, &c.

Self—alone, in nature rooted fast,
Attends us—first, and leaves us—last

Proverbs. 1. None of you know where the shoe pinches. 2. One may live and learn. 3. Remember the reckoning. 4. Such as the tree is, such is the fruit. 5. The biggest horses are not the best travelers. 6. What cannot be cured, must be endured. 7. You cannot catch old birds with chaff. 8. Argument—seldom convinces any one, contrary to his inclinations. 9. A horse—is neither better, nor worse, for his trappings. 10. Content—is the philosopher's stone, that turns all it touches into gold. 11. Never sport, with the opinions of others. 12. Be prompt in every thing.

Anecdote. President Harrison, in his last out-door exercise, was assisting the gardener in adjusting some grape-vines. The gardener remarked, that there would be but little use in trailing the vines, so far as any fruit was concerned; for the boys would come on Sunday, while the family was at church, and steal all the grapes; and suggested to the general, as a guard against such a loss, that he should purchase an active watch-dog. Said the general, "Better employ an active Sabbath-school teacher; a dog may take care of the grapes, but a good Sabbath-school teacher will take care of the grapes and the boys too."

Home. Wherever we roam, in whatever climate or land we are cast, by the accidents of human life, beyond the mountains or beyond the ocean, in the legislative halls of the Capitol, or in the retreats and shades of private life, our hearts turn, with an irresistible instinct, to the cherished spot, which ushered us into existence. And we dwell, with delightful associations, on the recollection of the streams, in which, during our boyish days, we bathed, the fountains at which we drank, the pinney fields, the hills and the valleys where we sported, and the friends, who shared these enjoyments with us.

Varieties. 1. If we do well, shall we not be accepted? 2. A guilty conscience—paralyzes the energies of the boldest mind, and enfeebles the stoutest heart. 3. Persons in love, generally resolve—first, and reason afterward. 4. All contingencies have a Providence in them. 5. If these principles of Elocution be correct, practicing them as here taught, will not make one formal and artificial, but natural and effluous. 6. Be above the opinion of the world, and act from your own sense of right and wrong. 7. All christians believe the soul of man to be immortal: if, then, the souls of all, who have departed out of the body from this world, are in the spiritual world, what millions of inhabitants must exist therein!

The man, who consecrates his powers,
By vigorous effort, and an honest aim,
At once, he draws the sting of life, and death;
He walks with Nature; and her paths—are peace.

95. Let the position be erect, and the body balanced on the foot upon which you stand; banish all cure and anxiety from the mind; let the forehead be perfectly smooth, the lungs entirely quiescent, and make every effort from the abdominal region. To expand the thorax and become straight, strike the PALMS of the hands together before, and the backs of them behind, turning the thumbs upward: do all with a united action of the body and mind, the center of exertion being in the small of the back; be in earnest, but husband your breath and strength; breathe often, and be perfectly free, easy, independent, and natural.

96. F has two sounds: first, name sound: FIFE; off with the scarf from the calf's head; the af-fa-ble buf-foon, faith-ful to its gaf-fer, lifts his wife's fa-ther from the cof-fin, and puts in the fret-  [F in FIFE.] ful cuf-ty; fear-ful of the ef-fects, the fright-ful fel-low prof-fers his hand-ker-chief to fire off the dan-druff from the fil-ful fool's of-fen-sive fovt-ing-piece.

97. If you read and speak slow, and articulate well, you will always be heard with attention; although your delivery, in other respects, may be very faulty: and remember, that it is not necessary to speak very loud, in order to be understood, but very distinctly, and, of course, deliberately. The sweeter, and more musical your voice is, the better, and the farther you may be heard, the more accurate will be your pronunciation, and with the more pleasure and profit will you be listened to.

98. Irregulars, Gh and Ph frequently have this sound; Phil-ip Brough, laugh'd enough at the phantoms of the her-maph-rodite phi-los-o-phy, to make the nymph Saph-i-ra have a phthi-si-cal hic-cough; the seraph's draught of the proph-e-cy was lith-o-graph'd for an eph-a of phos-pho-res-ent naph-tha, and a spher-i-cal trough of tough phys-ic.

Notes. 1. To make this dento-labial aspirate, press the under lip against the upper fore teeth, as seen in the engraving, and blow out the first sound of the word f—ire! 2. Gh, are silent in drought, burrough, nigh, high, brought, dough, flight, etc.; and Ph and h in phthi-si-cal. 3. The difficulty of applying rules, to the pronunciation of our language, may be illustrated by the two following lines, where ough is pronounced in different ways; as o, uſſ, off, owo, oo, and ock. Though the tough cough and hiccough plough me through, O'er life's dark lough my course I will pursue.

Anecdote. Natural Death. An old man, who had been a close observer all his life, when dangerously sick, was urged by his friends, to take advice of a quack; but objected, saying,—“I wish to die a natural death.”

The patient mind, by yielding—overcomes.

Proverbs. 1. Hope—is a good breakfast, but a bad supper. 2. It is right to put every thing to its proper use. 3. Open confession—is good for the soul. 4. Pride—must have a fall. 5. The lower mill-stone—grinds as well as the upper one. 6. Venture not all in one vessel. 7. What one ardently desires, he easily believes. 8. Yielding—is sometimes the best way of succeeding. 9. A man that breaks his word, bids others be false to him. 10. Amendment—is repentance. 11. There is nothing useless to a person of sense. 12. The hand of the diligent—maketh rich.

Patience and Perseverance. Let any one consider, with attention, the structure of a common engine to raise water. Let him observe the intricacy of the machinery, and behold in what vast quantities one of the heaviest elements is forced out of its course; and then let him reflect how many experiments must have been tried in vain, how many obstacles overcome, before a frame of such wonderful variety in its parts, could have been successfully put together: after which consideration let him pursue his enterprise with hope of success, supporting the spirit of industry, by thinking how much may be done by patience and perseverance.

Varieties. Was the last war with England—justifiable? 2. In every thing you undertake, have some definite object in mind. 3. Persons of either sex—may captivate, by assuming a feigned character; but when the deception is found out, disgrace and unhappiness will be the consequences of the fraud. 4. All truths—are the forms of heavenly loves; and all falsities—are the forms of infernal loves. 5. While we co-operate with Nature, we cannot labor too much—for the development and perfection of body and mind; but when we force or contradict her, so far from mending and improving “the human form divine,” we actually degrade it below the brute. 6. How ridiculous some people make themselves appear, by giving their opinions for or against a thing, with which they are unacquainted! 7. The law of God is divine and eternal, and no person has a right to alter, add, or diminish, one word: it must speak for itself, and stand by itself.

Who needs a teacher—to admonish him, [mist? That flesh—is grass? That earthly things—are What are our joys—but dreams? and what our But goodly shadows in the summer cloud? [hopes, There's not a wind that blows, but bears with it Some rainbow promise. Not a moment flies, But puts its sickle—in the fields of life, [cares. And mows its thousands, with their joys and

Our early days!—How often—back We turn—on Life's bewildering track, To where, o'er hill, and valley, plays The sunlight of our early days!

A monkey, to reform the times, Resolved to visit foreign climes.

99. He who attempts to make an inroad on the existing state of things, though evidently for the better, will find a few to encourage and assist him, in effecting a useful reform; and many who will treat his honest exertions with resentment and contempt, and cling to their old errors with a fonder pertinacity, the more vigorous is the effort to tear them from their arms. There is more hope of a fool, than of one wise in his own conceit.

100. The second sound of F, is that of V: OF; (never off, nor uv,;) there-of here-of, where-of; the only words in our language, in which F, has this sound: a piece of cake, not a piece-u-cake, nor a piece-ur-cake.

[F in OF.]

101. Muscle Breakers. Thou waf'd'st the rickety skiff over the mountain height cliffs, and clearly saw'st the full orb'd moon, in whose silvery and effulgent light, thou reef'd'st the haggled sails of the ship-wrecked vessel, on the rock-bound coast of Kam-scat-ka. He was an unamiable, disrespectful, incommunicative, disingenuous, formidable, unmanageable, intolerable and pusillanimous old bachelor. Get the latest amended edition of Charles Smith's Thucyd-i-des, and study the colonist's best interests.

102. Irregulars. V has this vocal aspirate; also Ph in a few words; my vain nephew, Ste-phen Van-de-ver, be-lieves Ve-nus a ves-tal vir-gin, who vie-i-lies his shiv-er'd liv-er, and im-proves his vel-vet voice, so as to speak with vie-id viv-ac-i-ty; the brave chev-a-lier be-haves like a vol-a-tile con-ser-va-tive, and says, he loves white wine vin-e-gar with veal vict-u-als every warm day in the vo-cal vales of Vu-co-var.

103. FAULTS in articulation, early contracted, are suffered to gain strength by habit, and grow so inveterate by time, as to be almost incurable. Hence, parents should assist their children to pronounce correctly, in their first attempts to speak, instead of permitting them to pronounce in a faulty manner: but some, so far from endeavoring to correct them, encourage them to go on in their baby talk; thus cultivating a vicious mode of articulation. Has wisdom fled from men; or was she driven away?

Notes. 1. This diphthongat sound, is made like that of f, with the addition of a voice sound in the larynx: see engraving. 2. A modification of this sound, with the upper lip over-lapping the under one, and blowing down on the chin, gives a very good imitation of the humble-bee. 3. Avoid saying gim me some, for give me some; I haint got any, for I have not got any; I don't luff to go; for, I don't love, (like rather,) to go; you'll haff to do it; for you will have to do it.

What is a man,
If his chief good and market of his time,
Be but to sleep and feed? A beast, no more. Sure,
He, th't made us, with such large discourse,
Looking before, and after, gave us not
That capability—and god-like reason,
To rust in us—unused.

Proverbs. 1. A good cause makes a stout heart, and a strong arm. 2. Better ten guilty persons escape, than one innocently suffer. 3. Criminals—are punished, that crime may be prevented. 4. Drunkenness—turns a man out of himself, and leaves a beast in his room. 5. He that goes to church, with an evil intention, goes on the devil's errand. 6. Most things have handles; and a wise man takes hold of the best. 7. Our flatterers—are our most dangerous enemies; yet they are often in our own bosom. 8. Poverty—makes a man acquainted with strange bed-fellows. 9. Make yourself all honey, and the flies will be sure to devour you. 10. Many talk like philosophers, and live like fools. 11. A stitch in time—saves nine. 12. The idle man's head, is the devil's workshop.

Anecdote. School master and pupil. A school master—asked a boy, one very cold winter morning, what was the Latin—for the word cold: at which the boy hesitated, —saying, I have it at my finger's ends.

Ourselves and Others. That man—deserves the thanks of his country, who connects with his own—the good of others. The philosopher—enlightens the world; the manufacturer—employs the needy; and the merchant—gratifies the rich, by procuring the varieties of every clime. The mis-er, altho' he may be no burden on society, yet, thinking only of himself, affords no one else—either profit, or pleasure. As it is not of any one—to have a very large share of happiness, that man will, of course, have the largest portion, who makes himself—a partner in the happiness of others. The BENEVOLENT—are sharers in every one's joys.

Varieties. 1. Ought not the study of our language be made part of our education? 2. He who is slowest in making a promise, is generally the most faithful in performing it. 3. They who are governed by reason, need no other motive than the goodness of a thing, to induce them to practice it. 4. A reading people—will become a thinking people; and then they are capable of becoming a rational and a great people. 5. The happiness of every one—depends more on the state of his own mind, than on any external circumstance; nay, more than all external things put together. 6. There is no one so despicable, but may be able, in some way, and at some time, to revenge our impositions. 7. Desire—seeks an end: the nature of the desire, love and life, may be known by its end.

When lowly Merit—feels misfortune's blow,
And seeks relief from penury and woe,
Hope fills with rapture—every generous heart,
To share its treasures, and its hopes impart;
As, rising o'er the sordid lust of gold,
It shows the impress—of a heavenly mould!

Whose nature is—so far from doing harm,
That he suspects none.

104. In all schools, one leading object should be, to teach the science and art of reading and speaking with effect: they ought, indeed, to occupy seven-fold more time than at present. Teachers should strive to improve themselves, as well as their pupils, and feel, that to them are committed the future orators of our country. A first-rate reader is much more useful than a first-rate performer on a piano, or any other artificial instrument. Nor is the voice of song sweeter than the voice of eloquence: there may be eloquent readers, as well as eloquent speakers.

105. G has three sounds: first, name sound, or that of J, before e, i, and y, generally: GEM; Gen-er- al Ghent, of gi-ant ge-nius, suggests that the o-rig-i-nal mag-ic of the frag-ile gip-sey has gen-er-a-ted the gen-e-al-o-gy of Geor-gi-um Si-dus; the geor-gics of George Ger-man are ex-ag-er-a-ted by the pan-e-gy-rics of the log-i-cal ser-geant; hy-dro-gen, og-y-gen and ging-seng, ger-min-ate gen-tee gin-ger-bread for the o-rig-i-nal ab-o-rig-i-nes of Ge-ne-va.

106. It is of the first importance, that the reader, speaker and singer be free and unrestrained in his manner; so as to avoid using the chest as much as possible, and also of being monotonous in the flow of his words: thus, there will be perfect correspondence—of the feelings, thoughts and actions. Look out upon Nature; all is free, varied, and expressive; such should be our delivery. Nature—abhors monotony, as much as she does a vacuum.

107. Irregulars. J generally has this sound. The je-june judge just-ly jeat-ous of Ju-lia's joy, joined her to ju-ba James in June or July; the ju-ry jus-ti-fy the joke, in jerk-ing the jaww-lin of Ju-pi-ter from the jol-ly Jes-u-it, and jam-ming it into the jor-nal Jew, to the jeop-ar-dy of the jeer-ing jock-ey.

Notes. 1. This triphthongal sound, as are most of the other vocal consonants, is composed of a vocal and aspirate. To make it, compress the teeth, and begin to pronounce the word judge, very loud; and when you have made a sound, e. i. got to the u, stop instantly, and you will perceive the proper sound; or begin to pronounce the letter g, but put no e to it: see engraving. 2. The three sounds, of which this is composed, are that of the name sound of d, and those of e, and h, combined. 3. Breath as well as voice sounds, may be arrested, or allowed to escape, according to the nature of the sound to be produced.

Anecdote. A pedlar—overtook another of his tribe on the road, and thus accosted him: “Hallo, friend, what do you carry?” “Rum and Whisky,”—was the prompt reply. “Good,” said the other; “you may go ahead; I carry gravestones.”

The quiet sea,
Th’t, like a giant, resting from his toil,
Sleeps in the morning sun.

Proverbs. 1. He that seeks trouble, it were a pity he should miss it. 2. Honor and ease—are seldom bed-fellows. 3. It is a miserable sight to see a poor man proud, and a rich man avaricious. 4. One cannot fly without wings. 5. The fairest rose at last is withered. 6. The best evidence of a clegyman’s usefulness, is the holy lives of his parishoners. 7. We are rarely so unfortunate, or so happy, as we think we are. 8. A friend in need, is a friend indeed. 9. Bought wit is the best, if not bought too dear. 10. Disputations—leave truth in the middle, and the parties at both ends. 11. We must do and live. 12. A diligent pen supplies many thoughts.

Authority and Truth. Who has not observed how much more ready mankind are to bow to the authority of a name, than yield to the evidence of truth? However strong and incontestible—the force of reasoning, and the array of facts of an individual, who is unknown to fame, a slavish world—will weigh and measure him by the obscurity of his name. Integrity, research, science, philosophy, fact, truth, and goodness—are no shield against ridicule, and misrepresentation. Now this is exceedingly humiliating to the freed mind, and shows the great necessity of looking at the truth itself for the evidence of truth. Hence, we are not to believe what one says, because he says it, but because we see that it is true: this course is well calculated to make us independent reasoners, speakers, and writers, and constitute us, as we were designed to be—FREEMEN, in feeling, thought and act.

Varieties. 1. How long was it, from the discovery of America, in 1492, by Columbus, to the commencement of the Revolutionary War, in 1775? 2. Most of our laws would never have had an existence, if evil actions had not made them necessary. 3. The grand secret—of never failing—in propriety of deportment, is to have an intention—of always doing what is right. 4. Only that, which is sown here, will be reaped hereafter. 5. Is there more than one God? 6. The human race is so connected, that the well intentioned efforts of each individual—are never lost; but are propagated to the mass; so that what one—may ardently desire, another—may resolutely endeavor, and a third, or tenth, may actually accomplish. 7. All thought is dependent on the will, or voluntary principle, and takes its quality therefrom: as is the will, such is the thought; for the thought—is the will, in form; and the state of the will—may be known by that form.

Go abroad, upon the paths of Nature, and when its voices whisper, and its silent things [all] Are breathing the deep beauty of the world, Kneel at its simple altar, and the God, Who hath the living waters—shall be there.

108. Elocution—is not, as some erroneously suppose, an art of something artificial in tones, looks and gestures, that may be learned by imitation. The principles teach us—to exhibit truth and nature dressed to advantage: its objects are, to enable the reader, and speaker, to manifest his thoughts, and feelings, in the most pleasing, perspicuous, and forcible manner, so as to charm the affections, enlighten the understanding, and leave the deepest, and most permanent impression, on the mind of the attentive hearer.

109. The second sound of G, is hard, or guttural, before a, o, u, l, r, and often before e, and i; also, at the end of monosyllables, and sometimes at the end of dissyllables, and their preceding syllables. GAME; a giddy goose [G in GAME.] got a ci-gar, and gave it to a gan-grene beggar: Scrog-gins, of Brob-dig-nag, growls over his green-glass gog-gles, which the big ne-gro gath-er-ed from the bog-gy quag-mire; a gid-dy gig-gling girl glides into the grog-gery, and gloats over the gru-el in the great pig-gin of the rag-ged grand-mother, exclaim-ing, dig or beg, the game is gone.

110. Foreigners and natives may derive essential aid from this system of mental and vocal philosophy; enabling them to read and speak the language correctly; which they most certainly ought to do, before they are employed in our schools: for whatever children learn, they should learn correctly. Good teachers are quite as necessary in the primary school, as in the Academy or College: at least, so thought Philip, king of Macedon, when he sent his son Alexander to Aristotle, the great philosopher, to learn his letters: and Alexander says, he owed more to his teacher, than to his father.

111. Irregulars. Gh, in a few words, has this sound: tho', strictly speaking, the h is silent. The ghast-ly bur-gher stood a-ghast to see the ghost of the ghyll, eat the ghas-tly gher-kins in the ghos-ty burgh. They are silent in—the neigh-bors taught their daugh-ters to plough with de-light, though they caught a fur-lough; &c.

Notes. 1. This vocal sound is made, by pressing the roots of the tongue against the uvula, so as to close the throat, and beginning to say g, without the o; the sound is intercepted lower down than that of first d, and the jaw dropped more; observe also the vocal and aspirate; the sound is finished, however, in this, as in all other instances of making the vocal consonants, by the organs resuming their natural position, either for another effort, or for silence. 2. If practice enables persons with half the usual number of fingers to accomplish whatever manual labor they undertake; think how much may be done in this art, by those who possess their vocal organs complete, provided they pursue the course here indicated;—there is nothing like these vocal gymnastics.

'Tis autumn. Many, and many a fleeting age
Hath faded, since the primal morn of Time;
And silently the slowly journeying years,
All redolent of countless seasons, pass.

112. Freedom of Thought. Beware of pinning your faith to another's sleeve—of forming your own opinion entirely on that of another. Strive to attain to a modest independence of mind, and keep clear of leading-strings: follow no one, where you cannot see the road, in which you are desired to walk: otherwise, you will have no confidence in your own judgment, and will become a changeling all your days. Remember the old adage—"let every tub stand on its own bottom!" And, "never be the mere shadow of another."

Proverbs. 1. He dies like a beast, who has done no good while he lived. 2. 'Tis a base thing to betray a man, because he trusted you. 3. Knaves—imagine that nothing can be done without knavery. 4. He is not a wise man, who pays more for a thing than it is worth. 5. Learning—is a sceptre to some, and a bauble—to others. 6. No tyrant can take from you your knowledge. 7. Only that which is honestly got—is true gain. 8. Pride—is as loud a beggar as want; and a great deal more saucy. 9. That is a bad child, that goes like a top; no longer than it is whipped. 10. It is hard for an empty bag to stand up-right. 11. Learn to bear disappointment cheerfully. 12. Eradicate your prejudices.

Anecdote. A sharp Eye. A witness, during the assizes, at York, in England, after several ineffectual attempts to go on with his story, declared, "he could not proceed in his testimony, if Mr. Brougham did not take his eyes off from him."

Varieties. 1. Which does society the most injury, the robber, the slanderer, or the murderer? 2. In every period of life, our talents may be improved, and our mind expanded by education. 3. The mind is powerful, in proportion as it possesses powerful truths, reduced to practice. 4. Give not the meats and drinks of a man, to a child; for how should they do it good? 5. A proverb, well applied at the end of a phrase, often makes a very happy conclusion: but beware of using such sentences too often. 6. Extravagant—and misplaced eulogiums—neither honor the one, who bestows them, nor the person, who receives them. 7. Apparent truth—has its use, but genuine truth a greater use; and hence, it is the part of wisdom—to seek it.

'Tis midnight's holy hour—and silence now
Is brooding, like a gentle Spirit, o'er
The still and pulseless world. Hark! on the wind.
The bell's deep tones are swelling,—'tis the knell
Of the departed year. No funeral train
Is sweeping past,—yet, on the stream, and wood,
With melancholy light, the mountains rest,
Like a pale, spotless shroud,—the air is stirred,
As by a mourner's sigh—and on you cloud,
That floats on still and placidly through heaven,
The Spirits—of the Seasons—seem to stand;
Young Spring, bright Summer, Autumn's solemn form,
And Winter, with his aged locks, and breathe,
In mournful calences, that come abroad
Like the far wind-harp's wild and touching wail,
A melancholy dirge—o'er the dead year—
Gone, from the Earth, forever.

113. These principles of oratory—are well calculated to accustom the mind to the closest investigation and reasoning; thus, affording a better discipline for the scientific, rational, and affectuous faculties of the mind, than even the study of the mathematics: for the whole man is here addressed, and all his mental powers, and all his acquirements, are called into requisition. This system is a fiery ordeal; and those who pass through it, understandingly, and practically, will come out purified as by fire: it solves difficulties, and leads the mind to correct conclusions, respecting what one is to do, and what one is not to do.

114. The third sound of G is that of Zh; which, tho' common to s and z, is derived to this letter from the French; or, perhaps we should say, the words in which G has this sound, are French words not Anglicised

115. This work informs the pupil, as the master workman does the apprentice: it teaches the principles, or rules, and the way to apply them; and when they are thus applied to practice, he has no more use for them: indeed, its rules and directions serve him the same purpose as the guide-post does the traveler; who, after visiting the place, towards which it directs, has no further need of it.

116. Irregulars. S often has this sound, and Z, generally. The az-ure ad-he-sion to the am-bro-sial en-clo-sures is a ro-se-ate treas-ure of vis-ions of pleas-ures; the seizure of the vic-ier's en-thu-si-asm is an in-va-sion of the gla-zier's di-vi-sions of the seis-sors; the ho-sier takes the bra-zier's cro-sier with a-bra-sions and cor-ro-sions by ex-po-sure, and treas-ures it up without e-lis-ions.

Notes. 1. This vocal triphthongal consonant sound may be made, by placing the organs, as if to pronounce sh in show, and adding a wice sound, from the larynx: or, by drawing out the sound of the imaginary word zhure, zh—ure. 2. Analyze these sounds thus; give the first sound of a, keep the teeth still compressed, add the aspirate of h, and then prefix the vocality; or reverse the process. G is silent in—the mid-lig phlegm of the poig-nant goat, im-pregns the en-sig-n's di-a-phragm, and gnaws into Char-le-magne's so-met-in.

Anecdote. A considerate Minister. A very dull clergyman, whose delivery was monotonous and uninteresting to his hearers, putting many of the old folks asleep—said to the boys, who were playing in the gallery; "Don't make so much noise there; you will awake your parents below."

For me, my lot—was what I sought; to be,
In life, or death, the fearless,—and the free.

Proverbs. 1. Impudence, and wit, are vastly different. 2. Keep thy shop, and thy shop will keep thee. 3. Listeners—hear no good of themselves. 4. Make hay while the sun shines. 5. An ounce of discretion is worth a pound of wit. 6. Purposing, without performing, is mere fooling. 7. Quiet persons—are welcome every where. 8. Some have been thought brave, because they were afraid to run away. 9. A liar—is a bravo towards God, and a coward towards men. 10. Without a friend, the world is a wilderness. 11. A young man idle,—an old man—needy. 12. Resolution, without action, is a slothful folly.

Reading Rooms. Incalculable good might be done to the present and the rising generation, by the establishment, in every town and village in our country, of Public Reading Rooms, to be supported by voluntary subscription: indeed, it would be wise in town authorities to sustain such institutions of knowledge by direct taxation. Oh! when shall we wake up to a consideration of things above the mere love of money-making.

Varieties. 1. Did Napoleon—do more evil than good—to mankind? 2. A necessary part of good manners—is a punctual observation of time; whether on matters of civility, business, or pleasure. 3. It is absurd—to expect that your friends will remember you, after you have thought proper to forget them. 4. How much pain has borrowed trouble cost us. 5. Adversity—has the effect of eliciting talents, which, in prosperous circumstances, would have lain dormant. 6. When the infidel would persuade you to abandon the Bible, tell him you will, when he will bring you a better book. 7. When the mind becomes persuaded of the truth of a thing, it receives that thing, and it becomes a part of the person's life: what men seek, they find.

The spacious firmament—on high,
With all the blue etherial sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great original proclaim.
Th' unwearied sun—from day to day,
Does his Creator's power display;
And publishes—to ev'ry land,
The work—of an Almighty hand.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale
And, nightly, to the list'ning earth,
Repeats the story of her birth;
Whilst all the stars, that round her burn,
And all the planets in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And spread the truth, from pole to pole.

What, though, in solemn silence, all
Move round the dark terrestrial ball?
What, though no real voice nor sound
Amid these radiant orbs be found?
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
Forever singing, as they shine,
"The hand that made us—is divine."

117. Be very particular in pronouncing the jaw, or voice-breakers, and cease not, till you can give every sound fully, correctly and distinctly. If your vocal powers are well exercised, by faithful practice on the more difficult combinations, they will acquire a facility of movement, a precision of action, a flexibility, grace, and force truly surprising.

118. H has but one sound, which is an aspirate, or forcible breathing, made in the glottis: HALE: his high-ness holds high his haugh-ty head, and ex-hib-its his shrunk shanks to the ho-ly horde in the hu-mid hall; the [H in HALE.] hard-heart-ed hedge-hog, heed-less of his hav-oc of the house-wife's ham, hies himself home, hap-py to have his head, his hands, and his heart whole; the harm-ful hum-ble-bee hur-tles through the hot-house, and ex-horts his ex-haust-ed hive-lings to hold their house-hold-stuff for a hob-by-horse till har-vest-home.

119. It is said, that no description can adequately represent Lord Chatham: to comprehend the force of his eloquence, it was necessary to see and to hear him: his whole delivery was such, as to make the orator a part of his own eloquence: his mind was view'd in his countenance, and so embodied was it in his every look, and gesture, that his words were rather felt than followed; they invested his hearers; the weapons of his opponents fell from their hands; he spoke with the air and vehemence of inspiration, and the very atmosphere flamed around him.

120. H is silent at the beginning and end of many words. The hon-est shepherd's ca-tarrh, hum-bles the heir-ess in her dish-a-billes, and hu-mors the thy-my rhet-o-ric of his rhymes to rhap-so-dy; the humor-some Thom-as ex-plain-ed diph-thongs and triph-thongs to A-bi-jah, Be-ri-ah—Ca-lah, Di-nah, E-ti-jah, Ge-rah, Hul-dah, I-sa-iah, Jo-nah, Han-nah, Nin-e-vah, O-ba-di-ah, Pis-gah, Ru-mah, Sa-rah, Te-rah, Uri-ah, Va-ni-ah, and Ze-lah.

Notes. 1. This sound is the material of which all sounds are made, whether vowel or consonant, either by condensation, or modification. To demonstrate this position, commence any sound in a whisper, and proceed to a vocal; shaping the organs to form the one required, if a vowel or vocal consonant, and in a proper way to produce any of the aspirates. 2. Those who are in the habit of omitting the h, when it ought to be pronounced, can practice on the preceding and similar examples: and also correct such sentences as this; He took my horse hand went hout to hunt my legs, hand got hoff my horse, hand lched im to a boak tree, and gave im some hoats. 3. It requires more breath to make this sound, than any other in our language; as in producing it, even mildly, the lungs are nearly exhausted of air. It may be made by whispering the word huh: the higher up, the more scattering, the lower in the throat, the more condensed, till it becomes vocal.

I am well aware, that what is base,
No polish—can make sterling—and that vice,
Though well perfumed, and elegantly dressed,
Like an unburied carcass,—trick'd with flowers,
Is but a garnished nuisance,—fitter far
For cleanly riddance,—than for fair attire.

Proverbs. 1. When the cat is away, the mice will play. 2. One may be a wise man, and yet not know how to make a watch. 3. A wicked companion invites us to hell. 4. All happiness and misery—is in the mind. 5. A good conscience is excellent divinity. 6. Bear and forbear—is good philosophy. 7. Drunkenness—is a voluntary madness. 8. Envy shoots at others, and wounds herself. 9. Fools lade out the water, and wise men catch the fish. 10. Good preachers give fruits, rather than flowers. 11. Actions are the raiment of the man. 12. Faith is the eye of love.

Anecdote. Frederick the Great, of Prussia, an ardent lover of literature and the fine arts, as well as of his people, used to rise at three or four o'clock in the morning to get more time for his studies; and when one of his intimate friends noticed how hard he worked, he replied,—“It is true, I do work hard,—but it is in order to live; for nothing has more resemblance to death, than illeness: of what use is it, to live, if one only vegetates?”

Wrong Choice. How miserable some people make themselves, by a wrong choice, when they have all the good things of earth before them, out of which to choose! If good judgment be wanting, neither the greatest monarch, nor the repeated smiles of fortune, can render such persons happy; hence, a prince—may become a poor wretch, and the peasant—completely blessed. To know one's self—is the first degree of sound judgment; for, by failing rightly to estimate our own capacity, we may undertake—not only what will make us unhappy, but ridiculous. This may be illustrated by an unequal marriage with a person, whose genius, life and temper—will blast the peace of one, or both, forever. The understanding, and not the will—should be our guide.

Varieties. 1. What can the virtues of our ancestors profit us, unless we imitate them? 2. Why is it, that we are so unwilling to practice a little self-denial for the sake of a future good? 3. The toilet of woman—is too often an altar, erected by self-love—to vanity. 4. Half the labor, required to make a first-rate musician, would make an accomplished reader and speaker. 5. Learn to unlearn what you have learned amiss. 6. A conceit of knowledge—is a great enemy to knowledge, and a great argument for ignorance. 7. Of pure love, and pure conception of truth, we are only receivers: God only is the giver; and they are all His from first to last.

It is a beautiful belief, that ever-round our head,
Are hovering, on noiseless wing, the spirits of the dead.
It is a beautiful belief, when ended our career,
That it will be our ministry to watch o'er others here;
To lead a moral to the flower; breathe wisdom on the wind;
To hold communion, at night's pure noon, with the imprisoned mind;
To bid the mourner—ease to mourn, the trembling be forgiven;
To bear away, from ills of clay, the infant—to its heaven.
Ah! when delight—was found in life, and joy—in every breath,
I cannot tell how terrible—the mystery of death.
But now, the past is bright to me, and all the future—clear:
For 'tis my faith, that after death, I still shall linger here.

121. Important Remarks. Every pupil should be required to notice, distinctly, not only all the specific sounds of our language, simple and compound, but also the different and exact positions of the vocal organs, necessary to produce them. The teacher should, unyieldingly, insist upon having these two things faithfully attended to: for success in elocution, and music, absolutely demand it: no one, therefore, should wish to be excused from a full and hearty compliance. Master these elementary principles, and you will have command of all the mediums for communicating your thoughts and feelings.

123. Pronounce my, you, your, and that, when emphatic, with the vowels full and open. My harp is as good as yours. He told you, but would not tell me. I said he was my friend, not yours. That man related that story. When these words are not emphatic, the sounds of y and u are shortened, the o silent, and u having its second sound, while the a is entirely suppressed. My pen is as bad as my paper. How do you do? Very well; and how do you do? Have you got your book? This is not your book; it is my book. I said that you said, that you told him so.

Notes. 1. This vocal lingual dental sound (from the larynx, tongue and teeth) is made by pressing the tongue against the upper gums and the roof of the mouth: pronounce the word lo, by prolonging the sound of i; l—o. 2. Do not let the eye mislead the ear in the comparison of sounds; gay and ghay are alike to the ear, tho' unlike to the eye: so are ph in philosophy and f in folly: the same may be observed of th in thine and thou. 3. Never forget the difference between the names of letters, and their respective sounds; weigh their natures, powers and qualities. 4. Notice the dissimilarity between the letters o-n-e, and the word one (rem); also e-i-g-h-t, and eight (ate); e-n-o-u-g-h, and enuff. Is there not a better way? and is not this that way? 5. L is silent in halm, salve, could, psalm, would, chalk, should, talk, hals-er (haw-ser), ful-con (faw-k'n), salm-oo, folks, maim-sey (2*la*) *alm*onds, &c.

Anecdote. One Tongue. Milton, the author of Paradise Lost and Regained, was one day asked, by a friend of female education, if he did not intend to instruct his daughter in the different languages: "No Sir," replied Milton, "one tongue is sufficient for a woman."

Ye despots, too long—did your tyranny hold us
In a vassalage vile—ere its weakness we knew;
But we learn'd, that the links of the chain, that enthral'd us,
Were forg'd by the fears of the captive alone.

Proverbs. 1. Almost, and very nigh, save many a lie. 2. A man may buy even gold too dear. 3. He, that waits for dead men's shoes, may long go barefoot. 4. It is an ill cause, that none dare speak in. 5. If pride were an art, there would be many teachers. 6. Out of sight, out of mind. 7. The whole ocean is made of single drops. 8. There would be no great ones, if there were no little ones. 9. Things unreasonable—are never durable. 10. Time and tide wait for no man. 11. An author's writings are a mirror of his mind. 12. Every one is architect of his own character.

In the Truth. How may a person be said to be in the truth? This may be understood, rationally, by a comparison: we say—such a man is in the mercantile business; by which we mean, that his life—is that of merchandizing, and is regulated by the laws of his peculiar calling. In like manner, we say of a christian, that he is in the truth, and in the Lord, when he is in the true order of his creation; which is—to love the Lord, with all his heart, and his neighbor as himself; and to do unto others—as he would they should do unto him: such a one is, emphatically, in the truth, and the truth makes him free; and this is the only freedom on earth, or in heaven; and any other state is abject slavery.

Varieties. 1. Why is the L, in the word military, like a man's nose? Because, it is between two i i. 2. No one is wise at all times; because every one is finite, and of course, imperfect. 3. Money—is the servant of those, who know how to use it; but the master of those, who do not. 4. Rome—was built, 753 years before the christian era; and the Roman empire—terminated 476 years after it; what was its duration? 5. The tales of other times—are like the calm dew of the morning, when the sun is faint on its side, and the lake is settled and blue in the vale. 6. As is the state of mind, such is the reception, operation, production, and manifestation—of all that is received. 7. Ends of actions show the quality of life; natural men ever regard natural ends; but spiritual men—spiritual ones.

Changing, forever changing!—So depart
The glories—of the old majestic wood:
So—pass the pride, and garniture of fields;
The growth of ages, and the bloom of days,
Into the dust of centuries; and so—
Are both—renewed. The scattered tribes of men,
The generations of the populous earth,
All have their seasons too. And jocund Youth
Is the green spring-time—Manhood's lusty strength
Is the maturing summer—hoary Age
Types well the autumn of the year—and Death
Is the real winter, which forecloses all.
And shall the forests—have another spring,
And shall the fields—another garland wear,
And shall the worms—come forth, renew'd in life,
And clothed with highest beauty, and not MAN?
No!—in the Book before me now, I read
Another language; and my faith is sure,
That though the chains of death may hold it long,
This mortal—will o'er-master them, and break
Away, and put on immortality.

124. Read, and speak, in such a just and impressive manner, as will instruct, interest and affect your hearers, and reproduce in them all those ideas and emotions, which you wish to convey. Remember, that theory—is one thing, and practice—another; and that there is a great difference, between knowing how a sentence should be read or spoken, and the ability to read or speak it: theory—is the result of thought; practice—of actual experience.

125. M has only one sound; MAIM: meek men made mum-mies out of gam-mon, and moon-beams of gum-myam-mo-ni-a, for a pre-mi-um on dum-my som-nam-bu-lism: mind, man-ners and [M in MAIM] mag-na-nim-i-ty, make a migh-ty man, to a mal-ga-mate em-blems and wam-pum for an om-ni-nim gath-er-um: the malt-man circum-am-bu-lates the cim-me-ri-an ham-mock, and tum-bles the mur-muring mid-ship-man into a min-i-mum and max-i-mum of a mam-mi-form di-lem-ma.

126. CICERO and DEMOSTHENES, by their words, lives, maxims, and practice, show the high estimation, in which they held the subject of oratory; for they devoted years to the study and practice of its theory and art, under the most celebrated masters of antiquity. Most of the effects of ancient, as well as of modern eloquence, may be attributed to the manner of delivery: we read their words, but their spirit is gone; the body remains, beautiful indeed, but motionless—and dead; TRUE eloquence—revivifies it.

Notes. To produce this labio-nasal sound, close the lips and make a sound through the nose, resembling the plaintive lowing of an ox, with its mouth closed; or, a wailing sound through your nose. 2. This is called a nasal sound, because it is made through the nose; and not because it does not pass through it, as many imagine: which may become evident, by producing the sound when the nose is held between the thumb and forefinger. 3. A void detaching letters from preceding words, and attaching them to ucceeding ones; as—his cry moved me; for, his crime moved me. 4. M is silent before n, in the same syllable; as, 2^dnaon, and mne-mon-ics.

127. That is th' man, th't said that you saw him. I say th't that, th't that man said, is not that, th't that man told him. That th't I say is this: th't that, th't that gentleman advanced, is not that, th't he should have spoken; for he said, th't that that, th't that man pointed out, is not that that, th't that lady insisted th't it was; but is another that.

THE PATHS OF LIFE.

Go forth—the world is very wide,
And many paths—before you lie,
Devious, and dang'rous, and untrod;
Go forth with wary eye!
Go! with the heart—by grief unbow'd!
Go! ere a shadow, or a cloud
Hath dimm'd the laughing sky!
But, lest your wand'ring footsteps stray,
Choose ye the straight, the narrow way.

128. By the aid of the principles here inculcated, children can be taken, before they have learned the names of the letters, and, in a few months, become better readers than one in fifty of those taught in the usual way; and they may have their voices so devel-oped and trained, by the natural use of the proper organs and muscles, as to be able to read, speak, and sing, for hours in success-ion, without hoarseness, or injurious ex-haustion. It is a melancholy reflection, that children learn more bad habits than good ones, in most of our common schools.

Proverbs. 1. He, that does you an ill turn, will never forgive you. 2. It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good. 3. The proof of the pudding—is in eating. 4. None so deaf, as they that will not hear. 5. Time—is a file, that wears, and makes no noise. 8. When every one takes care of himself, care is taken of all. 7. Without pains, there can be no gains. 8. One may as well expect to be at ease, without money, as to be happy, without virtue. 9. A man, like a watch, is valued according to his going. 10. The govern-ment of the will is better than an increase of knowledge. 11. Character—is every thing—to both old and young. 12. War brings scars.

Anecdote. Long Enough. A man, upon the verge of bankruptcy, having purchased an elegant coat, upon credit, and being told by one of his acquaintances, that the cloth was very beautiful, though the coat was too short; replied,—with a sigh—"It will be long enough before I get another."

Honor—was the virtue of the pagan; but christianity—teaches a more enlarged and noble code; calling into activity—all the best feelings of our nature,—illuminat-ing our path, through this world, with deeds of mercy and charity, mutually done and re-ceived,—and sustaining us, amidst difficul-ties and temptations—by the hope of a glorious immortality,—in which peace—shall be inviolable—and joy—eternal.

Varieties. 1. Why is a fashionably dressed lady, like a careful housewife? Be-cause her wast (waste), is always as small as she can make it. 2. Literature and Science, to produce their full effect, must be generally diffused, like the beathful breeze. 3. The elements, so mixed in him, that Nature might stand up, and say to all the world, "This is a man!" 4. All minds are influenced every moment; and there is a providence in every feeling, thought and word. 5. The excesses of our youth, are drafts on our old age, payable with interest; though sometimes, they are payable at sight. 6. I will not only know the way, but walk in it. 7. As it is God's will to fill us with his life, let us exert every faculty we possess, to be filled with it; and that with all sin-cerity and diligence.

The man, th't's resolute, and just,
Firm to his principles and trust,
Nor hopes, nor fears—can bind.

129. Distinctness of articulation demands special attention, and requires that you should pronounce the vocal letters, as well as every word, audibly and correctly, giving to each its appropriate force and quantity. Unless these principles are perfectly understood, your future acquirements will be more or less faulty: for, in proportion as one is ignorant of what ought to be felt, thought, and done, will he be liable to err.

130. N has two sounds; first its name sound: NINE; the land-man's nin-ny, neg-li-gent of the hunt-man's en-charm-ments, con-tam-i-nates the no-ble-man's nine- pins with his an-ti-no-mi-an non- (N in NINE.) sense: Na-naa, and Flan-ni-gan, joint-tenants of nine-ty-nine Man-i-kins, u-nan-i-mous-ly en-chain with win-ning tones, the be-nig-nant du-en-na, while they are con-vened to nom-i-nate con-di-ments for the so-cin-i-an con-ven-tion of the non-res-i-dents; he knows his nose; I know he knows his nose: he said I knew he knows his nose: and if he says he knows I know he knows his nose, of course, he knows I know he knows his nose.

131. Some public speakers, in other respects inferior, from the ease, grace, dignity and power of their delivery, are followed and applauded; while others, however sound in matter, and finished in language, on account of their deficiency of manner, are passed by almost unnoticed. All experience teaches us the great importance of manner, as a means of inculcating truth, and persuading others to embrace it. Lord Bacon says, it is as necessary for a public speaker, as decorum for a gentleman.

Notes. 1. This vocal nasal sound is made, by pressing the tongue against the roof of the mouth, and thus preventing the sound from passing through the mouth, and emitting all of it through the nose: see engraving. 2. In comparing sounds, be guided solely by the ear; beware of going by sight in the science of acoustics. 3. Remember, when there is a change in the position of the organs, there is a corresponding change in the sounds. 4. In words where l and n precede ch, the sound of t intervenes in the pronunciation: filch, blanch, vench, luch, bench, &c. 5. Beware of omissions and additions; Boston notion, not Boston ocean. Regain either, not regain neither.

Anecdote. The Rev. Mr. Whitfield—was once accused, by one of his hearers, of wandering in his discourse; to which he replied: "If you will ramble like a lost sheep, I must ramble after you."

Truth—

Comes to us with a slow—and doubtful step;
Measuring the ground she treads on, and forever
Turning her curious eye, to see that all
Is right—behind; and, with keen survey,
Choosing her onward path.

Seize upon truth,—wherever found,
On christian,—or on heathen ground;
Among your friends,—among your foes;
The plant's divine,—where'er it grows.

Proverbs. 1. It is not the burthen, but the over-burthen, that kills the beast. 2. The death of youth is a shipwreck. 3. There is no disputing of tastes, appetites, and fancies. 4. When the fox preaches, let the geese beware. 5. Alms-giving—never made a man poor; nor robbery—rich; nor prosperity—wise. 6. A lie, begets a lie, till they come to generations. 7. Anger—is often more hurtful than the injury that caused it. 8. Better late ripe, and bear, than blossom, and blast. 9. Experience—is the mother of science. 10. He that will not be counselled, can not be helped. 11. Expose one's evils, and he will either forsake them, or hate you for the exposure. 12. Do not hurry a free horse. 13. Every thing would live.

Gradations. The dawn, the deep light, the sun-rise, and the blaze of day! what softness and gentleness! all is graduated, and yet, all is decisive. Again, observe how winter—passes into spring,—each—weakened by the struggle; then, steals on the summer, which is followed by the maturity of autumn. Look also at the gradations and commingling of infancy, childhood, youth, manhood and age: how beautiful the series! and all this may be seen—in the successive developments of the human mind:—there is first sense, then fancy, imagination and reason,—each of which—is the ground, or continent, of all that succeed: sense—is the rude germ, or crust of the fancy, which is the full-fledged bird, freed from its confinement and limited notices, and soaring aloft, unrestrained, in the luxuries of its new being; then, succeeds imagination, a well regulated fancy, that emulates the work of reason, while it borrows the hues—of its immediate parent: and reason—is the full and perfect development—of all that sense—originally contain'd, fancy—decorated, and imagination—designed—in a thousand forms; thus reason—combines the whole, and from the whole, thro' the light of the Supreme Mind, deduces her conclusions: thus, shall the gradations, or series of developments, continue in the good, and the true—to all eternity!

Varieties. 1. How many years intervened—between the discovery of the mariner's compass, in 1302, and the discovery of America? 2. The covetous man—is as much deprived of what he has, as of what he has not; for he enjoys neither. 3. Ah! who can tell, how hard it is to climb the steep, where Fame's proud temple shines afar, checked by the scoff of Pride, by Envy's frown, and Poverty's unconquerable bar! 4. A man of cultivated mind, can converse with a picture, and find an agreeable companion in a statue. 5. Little men—triumph over the errors of great ones, as an owl—rejoices at an eclipse of the sun. 6. The eternal and natural worlds are so united, as to make but one; like the soul and the body. 7. What is the difference between good sense, and wit?

A villain, when he most seems kind,
Is most to be suspected.

132. Be perfectly distinct in your articulation, or you cannot become an easy, graceful, effective and natural elocutist; therefore, practice on the vowels and consonants, as here recommended, separately and combined. If your utterance is rapid, and indistinct, your reading and speaking, will not be listened to with much pleasure, or profit. A hint—to those who would be wise, is sufficient.

133. The second sound of N, is that of Ng, before hard g, and often before hard c, k and q under the accent. BANK; con-gress con-quers the strang-ling don-key, and sanc-tions the lank con-clave (N in BANK.) in pun-til-ious con-course: the san-guine un-cle, anx-ious to ling-er much long-er among the fin-king in-gots, fin-gles his rin-kled fin-ger over the lin-guist's an-gu-lar shrunk shanks.

134. The common mode of teaching elocution is considered the true one, because it has been so long admitted and practiced: the old have become familiar with it, and follow it from habit, as their predecessors did; and the rising generation receive it on trust: thus, they pass on, striving to keep each other in countenance: hence it is, that most of our bad habits, in this important art, are born in the primary school, brought up in the academy, and graduated in the college; if we proceed so far in our education. Is not an entire revolution necessary.

135. Irregulars. Ng have generally this sound. In cultivating and strength-en-ing the un-der-stand-ing, by stud-y-ing, read-ing, writ-ing, cy-pher-ing, and speak-ing, I am think-ing of con-tent-ing for go-ing to sing-ing meet-ing; in re-lin-quish-ing your stand-ing in the crisp-ing fry-ing pan, by jump-ing o-ver the wind-ing rail-ing, you may be sail-ing on the boil-ing o-cean, where the limp-ing her-rings are skip-ping, and danc-ing, around some-thing that is laugh-ing and cry-ing, sleep-ing and wa-king, lov-ing and smi-ling.

Notes. 1. This nasal diphthongal vocal consonant sound, may be made by drawing the tongue back, closing the passage from the throat into the mouth, and directing the sound through the nose: as in giving the name sound of N; it can be distinctly perceived by pro-long-ing, or sing-ing the ng sound in the word sing. 2. If the accent lie on the syllable beginning with g and chard, and k, and q, the n may take its name sound; as, con-grat-u-late, con-cur, con-clude, &c. 3. The three sounds of m and n, are the only nasal ones in our language. 4. Some consonant sounds are continuous: the 1st, 3d, and 4th of c; the 2nd of f, the 3rd of g, h, m, n, r, &c. are examples; others are abrupt or discrete; as, b, d, p, k, t, &c.: so we have continuous sounds, (the long ones,) and abrupt or discrete ones, (the short.)

Anecdote. Equality. When Lycurgus, king of Sparta, was to reform and change the government, one advised him, that it should be reduced to an absolute popular equality: "Sir," said the lawgiver, "be-gin it in your own house first."

Love—reckons hours—for months,—and days—for years;
And every little absence—is an age.

Proverbs. 1. A miss, is as good as a mile. 2. A man is a lion in his own cause. 3. He that has too many irons in the fire, will find that some of them will be apt to burn. 4. It is not an art to play; but it is a very good art to leave off play. 5. Beyond the truth, there is nothing but error; and beyond error, there is madness. 6. He, who deals with a blockhead, has need of much brains. 7. The burnt child dreads the fire. 8. When eyes will not, two cannot quarrel. 9. Words from the mouth, die in the ears; but words from the heart—stay there. 11. Young folks—think old folks fools; but old folks know that young ones are. 11. First know what is to be done, then do it. 12. The tongue, without the heart, speaks an unknown tongue. 13. Remember the reckoning.

The three essentials—of every existence are an inmost, a middle and an outmost: i. e. an end, a cause, and an effect: the end is the inmost, the cause is the middle, and the effect the outmost, or ultimate. Ex. Man is one existence, and yet consists of a soul, or inmost principle, a body, or middle principle, and an activity, or ultimate principle. In his soul are ends, or motives to action; in his body are causes, or ways and means of action; and in his life are effects, or actions themselves: if either were want-ing, he could not be a man: for, take away his soul, and his body would die for want of a first principle to live from; take away his body, and his soul could not act in the natural world, for want of a suitably organized instrument; take away his life, or the activity of his body from his soul, and both soul and body would cease to exist for lack of exercise. In other words, MAN consists of will, or inmost; understanding, or intermediate; and activity, or ultimate. It is evident, that without willing, his understanding would never think, and devise means of acting; and without understanding, his will—could not effect its purpose; and without action—that willing and understanding would be of no use.

Varieties. 1. The thief—is sorry he is to be punished, but not that he is a thief. 2. Some—are atheists—only in fair weather. 3. Is the casket—more valuable than the jewel it contains? 4. Indolence—is a stream that flows slowly on; yet it undermines every virtue. 5. All outward existence—is only the shadow of that, which is truly real; because its very correspondence. 6. Should we act from policy, or from principle? 7. The prayer of the memory is a reflected light, like that of the moon; that of the understanding alone, is as the light of the sun in winter; but that of the heart, like the light and heat united, as in spring or summer; and so also, is all discourse from them, and all worship.

THE FLIGHT OF YEARS.

Gone! gone forever!—Like a rushing war;
Another year—has burst upon the shore
Of earthly being—and its last low tones,
Wandering in broken accents on the air,
Are dying—to an echo.

136. In ancient Rome, an orator's education began in infancy; so should it be now; the seeds of eloquence may be sown, when the child is on the maternal bosom; the voice should be developed with the mind. If the child has good examples set him, in reading and speaking, and the youth is attentive to his every day language, and is careful to improve his mind and voice together, he will become a good elocutionist, without scarcely knowing it. Connection and association—have as much to do with our manner of speaking, as with our cast of thinking.

137. P has but one sound: PAP; pale, par, pall, pap; peep, pet; pipe, pip; pope, pool, pop; pule, pup, puss; point, pound; peo-ple put pep-er in pep-per-box-es, ap-ple-pies in cup- [P in PAP.] boards, and whap-ping pap-poo-ses in wrap-pers; the hap-py pi-per placed his peer-less pup-py in Pom-pey's shop-shop, to be purchased for a peck of pup-py pip-pins, or a pound of pul-ver-iz-ed pop-pies; a pad-dy picked a peck of pick-led pep-pers, and put them on a broad brimed pew-ter plat-ter.

138. MUSCLE BREAKERS. Peter Prickle Prandle picked three pecks of prickly pears, from three prickly prangly pear trees: if then, Peter Prickle Prandle, picked three pecks of prickly pears from three prickly prangly pear trees; where are the three pecks of prickly pears, that Peter Prickle Prandle picked, from the three prickly prangly pear trees? Success to the successful prickly prangly pear picker.

Notes. 1. To give this aspirate labial, whisper the word puh, (u short), or pop out the candle; see the engraving: it is all of the word up, except the u; but the sound is not finished till the lips are separated, or the remaining breath exhaled: remember the remarks in reference to other abrupt elements. 2. The principal difference between b and p is, that b is a vocal, and p, only a breath sound. P, H, T, are called, by some, sharp mutes; and B, G, D, flat mutes. 3. Germans find it difficult to pronounce certain vocal consonants at the ends of words, tho' correctly at the beginning: hence, instead of saying dog, mad, pad, &c. they say, at first, doh, mat, pad, &c. 4. In pronouncing m, and t together, p is very apt to intervene: as in Fam-ton &c. 5. P is silent in psal-ter, psalm, pneu-matics, Ptol-e-my, Psy-che, rasp-ber-ry, (31 a.) corps (o long), re-ceipt, &c. 6. Not depths, but depths; not clap-board, but clap-board; not Ja-cop, but Ja-cob; not hah-tism, but hap-tism, &c.

Anecdote. A Check. Soon after the battle of Leipsic, a wit observed.—“Bona-part must now be in funds; for he has received a check on the bank of the Elbe.”

Hidden, and deep, and never dry,
Or flowing, or at rest,
A living spring of love—doth lie
In every human breast.
All else—may fail, th't soothes the heart,
All, save that fount alone;
With that, and life, we never part;
For life, and love—are one.

He seemed

For dignity composed,—and high exploit;
But all was false—and hollow.

Proverbs. 1. He, who thinks he knows the most, knows the least. 2. Take every thing as it comes, and make the best of it. 3. Three removes are as bad as a fire. 4. Tread on a worm, and he will turn. 5. Two things we should never be angry at,—what we can, and what we cannot help. 6. When the bow is too much bent, it breaks. 7. A wise man—is a great wonder. 8. A wicked man—is his own hell; and his evil lusts and passions the fiends that torment him. 9. Blushing—is virtue's color. 10. Evil communications corrupt good manners. 11. Gain—is uncertain, but the pain is sure. 12. Never court, unless you intend to marry.

Amusements. Ever since the fall, mankind have been prone to extremes; not only the religious, but the irreligious portion of the world. It is greatly to be regretted, that we are all so much at the mercy of passion and prejudice, and so little—under the guiding influence of reason and intelligence. In our creation, the Divine Being—has manifested infinite love and infinite wisdom: for we are made in “HIS IMAGE and LIKENESS,” the former, we still retain, but the latter, sad to relate, we have lost. The will, or voluntary principle of the mind, constitutes our impelling power, and the understanding, or reasoning faculties, under the light of truth, is our governing power: if, therefore, we find ourselves loving—what is not good and true, our rationality, enlightened by wisdom, must be our guide. Hence, our rule is this; whatever amusements—tend to fit us for our various duties, and give us zeal in faithfully performing them, are perfectly proper; but, amusements, whose tendency is the reverse of this, are entirely improper; and we should not hesitate a moment in abstaining from them, however they may be approved by others, or sanctioned by long usage: we must never compromise the interests of eternity—for those transitory enjoyments of time and sense, which are at variance with the principles of truth and goodness. Both worlds are best taken care of, when they are cared for together, and each has its attention, according to its importance.

Varieties. 1. There are some, who live—to eat and drink; and there are others, who eat and drink, to live. 2. The perfection of art is—to conceal the art: i. e. to be the thing, instead of its representative. 3. Let every one sweep the snow from his own door, and not trouble himself about the frost on his neighbor's tiles. 4. Galileo, the great astronomer, was imprisoned for life, because he declared that Venus—shone with a borrowed light, and from the sun, as the centre of our system. 5. There are abuses—in all human governments. 6. He, whose virtues, exceed his talents, is the good man; but he, whose talents exceed his virtues, is the bad man. 7. All we perceive, understand, will, love, and practice, is our own; but nothing else.

Suspicion—always haunts the guilty mind;
The thief—still fears each bush—an officer.

139. Written language consists of letters, and, consequently, is more durable than spoken language, which is composed of articulate sounds. Our written alphabet contains twenty-six letters, which make syllables and words; words make sentences; sentences paragraphs, which make sections and chapters; these constitute an essay, discourse, address, oration, poem, dissertation, tract or book: but our vocal alphabet has forty-four letters, or sounds, which make up the whole of spoken language.

140. R has two sounds; first, its name sound; ARM; the bar-bers were, in former years, the ar-bi-ters of the mur-der-ers of their fore-fathers: the Tar-tars are gar-blers of hard-ware and per-ver-ters of the er-rors of North-ern-ers and South-ern-ers; the far-mers are dire search-ers after burnt ar-bors, and store the corners of their lar-ders with di-vers sorts of quar-ter dol-lars; Charles Bur-ser goes to the far-ther barn, and gets lar-ger ears of hard corn, for the car-ter's hor-ses.

[R in ARM.]

141. Dr. Franklin says, (of the justly celebrated Whitfield), that it would have been fortunate for his reputation, if he had left no unwritten works behind him; his talents would then have been estimated by their effects: indeed, his elocution was almost faultless. But whence did he derive his effective manner? We are informed, that he took lessons of Garrick, an eminent tragedian of England, who was a great master in Nature's school of teaching and practicing this useful art.

Notes. 1. To make this smooth vocal sound, pronounce the word arm, and dwell on the r sound; and you will perceive that the tongue is turned gently to the roof of the mouth, and at the same time drawn back a little. 2. Avoid omitting this letter, as it never is silent, except it is doubled in the same syllable: not staw-my, but stor-my; not hib-ah-ty, but hib-er-ty; not lust, but burst; not waw-um, but warm; not ah-gu-ment, but ar-gu-ment; not hasses, but hor-ses; not hahd stawna, but hard storm; etc. 3. Remember that short e and i before r, in the same syllable, when accented, sound like short u, unless followed by another r, as mercy, (mer-it), ser-geant, (ser-rate), ter-ma-gant, (ter-ror), mirth-ful, (mair-ror), verses, (ver-y) (here the r is re-echoed) and spirits, &c.: the exceptions are in parentheses: see p. 224. 4. Some words, (where a, i, and e, are peculiarly situated, as above), have, in their pronunciation, a reverberation, or repetition of the r, although there may be but one in the word; as—ver-y; being followed by a vowel.

Anecdote. Who Rules? A schoolmaster, in ancient Rome, declared, that he ruled the world. He was asked to explain: which he did in the following manner. "Rome—rules the world; the women rule those who govern Rome; the children control their mothers, and I rule the children."

So—we grew together,

Like to a double cherry, seeming parted;
But yet a union—in partition,
Two lowly berries,—moulded on one stem:
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two—of the first, like coats, in heraldry,
Due but to one, and crowned—with one crest.

Proverbs. 1. He that is ill to himself, will be good to nobody. 2. The remedy—is worse than the disease. 3. Who is so deaf, as he that will not hear? 4. All vice infatuates and corrupts the judgment. 5. A fool, may, by chance, put something into a wise man's head. 6. After praying to God, not to lead you into temptation, do not throw yourself into it. 7. Evil gotten, evil spent. 8. He, that knows useful things, and not he that knows many things, is the wise man. 9. He—preaches well, that lives well. 10. It is always term time in the court of conscience. 11. We may be ashamed of our pride, but not proud of our shame. 12. Historical faith—precedes saving faith. 13. Stolen waters are sweet.

The True Christian Character. The three essentials of a christian—are—a good will—flowing through a true understanding, into a uniform life of justice and judgment. It is not enough, that we mean well, or know our duty, or try to do right; for good intention is powerless, without truth to guide it aright; and truth—in the intellect alone, is mere winter-light, without the summer-heat of love to God—and love to man; and blundering efforts—to do our duty—are poor apologies for virtuous energies, well directed and efficiently applied: the three alone—can constitute us true christians; i.e. our will, understanding and life, must be brought into harmonious and efficient unity, in order that we may be entitled to this high and holy appellation. Things must not only be thought of, and desired, purposed, and intended; but they must be done, from love to the Lord; that He, as a principle of goodness, and a principle of truth—may be flowing, constantly, from the centre—to the circumference of actions. we must practice what we know of the truth: we must live the life of our heavenly Father's commandments; so as to have his goodness and truth implanted in us, that we may strive to walk before Him, and become perfect.

Varieties. 1. A certain apothecary—has over his door, this sign—"All kinds of du-ing stuff sold here." 2. Does wealth—exert more influence than knowledge? 3. A pretty shepherd, indeed, a wolf would make! 4. At some taverns—madness—is sold by the glass: at others, by the bottle. 5. Sobriety, without sullenness, and mirth with modesty, are commendable. 6. Even an ordinary composition, well delivered, is better received, and of course does more good, than a superior one, badly delivered. 7. Where order—cannot enter, it cannot exist.

What is beauty? Not the show
Of shapely limbs, and features. No:
These—are but flowers,
That have their dated hours,
To breathe their momentary sweets, then go;
'Tis the stainless soul—within—
That outshines—the fairest skin.

Appearances—deceive;
And this one maxim—is a standing rule,—
Men are not—what they seem.

142. Many persons take great pains in their dress, to appear well and receive attention; and so far as personal appearance can exert an influence, they attain their end; but if they would cultivate their language, and the proper way of using it, so as not to deform themselves in reading and conversation, they might accomplish the object at which they aim.

143. The second sound of R, is rough, trilled, or burred; when it comes before vowel sounds in the same syllable: RAIL ROAD; the roa-ring rep-ro-bate re-ver-be-rates his ran-cor-ous rib-ald-ry and *re-tre*ats from his re-gal throne, to his ri-val rec-re-a-tion in the rock-e-ry: the op-pro-bri-ous li-bra-dri-an, rec-re-ant-ly threw the great grid-i-ron among the *cro*ck-e-ry with ir-re-proach-a-ble ef-front-e-ry; the re-sults of which were, ro-man-tic dreams, broken ribs, and a hun-dred prime cit-rons for the throng of ery-ing chil-dren: round and round the rag-ged rock the rag-ged ras-cal drags the strong rhi-noc-e-ros, while a rat in a rat-trap ran through the rain on a rail, with a raw lump of red liv-er in its mouth.

(R in RAIL.)

144. Written language—is used for communicating information respecting persons distant from each other, and for transmitting, to succeeding ages, knowledge, that might otherwise be lost, or handed down by erring tradition. Spoken language—is used to convey the thoughts and feelings of those who are present, and are speaking, or conversing together: the former is, of course, addressed to our eyes, and the latter, to our ears; each kind having its own particular alphabet, which must be mastered.

Notes. 1. This vocal trilled diphthongal sound, consists of the aspirate sound of h, modified between the end of the tongue and the roof of the mouth, combined with a vocal. 2. Or, make the name sound of r, and mix it with the aspirate, by clapping the tongue against the roof of the mouth; practice prolonging her, er par in a whisper, trilling the r, then add the voice sound; afterwards prefix the i, and exercise as above. 3. Demosthenes, in the early part of his career, was reproached for not being able to pronounce, correctly, the first letter of his favorite art—Rhetoric; i. e. he could not trill it for some time. 4. Give only one trill or clasp of the tongue, unless the sentiment be very animating; as—Rise—brothers, rise! etc. “Strike! till the last armed foe expires.”

145. Another. The riven rocks are rudely rent asunder, and the rifted trees rush along the river, while hoar-y bo-re-as rends the robes of spring, and rat-ling thunder roars around the rock-y regions: Robert Rowley rolled a round roll round; a round roll, Robert Rowley rolled round; where rolled the round roll, Robert Rowley rolled round!

Didst ever see

Two gentle vines, each—round the other twined,
So fondly, closely, that they had become,
Ere their growth, blended together
Into one single tree?

Proverbs. 1. He, who resolves to amend, has God on his side. 2. Honest men are soon bound; but you can never bind a knave. 3. If the best man's faults were written on his fore-head, it would make him pull his hat over his eyes. 4. Life is half spent, before we know what it is. 5. Of the two evils, choose the least. 6. One bad example spoils many good precepts. 7. Patience—is a plaster for all sores. 8. He who serves well—need not be afraid to ask his wages. 9. If you will not hear reason, she will rap you over your knuckles. 10. Prayer—should be the key of the day, and the lock of the night. 11. Foul water will quench fire. 12. From nothing—nothing can come.

Anecdote. Spinster. Formerly, it was a maxim, that a young woman should never be married, till she had spun, herself, a full set of linen. Hence, all unmarried women have been called spinsters: an appellation they still retain in certain deeds, and law proceedings; though many are not entitled to it.

Mathematics—includes the study of numbers and magnitudes: hence, it is called the science of gravity; and is applicable to all quantities, that can be measured—by a standard unit, and thus expressed by numbers and magnitude. Feeling and thought, though they vary immensely, cannot be measured: we cannot say, with strict propriety, that we love one—exactly twice as much as another; nor, that one—is three times as wise as another: because love and wisdom are not mathematical quantities: but we can measure time by seconds, minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, years, and centuries; space by inches, feet, yards, rods, and miles; and motion, by the space passed over in a given time.

Varieties. 1. Was the world created out of nothing? 2. Fools—draw false conclusions, from just principles: and mad-men draw just conclusions, from false principles. 3. The discovery of what is true, and the practice of what is good, are the two most important objects of life. 4. Associations—between persons of opposite temperaments, can neither be durable, nor productive of real pleasure to either party. 5. Where grace cannot enter, sin increases and abounds. 6. The spontaneous gifts of heaven, are of high value: but perseverance—gains the prize. 7. When the will—becomes duly resigned to God, in small things, as well as great ones, all the affections will be reduced into their proper state, in their proper season.

The wretch, condemn'd with life to part,

Still, still on hope relies,

And every pang, that rends his heart,

Bids expectation rise.

Hope, like the glimmering taper's light,

Adorns—and cheers his way,

And still, as darker grows the night,

Emits a brighter ray.

146. Keep a watchful and jealous eye over common opinions, prejudices and bad school instruction, until the influence of reason, nature and truth, is so far established over the ear and taste, as to obviate the danger of adopting or following unquestionable errors, and vicious habits of reading and speaking: extended views, a narrow mind extend. To judge righteously of all things, preserve the mind in a state of perfect equilibrium, and let a love of truth and goodness govern all its decisions and actions.

147. W, has but one consonant sound, and one vowel sound;

WOO; a wan-ton wag, with woful words, be-wailed the well wish-er of the wig-wam; the dwarf dwells in the wea-ry west, where wom-en weave well the warp of life, and win-ter winds wan-der in the wild swamps, that wail and weep: the wa-ter-witch, al-ways war-worn in the wax-works, war-bles her watch-word to the wealth-er-wise, and re-wards the wick-ed with weep-ing, wail-ing and worm-wood.

148. By separating these elements of language, and practicing on them, each by itself, the exact position and effort of the vocal organs, may be distinctly observed; and in this way, the true means of increasing and improving the force and quality of every one ascertained. Be not discouraged at the apparent mechanical, artificial and constrained modes of giving the sounds, and pronouncing the words: acquire accuracy, and ease and gracefulfulness will inevitably follow.

149. Irregulars. U has this sound in certain words: the an-guish of the an-ti-quary is as-sua-ged with lan-guid man-sue-tude, for the con-quest over his dis-tin-guish-ed per-sua-sion: the guide dis-gui-ses his as-sue-tude of per-sua-ding the dis-sua-der.

Notes. 1. To produce this sound, shape the mouth and lips as for whistling, and make a voice sound; or, pronounce the word do, and when the o is about to vanish, commence this vocal consonant, thus, do—was. 2. When u is initial, i. e. begins a word or syllable, it is a consonant; but when it ends one, it is equivalent to 21 o in ocean; new, how, now, pow-er, etc. 3. In sworn, two, answer, it is silent: so also before r, worm, wrack, veneer, verist, various, etc. blow, toho, knowledge, tohom, repose, whole, whoop, etc. 4. Practice changes on u and v, as found under 21 f. 5. He who a watch would wear, two things must do, pocket his watch, and watch his pocket too.

Anecdote. A Scold. Foote, a celebrated comic actor, being scolded by a woman, said, in reply, "I have heard of tartar—and brimstone;—you are the CREAM of the one, and the FLOWER of the OTHER."

"Ask for what end—the heavenly bodies shine?
Earth—for whose use?—Man answers, 'Tis for mine;
For me—kind nature wakes her genial power,
Suckles each herb, and spreads out every flower;
Annual for me—the grape, the rose renew
The juice nectareous, and the lalmey dew:
For me—health—gushes from a thousand springs;
For me—the mine—a thousand treasures brings,
Seas roll—to waft me, winds—to light me rise,
My footstool—earth, my canopy—the skies."

Proverbs. 1. It is easier to praise poverty, than to bear it. 2. Prevention—is better than cure. 3. Learn wisdom by the follies of others. 4. Knowledge, without practice, makes but half an artist. 5. When you want any thing, always ask the price of it. 6. To cure idleness, count the tickings of a clock. 7. It costs more to revenge injuries, than to endure them. 8. Conceited men think nothing can be done without them. 9. He, that kills a man, when he is drunk, must be hung when he is sober. 10. An idle man's head, is the devil's work-shop. 11. God makes, and apparel shapes. 12. Good watch prevents harm.

The Difference. Two teachers apply for a school; one—is ignorant, but offers to teach for twelve dollars a month; the other—is well qualified for the station, and asks twenty-five dollars a month. The fathers—weigh the souls of their children against money, and the twelve dollar teacher is employed. A man in search of work asks a farmer, if he does not want to hire a hand? "If I can find one to suit me,"—the farmer replies: and then he puts a variety of questions to him; such as,—"Can you mow? reap? chop? cradle? hoe? dress flax? &c." Soon after, another stranger calls, and asks whether they wish to hire a teacher in their district? But the principal question in this case, is—"How much do you ask a month?" Now, just observe the difference—in the catechising of the two applicants. Again, the father—will superintend the hired man, and have things so arranged—as not to lose a moment's time,—and see that nothing goes to waste; but the same watchful parent—will employ a teacher, and put him into the school, and never go near him.

Varieties. 1. If a man begin a fool, he is not obliged to persevere. 2. Ought circumstantial evidence to be admitted in criminal cases? 3. Suspicion—is always worse than fact. 4. No duty, imposed by necessity, should be considered a burthen. 5. To act from order, is to act from heaven. 6. Truth, however little, does the mind good. 7. True love always gives forth true light; false light agrees not with the truth, but lightly esteems it; and also, seems to itself, to be better than truth.

Great were the hearts, and strong the minds,

Of those, who framed, in high debate,
The immortal league of love, that binds

Our fair, broad Empire, State with State

And deep the gladness of the hour,

When, as the auspicious task was done,

In solemn trust, the sword of power,
Was giv'n to glory's unspoilt son.

That noble race is gone; the suns

Of fifty years—have risen, and set;

But the bright links, those chosen ones

So strongly forged, are brighter yet.

Wide—as our own free race increase—

Wide shall extend the elastic chain,

And bind, in everlasting peace,

State after State, a mighty train.

150. Two grand objects are to be accomplished by these lessons and exercises: the acquiring a knowledge of the vowel and consonant sounds, and a facility in pronouncing them: by means of which, the voice is partially broken, and rendered flexible, as well as controllable, and the obstacles to a clear and distinct articulation removed: therefore, practice much, and dwell on every elementary sound, taking the letters separately, and then combining them into syllables, words and sentences.

151. Two of the three sounds of X: first, name sound; or ks, when at the end of accented syllables, and often when it precedes them; if followed by an abrupt consonant. AXE: the cox-comb ex- [X is AXE.] pe-ri-en-cen the lux-u-ry of ex-pa-ti-a-ting on the ex-plo-sion of his ex-ces-sive ex-al-ta-tion of the bux-om fair sex; being anx-i-ous to ex-plain the or-tho-dox-y and het-o-dox-y of Ex-ag-o-nus, the ex-pos-i-ter ex-po-ses the ex-plot, of ex-pect-ing to ex-plain how to ex-crete ex-cel-lent texts by ex-cru-ci-a-ting the wax of the ex-cheq-uer.

152. A good articulation—consists in giving to every letter in a syllable, its due proportion of sound, according to the best pronunciation; and, in making such a distinction between the syllables, of which words are composed, as that the ear, without difficulty, shall acknowledge their number, and perceive, at once, to which syllable each letter belongs. When these things are not observed, the articulation is in that proportion, defective: the great object is—to articulate so well, that the hearer can perfectly understand what is read or spoken, without being obliged to have recourse to a painful attention. A good articulation is the foundation of good delivery: as the sounding of the musical notes with exactness, is the foundation of good singing.

153. Play upon Xes. Charles X. x-king of France, was extravagantly xtolled, but is exceedingly xerrated. He xperienced extraordinary excellence in xigencies; he was excellent in xternals, but xtrinsic in xtaey; he was xstatic in xpression, xxtreme in xitement, and xtraordinary in xtempore xpression. He was xpatriated for his xcesses, and, to xpiate his extravagance, was xcluded, and xpired in xpulsion.

Notes. 1. To produce this diphthongal aspirate sound, whisper the word ks, and then repeat it, and leave out the i; k's: one of the most unpleasant sounds in our language. 2. Since the word diphthong merely signifies a double sound, there is no impropriety in calling double consonants, diphthongs, as we do certain vowels. 3. All critical skill in the sound of language, has its foundation in the practical knowledge of the nature and properties of these elements: remember this and apply yourself accordingly. 4. In all cases, get the proper sounds of letters, as given in the key-words, or first examples.

To err—is human; to forgive—divine.

Proverbs. 1. If better were within, better would come out. 2. Jests, like sweetmeats, have often sour sauce. 3. Keep aloof from quarrels; be neither a witness, nor a party. 4. Least said, the soonest mended. 5. Little boats should, keep near shore; greater ones may venture more. 6. Some—are more nice than wise. 7. Make a wrong step, and down you go. 8. We all live and learn. 9. Riches, (like manure), do no good, till they are spread. 10. Silks and satins often put out the kitchen fire. 11. Some—would go to the devil, if they had authority for it. 12. Love virtue, and abhor vice. 13. Good counsel has no price.

Anecdote. Matrimony. A father, wishing to dissuade his daughter from all thoughts of matrimony, quoted the words: "She who marries, doeth well; but she who marries not, doeth better." The daughter, meekly replied, "Father, I am content to do well; let those do better, who can."

Boundaries of Knowledge. Human reason—very properly refuses to give its assent to any thing, but in proportion as it sees how that thing is, or is done. Now, there are three directions—in natural science, which are attended with their difficulties. The astronomer—sees—and feels a difficulty—in getting from the solar system—to the universe; the chemist, in proceeding from matter—to its mysterious essence; and the physiologist, in advancing from the body—to the soul; three kingdoms of knowledge—bordering on kingdoms—unknown to natural science. Without reason, man could never become elevated above his senses, and, consequently, could not become a rational and intellectual being, and, of course, not MAN, in the true sense of the term. But our minds are so constituted, that after having traversed the material creation, and perceived, scientifically, the very boundaries of matter, where it is adjoined by spirit, it can elevate itself, by a power, constantly given by God, to the lower boundaries of spirit, where it touches upon matter, and then, by its derived powers, ascend step by step, to the great I AM; whom to know aright, and whom to love supremely, is the chief good of man.

Varieties. 1. When man sins, angels weep, and devils rejoice. 2. True politeness, springs from the heart. 3. What is that, which makes every body sick, except those who swallow it? Flattery. 4. Science has no enemy, but ignorance. 5. Be not too brief in conversation, lest you be not understood; nor too diffuse, lest you be troublesome. 6. Simplicity, and modesty, are among the most engaging qualities of every superior mind. 7. We live in two worlds, a natural and a spiritual one.

I would never kneel at a gilded shrine,
To worship the idol—gold;
I would never fetter this heart of mine,
As a thing—for fortune sold:
But I'd bow—to the light th't God hath given,
The nobler light—of mind;
The only light, save that of Heaven,
That should free-will homage find.

154. Reading—should be a perfect fac-simile of correct speaking; and both exact copies of real life: hence, read just as you would naturally speak on the same subject, and under similar circumstances: so, that if any one should hear you, without seeing you, he could not tell whether you were reading or speaking. Remember that nothing is denied to industry and perseverance; and that nothing valuable can be obtained without them.

155. The second sound of X is that of gz; generally, when it immediately precedes the accent, and is followed by a vowel sound, or the letter h, in words of two or more syllables; EXIST; the ex- [X in EXIST.] hor-ter is ex-haust-ed by his ex-u-ber-ant ex-or-di-nary, and desires to be ex-on-er-a-ted from ex-am-in-ing the ux-o-ri-ous ex-ec-utive; an ex-act ex-am-in-a-tion into the ex-ag-ger-a-tions of the aux-il-li-a-ries ex-hib-its a lux-u-ri-ant ex-ile, who ex-ist-ed an ex-ot-ic in ex-em-pla-ry ex-al-ta-tion.

156. The letters o, and c, in to and the, are long, before vowels, but abbreviated before consonants, (unless emphatic,) to prevent a hiatus. Th' man took the instrument and began t' play th' tune, when th' guests were ready to eat. I have written to Obadiah t' send me some of th' wheat, that was brought in th' ship Omar, and which grew on th' land belonging t' th' family of the Ashlands. Are you going from town? No I am going to town. Th' vessel is insured to, at and from London.

Notes. 1. To make this diphthongal vocal sound, close the teeth as if to give the sound of C, and then bring into contact the posteriors, or the roots of the tongue, and back parts of the throat, and pronounce the imaginary word gz, several times; then omit the u, and pronounce the g, z, by themselves: g—z. 2. For the 3d sound of X, see the third sound of C. 3. These elemental sounds was the favorite study among the ancients, of the greatest ability.

157. Sight Reading. To become a good reader, and a reader at sight, one must always let the eyes precede the voice a number of words; so that the mind shall have time, clearly, and distinctly, to conceive the ideas to be communicated; and also feel their influence: this will give full play to the thoughts, as well as impart power from the affectuous part of the mind, to the body, for producing the action, and co-operation, of the right muscles and organs to manufacture the sounds and words. In walking, it is always best to see where we are about to step; it is equally so in reading, when the voice walks. Indeed, by practice, a person will be able to take in a line or two, in anticipation of the vocal effort: always look before you leap.

The high, the mountain-majesty—of worth—Should be, and shall, survive its woe;
And, from its immortality,—look forth—
In the sun's face,—like yonder Alpine snow,
Imperishably pure—beyond all things below.

Proverbs. 1. If you would lend a man money, and make him your enemy, ask him for it again. 2. He that goes a borrowing, goes a sorrowing. 3. The innocent—often suffer through the indolence and negligence of others. 4. Two of a trade seldom agree. 5. When the Lord revives his work, the Devil revives his. 6. He that swells in prosperity, will shrink in adversity. 7. It is human to err; but diabolical to persevere in error. 8. For a cure of ambition, go in the church-yard, and read the gravestones. 9. Better get in the right path late, than never. 10. A real friend—is discerned in a trying case. 11. Every one can acquire a right character. 12. Two wrongs—don't make a right.

Anecdote. Zeno—was told, that it was disrespectful to a philosopher to be in love. "If that were true," said the wise man, "the fair sex are indeed to be pitied; for they would then receive the attention of fools alone."

Mental Violence. Everything which tends to discompose or agitate the mind, whether it be excessive sorrow, rage or fear, envy, or revenge, love or despair—in short, whatever acts violently on our mental faculties—tends to injure the health.

Varieties. 1. Washington—was born Feb. 22d, 1732, and died Dec. 14th, 1799; how old was he? 2. We cannot love those, whom we do not respect. 3. Order—is the same in the world, in man, and in the church; and man is an epitome of all the principles of order. 4. In factions, the most ignorant are always the most violent. 5. The good man has God in his heart, when he is not in his mouth; but the hypocrite—has God in his mouth, without having him in his heart. 6. It is some hope of goodness, not to grow worse; but it is a part of badness, not to grow better. 7. Why should we seek—that love, that cannot profit us, or fear—that malice, that cannot hurt us?

WARREN'S ADDRESS AT THE BUNKER HILL BATTLE.

STAND! the ground's your own, my braves!

Will ye give it up to slaves?

Will ye look for greener graves?

Hope ye mercy still?

What's the mercy despots feel!

Hear it—in that battle peal!

Read it—on yon bristling steel!

Ask it—ye who will.

Fear ye foes who kill for hire?

Will ye to your homes retire?

Look behind you! they're afire!

And before you, see

Who have done it!—From the vale—

On they come!—and will ye quail?

Leaden rain and iron hail

Let their welcome be!

In the God of battles trust!

Die we may—and die we must:—

But, O! where—can dust—to dust

Be consigned so well,

As where heavens—its deus shall shed

On the martyr'd patriot's bed,

And the rocks shall raise their head,

Of his deeds to tell!

[PIERPOINT.

158. An accurate knowledge of these elementary sounds, which constitute our vocal alphabet, and the exact co-operation of the appropriate organs to give them truly, are essential to the attainment of a good and efficient elocution. Therefore, be resolved to understand them thoroughly; and, in your various efforts to accomplish this important object, give precision and full force to every sound, and practice faithfully, and often, the difficult and rapid changes of the vocal powers, required by the enunciation of a quick succession of the muscle-breakers.

159. The sound of Y, when a consonant; YE: the year-ling youngster, yelled for the yel-low yolk, yes-ter-night, and yearn-ed in the yard o-ver the year-book till he yex'd: the yoke yields to your [Y in YE.] year-ling, which yearns for the yar-row in the yaws; you yerkd' your yeast from the yawn-ing yeo-man yes-ter-day, and yet yourself, of yore, yea, tho' young, yearn-ed o-ver the yes-ty yawn: Mr. Yew, did you say, or did you not say, what I said you said? because Mr. Yewyaw said you never said what I said you said: now, if you say that you did not say, what I said you said, then pray what did you say?

160. The first step to improvement is, to awaken the desire of improvement: whatever interests the heart, and excites the imagination, will do this. The second is a clear and distinct classification of the principles, on which an art is based, and an exact expression of them, in accordance with this classification; indeed, all the arts and sciences should be seen in definite delineations, thro' a language which cannot well be misunderstood.

161. Irregulars. E, I, J, and U, occasionally have this sound; Eu-rope al-lie-nates the con-spic-u-ous cult-ure of her na-iads, and, like a dis-guis-ed creat-ure, eu-lo-gi-ses her ju-nior court-iers for their bril-liant genius: the virt-u-ous christ-ian sold-ier, in spir-it-u-al un-ion with the mill-ions of Nat-ure, shouts with eu-cha-ris-tic grand-eur, eu-pho-ni-ous hal-le-lu-jahs, which are fa-mil-iar-ly read, throughout the vol-ume of the U-niverse.

Notes. To give this vocal sound, nearly close the teeth, with the lips turned out as in making long e, (see engraving,) and drawlingly pronounce the word yet, pretracting the sound of the y thus, y—et; y—on. 2. For the two other sounds of y, see the two sounds of i; rhyme, hymn; isle, ile. 3. F is a consonant at the beginning of a word or syllable, except in y-clad, (e-clad,) y-clept, (e-clept) y-t-ri-a, (it-ri-a,) Yp-si-lan-ti, (Ip-si-lan-ti,) the name of a town in Michigan. 4. In prod-uce, u has its name sound; and in vol-ume, it has this con-sonant sound of y preceding it; in the first, it is preceded by an abrupt element: in the second, by an open one.

If I could find some cave unknown,
Where human feet have never trod,
Even there—I could not be alone,
On every side—there would be God.

Proverbs. 1. The shorter answer—is doing the thing. 2. You cannot quench fire with tor. 3. There is no general rule without exceptions. 4. Happiness—is not in a cottage, nor in a palace, nor in riches, nor in poverty, nor in learning, nor in ignorance, nor in active, nor in passive life; but in doing right, from right motives. 5. Good intention—is not reformation. 6. It is self-conceit, that makes a man obstinate. 7. To cure a fit of passion, walk out in the open air. 8. Idle men are dead, all their lives long. 9. If you would know the value of money, earn it. 10. Hearts may agree, tho' heads—differ. 11. Beware of flirting and coquetry. 12. There is no place like home. 13. He that is warm, thinks others so.

Anecdote. A Vain Mother. As a lady—was viewing herself in a looking-glass, she said to her daughter: “What would you give—to be as handsome as I am?” “Just as much, (replied the daughter,) as you would, to be as young as I am.”

The Poor. How few, even of professing christians, are aware of the pleasure, arising from contributing to the support of the poor! Is it not more blessed to give—than to receive? But there are ahs for the mind—as well as for the body. If we duly considered our relations, and our destinies, instead of giving grudgingly, or wanting to be called upon, we should go out in search of the destitute and ignorant, and feel that we were performing the most acceptable service to God, while sharing the gifts of his providence with our fellow-beings, who are as precious in his sight—as we fancy ourselves to be: for he does not regard any from their external situation, but altogether from their internal state.

Varieties. 1. American independence—was acknowledged by Great Britain, Jan. 19, 1783; and the treaty of Ghent signed, Dec. 24, 1814. 2. Never do an act, of which you doubt the justice. 3. Nothing can be a real blessing, or curse, to the soul, that is not made its own by appropriation. 4. Let every man be the champion of right. 5. How sharper—than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child. 6. All science has its foundation in experience. 7. Happy are the miseries that end in joy; and blessed are the joys, that have no end.

Ay, I have planned full many a sanguine scheme
Of earthly happiness; * * *

And it is hard
To feel the hand of death—arrest one's steps,
Throw a chill blight—on all one's budding hopes,
And hurl one's soul, untimely, to the shades,
Lost in the gaping gulf of blank oblivion.
—Fifty years hence, and who will think of Henry?
Oh, none!—another busy brood of beings
Will shoot up in the interim, and none
Will hold him in remembrance.—

I shall sink,
As sinks a stranger—in the crowded streets
Of busy London:—some short bustle's caused,
A few inquiries, and the crowd close in,
And all's forgotten.

[H. K. WHITE.]

162. Many consider elocution merely as an accomplishment, and that a desultory, instead of a systematic attention, is all that is necessary. A regular, scientific and progressive course, in this as well as every thing else, is the only correct, effectual, and rapid mode of proceeding. If improvement be the object, whether we devote little, or much attention, to a pursuit, be it mental or manual, system and method are absolutely *essential: order—*is heaven's first, and last law.

163. One of the three sounds of Ch ; which may be represented by tch :

CHANGE; the cheat choked a chump of chives for the arch-deacon of Green-wich: a chap chased a [CH in CHIP.] chick-en into the church, and the churl-ish chap-lain check'd it for char-ity; the Sa-chem of Wool-wich, chuck-led over the ur-chin's chit-chat, and snatched his rich peach-es, and pinch'd them to chow-der; the chief of Nor-wich, charm'd by the chaunt-ing of the chirp-ing chough, chafed his chil-ly chin by touch-ing it on the chal-ky chim-ney: three chub-by chil-dren, in Richfield, were each choked with choice chunks of cheese, much of which Sancho Panza purchased of Charles Chickering on Chimborazo.

164. In all cases of producing sounds, observe the different positions of the organs, and remember, that the running through with the forty-four sounds of our language, is like running up the keys of an instrument, to see if all is right: be satisfied with nothing, short of a complete mastery over the whole subject. Be very particular in converting all the breath that escapes into sound, when reading or singing; and remember, that the purer the sound, the easier it may be made; the less will be the injury to the vocal organs, the farther it will be heard, and with the more pleasure will it be listened to. Do not forget the end, the cause, and the effect.

Notes. 1. To produce this most unpleasant triphthongal sound in our language, close the teeth, and, as you suddenly separate them, whisper chu, (u short), and you will accomplish the object. 2. In drachm, the ch, are silent. 3. Always try to improve the sounds as well as your voice. 4. Quintilian says, in recommending a close attention to the study of the simple elements, "whoever will enter into the inmost recesses of this sacred edifice, will find many things, not only proper to sharpen the ingenuity of children, but able to exercise the most profound erudition, and the deepest science;" indeed, they are the fountains in the science of sound and vocal modulation.

Anecdote. Principal—Interest. A debtor, when asked to pay his creditor, observed to him: that "it was not his interest to pay the principal, nor his principle to pay the interest." What do you think of such a man?

Unhappy he, who lets a tender heart,
Bound to him—by the ties of earliest love,
Fall from him, by his own neglect, and die,
Because it met no kindness.

Proverbs. 1. Humility—gains more than pride. 2. Never be weary in well-doing. 3. Expect nothing of those who promise a great deal. 4. Grieving for misfortunes, is adding gall to mormwood. 5. He, who would catch fish, must not mind getting wet. 6. He that by the plow would thrive, must either hold, himself, or drive. 7. Illness—is the greatest prodigality in the world. 8. If the counsel be good, no master who gave it. 9. Occupation—cures one half of life's troubles, and mitigates the other. 10. We bear no afflictions so patiently as those of others. 11. Let Nature have her perfect work. 12. Soft hands, and soft brains, generally go together.

To speak of Howard, the philanthropist, without calling to mind the eloquent eulogium, in which Burke has embalmed his memory, would be as impossible—as it would be to read that eulogium without owning that human virtue never received a more illustrious manifestation. "Howard," said the orator, "was a man, who traversed foreign countries, not to survey the sumptuousness of palaces, or the stateliness of temples; not to make accurate measurements of the remains of ancient grandeur, nor to form a scale of the curiosity of modern art; not to collect medals, or manuscripts; but, to dive into the depths of dungeons; to plunge in the infection of hospitals; to survey the mansions of sorrow and pain; to take the guage and dimensions of misery, depression, and contempt; to remember the forsaken; and to compare and collate the distresses of all men, under all climes." In the prosecution of this god-like work, Howard made "a voyage of discovery, a circumnavigation of charity," and at last—fell a victim to his humanity; for, in administering medicine to some poor wretches in the hospital at Cherson, in the Crimea, he caught a malignant fever, and died in the glorious work of benevolence. Thus fell the man who—

"Girding creation—in one warm embrace,
Outstretch'd his savior-arm—from pole to pole,
And felt akin—to all the human race."

Varieties. 1. To promote an unworthy person—disgraces humanity. 2. Read not books alone, but men; and, especially, thyself. 3. The human mind is a mirror—of the incomprehensible Divinity. 4. No one need despair of being happy. 5. The reason, that many persons want their desires, is—because their desires want reason. 6. Passions—act as wind, to propel our vessel; and our reason—is the pilot that steers her: without the wind, we could not move, and without the pilot, we should be lost. 7. The more genuine—the truths are, which we receive, the purer will be the good, that is found in the life; if the truths are applied to their real and proper uses.

What, then, remains, but well our power to use,
And keep good humor still, what'er we lose?
And trust me, dear, good humor can prevail,
When airs, and flights, and vervams, and scolding—fail:
Beauties—in vain, their pretty eyes may roll;
Charms—strike the right; but merit—wins the soul.

165. Vowel sounds are all formed in the LARYNX; and, on their emission, the articulating organs modify them into words. These words constitute language, which is used, by common consent, as signs of ideas; or as mediums for the manifestation of thought and feeling: it may be written, or spoken; and the natural results are—books, papers and conversation: by means of which, the conceptions and affections of human minds are made known and perpetuated.

166. Th have two sounds; first a lisping sound; THIN: a thief thirst-eth for the path of death, and win-keth at his thank-less thefts, as the a-the-ist doth of the o-rel-ical truth; forth-with the thrif-less throng, threw thongs over the mouth of Frith of Fourth, and thwar-ted the wrath of the thrif-ling thun-der; faith, quoth the youth, to the Pro-thon-o-ta-ry, the bath is my berth, the hearth is my cloth, and the heath is my throne.

167. Ventriloquism. In analyzing the sounds of our letters, and practicing them upon different *pitch*es, and with different qualities of voice, the author ascertained that this amusing art can be acquired and practiced, by almost any one of common organization. It has been generally supposed that ventriloquists possessed a different set of organs from most people; or, at least, that they were differently constituted; but this is altogether a misapprehension: as well might we say that the singer is differently constituted from one who does not sing. They have the same organs, but one has better command of them than the other. It is not asserted that all can become equally eminent in these arts; for there will be at least, three grand divisions; viz. good, BETTER and BEST.

168. The Thistle Sifter. Theophilus Thistle, the successful thistle sifter, in sifting a sieve full of unsifted thistles, thrust three thousand thistles thro' the thick of his thumb: if then Theophilus Thistle, the successful thistle sifter, in sifting a sieve full of unsifted thistles, thrust three thousand thistles thro' the thick of his thumb; see that thou, in sifting a sieve full of unsifted thistles, dost not thrust three thousand thistles through the thick of thy thumb: success to the successful thistle sifter, who doth not get the thistles in his tongue.

Notes. 1. To make this lisping diphthongal sound, press the tongue against the upper front teeth, and let the breath pass between them: or pronounce the word path, and dwell on the th sound; see engraving. 2. To avoid lisping, draw the tongue back so as not to touch the teeth, and take words beginning with s, or st; see the first sound of C for examples. 3. Why should this sound be called sharp, rather than dull? 4. Exactness in articulating every vocal letter, is more important than correct spelling in composition; for the former is addressed to hundreds at the same instant, while the latter is submitted to one or a few at a time.

Proverbs. 1. Youth—indulges in hope; old age—in remembrance. 2. One half of the world delights in uttering slander, and the other—in hearing it. 3. Virtue—is the only true nobility. 4. To bless, is to be bless'd. 5. Pleasures—are rendered bitter, by being abused. 6. Quarrels—would not last long, if the faults all lay on one side. 7. True merit—is dependent, neither on season, nor on fashion. 8. Hypocrisy—is the homage, which vice—renders to virtue. 9. The law—imposes on no one impossibilities. 10. Contempt of injuries, is proof of a great mind. 11. What! hope for honey from a nest of wasps? 12. Shall we creep like snails, or fly like eagles?

Anecdote. A stranger—went into a church-yard, where two children were setting out flowers on some graves. “Whose graves are these?” said he. “Father, mother, and little Johnny lie here.” “Why do you set the flowers here?” said the stranger. They looked at him with tears, and said—“We do love them so.”

Human ambition and human policy—labor after happiness in vain;—goodness—is the only foundation to build on. The wisdom of past ages—declares this truth;—our own observation confirms it;—and all the world acknowledge it;—yet how few, how very few—are willing to act upon it! If the inordinate love of wealth—and parade—be not checked among us, it will be the ruin of our country—as it has been, and will be, the ruin of thousands of others. But there are always two sides to a question. If it is pernicious—to make money and style—the standard of respectability,—it is injurious—and wrong—to foster prejudice against the wealthy and fashionable. Poverty—and wealth—have different temptations; but they are equally strong. The rich—are tempted to pride—and insolence; the poor—to jealousy—and envy. The envious and discontented poor, invariably become haughty—and over-bearing; when they become rich; for selfishness—is equally at the bottom—of these opposite evils.

Varieties. 1. The battle of New Orleans, was fought Jan. 8th, 1815. 2. A flatterer, is the shadow of a fool. 3. You cannot truly love, and ought not to be loved, if you ask any thing, that virtue condemns. 4. Do men exert a greater influence on society than women? 5. Self-exaltation, is the worst posture of the spirit. 6. A principle of unity, without a subject of unity, cannot exist. 7. Where is the wisdom, in saying to a child, be a man? Attempt not what God cannot countenance; but wait, and all things will be brought forth in their due season.

Duett! thy reign is short: Hypocrisy,
However gaily dress'd—in specious garb,
In witching eloquence, or winning smiles,
Allures—but for a time: Truth—lifts the veil,
She lights her torch, and places it on high,
To spread intelligence—to all around.
Now shrinks the fawning slave—hypocrisy—
Then, when the specious veil—is rent in twain,
Which screen'd the hideous monster—from our view!

169. Enunciation—is the utterance and combination of the elements of language, and the consequent formation of syllables, words, &c., as contradistinguished from the tones, and tuning of the voice, and all that belongs to the melody of speech. A perfect enunciation—consists in the accurate formation of the sounds of the letters, by right motions and positions of the organs, accompanied by a proper degree of energy, to impress those elements fully and distinctly on the ear; and the act of combining and linking those together, so as to form them into words, capable of being again combined into clauses and sentences, for the full conveyance of our ideas and determinations.

170. The second sound of th, is the vocal hisping: THAT; thou saidst the truths are thine, and the youths say they are theirs who walk therein; fath-er and moth-er bathe dai-ly, and their clothes and hearths are wor-th [TH in THAT.] of them; broth-er says, where-withal shall I smoothe the scythe, to cut the laths to stop the mouths of the moths with-out be-ing bother-ed? they gath-er wreaths be-neath the baths, and sheathe their swords with swath-ing bands, rather than make a blith-some pother.

171. Jaw-breakers. Thou ureath'd'st and muzzl'd'st the far-felch'd ox, and imprison'd'st him in the volcanic Mexican mountain of Pop-o-cat-a-pep! in Co-ti-pax-i. Thou prob'd'st my rack'd ribs. Thou tri-ffl'd'st with his acts, that thou black'n'st and contaminated'st with his fleh'd character. Thou lov'd'st the elves when thou heard'st and quick'd'n'st my heart's tuneful harps. Thou wagg'd'st thy prop'd up head, because thou thrust'd'st three hundred and thirty three thistles thro' the thick of that thumb, that thou cur'd'st of the barb'd shafts.

Notes. 1. To make this diphthongal vocal sound, place the organs as in the preceding th, and then add the voice sound, which can be made only in the larynx. 2. The terms sharp and flat, as applied to sound, are not sufficiently definite; we might as well speak of square, round and dull sounds; at the same time it is often convenient to use such terms, in order to convey our ideas. 3. If you have imperfections of articulation, set apart an hour every day for practice, in direct reference to your specific defects; and so of every other fault; particularly, of rapid utterance: this can be done either alone, or in company of those who can assist you.

Sky, mountains, rivers, winds, lakes, lightnings!—Ye,
With night, and clouds, and thunder, and a soul
To make these felt and feeling; the far roll
Of your departing voices—is the knell
Of what in me is sleepless—if I rest.

Could I embody and unobscure now
That which is most within me—could I wreak
My thoughts upon expression, and thus throw
Soul, heart, mind, passions, feelings strong or weak,
All that I would have sought, and all I seek,
Bear, know, feel, and yet breathe,—into one word,
And that one word were lightning, I would speak!—
But—as it is—I live, and die, unward,
With a most voiceless thought, scuffling it as a sword.

Proverbs. 1. A promise performed, is preferable to one made. 2. It will not always be summer. 3. Make hay, while the sun shines. 4. Cut your coat according to the cloth. 5. Pride—costs us more than hunger, thirst, or cold. 6. Never spend your money before you have it. 7. Never trouble another, for what you can do yourself. 8. Slanderers—are the Devil's bellows, to blow up contention. 9. The loquacity of fools—is a lecture to the wise. 10. Vows made in storms, are forgotten in calms. 11. We must form our characters for both worlds. 12. Progress—is the great law of our being.

A Puzzle. Here's a health to all those that we love; and a health to all those that love us; and a health to all them, that love those, that love them, that love them that love those that love us.

Anecdote. Half Mourning. A little girl, hearing her mother observe to another lady, that she was going into half mourning; inquired, whether any of her relations were half dead?

What is Ours. It is not those, who have riches in their possession, that are really rich; but they, who possess, and use them aright, and thereby enjoy them. Is he a true christian, who has a Bible in his possession, but does not live by the Bible? Is he a genuine christian, who reads, but does not understand the word, and, from understanding, practice it? As well may one say, that they are rich, who have borrowed money from others, or have the property of others in their possession. What do we think of those, who go dressed in fine clothes or ride in splendid carriages, while none of these things are their own property? Knowledge, or truths—stored up in the memory, are not ours, really and truly, unless we reduce them to practice: they are like hearsays of great travelers, of which nothing more than the sound reaches us. Understanding—does not make the man, but understanding and doing, or living accordingly. There must be an appropriation of knowledge and truth—by the affections, in deeds, or they are of no avail: "Faith, without works, is dead:" the same principle applies to a society, and to a church.

Varieties. 1. Bargoyne—surrendered, Oct. 17, 1777, and Cornwallis, Oct. 19, '81. 2. Happy is that people whose rulers—rule in the fear of God. 3. Remember the past, consider the present, and provide for the future. 4. He, who marries for wealth, sells his happiness for half price. 5. The covetous person is always poor. 6. If you would avoid wants, attend to every thing below you, around you, within you, and above you. 7. All the works of natural creation, are exhibited to us, that we may know the nature of the spiritual, and eternal; all things speak, and are a language.

He was not born—to shame;
Upon his brow—shame—is ashamed to sit;
For 'tis a throne, where honor—may be crowned
Sole monarch—of the universal earth.

172. The chief source of indistinctness is precipitancy; which arises from the bad method of teaching to read: the child not being taught the true beauty and propriety of reading, thinks all excellence consists in quickness and rapidity: to him the prize seems destined to the swift; for he sets out at a gallop, and continues his speed to the end, regardless of how many letters, or syllables, he omits by the way, or how many words he runs together. "O reform it altogether."

173. Wh have one sound; WHALE; wherefore are whet-stones made of whirl-winds, and whip-lashes of whirl-pools? Why does that whimsical whis-tler whee-dle the whip-por-wills with wheat? Whi-lom the wheels whipped the whif-fle-tree, and whir-tle-ber-ries were white-washed for wheat; the whim-per-ing whi-ning whelp, which the whigs whi-tened on the wharf was whelmed into a whirl-i-gig as a whim-wham for a wheel-barrow of whis-ky.

174. Causes of Hoarseness. Hoarseness, in speaking, is produced by the emission of more breath than is converted into sound; which may be perceived by whispering a few minutes. The reason, why the breath is not converted into sound, in thus speaking, is, that the thorax, (or lungs,) is principally used; and when this is the case, there is always an expansion of the chest, and consequently, a lack of power to produce sounds in a natural manner: therefore, some of the breath, on its emission through the glottis, over the epiglottis, and through the back part of the mouth, chafes up their surfaces, producing a swelling of the muscles in those parts, and terminating in what is called hoarseness.

Notes. 1. This diphthonged aspirate may be easily made, by whispering the imaginary word whu, (u short,) prolonging it a little. 2. Since a diphthong is a double sound and a triphthong a triple sound, there is as much propriety in applying the term to consonants, as to vowels. 3. Let the pupil, in revising, point out all the Monothongs, Diphthongs, Triphthongs, and Polythongs. 4. Make and keep a list of all your deficiencies in speech and song, and practice daily for suppressing them: especially, in articulation, and false intonations; and never rest satisfied unless you can perceive a progress towards perfection at every exercise,—for all principles are immortal, and should be continually developing themselves.

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest
With all their country's wishes blest!
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns—to deck their hallow'd mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod:

By Fairy hands—their knell is rung,
By forms unseen—their dirge is sung;
There—Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf, that wraps their clay;
And Freedom—shall a while repair
To dwell, a weeping hermit, there.

Proverbs. 1. Self-exaltation—is the fool's paradise. 2. That, which is bitter to endure, may be sweet to remember. 3. The foot—is busy in every one's business but his own. 4. We may give advice, but we cannot give conduct. 5. Where reason—rules, appetite—obeys. 6. You will never repent of being patient and sober. 7. Zeal, without knowledge, is like fire without light. 8. Law-makers, should not be law-breakers. 9. Might—does not make right. 10. The greater the man, the greater the crime. 11. No one lives for himself. 12. No one can tell how much he can accomplish, till he tries.

Anecdote. Wine. Said a Rev. guest to a gentleman, with whom he was dining, and who was a temperance man: "I always think a certain quantity of wine does no harm, after a good dinner." "O no sir," replied mine host; "it is the uncertain quantity that does the mischief."

Winter Evenings. This seems provided, as if expressly for the purpose—of furnishing those who labor, with ample opportunity for the improvement of their minds. The severity of the weather, and the shortness of the day, necessarily limit the proportion of time, which is devoted to out-door industry; and there is little to tempt us abroad—in search of amusement. Every thing seems to invite us—to employ an hour or two—of this calm and quiet season, in the acquisition of useful knowledge, and the cultivation of the mind. The noise of life is hushed; the pavement ceases to re-sound with the din of laden wheels, and the tread of busy men; the glowing sun has gone down, and the moon and the stars are left to watch in the heavens, over the slumbers of the peaceful creation. The mind of man—should keep its vigils with them; and while his body—is reposing from the labors of the day, and his feelings—are at rest from its excitements, he should seek, in some amusing and instructive page, substantial food—for the generous appetite for knowledge.

Varieties. 1. The poor—may be content; and the contented are rich. 2. Hypocrisy—desires to seem good, rather than to be good. 3. It is better to be beaten with few stripes, than with many stripes. 4. He who swears, in order to be believed, does not know how to counterfeit a man of truth. 5. Who was the greater monster, Nero, or Cataline? 6. Let nothing foul, or indecent, either to the eye, or ear, enter within the doors where children dwell. 7. We worship God best, and most acceptably, when we resemble him most in our minds, lives and actions.

Home! how that blessed word—thrills the ear!
In it—what recollections blend!

It tells of childhood's scenes so dear,
And speaks—of many a cherished friend.

O! through the world, where'er we roam,
Though souls be pure—and lips be kind;
The heart, with fondness, turns to home,
Still turns to those—it left behind.

175. The pupil, in Elocution and Music, is strongly urged to attend to the right and the wrong method of producing the sounds of our letters, as well as in enunciating words. By all means, make the effort entirely below the diaphragm, while the chest is comparatively quiescent; and, as you value health and life, and good natural speaking, avoid the cruel practice of exploding the sounds, by whomsoever taught or recommended. The author's long experience, and practice, with his sense of duty, justify this protest against that unnatural manner of coughing out the sounds, as it is called. Nine-tenths of his hundreds of pupils, whom he has cured of the Bronchitis, have induced the disease by this exploding process, which ought itself to be exploded.

176. The 44 sounds of our Language, in their alphabetical order. A 4; Ale, are, all, at: B 1; bribe: C 4; cent, clock, suffice, ocean: D 2; did, fac'd: E 2; eel, ell: F 2; fife, of: G 3; gem, go, rouge: H 1; hope: I 2; isle, ill: J 1; judge: K 1; kirk: L 1; lily: M 1; mum: N 2; nun, bank: O 3; old, ooze, on: P 1; pipe: Q 1; queen: R 2; arm, rough: S 4; so, is, sure, treasury: T 2; pit, nation: U 3; mute, up, full: V 1; rivid: W 2; wall, bow: X 3; flax, exist, beaux: Y 3; youth, rhyme, hymn: Z 2; zigzag, azure: Ch 3; church, chaise, chasm: Gh 3; laugh, ghost, lough: Ph 2; sphere, nephew: Th 2; thin, that: Wh 1; whale: Oi 1; oil: Ou 1; sound: the duplicates, or those having the same sound, are printed in italics.

177. "Bowels of compassion, and loins of the mind." In the light of the principles here unfolded, these words are full of meaning. All the strong affections of the human mind, are manifested thro' the dorsal and abdominal region. Let any one look at a boy, when he bids defiance to another boy, and challenges him to combat: "Come on, I am ready for you:" and at the soldier, with his loins girded for battle: also, observe the effect of strong emotions on yourself, on your body, and where; and you will be able to see the propriety of these words, and the world of meaning they contain. If we were pure minded, we should find the proper study of physiology to be the direct natural road to the mind, and to the presence of the DEITY.

Notes. 1. Make these 44 sounds, which constitute our vocal alphabet, as familiar to the ear, as the shapes of our 26 letters are to the eye; and remember, that success depends on your mastery of them; they are the a, b, c, of spoken language; and the effort to make them has a most beneficial effect on the health and voice. 2. Keep up the proper use of the whole body, and you need not fear sickness. 3. The only solid foundation for elocution is, a perfect knowledge of the number and nature of these 44 simple elements: error here will carry a train throughout.

Virtue—

Stands like the sun, and all, which rolls around,
Drinks life, and light, and glory—from her aspect.

Proverbs. 1. Truth—may be blamed, but never shamed. 2. What soberness—conceals, drunkenness—reveals. 3. Be you ever so high, the law is above you. 4. A mob—has many heads, but no brains. 5. A poor man's debt makes a great noise. 6. Busy-bodies—are always meddling. 7. Crows—are never the whiter, for washing themselves. 8. Good words—cost nothing, and are worth much. 9. He, who pays well, is master of every-body's purse. 10. Our knowledge—is as the rivulet; our ignorance—as the sea. 11. Consider well, before you promise. 12. Dare to do right.

Anecdote. Candor. A clergyman—once preached, during the whole of Lent, in a parish, where he was never invited to dine, and, in his farewell sermon, he said to his hearers, "I have preached against every vice, except good living; which, I believe, is not to be found among you; and, therefore, needed not my reproach."

Society owes All a Living. Every one must and will—find a livelihood; nor has society the choice, whether or not to provide for its members: for if an individual is not put in a way to earn a living, he will seek it by unlawful means: if he is not educated—to lead a sober and industrious life, he will lead a life of dissipation; and if society refuse to take care of him, in his minority, he will force it to notice him—as an object of self-defence. Thus, society cannot avoid giving a livelihood to all, whom providence has placed in its bosom; nor help devoting time and expense to them; for they are by birth, or circumstances, dependent on its assistance. While, then, it has the power—to make every one—available—as an honest, industrious and useful citizen, would it not be the best policy, (to say nothing of principles), to do so; and attach all to society, by ties of gratitude, rather than put them in a condition to become enemies; a condition in which it will be necessary to punish them—for an alienation, which is the natural consequence of destitution. Schools, founded on true christian principles, would, in the end, be much cheaper, and better—than to support our criminal code, by the prosecutions, incident to that state, in which many come up, instead of being brought up; and the consequent expenses attending our houses of correction, penitentiaries, &c. (of which many seem to be proud.) on the score of public justice, but of which, on the score of christian love, we have reason to be deeply ashamed.

Varieties. 1. Will not our souls—continue in being forever? 2. He—is not so good as he should be, who does not strive to be better than he is. 3. Genius—is a plant, whose growth you cannot stop, without destroying it. 4. In doing nothing we learn to do ill. 5. Neither wealth, nor power, can confer happiness. 6. In heaven. (we have reason to believe,) no one considers anything as good, unless others partake of it. 7. Nothing is ours, until we give it away.

Ill doers—are ill thinkers.

178. Orthography or Right Spelling. As we have two kinds of language, written and spoken, so, there are two modes of spelling; one addressed to the eye, and exhibited by naming the letters; the other addressed to the ear, and spelled by giving the sounds, which the letters represent: the former method, which is the common one, tends to the predominant use of the throat, and lungs, and is one of the fruitful sources of consumption; the latter, which is the new one, serves to keep up the natural use of the appropriate muscles, and tends to prevent, as well as cure, dyspepsia, liver and lung complaints, and diseases of the throat.

179. Classification of the Consonants. The first natural division of the consonants is into Vocal and Aspirate. Of the Vocal there are, as they stand in the alphabet, and their combinations, twenty-six; but deducting the duplicates, there are but seventeen; viz: b, as in bib; c, as in suffice; d, as in dead; f, as in of; g, as in gem, go, rouge; h, as in ill; m, as in me; n, as in none, bank; r, as in err, pride; w, as in wo; x, as in exist; y, as in yet; and th as in this; all of which should be given separately, as well as combined, and their differences observed.

180. After the pupil has become familiar with reading by vowel sounds and spelling, as above recommended, let him be exercised in reading by the vowel and consonant sounds: i. e. by giving a perfect analysis of all the sounds, found in any of the words of the sentence before him; which involves every thing relating to sounds, whether single, double, or triple; and to articulation, accent, pronunciation, and emphasis. No one should wish to be excused from these very useful and important exercises; for they are directly calculated to improve the voice, the ear, and the manner, while they impart that kind of knowledge of this subject, which will be felt to be power, and give one confidence in his own abilities.

Notes. 1. It is not a little amusing and instructive too, to examine the great variety of names, used by different authors, to designate the sounds of our letters, their classifications, &c. against which the charge of simplicity cannot be brought: in every thing, let us guard against learned and unlearned ignorance. 2. There are those, who ought, from their position before the world, to be standard authorities in the pronunciation of letters and words, and in general delivery; but, unfortunately, on account of their sad defects and inaccuracies, in all those particulars, they constitute a court of Errors, instead of Appeal: consequently, we must throw ourselves upon the first principles and our own resources; using, however, such true lights as a kind Providence has vouchsafed us for our guidance.

To him, who, in the love of nature, holds Communion with her risible forms, she speaks A various language; for his *gay*er hours, She has a voice of gladness, and a smile, And eloquence of beauty; and she glides Into his darker musings—with a mild And gentle sympathy, that steals away Their sharpness—ere he is aware.

Proverbs. 1. As we act towards others, we may expect others to act towards us. 2. A good orator is pointed, and vehement. 3. Idleness—is the rust of the mind, and the blight of genius. 4. Assist yourself, and heaven will assist you. 5. We should estimate man's character, by his goodness; not by his wealth. 6. Knowledge—is as essential to the mind, as food is to the body. 7. A good word is as soon said, as an ill one. 8. No temptation of emolument, can induce an honest man to do wrong. 9. Virtue—is the best, and safest helmet we can wear. 10. Against the fickleness of fortune, oppose a bold heart. 11. Never profess—what you do not practice. 12. Treat everyone with kindness.

Anecdote. Keeping Time—from Eternity. Chief Justice Parsons, of Massachusetts, having been shown a watch, that was looked on as well worthy of notice, as it had saved a man's life, in a duel, remarked,—“It is, indeed, a very astonishing watch, that has kept time—from eternity.”

The Difference. Why is it, that many professors of religion—are so reluctant, to have the reading of the Bible, as well as speaking and singing, conducted in a correct and proper manner? Should not the greatest and most glorious truths—be delivered in an appropriate style? Do they think to exalt religious truth, in the eyes of the well-informed, by communicating it in a way that is not only repulsive to correct taste, but slovenly, and absolutely wrong? Is it calculated to recommend devotional exercises to their consideration, by offering up prayer in a language and manner, unbecoming man when addressing man; and performing the singing, regardless of proper time and tune? Will they present their offerings in a maimed, halt and blind manner, upon the altar of religion; while they have it in their power, to provide a way in accordance with the subject and object of their devotion? Is it well—to despise a good style and manner—of elocution and music, because we have not the ability, and are too indolent to labor for it, to do justice to ourselves and others? What course does true wisdom dictate?

Varieties. 1. Men—will never feel like women, nor women—think, like men. 2. In too eager disputation, the truth is often lost sight of. 3. Woman—is not degraded, but elevated, by an earnest, daily application—to her domestic concerns. 4. How wretched is his condition, who depends for his daily support, on the hospitality of others. 5. An evil-speaker—differs from an evil-doer, only in opportunity. 6. The use of knowledge is—to communicate to others, that they may be the better for it. 7. They who deny a God, either in theory, or practice, destroy man's nobility.

Till youth's delirious dream is o'er,
Sanguine with hope, we look before,
The future good to find;
In age, when error charms no more,
For bliss—we look behind.

181. Orthography, being to the Elocutionist, especially, a subject of incalculable importance, it is presumed a few observations, illustrated by examples, will not be out of place. The author introduces an entirely new mode of learning the letters, by the use of sounds, before the characters are exhibited; also, a new way of spelling, in which the words are spelt by giving the different sounds of the letters, instead of their names: and finally, a new method of teaching children to read, by dictation; instead of by the book: i. e. to read without a book, the same as we all learn to speak our mother tongue; and afterwards, with a book: thus making the book talk just as we should, when speaking on the same subject.

182. Aspirates. There are, according to their representatives, 21 aspirate, or breath sounds: omitting the duplicates, (or letters having the same sound,) there are only eleven; viz: c, as in cent, clock, ocean; d, as in fac'd; f, as in fi; h, as in hoe; p, as in pipe; x, as in mix; ch, as in church; th, as in thin; and wh, as in where: whence it appears, by actual analysis, that we have sixteen vowel sounds, and twenty-eight consonant sounds; making in all forty-four; some authors, however, give only thirty-eight.

183. The common mode of teaching all three, is no better policy, (setting every thing else aside,) than to go from America to China to get to England: in other words, perfectly ridiculous: and were we not so much accustomed to this unnatural and dementing process, we should consider it one of the most self-evident humbugs, not of the age only, but of the world. Examples of the old mode: p, (pe,) h, (aytch,) i, (eye,) s, (ess,) tis, i, (eye,) c, (see,) k, (kay,) ick, tisick; fifteen sounds: of the new; t, i, z, tis, i, k, ik, tis-ik; giving nothing but the five sounds: the old: g, (je,) e, (e,) w, (doubleyou,) gv, g, (je,) a, (a,) w, (doubleyou,) gaw, gew-gaw; eighteen sounds, and not one sound in spelling is found in the word after it is spell: the new mode; g, u, g, aw, gew-gaw, giving only the four sounds of the letters, instead of their names.

Notes. 1. We never can succeed in accomplishing one half of the glorious purposes of language, so long as we apply ourselves to what is written, and neglect what is spoken. 2. A new field presents itself; and when we shall have entered it, in the right place and manner, a new era will dawn upon us, leading us more to the cultivation of the living language and the living voice: the compass and harmony of the best instrument can never be perceived, by touching the keys at random, or playing a few simple tunes upon it, learned by the ear.

When sailing—on this troubled sea
Of pain, and tears, and agony;
Though wildly roar the waves around,
With restless and repeated sound,
'Tis sweet—to think, that on our eyes,
A lovelier clime—shall yet arise;
That we shall wake—from sorrow's dream,
Beside a pure—and living stream.

Proverbs. 1. Estimate persons more by their hearts, than by their heads. 2. A people who have no amusements, have no manners. 3. All are not saints, who go to church; all is not gold that glitters. 4. Advice—is seldom welcome; those who need it most, generally like it least. 5. Do not spend your words to no purpose; but come to the facts. 6. Great things—cannot be accomplished without proper means. 7. We reap the consequences of our actions—both here, and hereafter. 8. God gives to all, the power of becoming what they ought to be. 9. Infringe on no one's rights. 10. If we are determined to succeed, we shall succeed. 11. Better do well, than say well. 12. Better be happy than rich.

Anecdote. If men would confine their conversation to such subjects as they understand, how much better it would be for both speaker and hearer. Halley, the great mathematician, dabbled not a little in infidelity; he was rather too fond of introducing this subject in his social intercourse; and once, when he had descanted somewhat freely on it, in the presence of his friend, Sir Isaac Newton, the latter cut him short with this observation. "I always attend to you, Dr. Halley, with the greatest deference, when you do us the honor to converse on astronomy, or the mathematics; because, these are subjects that you have industriously investigated, and which you well understand: but religion—is a subject on which I hear you with great pain; for this is a subject which you have not seriously examined, and do not understand; you despise it, because you have not studied it; and you will not study it, because you despise it.

Laconics. In the scale of pleasure, the lowest are sensual delights, which are succeeded by the more enlarged views and gay portraits of a lively imagination; and these give way to the sublimar pleasures of reason, which discover the causes and designs, the form, connection, and symmetry of things, and fill the mind with the contemplation of intellectual beauty, order, and truth.

Varieties. 1. The greatest learning—is to be seen in the greatest simplicity. 2. Prefer the happiness and independence of a private station, to the trouble and vexation of a public one. 3. It is very foolish—for any one, to suppose, that he excels all others—in understanding. 4. Never take the humble, nor the proud, at their own valuation; the estimate of the former—is too little, and that of the latter—too much. 5. Every order of good—is found by an order of truth, agreeing with it. 6. As there is much to enjoy in the world, so is there much to endure; and wise are they, who enjoy gratefully, and endure patiently. 7. What is the meaning of the expression, in the first chapter of Genesis.—"Let us make man, in our image, and after our likeness?"

All farewells—should be sudden, when forever;
Else, they make an eternity—of moments,—
And clog the last—sad sands of life—with tears.

184. In teaching spelling to children, exercise them on the forty-four sounds of the letters; then in speaking in concert, after the preceptor, and also individually, interspersing the exercises with analyzing words, by giving the various sounds of which they are composed. At first, let them give each sound in a syllable by itself, (after you;) then let them give all the sounds in a syllable before pronouncing it; and finally, let them give all the sounds in a word, and then pronounce it: thus, there are three modes of spelling by ear; easy, difficult, and more difficult. Those, however, taught in the old way, must expect that their younger pupils, especially, will soon get ahead of them; unless they apply themselves very closely to their work.

185. The second division of the Consonants is into SIMPLE, and COMPOUND; or single and double: of the former, there are twenty, including the duplicates: viz: c, in city; c, cab; d, do; d, pip'd; f, fifty; g, gull; h, hope; k, make; l, bill; m, mile; n, no; p, pop; q, quote; r, corn; s, see; t, tune; ch, chyle; gh, tough; gh, ghastly; and ph, epha: omitting the duplicate representatives, there are but eleven: viz: c, (cypress;) c, (ac-me;) d, (day;) d, (tripp'd;) f, (foe;) g, (give;) l, (lay;) m, (mote;) n, (nine;) p, (passed;) r, (more;) compare, and see.

186. Origin of Language. Plato says, that language—is of Divine institution; that human reason, from a defect in the knowledge of natures and qualities, which are indicated by names, could not determine the cog-nom-i-na of things. He also maintains, that names are the vehicles of substances: that a fixed analogy, or correspondence, exists between the name and thing; that language, therefore, is not arbitrary in its origin, but fixed by the laws of analogy; and that God alone, who knows the nature of things, originally imposed names, strictly expressive of their qualities. Zeno, Cleanthes, Chrysippus, and others, were of the same opinion.

Notes. 1. This work is not designed to exhibit the whole subject of Oratory; which is as boundless and profound as are the thoughts and feelings of the human mind; but to present in a plain and familiar form, the essentials of this God-like art; in the hopes of being useful in this day and generation. In the course of another twelve years, there may be a nearer approach to truth and nature. 2. Observe the difference between the sounds, heard in spelling the following words, by the names of the letters, and those sounds, heard in the words after being spelt: a, e, i, o; if the sounds heard in calling the letters by name, are pronounced, the word is ay-je-er; i, s, in like manner, spell eye-ess; c, o, r, n, spell, see oar-en; oo, z, e, spell double o-zo-en; a, l, m, s, spell, a-el-m-ess; o, n, spell oo-en; &c. 3. The common arrangement of words in columns, without meaning, seems at variance with common sense; but this mode is perfectly mathematical, as well as philosophical; and of course, in accordance with nature, science, and the structure of mind. 4. The proper formation of words, out of letters, or sounds, is word-making. 5. Alphabetarius should first be taught the sounds of letters, and then their uses, and then their shapes, and names, together with their uses; the same course should be pursued in teaching music, the ear, always predominating; and then there will be ease, grace, and power combined.

Proverbs. 1. Virtue—grows under every weight imposed on it. 2. He, who envies the lot of another, must be discontented with his own. 3. When fortune fails us, the supposed friends of our prosperous days—vanish. 4. The love of ruling—is the most powerful affection of the human mind. 5. A quarrelsome man—must expect many wounds. 6. Many condemn, what they do not understand. 7. Property, dishonestly acquired, seldom descends to the third generation. 8. He, who has well begun, has half done his task. 9. The difference between hypocrisy and sincerity—is infinite. 10. When our attention is directed to two objects, we rarely succeed in either. 11. Recompence every one for his labor. 12. Zealously pursue the right path.

Anecdote. Patience. The priest of a certain village, observing a man, (who had just lost his wife,) very much oppressed with grief, told him,—“he must have Patience!” whereupon, the mourner replied, “I have been trying her sir, but she will not consent to have me.”

The range of knowledge—is divided into three classes, corresponding to the scientific, rational and affectuous faculties of man. The first, is knowledge of the outward creation,—involving every thing material, —all that is addressed to our five senses; the second, is knowledge of human existences, as it respects man's spiritual, or immortal nature: and the third, knowledge of the Divine Being, including his nature, and laws, and their modes of operation. There is a certain point where matter—ends, and spirit—begins: i. e. a boundary, where they come in contact, where spirit—operates on matter: there is a state, where finite spiritual existences—receive life and light—from the Infinite, who is the Lord of all; that Spirit,

“That swarms—in the sun; refreshes—in the breeze;
Glow—in the stars; and blossoms—in the trees.”

The omniscient, omnipotent and omnipresent Being, that “Lives—through all life, extends thro' all extent;

Spreads—undivided—operates—unspent;
Whose body nature is,—and God—the soul.”

Varieties. 1. Are monopolies—consistent with republican institutions? 2. Love—often makes the most clever persons act like fools, and the most foolish, act like wise ones. 3. Patience is the surest remedy against calumny: time, sooner or later, will disclose the truth. 4. The fickleness of fortune—is felt all over the world. 5. It is easy to criticise the productions of art, tho' it is difficult to make them. 6. Do not defer till to-morrow, what ought to be done to-day. 7. The precepts and truths of the word of God.—are the very laws of divine order; and so far as our minds are receptive of them, we are so far in the divine order, and the divine order in us, if in a life agreeing with them.

Guard well thy thoughts;—our thoughts are heard in heaven.

187. The method, here recommended, of giving the sounds, of spelling, and of teaching children to read without a book, and then with a book, will save three-fourths of the labor of both teacher and pupil; and, in addition to these important considerations, there will be an immense amount of time and expense saved, and the young prevented from contracting the common bad habits of reading unnaturally; which not only obstructs the proper development of body and mind, but sows the seeds of sickness and premature death. Our motto should be, "cease to do evil, and learn to do well."

188. Modes of Spelling. In the old, or common mode of spelling, there are many more sounds introduced, than the words contain: this always perplexes new beginners, whose ear—has had much more practice, in reference to language, than their eye. The great difficulty seems to be—to dispose of the parts, which amount to more than the whole: for, in philosophy, it is an acknowledged principle, that the parts—are only equal to the whole. Hence, spelling by sounds of letters, instead of by names is vastly preferable: the former being perfectly philosophical, involving orderly, analysis and synthesis, and it is also mathematical, because the parts—are just equal to the whole: while the latter mode is the very reverse of all this; and instead of aiding, essentially, in the development of body and mind, tends directly to prevent both.

189. Of the compound, or diphthongal and triphthongal consonants, we have twenty-three; viz: c, (z,) discern; c, (sh,) social; f, (v,) thereof; g, (dg,) gibe; g, (zh,) badinage; j, (dg,) judge; n, (ng,) bank; r, (burr'd,) trill; s, (z,) was; s, (sh,) sure; s, (zh,) leisure; t, (sh,) rational; v, vivacity; w, west; x, (ks,) or; x, (z,) Xenia; y, youth; z, zigzag; ch, (teh,) such; ch, (sh,) chagrin; ph, (v,) nephew; th, thick; th, tho'; wh, why: deducting the duplicates, we have but twelve; c, (z,) c, (sh,) f, (v,) g, (zh,) n, (ng,) r, (trill'd,) x, (ks,) x, (gz,) ch, (teh,) th, (think,) th, (that,) and wh, (when:) let them be exemplified.

190. It has previously been remarked, that, strictly speaking, a, in far, is the only natural vowel sound in our language; and that the other fifteen are modifications of it; also, that on the same principle, the aspirate, or breath sound, heard in pronouncing the sound of h, (huh, in a whisper,) is the material, out of which all sounds are made; for it is by condensing the breath, in the larynx, through the agency of the vocal chords, that the voice sound, of grave a is made; and, by the peculiar modification, at certain points of interception, that any aspirate consonant sound is produced; hence, it may be said, that a, in far, is the original element of all the vowel and vocal consonant sounds, and the aspirate h, is the original element, out of which all the aspirate consonant sounds are made, as well as the vocal sounds; thus, that which the letter h represents, seems to involve something of infinity in variety, so far as sounds, and their corresponding affections are concerned; for breath—is air: and without air, there can be no sound. Why was the letter h, added to the names of Abraham and Sarah?

Proverbs. 1. He, who reckons without his host, must reckon again. 2. When we despise danger, it often overtakes us the sooner. 3. They, who cross the ocean, may change climate, but their minds are still the same. 4. The corruption, or perversion of the best things — produces the worst. 5. We must not judge of persons by their clothing, or by the sanctity of their appearance. 6. If we indulge our passions, they will daily become more violent. 7. Light grief—may find utterance; but deeper sorrow can find none. 8. The difference is great—between words and deeds. 9. Poverty—wants many things; avarice—every thing. 10. Let us avoid having too many irons in the fire. 11. Faithfully perform every duty, small and great. 12. Govern your thoughts, when alone, and your tongue, when in company. 13. Ill got,—ill spent.

Anecdote. Finishing our Studies. Several young physicians were conversing, in the hearing of Dr. Rush, and one of them observed, "When I have finished my studies,"—"When you have finished your studies!" said the doctor, abruptly; "why, you must be a happy man, to have finished them so young: I do not expect to finish mine while I live."

Laconics. The kindnesses, which most men receive from others, are like traces drawn in the sand. The breath of every passion sweeps them away, and they are remembered no more. But injuries are like inscriptions on monuments of brass, or pillars of marble, which endure, unimpaired, the revolutions of time.

Varieties. 1. We rarely regret—having spoken too little; but often—of saying too much. 2. Which is the more extensively useful,—fire, or water? 3. A speaker, who expresses himself with fluency and discretion, will always have attentive listeners. 4. The spirit of party, sometimes leads even the greatest men—to descend to the meanness of the vulgar. 5. Without virtue, happiness—can never be real, or permanent. 6. When we are convinced that our opinions are erroneous, it is always right to acknowledge it, and exchange them for truths. 7. Every love—contains its own truth.

Serve God before the world! let him not go, Until thou hast a blessing; then, resign The whole unto him, and remember who Preval'd by wrestling—ere the sun did shine; Pour oil upon the stones, weep for thy sin, Then journey on, and have an eye to heaven.

191. Here a new field is open for the classification of our letters, involving the structure of all languages, and presenting us with an infinite variety, terminating in unity,—all languages being merely dialects of the original one; but in this work, nothing more is attempted, than an abridgment of the subject. As every effect must have an adequate cause, and as in material things, such as we see, hear, taste, smell, and feel, there can be no primary, but only secondary causes, we must look to the mind for the feelings and thoughts, that have given rise to all the peculiarities and modifications of language; being assured, that in the original language, each state of the will and the understanding, had its external sign, as a medium of manifestation.

192. Uses of Spelling. The object of spelling, in the manner here recommended, is two-fold; to spell by sound, in order to be able to distinguish the sounds, of which words are composed, and to pronounce them correctly: thus developing and training the voice and ear to the highest pitch of perfection. The use of spelling by the names of letters is, to make us acquainted with them, and the order in which they are placed in the words, so as to be able, not only to read, but to write the language: hence, we must become acquainted with both our spoken and written language, if we would avail ourselves of their wonderful capabilities, and the treasures of which they are possessed.

193. In partially applying this doctrine, we may say, B, (bib,) represents a guttural labial sound; 1st c, (cent,) a dental aspirate: 2d c, (clock,) a guttural aspirate: 3d c, (sacrifice,) a dental vocal consonant: 4th c, (ocean,) a dental aspirate: 1st f, (if,) a sublabial and super-dental aspirate: 2d f, (of,) a sublabial super-dental, vocal: 1st g, (gem,) a posterior lingual dental vocal, terminating in an aspirate; 2d g, (go,) a glottal vocal consonant: 3d g, (rouge,) a vocal dental aspirate: h, a pure aspirate, with open mouth and throat; l, a lingual dental; and so on to the end of our sounds, of analysis and synthesis, of which a volume might be written: and although the writer has practiced on them many thousands of times, he never has done it once, without learning something new.

Notes. 1. Don't forget to understand and master every thing that relates to the subject of study and practice: the only royal highway to truth is the straight way. 2. Become as familiar with the sounds of our language as you are with the alphabet. 3. As you proceed, acquire more ease and grace in reading and speaking.

An honest man—is still an unmoved rock,
Wash'd whiter, but not shaken—with the shock;
Whose heart—conceives no sinister device;
Fearless—lie plays with flames, and treads on ice.

Proverbs. 1. Do as much good as you can and make but little noise about it. 2. The Bible is a book of laws, to show us what is right, and what is wrong. 3. What maintains one vice, would bring up two children. 4. A little wrong—done to another, is a great wrong done to ourselves. 5. Sermons—should be steeped in the heart—before they are delivered. 6. A life of attractive industry is always a happy one. 7. Drive your business before you, and it will go easily. 8. Good fences—make good neighbors. 9. Pride wishes not to owe; self-love—wishes not to pay. 10. The rotten apple injures its companion. 11. Make a virtue of necessity. 12. You can't make an auger hole with a gimblet.

Anecdote. Mathematical Honor. A student—of a certain college, gave his fellow-student the lie; and a challenge followed. The mathematical tutor—heard of the difficulty, and sent for the young man that gave the challenge, who insisted, that he must fight—to shield his honor. “Why,” said the tutor? “Because he gave me the lie.” “Very well; let him prove it: if he prove it,—you did lie; but if he does not prove it, then he lies. Why should you shoot one another? Will that make a lie—any more honorable?”

CICERO says, the poet—is born such; the orator is made such. But reading books of rhetoric, and eloquent extracts—choice morsels of poetry and eloquence—will never make one an orator: these are only the effects of oratory. The cause of eloquence is to be sought for, only in the depths of the human mind—the true philosophy of man, and the practice of unadulterated goodness and truth. You must feel rightly, think wisely, and act accordingly: then gracefulness of style and eloquence will fit you; otherwise, you will be like the ass, clothed with the lion's skin. Accomplishment should not be an end, but a means. Seek, then, for the philosophy of oratory, where it is to be found, in the study of geometry, language, physics, theology, and the human mind profound, if you would attain that suavity of graceful periods, engaging looks and gestures, which steal from men their hearts, and reason, and make them, for the time being, your willing captives.

Varieties. 1. Is there any line of demarcation between temperance and intemperance? 2. We rarely repent—of eating too little; but often—of eating too much. 3. Truth—is clothed in white; but a lie—comes forth in all the colors of a rainbow. 4. St. Augustin says, “Love God; and then do what you wish.” 5. We must not do evil, that good may come of it; the means—must answer, and correspond to—the end. 6. Assumed qualities—may catch the fancy of some, but we must possess those that are good, to fix the heart. 7. When a thing is doubtful, refer it to the Word in sincerity; if it is not clear to you, let it alone, for the present, at least, till it is made so.

194. Accent—means either stress, or quantity of voice, on a certain letter, or letters in a word: it is made by concentrating the voice, on that particular place in the word, heavy, at first, then gliding into silence. There are two ways of making it; first, by stress, when it occurs on short vowels; as, ink-stand: secondly, by quantity, when it occurs on long ones; as, o-ver: i. e. when the word is short, we pronounce it with force; and when it is long, with quantity, and a little force too: thus, what we lack in length of sound, we make up by stress, or force, according to circumstances. These engravings present to the eye an idea of accent by stress, or a concentration of voice, with more or less abruptness.

The first—indicates that the accented vowel is near the beginning of the word; as in ac-cent, em-pha-sis, in-dus-try, on-ward, up-ward: the second, that it is at, or near the end: as in ap-pre-hend, su-per-in-tend, in-divis-i-bil-ity. In music, the first represents the diminish; the second—the swell of the voice.

195. The first use of accent—is to convert letters, or syllables—into words, expressive of our ideas; i. e. to fasten the letters together, so as to make a word-medium for manifesting our feelings and thoughts: and the second use is—to aid us in acquiring a distinct articulation, and melody of speech, and song. Exs. 1. ACCENT BY STRESS OF VOICE. He am-pli-fies his ad-ver-tise-ment, di-min-ish-es its im-pe-tus, and op-e-rates on the ul-ti-mates. 2. The ac-cu-ra-cy of the cer-e-mo-n-y is fig-u-ra-tive of the com-pen-sa-tion of his up-right-ness: 3. The cat-e-pil-lar for-gets the no-bil-ity of or-a-to-ry un-just-ly: 4. The math-e-mat-ics are super-in-tend-ed with af-fa-bil-ity, cor-res-pond-ent to in-struc-tions.

Notes. 1. Observe, there are but FIVE SHORT vowels in our language: the examples above contain illustrations of all of them, in their alphabetical order; they are also found in these words—at, et, it, of, ut; and to give them with purity, make as though you were going to pronounce the whole word, but leave off at the t. 2. This is a very important point in our subject; if you fail in understanding accent, you cannot succeed in emphasis.

Anecdote. Holding One's Own. A very fat man was one day met by a person whom he owed, and accosted with—"How do you do?" Mr. Adipose replied, "Pretty well; I hold my own;"—"and mine too, to my sorrow,"—rejoined the creditor.

Hail, to thee, fital love, source of delight,
Of everlasting joy! Heaven's grace supreme Shines in the duteous homage of a child!
Religion, manifested, stands aloft,
Superior—to the storms of wayward fate.
When children—suffer in a parent's cause,
And glory—in the lovely sacrifice,
'Tis heavenly inspiration fills the breast—
And angels—waft their incense to the skies.

196. Some persons may wish for more specific directions, as to the method of bringing the lower muscles into use, for producing sounds, and breathing: the following will suffice. Take the proper position, as above recommended, and place the hands on the hips, with the thumbs on the small of the back, and the fingers on the abdominal muscles before; grasp them tightly; i. e. try to press in the abdomen, and, at the same time, to burst off the hands, by an internal effort, in the use of the muscles to produce the vowel sounds of the following words, ut, et, it, of, ut; then leave off the t, giving the vowels the same sound as before: or imagine that you have a belt tied around you, just above the hip bones, and make such an effort as would be required to burst it off; do the same in breathing, persevere, and you will succeed: but do not make too much effort.

Proverbs. 1. A man under the influence of anger—is beside himself. 2. Pocerty, with honesty, is preferable to riches, acquired by dishonest means. 3. The wolf casts his hair, but never changes his ferocious disposition. 4. To wicked persons—the virtue of others—is always a subject of envy. 5. Flies—cannot enter a mouth that is shut. 6. No plea of expediency—should reconcile us to the commission of a base act. 7. Power, unjustly obtained, is of short duration. 8. Every mad-man—believes all other men mad. 9. The avaricious man—is kind to none; but least kind to himself. 10. The beginning of knowledge—is the fear of God. 11. Of all poverty, that of the mind—is the most deplorable. 12. He only is powerful, who governs himself.

Varieties. 1. What was it—that made man miserable, and what—alone can make him happy? 2. Diffidence—is the mother of safety; while self-confidence—often involves us in serious difficulties. 3. He is not rich, who has much, but he who has enough, and is contented. 4. It is absurd—for parents to preach sobriety to their children, and yet indulge in all kinds of excess. 5. Nature—never says, what wisdom contradicts; for they are always in harmony. 6. Save something—against a day of trouble. 7. With such as repent, and turn from their evils, and surrender their wills to the Lord's will, all things they ever saw, knew, or experienced, shall be made, in some way or other, to serve for good.

I do remember an apothecary,—

And hereabouts he dwells,—whom late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; meagre were his looks,
And in his needy shop—a tortoise hung.
Sharp misery—had worn him to the bones:
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,
Were thinly scatter'd, to make up a show.

197. Accent—is made, secondly, by QUANTITY; or prolongation of sound, with expulsive force, on long accented vowels; which may be represented either by this engraving  indicative of a continuous equal movement of the voice; or, by this one,  which shows the swell, continuous and diminish in combination; or, the unequal continuous. Exs. 1. The a-gent, with ar-dent aw-ful e-go-tism, i-dol-i-zed the o-di-ous oo-zy u-ni-form, which was fruit-ful in oi-liness, from the ou-ter-mosts. 2. The base-ment of the ar-mo-ry, awk-ward-ly e-qual to the i-ron-y of the o-li-o, was, to the moon-shine of the u-ni-verse, as an ob-tru-sive moi-e-ty of a poun-cet-box.

198. Prolongation of Sound. Let the pupil take a lesson of the ferryman. A traveler arrives at the brink of a wide river, which he wishes to cross; one ferry-man is on the other side, and, by chance, one is on this side: the traveler halloos, in the common speaking voice, using principally the chest; of course his voice soon becomes dis-sipated. He is informed that his call cannot be heard: listen to me, says this son of nature; “O—ver, O—ver, O—ver:” making each accented vowel two seconds long: try it and see; extending your eye and mind at a distance; which will aid the prolongation.

199. In exercising on accent, for a time at least, go to extremes, and make the accented vowels as prominent to the ear, as the following ones are to the eye; a-b As-ment, im-pE-ri-ous, I-dol-ize, O-ver-throw, bea-U-ti-ful, Oil-mill, OU-ter-most. Ex. 1. The lu-na-tic a-bode at the ea-the-dral, till the an-nun-ci-a-tion, that the an-te-di-lu-vi-ans—had con-vey’d the hy-dro-pho-bia to Di-a-na of the E-phe-sians. 2. The pa-tri-ots and ma-trons of the rev-o-lu-tion, by their har-mo-ni-ous co-op-e-ra-tion, de-thron’d the ty-rants that were ru-ling our peo-ple with an un-ho-ly rod of i-ron.

Anecdote. Raising Rent. “Sir, I intend to raise your rent,”—said a land-holder—to one of his tenants: to which he replied,—“I am very much obliged to you,—for I cannot raise it myself.”

Notes. 1. As vowels are either long or short, different degrees of length do not affect any one of the long ones, so far as the quality of the sound is concerned; the e in de-duce, and the o in do-main—are the same as to length, (not force,) as they are in de-cent, do-tard; thus we have long accented vowels, and long unaccented ones. 2. We make accent by quantity, when the accented vowels are long, and by st as when they are short. 3. The short vowels are of the same length, but not so the long ones.

“Blessed is the man,
Who hears the voice of nature; who, retired
From bustling life, can feel the gladdening beam,
The hope, that breathes of Paradise. Thy deeds,
Sweet Peace, are music—to the exulting mind;
Thy prayer, like incense—wafted on the gale
Of morning—spreads ambrosia, as the cloud
Of spicy noets—perfumes the whispering breeze,
That scents Arabia’s wild.”

Proverbs. 1. Men of limited attainments—generally condemn every thing they cannot comprehend. 2. Wit—should flow spontaneously; it cannot be produced by study. 3. Buoyancy of spirit—greatly diminishes the pressure of misfortune. 4. The surest method of being deceived is—to consider ourselves—more cunning than others. 5. Envious persons—always view, with an evil eye, the prosperity of others. 6. It is a proof of mediocrity of intellect—to be addicted to story-telling. 7. When we give way to passion, we do every thing amiss. 8. Truth—needs no disguise, nor does she want embellishment. 9. A mind diseased—cannot bear any thing harsh. 10. Never utter what is false, nor hesitate to speak what is true. 11. Trifles—often discover a character—more than actions of importance. 12. The Bible—is a perfect body of divinity.

Body and Mind. The science of human nature—is valuable, as an introduction to the science of the Divine nature; for man—was made “in the image, and after the likeness,” of his Maker: a knowledge of the former—facilitates that of the latter; and to know, revere, and humbly adore, is the first duty of man. To obtain just and impartial views of human nature, we must not disconnect the object of our study, and consider the mind, body, and actions, each by itself, but the whole man together; which may be contemplated under two different aspects,—of spirit and of matter; on the body—shines the sun of nature, and on the mind—that better light, which is the true light: here, is a real man, having essence, form, and use, which is clad in the habiliments of beauty, and majesty; meeting us now, and which will meet us hereafter, as a purely spiritual being, in every possible stage of his future existence.

Varieties. 1. Can we be a friend, and an enemy—at the same time? 2. Every one should be considered innocent, till he is proved guilty. 3. It is not sufficient that you are heard, you must be heard with pleasure. 4. There is a great difference between poetry and rhymetry; the former grows, the latter—is made. 5. If your money is your God, it will plague you like the Devil. 6. Order—is one, in revelation, man, creation, and the universe; each—respects the other, and is a resemblance of it.

Man—is dear to man; and the poorest poor
Long for some moments, in a weary life,
When they can know, and feel, that they have been Themselves—the fathers, and the dealers out
Of some small blessings—have been kind to such
As needed kindness;—for this single cause,
That we have all of us—a human heart.

Such pleasure—is to one kind being known,
My neighbor, when, with punctual care, each week,
Duly as Friday comes, though press’d herself
By her own wants, she, from her store of meal,
Takes one unsparing handful for the scrip
Of this old mendicant; and, from her door,
Returning with exhilarated heart,
Sits by her fire, and builds her hopes in heaven.

200. Accent. The intentions of the mind—are manifested by the accent of the voice, as are those of a tailor, when he makes a gentleman's coat; or of a mantuamaker, when she makes a lady's gown; there is a meaning, an end, in all. The three great categories of knowledge are end, cause and effect; reflection and experience will convince those who would be wise, that the end or purpose, is the first thing,—the cause or medium, the second, and the effect, or ultimation of the co-operation of end and cause, the third thing. Now the feeling, or affection, is the first thing; the thought—is the second thing; and the action—the third thing: the affection and the vowel sound are connected, the thought and the consonant, and all become manifest, when the word is properly made, by the application of accent, and enunciation.

201. Now, as the affectuous part of the mind operates, especially, on those lower nerves and muscles, that are combined to produce the vowel sounds, and the intellectual part of the mind co-operates with the lungs, to form the consonant sounds, and the two unite—to make the word, by the use of the accent, through the agency of which, feelings and thoughts are conveyed,—it will be perceived, that whenever there is a change of the seat of accent, there may be a corresponding change of the meaning of the word: or rather, a change of feeling produces a change of thought, and the two produce a corresponding change in the seat of accent: as—an-gust, an-gust; prod-uce, prod-uce; gal-lant, gal-lant.

202. Change of the seat of accent according to sense. They bom-bard the town, with bom-bards, and cem-ment their cannon with cem-ent, and call upon their col-leagues to col-league together, col-lect their soldiers, and offer up their col-lects. He com-ments upon their com-ments, while they com-merce about the com-merce, and com-mon-place their com-mon-place business. The com-compact was entered into in a com-compact manner, while the soldiers com-plot together in a com-plot, and com-port themselves with a becoming com-port. The farmer com-ports his fields with excellent com-post, and out of the com-pound he com-pounds a fruitful soil; which, when com-press'd, makes a very fine com-press for the grain.

My birthday! what a different sound
That word had—in my youthful ears!
And how, each time—the day came round,
Less, and less white—its mark appears!
When first—our scanty years are told,
It seems like pastime—to grow old.
And as youth—equals the shining links,
That time—around him binds so fast,
Pleased with the task, he little thinks,
How hard that chain will press—at last.

Anecdote. When Lieutenant O'Brien was blown up, in the Edgar, and thrown on board the Admiral, all black and wet, he said to the commander, with pleasantry, “I hope sir, you will excuse my dirty appearance; for I left the ship in so great a hurry, that I had not time to change my dress.”

Proverbs. 1. Every thing great—is composed of minute particles. 2. Nothing—bears a stronger resemblance to a mad-man than a drunkard. 3. Pleasure, purchased by pain, is always injurious. 4. The act is to be judged of, by the intention of the person, who does it. 5. Theory, without practice, however plausible, seldom tends to a successful issue. 6. Reflect well, before you say yes, or no. 7. Be cautious—in giving advice, and consider—before you follow it. 8. A man, fond of disputing, will, in time, have few friends to dispute with. 9. Young people are apt to think themselves wise enough; as drunkards—think themselves sober enough. 10. Injustice—cannot exist without agents. 11. No great loss, but some small gain. 12. No smoke, without some fire.

Reading Discourses. As the reading of written discourses is so common, it is very desirable, that the speaker should unite the advantages of written, or printed composition, with extemporaneous speaking; which can be done by mastering the principles of this system; then, though the essay be a month, or a year old, the orator may give it all the appearance and freshness of oral discourse. Many public men have injured their health by slavishly reading their discourses, instead of speaking them; there being such an inseparable connection between thinking and breathing, that the effort to read, especially from a manuscript, tends to the use of the thorax, or lungs. If we were taught to read by car, instead of by sight, there would be no difficulty in this exercise: there must be a revolution—in regard to teaching and learning this important art, or sad will continue to be the consequences.

Varieties. 1. Were the Texians right, in rebelling against Mexico? 2. If woman taught the philosophy of love, who would not learn? 3. Do not yield to misfortunes; but resist them, with unceasing firmness. 4. Procrastination—is the thief of time. 5. No one is qualified to command, who has not learned to obey. 6. A laugh—costs too much, if purchased at the expense of propriety. 7. Words, fitly spoken from a lie of love, are exceedingly sweet, and profitable to all.

Beware, ye slaves of vice and infamy.
Beware—choose not religion's sacred name.
To sanctify your crimes—your falsehood shield.
Profane not your Creator's boundless power,
Or lest his vengeance—fall upon, and crush ye
It is an awful height—of human pride,
When we dare—robe ourselves in sanctity,
While all is dark impiety within!
This, surely, is the aggregate of sin,
The last—to be forgiven—by heaven, or man.

203. The subject of accent, being of primary importance, should be dwelt upon, till its principles, and their application, are perfectly familiar. Remember, it is the principal external means, of making words—out of letters and syllables: comparatively, it is the thread with which we make the garments for our thoughts, and thus manifest the objects which the mind has in view in clothing them in different ways, and making them alive with feeling. The mental power of accent, is in the will, or voluntary principle, and the physical force is from the combined action of the lower muscles, in connection with the diaphragm; hence, it may be perceived, that in simply expelling vowel sounds, as always insisted upon, we at the same time, acquire the power of making the accent; for expulsion—is accent, radical, or stress. If you do not master accent, you cannot succeed in becoming an elocutionist.

204. Change of the seat of accent. On her en-trance, she was en-tranced at being es-cort-ed by a grand es-cort: I es-say to make an es-say to ex-ite the ex-iles: ex-port the ex-ports, with-out ex-tract-ing the ex-tracts for the ex-tract-ers: the ab-ject fel-lows ab-ject the gifts, and the ab-sent minded ab-sent themselves from the party: he ab-stracts the ab-stracts and at-trib-utes the at-trib-utes to others: I lay the ac-cent on the ac-cent-ed vowel, and af-fix the af-fix to the final syllable, and make aug-ment in the right place and aug-ment the word in Au-gust, and thus make the idea au-gust.

Notes. 1. Be careful in placing the accent on the right syllable: ad-ver-tise-ment, al-lies, con-tem-plate, in-qui-ry, de-co-rus, or-tho-e-py, ar-is-to-cra-cy, ac-cept-a-ble, Ar-e-o-pa-gus, ac-cen-so-ry, up-right-ly: for if you place the accent on the wrong vowel, you partially pervert the meaning, or render it ridiculous: as, I saw an au-gust spectacle in Au-gust. 2. In singing, accent is always made by stress: and the first note of each full measure accent-ed.

Laconics. Labor is honorable in all, from the king on the throne to the mendicant in the street; and let him or her, who is ashamed to toil for themselves, or the benefit of their race, be more ashamed to consume the industry and labor of others, for which they do not render an equivalent.

The rose had been washed, just washed in a shower,

Which Mary—to Anna—conveyed;

The plentiful moisture—encumbered the flower,

And weighed down its beautiful head.

The cup was all filled, and the leaves were all wet,

And it seemed, to a fanciful view,

To weep for the buds—it had left with regret,

On the flourishing bush—where it grew.

It hastily seized it, unfit as it was

For a nocturnal, so dripping and drowned

And swinging it rudely, too rudely, alas!

I snapped it,—it fell to the ground.

And such, I exclaimed, is the pitiable part,

Some act—by the delicate mind,

Regardless of wringing—and breaking a heart,

Already to sorrow resigned.

This elegant rose, had I shaken it less,

Might have bloomed with its owner awhile:

And the tear, that is wiped, with a little address,

May be followed, perhaps, by a smile.

Proverbs. 1. Beware of reading, without thinking of the subject. 2. A man rarely deceives another but once. 3. A good paymaster is lord of another man's purse. 4. He is most secure from danger, who, even when conscious of safety, is on his guard. 5. The pitcher may go often to the well, and be broken at last. 6. A good companion, makes good company. 7. Let every one choose, according to his own fancy. 8. A comparison—is no reason. 9. Your looking-glass—will tell you what none of your friends will. 10. The human heart wants something to be kind to. 11. Many hands make light work. 12. Ask your purse—what you shall buy.

Anecdote. Blundering on the Truth. An ignorant fellow, who was about to be married, resolved to make himself perfect in the responses of the marriage service; but, by mistake, he committed the office of baptism for those of riper years: so, when the clergyman asked him, in the church,—“Wilt thou have this woman to thy wedded wife?” The bridegroom answered, in a very solemn tone; “I renounce them all.” The astonished minister said—“I think you are a fool :”—to which he replied, “All this I steadfastly believe.”

Analogies. As, in the succession of the seasons, each, by the invariable laws of nature, affects the productions of what is next in course; so, in human life, every period of our age,—according as it is well or ill spent, influences the happiness of that which is to follow. Virtuous youth—generally brings forward accomplished and flourishing manhood; and such manhood passes off, without uneasiness, into respectable and tranquil old age. When nature—is turned out of its regular course, disorder takes place—in the moral, just as in the vegetable world. If the spring—put forth no blossoms, in summer—there will be no beauty, and in the autumn—no fruit. If youth—be trifled away without improvement, manhood will be contemptible—and old age—miserable. If the beginnings of life—have been vanity,—its latter end can be no other than revelation of spirit.

Varieties. 1. Is there any such thing as time and space, in the world of mind? 2. Any book that is worth reading once, is worth reading twice. 3. Most misfortunes—may be turned into blessings, by watching the tide of affairs. 4. When the wicked are in power, innocence and integrity are sure to be persecuted. 5. Give people proper books, and teach them how to read them, and they will educate themselves. 6. Unlimited powers—should not be trusted in the hands of any one, who is not endowed with perfection,—more than human. 7. The truths of the Bible are the seeds of order; and as is the reception, such will be the produce.

Faults—in the life, breed errors in the brain,
And these, reciprocally, those again :
The mind, and conduct—mutually imprint,
And stamp their image—in each other's mint.

205. To accomplish the objects in view, the development and perfection of the voice for reading, speaking and singing, a great variety of exercises and examples, are introduced, containing sense and nonsense; and attention can be given to both kinds, according to their uses. Let it be remembered, that the forty-four sounds of the language are the fountains, from which are to flow every stream of elocution and music: and these are continually before us. No one can succeed in silently reading, or thinking over the subjects: practice is the great thing; therefore, frequently repeat the sounds, read by vowels, spell by sounds, and exercise in accent and emphasis, with all the other modifications.

206. They con-cert a plan to get up a con-cert, and as they con-cord the con-cords of the notes, they con-crete the con-crete tones with such admirable con-duct, as to con-duct the whole to the satisfaction of the audience. He con-fects the sugar with delicious con-fects, although he con-fines his efforts to the con-fines of the room; and without con-flic-ting in any serious con-dict, he con-serves the con-serves in such a way as to con-sort with his con-sort without con-test-ing with any serious con-test. I will con-text the con-text, so as to con-tract the con-tract-ing in a strong con-tract, the con-vent, so as to con-vent its inmates, while they con-verse in familiar con-verse.

207. Among the more difficult acquisitions, is the ability to prolong sounds in strongly marked accented and emphatic words, involving the kindlier feelings of our nature; to succeed in which, practice single long vowel sounds in separate words, and also in short and long phrases; as a—le; a—re; a—ll; ee—l; i—le; o—ld; oo—ze; mu—te; pu—ss; oi—l; ou—r; also, old armed chair; wheel to the right; roll the flames and join the muse; glowing hope; praise the lofty dome.

Notes. 1. The attempt is not made any where, to give a perfect notation of the manner in which one is to read; and some words are more or less emphatic, that are printed in common type; while certain words, which are not very important as to meaning, are printed in italics. 2. Never mind the rough appearance of the examples; but make them smooth in your delivery.

Anecdote. Self-love. The first consideration of a knave is—how to help himself; and the second, how to do it with an appearance of helping others. Dionysius, the tyrant, stripped the statue of Jupiter Olympus, of a robe of massy gold, and substituted a cloak of wool, saying—“Gold is too cold in winter, and too heavy in the summer—it behooves us to take care of Jupiter.”

When was public virtue to be found,
Where private was not?

Can he love the whole,

Who loves no part?

He—be a nation's friend,

Who, in truth, is the friend of no man there?

Proverbs. 1. Instead of saying “I can't,” say “I will.” 2. Acquire knowledge that may be useful. 3. If possible, remove your own difficulties. 4. Husband your time, and waste neither that, nor your money. 5. Try to exert a good influence, wherever you are. 6. A little stone can make a great bruise. 7. Unwearied diligence the point will gain. 8. Cultivate good domestic habits. 9. Some rather reflect truth than practice it. 10. Man is a mi-cro-cosm, or little world. 11. Winter finds what Summer conceals. 12. Two of a trade seldom agree.

Important. Let the orator consider himself the connecting link, or medium, between the mental and natural world: i. e. that the spiritual world is progressing down into the material world; and that all his muscles and vocal powers are the proper organs, thro' which it is to flow. Hence, the necessity of developing and training, perfectly, those mediums of communication, that every thing in the matter, may tell, effectually, in the manner. Much, very much depends upon the state of his own mind; for, according to that—will be the influence shed abroad on the minds of others. Conceive yourself the representative of a vast concourse of associated minds, and be the true representative of your constituents.

Varieties. 1. Are fictional writings beneficial? 2. E-go-tism (or self-commendation,) is always disgusting, and should be carefully avoided. 3. A man cannot call a better physician than himself, if he will take all the good advice he gives to others. 4. Why is the human mind like a garden? because you can sow what seeds you please in it. 5. Good and bad fortune are necessary, to prepare us to meet the contingencies of life. 6. Be not too much afraid of offending others, by telling the truth: nor stoop to flattery nor meanness, to gain their favor. 7. The whole outward creation, with its every particular and movement, is but a theatre and scene of effects, brought forth into existence, and moved by inferior spiritual causes, proper to the spiritual world.

To the curious eye

A little monitor—presents her page
Of choice instruction, with her snowy bells—
The lily of the vale. She, not affects
The public walk, o'er gaze of mid-day sun:
She—to no state or dignity aspires,
Eut, silent and alone, puts on her suit,
And sheds her lasting per-fume, but for which
We had not known—there was a thing—so sweet
Hid—in the gloomy shade. So, when the blast
Her sister tribes confounds, and, to the earth
Stoops their high heads, that vainly were exposed,
She feels it not, but flourishes onward,
Still sheltered and secure. And so the storm,
That makes the huge elm couch, and rends the oak,
The humble lily spares. A thousand blows,
That shake the lofty monarch, oo his throne,
We lesser folks feel not. Keen are the pains
Advancement often brings. To be secure,
Be humble; to be happy, be content.

208. The question is often asked—which receives the accent, the vowel or the consonant? The reply is, sometimes one, and at others, both, when they are connected. In able, the accent is all on a; in no-ble, the n and o receive the accent, but principally the o; in pre-sune, the accent is mostly on u; and is imparted to s and m, terminating on the m. Although this fact is perfectly obvious, yet one book that purports to have passed through seven editions, insists that vowels are never accented. I would ask that author, what letter receives the accent of the proper name A-i in the Bible, since it has two syllables, and yet there are no consonants. Let us beware of wrong guides as well as blind ones.

209. Half accented vowel sounds. There is an inferior, or half accent, on certain words of three or more syllables, which should be observed; and, although given distinctly, must be kept within the vanish of the accented ones. The dem-o-krat-ic con-ver-sa-tion re-spect-ing the li-a-ra was het-e-ro-gene-us to a dem-on-stration; a met-a-phis-i-cal hyp-o-cho-n-dria is rec-om-men-da-to-ry of super-a-bun-dant prod-i-gal-ity: the in-com-pre-hen-sible plen-i-po-ten-ti-ary is an am-pli-fi-ca-tion of hy-dro-pho-bi-a; the per-pen-dic-u-lar-ity of the gen-er-al-is-si-mo, and the mag-na-nim-ity of the phil-an-throp-ic-al re-ca-pit-u-la-tion was char-ac-ter-is-tic of the in-cor-rup-ti-bil-ity of his in-con-sider-a-ble-ness.

210. The mere mention of Oratory, reminds us of the early times of Egypt, Greece, and Rome; when there flourished a LEVITE, who was an important instrument in delivering an ancient people from captivity; one of whose qualifications for his high office, was, that he could "speak well;"—a Demosthenes, the magic, music, and wilchery of whose eloquence, it is impossible to translate or describe;—a Cicero, whose oratory was copious, correct, ornate, and magnificent;—each of whom was pre-eminent in his own style and manner,—the Grecian—carrying the citadel by storm, and the Roman taking it after a regular and most beautifully conducted siege;—of a Peter, and Paul, pleading in the cause of Heaven, and holding vast multitudes in breathless silence, making even Judges tremble in their high places;—of more modern times, whose history presents us the name of a Chatham, a Burke, and a Fox, in the assembly; and those of a Bourdaloue, Massillon, Bridane, and Whitfield, in the pulpit; also the orators of our own time and land; some of whom, in many respects, will not suffer by a comparison with any of their illustrious predecessors.

*Praising—what is lost,
Makes the remembrance—dear.*

Proverbs. 1. Show me a liar, and I will show you a thief. 2. The best mode of instruction is—to practice what we teach. 3. Vain glory blossoms, but never bears. 4. Well to judge, depends on well to hear. 5. He who is wicked in the country, will be wicked in the town. 6. He who preaches war, is the devil's chaplain. 7. You will never have a friend, if you must have one without failings. 8. A bad man in office, is a public calamity. 9. That war only is just, which is necessary. 10. The worst of law is, that one suit breeds twenty. 11. Be not ruined by your neglect. 12. Ignorance is a misfortune.

Anecdote. An Unwelcome Visitor. A person, who often intruded himself in a reading-room and library, to which he was not a subscriber, had his pet dog turned out by the crusty old sexton; who gave him a kick, saying—"you are not a subscriber at any rate." The intruder took the hint; and never appeared again in the establishment, till he became a patron.

HORACE, a celebrated Roman poet, relates, that a cowdtryman, who wanted to pass a river, stood loitering on the banks of it, in the foolish expectation, that a current so rapid would soon discharge its waters. But the stream still flowed, (increased perhaps by fresh torrents from the mountains,) and it must forever flow; because the source from which it is derived, is inexhaustible. Thus, the idle and irresolute youth, trifles over his books, or squanders, in childish pursuits, his precious moments, deferring the business of improvement, (which at first might be rendered easy and agreeable, but which, by delay, becomes more and more difficult), until the golden sands of opportunity have all run, and he is called to action, without possessing the requisite ability.

Varieties. 1. Has the invention of gunpowder been beneficial to the world? The mind, like the soil, rises in value, according to the nature and degree—of its cultivation. 3. Labor and prudence, relieve us from three great evils—vice, want, and indolence. 4. A wise man reflects, before he speaks; a foolish one speaks, and then reflects on what he has said. 5. Our happiness does not consist in being without passions, but in having command of them. 6. Good—is never more effectually accomplished, than when produced by slow degrees. 7. True charity—cannot be conjoined to a persuasion of folly, flowing from evil.

There's quiet—in the deep:—
Above, let tides—and tempests rave,
And earth-born whirlwinds—wake the wave;
Above, let care—and fear contend
With sin and sorrow—to the end:
Here, far beneath the tainted foam,
That frets—above our peaceful home,
We dream in joy, and wake in love,
Nor know the rage—'till yells above!
There's quiet in the deep!

211. Unaccented Vowels. There is great beauty in pronunciation, where each letter, that is not silent, tells upon the ear its true character, and all contribute to produce the desired effect: hence, the great necessity of giving to all letters, syllables, and words, their proper sounds; especially, the vowels, whether long or short, accented or unaccented: as,—on the pres-ent oc-ca-sion I shall not at-tempt to prej-udice your o-pin-ions or e-mo-tions to ac-com-plish my ob-jects; is it pos-si-ble, the ter-ri-ble of-fence of the gen-eral, in ref-er-ence to the man-u-scripts, is partic-u-lar-ly con-spic-u-ous in the red-o-lent can-o-py of heav-en! the del-e-gate re-quests me to give an oc-cu-lar ed-u-ca-tion to his del-i-cate child, and be partic-u-lar in its e-nun-ci-a-tion and pro-nun-ci-a-tion.

212. A con-vert is one, who is con-vert-ed from one side to another, and a con-vict is one who has been con-vic-ted of some crime. The con-voy con-voyed the king to his throne, and placed a cor-o-nal on his co-ro-nal brow. I will coun-ter-bal-ance that coun-ter-bal-ance, and coun-ter-buff the enemy's coun-ter-buff. They will coun-ter-charge the coun-ter-charge on England, and coun-ter-charm the broker's coun-ter-charm, while we coun-ter-check the private's coun-ter-check. The general coun-ter-mands his officer's coun-ter-mand, as we coun-ter-march our coun-ter-march. We will coun-ter-plot your coun-ter-plots, and coun-ter-mine your coun-ter-mines. He coun-ter-poised their coun-ter-poise, and coun-ter-bailed their coun-ter-vail.

Notes. 1. Different words, as well as the same words, may be accented on different vowels, according to the object contemplated; thus—vi-brate, pro-pose, brig-ade, hus-band, au-gust, au-gust, com-pound. 2. The accent is generally on the root, or theme of the word; but sometimes on the subordinate part. 3. In reading poetry, the accent may be different from what it would be in prose, for the sake of the melody of the verse. 4. Remember, vowels must be prolonged on their radical parts, not on their vanishing movements. 5. Observe how lively, varied and interesting a passage is, when pronounced with proper accentual force; and see how insipid and monotonous without it. 6. Always let your accent be well marked and sustained; then your delivery will be brilliant, sprightly and effective.

Anecdote. Undergoing a great hardship. During a trial in Court, where judge Parsons presided, a lawyer desired to know what a witness meant by keel-hauling. "Do you not know?" replied the judge; "he means that it is undergoing a great hardship, to be sure!"

Fare thee well! the ship is ready,
And the breeze—is fresh and steady.
Hands are fast the anchor weighing;
High in air—the streamer's playing.
Spread the sails—the waves are swelling
Proudly round thy buoyant dwelling;
Fare thee well! and when at sea,
Think of those who sigh for thee.

Acquaintance grew; the acquaintance they improved
To friendship; friendship—ripened into love.

Proverbs. 1. Our best security consists in innocence, and the cheering influence of approving conscience. 2. Tardiness and precipitation are extremes equally to be avoided. 3. The brave may fall, but never yield. 4. Books alone can never teach the use of books. 5. Common fame—is often a common liar. 6. Words—are leaves; deeds are fruits. 7. Deserve success, and you shall command it. 8. False friends are worse than open enemies. 9. Goodness alone, enriches the possessor. 10. He who avoids the temptation, avoids the sin. 11. Knowledge is no burden. 12. Man proposes, and God disposes.

Woman. What a consoler is woman! None but her presence can so win a man from his sorrow, make placid the knit brow, and wreath the stern lip into a smile. The soldier—becomes a lightsome boy at her feet; the anxious statesman—smiles himself back to free-hearted youth beside her; and the still and shaded countenance of care—brightens beneath her influence, as the closed flower blooms in the sunshine.

Varieties. 1. What is truth? Heaven and earth, are interested in this momentous question. 2. Flee from stoth; for the indolence of the soul, is the decay of the body. 3. Eloquence is of two kinds,—that of the heart, which is called divine; and that of the head, which is made up of conceit and sophistry. 4. It is no small grief to one's good nature, to try his friends. 5. Talk not of the love that outlives adversity; the love, that remains with it, is a thousand times more rare. 6. Deliberate with caution, and act with precision; yield with grace, and oppose with firmness. 7. The internal man is formed in the body, as a tree in the ground, or a seed in the fruit.

AUTUMN EVENING.

Behold—the western evening light!

It melts—in deepening gloom;
So calmly—Christians sink away,
Descending—to the tomb.

The winds—breathe low, the withering leaf
Scarce whispers—from the tree;
So gently—flows the parting breath,
When good men—cease to be.

How beautiful—on all the hills,
The crimson light is shed!

'Tis like the peace—the Christian gives
To mourners—round his bed.

How mildly—on the wandering cloud,
The sunset beam—is cast!

'Tis like the memory—left behind,
When loved ones—breathe their last.

And now, above the dew of night,
The yellow star—appears;

So—faith springs in the heart of those,
Whose eyes—are bathed in tears.

But soon—the morning's hopper light
Its glory shall restore;

And cyclops, that are sealed in death
Shall wake—to close no more.

True religion—

Is always mild, propitious, and humane;
Plays not the tyrant, plants no faith in blood;
But stoops to succor, polish, and redress,
And builds her grandeur—on the public good.

213. A too frequent recurrence of accented vowels, occasions a heavy utterance, in consequence of the almost continual succession of vocal efforts: it is seen and felt in words, particularly the monosyllables, and in sentences, or members of sentences, and is the cause of the slow rate in the movement of the voice. Exs. "And ten low words oft creep in one dull line. O'er hills, o'er dales, o'er crags, o'er rocks, they go. Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone." Whenever accent occurs frequently, there is always a predominance of quantity; and the delivery, of necessity, is much slower. Now here we have positive evidence that monosyllables have accent. Our best authors use the shortest words, which are usually of Saxon origin; hence, the charm, the witchery of certain speakers and writers.

214. He des-cants upon the des-cant of the preacher, who de-ser'ts his post, and goes into the des-ert, to live on spicy des-ser'ts. I will di-gest the di-gest, although I dis-cord every thing like dis-cord; I will also dis-count the note for a reasonable dis-count, because he asked me down-right, in a down-right manner.

215. Education means the development, perfection, and proper use of the body and mind: it relates to the training and guardianship of youth, from infancy to mature age—to the influencing of the character and prospects, not only of individuals, but of nations. The highest powers and noblest sentiments of our nature might remain forever dormant, were they not developed and matured by the instruction and example of the wise and good. In a still wider sense, education may mean the whole training of the thoughts and affections by inward reflection and outward events and actions, by intercourse with men, "by the spirits of the just made perfect"—by instruction from the word, and the training the whole man for life and immortality.

Notes. 1. It would be extremely difficult, considering the partially developed and cultivated state of the voice, ear, and tongue, to give definite rules for pronouncing the unaccented vowels, in consequence of their verging towards each other in many words; of course, we must avoid too much stiffness on the one hand, and vulgarity on the other; the time will come, however, when every thing with regard to elocution will be as fixed and certain as in the science of music; which is as perfect as the science of numbers. 2. Never forget that without a good articulation, no one can become a correct reader, or speaker; and whatever other defects one may have, if he possess this excellence, he will be listened to with pleasure and profit: there is something very attractive and winning in a clear, distinct and correct enunciation, which delights and captivates the soul. Let no one excuse himself from becoming perfect in this essential requisite.

What—cannot: patience do?

A great design—is seldom match'd at once:

'Tis patience heaves it on.

From savage nature,

'Tis patience, that has built up human life,

The nurse of arts; and Rome exalts her head,

An everlasting monument to patience.

Proverbs. 1. Make provision for want in time of plenty. 2. Live and let live—is a good motto. 3. Of all flatterers, self-love is the greatest. 4. Perspicuity is inseparable from eloquence. 5. Restraint from ill is the best kind of freedom. 6. Sin and sorrow are inseparable companions. 7. Speech is the gift of all; thought of but few. 8. That which opposes right, must be wrong. 9. Undulgent children—make wretched parents. 10. No one can tell how much he can accomplish, till he tries. 11. The hand of the diligent maketh rich. 12. Ill got—ill spent.

Anecdote. Dangerous Biting. Diogenes, of old, being one day asked, the biting of what beasts is the most dangerous, replied,—“If you mean wild beasts, it is that of the slanderer; if tame ones, of the flatterer.”

True Empire. It is pleasant to be virtuous and good; because, that is to excel many others;—it is pleasant to grow better; because that is to excel ourselves; it is pleasant to mortify and subdue our lusts, because that is victory;—it is pleasant to command our appetites and passions, and to keep them in due order, within the bounds of reason and religion,—because—that is empire.

Varieties. 1. Are Rail-Roads and Canals, a benefit to the country? 2. He, who is slowest in making a promise, is generally the most faithful in performing it. 3. When a teacher is to be hired, there is generally a terrible pressure in the money market. 4. Un-educated mind is ed-ucated vice. 5. They, who love flattery, are in a fair way to repent of their weakness; yet how few are proof against its attacks. 6. If others attribute more to us than is our due, they are either designing or mistaken; and, if they allow us less, they are envious or ignorant; and, in both cases should be disregarded. 7. The Lord is ever present in the human soul, and we are tried every moment in all we will, think, do, hear, or say.

CURRAN'S DAUGHTER—EMMETT'S BETROTHED.

She is far from the land—where her young hero sleeps,

And lovers—around her are sighing;

But coldly she turns from their gaze, and weeps,

For her heart—in his grave—is lying.

She sings the wild songs—of her dear native plains,

Every note, which he lov'd—awaking,—

Ah! little they think, who delight in her strains,

How the heart of the minstrel—is breaking.

He had liv'd—for his love—for his country—he died;

They were all—that to life had intwin'd him—

Nor soon—shall the tears of his country be dried,

Nor long—will his love stay behind him

Oh! make her a grave—where the sunbeams rest,

When they promise a glorious marriage:

They'll shine o'er her sleep—like a smile from the west,

From her own lov'd island of sorrow.

Oft I hear,

Upon the silence of the midnight air,

Celestial voices—swell in holy chorus;

That bears the soul—to heaven,

Impartial—as the grave,

Sleep,—robs the cruel tyrant—of his power,
Gives rest and freedom to the o'erwrought slave,
And steals the wretched beggar—from his want.

216. A too un-frequent occurrence of accent, produces indistinctness; because of the rapidity with which the unaccented sounds must be pronounced; depending, as they do, on the radical or accented vowels: in pronouncing such words, be particular to concentrate the voice, strongly, on the accented vowels; and that will give you sufficient impelling power, to carry you easily through the word. Ex. His dis-in-ter-est-ed-ness and in-tel-li-gi-bil-ity are ab-so-lute-ly in-ex-pli-ca-ble; I un-hes-i-ta-ting-ly say, that the un-reu-son-a-ble-ness of that tri-per-son-al-ist's scheme is an ir-ref-ra-ga-ble proof of lat-i-tu-di-na-ri-an-ism; he spoke com-mu-ni-ca-tive-ly in his-dis-so-lu-ble stor-en-li-ness, which he, hi-e-ro-glyph-i-cal-ly and per-emp-to-ri-ly declared, was neither an-ti-pes-ti-ten-tial, con-grat-u-la-to-ry, nor in-con-tro-ver-si-ble.

217. Pay particular attention, not only to the errors of foreigners, in pronunciation, but also to those of our own countrymen: let nothing of importance escape your critical observation: in this way, your voice, taste, and ear, will be cultivated, and you will be saved from such defects as would, if indulged in, impede your progress in these arts, and prevent you from being extensively useful in your day and generation.

218. He in-lays the table with silver in-lays. Instinct is the power derived from above, that determines the will of the brute creation, while all nature is in-stinct with life from the same source. The in-sult returned in-sults the man, as it inter-dicts the interchange which invalids inter-chang'd for an in-val-id in-ter-dict. His mi-nute mis-con-duct every min-ute that he mis-con-ducts, mi-nute-ly affects the lady min-ute-ly.

219. Laughing Scientifically. The following suggestions are given for the formation of laughing glee clubs; in the hope that this remarkably healthful and anti-melancholy exercise, may aid in accomplishing its very beneficial effects in old and young, male and female. Let a number of persons, say six, or eight, form a circle, sitting, or standing, erectly, with the shoulders thrown back, and the leader commence, by giving one laugh, in the use of the syllable huh: then, let the one at his right hand repeat it, which is to be reiterated by each one till it comes round; then, without any loss of time, let the leader repeat the word, adding another, (huh, huh;) which is to be taken up as before by the club; and, as it comes to him the third time, let him add another, (huh, huh, huh;) and so on, till there follows a complete round of shouts, and roars of laughter.

Again—I feel my bosom bound,
My heart sits lightly on its seat;
My cares—are all in rapture drown'd,
In every pulse—new pleasures beat,

Proverbs. 1. Want of punctuality is a species of falsehood. 2. Youth—is the best season for improvement. 3. No confidence can be placed in those, who are in the habit of telling lies. 4. Good, and bad habits, formed during youth, generally go with us during life. 5. Our best friends are those, who tell us our faults, and teach us to correct them. 6. A kind word, or even a kind look, often affords great comfort to the afflicted. 7. 'Tis not those who read the most, that know the most; but, those who reflect and practice the most. 8. The sun—is never the worse for shining on a dunghill. 9. True valor—is fire; bullying—is smoke. 10. Wealth is not his, who gets it; but his who enjoys it. 11. Dying—is as natural as living. 12. All covet—all lose.

Anecdote. Sea-Lawyers. A member of the bar, on his passage to Europe in a steam vessel, observed a shark near them; and not knowing what it was, asked one of the sailors; who replied, with much gravity, "Here, we call 'em sea-lawyers."

Known by our Fruits. A man—is known by his words—as a tree—by its fruit; and if we would be apprised of the nature and qualities of any one, let him but discourse, and he will speak them to us, better than another can describe them. We may therefore perceive how proper it is—for those to hold their tongues, who would not discover the shallowness of their understandings. Empty vessels—make the greatest sound, and the deepest rivers—are most silent. It is a true observation, that those who are weakest in understanding, and slowest of apprehension, are, generally, the most precipitate—in uttering their crude conceptions.

Varieties. 1. Why is an egg—un-done, like an egg over-done? Because, both are hardly done. 2. A prying disposition—into what does not concern one, and a tattling tongue—are two very common evils. 3. The bones of birds are hollow, and filled with air, instead of marrow; hence their power of making sound. 4. Unprofitable speech—is like the cypress, which is great and tall, yet bears no fruit. 5. Nature, in too many instances, is pushed from her throne; the world having lost its relish for her truth and purity. 6. Swift—dedicated one volume of his works to "Prince Posterity;" and there is manliness in the act. 7. Every advancement in good, is a delivery from evil influences; and every fall in evil, is a victory, obtained by them over the soul.

If we are wise—and judge aright, there's scarce
An ill of life (however keen or hard
To bear), but good may be extracted thence!
'Tis so by Providence ordained, to those
Who seek for light—amid the shade of gloom.
It is, indeed, a sombre sky, where not
One cheerful speck appears. Why gaze alone
On that, which doth appal the soul, and pass
The cheering ray, which, constant gazing on,
Might so expand, to chase the sombre cloud?

220. There are words, as we have seen, that are spelt alike, but pronounced different-ly, by changing the seat of accent: because the meaning is different: and there are words, spelt nearly alike, and pronounced by some alike, though incorrect-ly; and the consequence often is, a complete perversion of the sense. A minister took for his text, the following very comprehensive words; "He that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him." But instead of reading it as contained in the Bible, he perverted it, by saying: "He that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is ex-cepted of him;" that is left out; excluded.

221. Practice on the following, and similar words, and distinguish the vowel sounds by their appropriate pronunciation. The ab-o-li-tion move-ment is ac-cept-ed by some, and ex-cept-ed by others. 2. Being con-fi-dent of his con-fi-dant, the per-son-age worketh the fi-na-ry, by the par-son-age of his fi-na-ry. 3. The rad-ish pen-dant, looking red-ish, was pen-dent in the nose of the bar-on whose lands were bar-ren. 4. His sal-a-ry was cel-e-ry, because he lived under the cap-i-tol in the cap-i-tal of the state, op-po-site the office that was ap-po-site to his purpose.

222. Telling Stories. Who has not observed the intense interest, manifested by children, in hearing one another tell stories? They will sit up till midnight, without being sleepy; and are generally driven to their homes, or their bed. How readily they re-mem-ber, and re-late interesting stories to their companions, days, weeks, and months, and even years, after first hearing them: the reason is, they not only see and understand these tales, but feel them intensely; and hence, they easily get them by heart, as it is called. Why have not teachers long since taken a hint of the mode, in which to communicate all the varieties of scientific, and useful knowledge to their pupils! Let them take turns in telling stories after their teachers; and if their exercises are judiciously managed, as they may be, they will be found exceedingly amusing, and promotive of a very rapid development of mind.

Anecdote. Double Meaning. An ill-iterate personage, who always volunteered—to go round with his hat, was suspected of sparing his own pocket. Overhearing, one day, a remark to that effect, he made the following reply: "Other gentlemen puts down what they think proper, and so do I. Char-ity's a private concern, and what I give is nothing to nobody."

Dost thou know the fate of soldiers?
They're but ambition's tools—to cut a way
To her unlawful ends; and when they're worn,
Hacked, heven—with constant service, thrown aside,
To rust—in peace, or rot—in hospitals.

Proverbs. 1. Be punctual—in all your ap-pointments, and honest—in all your dealings. 2. Always live so that the world may be the better, for your living in it. 3. Never make sport of an in-sane, or intoxicated person. 4. Let the law of kindness—be ever on your tongue. 5. In con-ver-sation, seek out acceptable words. 6. Never re-quire favors, but ask for them. 7. Avoid doing things, that are calculated to excite attention. 8. Learn to practice self-denial, when it will promote the happiness of others. 9. Kindly and faithfully remind your friends and companions, of their faults. 10. Be accurate in every thing. 11. No rose without a thorn. 12. Pride—will have a fall.

Discovery of Glass. Pliny informs us, that the art of making glass—was accidentally discovered by some merchants, who were traveling with nitre, and stopped near a river, issuing from Mount Carnel. Not finding anything to rest their kettles on, they used some pieces of nitre for that purpose. The nitre gradually dissolving by the heat, mixed with the sand, and a transparent mat-ter flowed, which was in fact glass. It is certain that we are often more indebted to apparent chance, than genius—for many of the most valuable discoveries: therefore every one should keep his eyes and ears open,—his thoughts and feelings awake and active.

Varieties. 1. Why should any one think it a disgrace—to work for his living? 2. Investigate every subject, with which you become acquainted, until you understand it thoroughly. 3. "I'll try," is a plant, that would flourish in the frigid zone; "I can't," would be barren any where. 4. Never condemn another, for not knowing what you have just learned; or perhaps do not clearly understand. 5. No tongue can tell, or intel-lect perceive, the full import of the word HOME. 6. The true christian religion—is a divine wardrobe, containing garments for all kinds and orders of wearers. 7. As the soul advances in true resignation of its own will, to the will of God, every principle and facul-ty of mind—becomes sanctified, even down into the life of the senses.

Woe not, that Time
Is passing on,—it will—ere long, reveal
A brighter era to the nations. Hark!
Along the rales—and mountains of the earth
There is a deep, portentous murmuring,
Like the swift rush—of subterranean streams;
Or like the mingled sounds of earth, and air,
When the fierce Tempest, with sonorous wing,
Heaves his deep folds upon the rushing winds,
And hurries onward—with his night of clouds
Against the eternal mountains. 'Tis the voice
Of infant Freedom.—and her stirring call
Is heard—and answered—in a thousand tones,
From every hill-top of her Western home.—
And lo, it breaks across old Ocean's flood.—[shout
And "Freedom! FREEDOM!" is the answering
Of nations, starting from the spell of years.

223. When accented and unaccented syllables are agreeably interspersed through the words, neither a heavy utterance, nor indistinctness occurs. Ex. "Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er the unbending corn, and skims along the main." Now, compare the movement of the voice in this, with the following, and see and feel the difference: "And ten low words oft creep in one dull line." The former is like a nag, that gallops off in fine style; the tatter, one that creeps, like a snail. The reason is, as you perceive, in one case, there is life and light; in the other, nothing but words.

224. Neither teachers nor parents, can be too wisely careful of the influence, exerted upon their pupils and children: for principles apply to both matter and spirit. "Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined." Again, since thoughts are imperishable existences, we should be careful in entertaining and cherishing any other, than such as we are willing to have for our companions on earth, and during our eternal state of being in the future world. Here, then, is something for all of us to attend to; and unspeakable consequences are depending on the performance of duty. Are we of the number of those, who turn back in the day of battle? or, of those who gird on their armor, to do, or die?

225. Position in Bed. There is no doubt, that the habit of forming round or hump'd shoulders, (which is rarely, if ever, natural), is contracted in infancy, and childhood. The incautious mother, not understanding the principles of physiology, lays the infant on a pillow of feathers, instead of on a good mattress, or straw bed, without pillows; thus, elevating the head far too much above the level of the body; and this practice is continued in after-life, very much to the detriment of health, and beauty of form. If necessary, raise the head-posts of the bedstead a few inches, instead of using pillows.

Notes. 1. Observe, that when the accent is at, or near, the beginning of the word, it materially aids the expulsive stress of voice, carrying us more easily through the word, than when it is placed near the last end: the genius of our language is in favor of the former; hence, the tendency is to place the accent at the beginning; which makes language more powerful and effective. 2. In running, the impetus of preceding efforts carries us on after those efforts have ceased.

Anecdote. A Tough Animal. "The constitution of our females must be excellent," says a celebrated physician; "for, take an ox, or a horse, and enclose his sides with corsets,—and he would labor indeed,—but it would be for breath."

Nothing—is lasting—on the world's wide stage,
As sung, and wisely sung, the Grecian sage;
And man, who, through the globe—extends his sway,
Reigns—but the sovereign creature—of a day;
One generation comes, another—goes,
Time—blends the happy—with the man of woes;
A different face of things—each age appears,
And all things—alter—in a course of years.

Proverbs. 1. He who marries for wealth, sells his liberty. 2. A friend, which you buy with resents, may be bought from you. 3. Ladies—will sooner pardon want of sense, than want of good manners. 4. The remedy for love is—land between. 5. You may know a foolish woman—by her finery. 6. Temperance, employment, and a cheerful spirit—are great preservers and restorers of health. 7. Many a one digs his grave with his teeth. 8. The epicure—puts his purse in his stomach; and the miser—his stomach in his purse. 9. Change of weather is the discourse of fools. 10. We hate delay; but it often makes us wiser. 11. Talking—does no work. 12. Past labor is pleasant.

Laconics. Never mystify science; but, if possible, always elucidate it. Knowledge—is too important—to be made the subject of a silly joke.

Varieties. 1. If content does not remove the disquietudes of life, it will at least alteriate them. 2. Can matter ever be annihilated? 3. Every sentence we read understandingly, is like a cast of the weaver's shuttle, adding another thread to the web of life. 4. They, who are governed by reason, need no other motive than the goodness of an act, to excite them to practice it. 5. A reading people will become a thinking people; and then, they are capable of becoming a great people. 6. A diligent pen supplies many thoughts. 7. Nothing but divine love, and divine wisdom, can proceed from God, the centre of all beings.

DEATH OF A HEART-FRIEND.

If I had thought—thou couldst have died,
I might not weep for thee;
But I forgot, when by thy side,
That thou couldst mortal be.
It never through my mind had passed,
The time would e'er be o'er,
And I on thee—should look my last,
And thou shouldst smile—no more!
And still—upon that face I look,
And think—twill smile again;
And still the thought—I will not brook,
That I must look in vain!
But when I speak,—thou dost not say,
What thou ne'er left'st unsaid;
And now I feel, as well I may,
Sweet Mary! thou art dead!
If thou wouldst stay, e'en as thou art.
All cold—and all serene,—
I still might press thy silent heart,
And where thy smiles have been!
While e'en thy chill, bleak corse I have,
Thou seemest still my own;
But there I lay thee—in thy grave,—
And I am now—alone!
I do not think, where'er thou art,
Thou hast forgotten me;
And I, perhaps, may soothe this heart
In thinking, too, of thee.
Yet there was round thee—such a dawn
Of light, ne'er seen before,
As fancy—never could have drawn,
And never—can restore!

226. Revisions. The great practical importance of this subject, demands a passing remark. In revising, we not only gather up the fragments, but refresh our minds with a reproduction of what we previously had learned. By reviewing our studies, we often find the materials, with which we can overcome difficulties, that seem almost insurmountable; hence, revisions frequently serve as a key, to unlock the casket, that contains invaluable treasures. And we must guard against thinking of the principles, as being contained in the book; unless they are understood and felt in the mind, and by the mind, and through the body are reduced to practice, they are, so far as we are concerned, valueless and dead. Seeing food, or thinking of it, will impart no nourishment to the body; it must be eaten, digested, and appropriated.

227. Now repeat all the sounds of the letters, in their alphabetical order, as found on page 63; omitting those that are duplicates; then give the vowels and consonants, by themselves: afterwards, give the short vowels, and the long ones by themselves, and read several paragraphs by vowel sounds; after which, give the vocal consonants, and aspirates, by themselves: then the single, double, and triple ones, and analyze words, spelling them by their sounds; also, raise and fall the eight vowels, according to the diatonic scale, in article 64; then revise the two modes of making accent; practice on the changes of its seat, and realize the important use of every exercise.

228. The pre-con-tract pre-con-tracts the pre-fix which is pre-fixed to the pre-ude, with which the speaker pre-ludes the present pre-age, that he pre-sag'd the man would pre-sent. The pro-ude of the land was such as to pro-duce a pro-ject to pro-test against the man who pro-jects the infamous pro-est against the rebel that re-bels against the law. I re-fuse to re-cord either the ref-use or the rec-ord, or re-tail them by wholesale or re-tail.

229. A Dandy of some use. Let the pupil impress on his mind the absolute necessity, for awhile, of keeping his shoulders thrown back, so as to make the breast as round and prominent as possible: and then, after a few days, or weeks at farthest, he will feel very uncomfortable to sit, stand, or labor, in a bent position. But, says one, "I should look so much like a dandy." Never mind that, provided it be right; and if you can make this much use of so superfluous an article, it may serve to show you, that nothing exists in vain: think of the wisdom and industry of the bee.

This smooth discourse,—and mild behavior, oft Conceals—a traitor.

Proverbs. 1. Never repulse an associate with unkindness. 2. Love one another with a pure heart ferently. 3. The morality of the christian religion, is not national, but universal. 4. Prudence says—take time by the foretop. 5. A bird in the hand, is worth two in the bush. 6. The diligent soul, shall be made rich. 7. Knowledge—is power; ignorance—is weakness. 8. An egg to-day, is better than a hen to-morrow. 9. Worldly reputation and sensual pleasure, are destructive to virtue. 10. The history and wisdom of the world, can only be known by reading. 11. We are to be saved from our sins, not in our sins. 12. Whatever is worth reading at all, is worth reading well.

Anecdote. Afraid of Work. A person once said to a father, whose son was noted for his laziness, that he thought his son was very much afraid of work. "Afraid of work?" replied the father, "not at all,—he will lie down, and go to sleep close by the side of it."

Right Views. The more we ascribe all goodness and truth—to the Lord, the more—will the interiors of the mind, be open towards heaven, the only source of happiness: for by thus doing, we acknowledge that nothing good and true is from ourselves; and, in proportion as this is heartily confessed, the love of self—departs, and with it—the thick darkness, which arises from that which is false and evil: thus it is evident, how one—becomes wiser than another. As the exhalations from the earth—rise and form clouds, more or less dense, thus obscuring the atmosphere, and preventing the clear light of the sun; so, do the exhalations of self-love—arise and obscure the light of Divine truth,—of that Sun, which rules the world of mind.

Varieties. 1. Does pain or pleasure—predominate in human life? 2. Wedded life, says a happy husband, is a perpetual fountain of domestic steels. 3. Drinking water—neither makes a man sick, nor runs him in debt, nor makes his wife a widow: can as much be said of ardent spirits? 4. He, who peeps through a keyhole, may see something to rex him. 5. That gentleness, which is characteristic of a good man, like every other virtue, has its seat in the heart: and nothing but what flows from the heart—can render even external manners, truly pleasing. 6. The Lord came to seek and save those who are lost: and he saves all who are willing to be saved. 7. Love—principles and genuine truth, respect each other according to degrees of affinity: and the greater the affinity, the greater is the attraction between them.

Morning—hath her songs of gladness,
Sultry noon—its ferved glare,
Evening hours, their gentle sadness,
Night—its dreams, and rest from care;
But the pensive twilight—ever
Gives its own sweet fancies birth,
Waking visions, that may never Know reality—on earth.

230. Orthography—relates to the right placing of the letters in words, and Orthoepy—to the right pronouncing of words, according to the sounds of the letters,—the former—respects written language, and is addressed to the eye; and the latter, spoken language, and is addressed to the ear; the first supposes the second. We may infer the perfection, which the ancient Greeks attained, in orthoepy, from this fact, that when a public speaker—even pronounced a word incorrectly, the whole audience simultaneously hissed him. Whence did they acquire such accuracy of ear! Doubtless, in spelling by the sounds of their letters, instead of by their names. When we adopt this method, which nature and science dictate, we shall attain like excellency in pronunciation, and our language will then be found to contain more power and sweetness than any other in the world.

231. Pronunciation—is orthoepy, or the right utterance of words; i. e. pronouncing words according to euphony, analogy and custom, which constitute the standard. The principal rule is, pronounce in the easiest and most effective manner: and, when words are introduced from other languages, they should be pronounced according to the principles of our language; that is, they must conform to the genius of the English language, as foreigners do to that of our constitution, when they become naturalized,—abjuring foreign, uncongenial influences and principles, and submitting to ours.

232. Our Orthography and Orthoepy. Many foreigners and natives find it difficult to speak our language, in consequence of the great difference between its spelling and its pronunciation, and the various sounds given to the same letters in similar, and in different combinations; and, although, for the last two centuries, our orthography has remained nearly stationary, yet our orthoepy has been very much changed; which may be seen in comparing the Bible, translated under James I., with the common edition. Different persons have proposed different means, for overcoming these difficulties, and nearly all without much success; which is the less to be regretted, when we consider how little the voice and ear have been developed and cultivated, and thereby prepared to meet the exigencies of the case. It is now seen, on a faithful analysis and synthesis of their labors to revolutionize our language in these respects, that each reformer's system is found to be very imperfect; but the good work is going on slowly; and, in process of time, it will be accomplished; very much to the disappointment of book-worms, and to the gratification of that spirit of the age, which looks more to the uses of things, than to their looks.

Proverbs. 1. Reprove mildly, and correct with caution. 2. Let us creep before we walk, and walk before we fly. 3. One book, well read, is worth twenty skimmed over. 4. The greatest wealth—is contentment with a little. 5. A letter—is half a meeting. 6. We may read much, without understanding much. 7. Presence of mind, is necessary at all times. 8. Little boats should keep near shore; great ones—may venture more. 9. I confide, and am at rest. 10. While there is life, there is hope. 11. He attains whatever he aims at. 12. A good story, is none the worse for being twice told.

Anecdote. Dying but Once. When Cesar was advised, by some of his friends, to be more cautious as to the security of his person, and not to walk among the people without arms, or any one to protect him; he replied,—“He, who lives in the fear of death, every moment feels its torture; I will die but once.”

Laconics. A life of deceit—is one of unmitigated torture—a living hell, which should deserve our pity for the unhappy beings who submit to it.

Varieties. 1. Are not the unity and trinity of God, the elemental and fundamental principles of christian theology? 2. Character, based on goodness and truth, is a source of eternal happiness. 3. We are made what we are, by what is from above, within, and around us. 4. God gives to all, the power o. becoming what they ought to be. 5. A full persuasion of our ability to do well, is a powerful motive to excellence, and a sure pledge of success. 6. It is our duty, and our happiness, to feel for others, and take an interest in their welfare. 7. The action of life, is desire; as is the desire and delight, with its consequent actions, such is the life.

THE GOODNESS OF PROVIDENCE.

The Lord—my pasture shall prepare,
And feed me—with a shepherd's care;
His presence—shall my wants supply,
And guard me—with a watchful eye;
My noon-day walks—he shall attend,
And all my midnight hours—defend.

When, in the sultry glebe—I faint,
Or, on the thirsty mountains pant;
To fertile vales, and dewy meads,
My weary, wand'ring steps he leads,
Where peaceful rivers, soft and slow,
Amid the verdant landscape flow.

Though—in the paths of death—I tread,
With gloomy horrors—overspread,
My steadfast heart—shall fear no ill;
For thou, O Lord, art with me still:
Thy friendly crook—shall give me aid,
And guide me—through the dreadful shade.

Though in a bare—and rugged way,
Through devious—lonely wilds I stray,
Thy bounty—shall my pains beguile;
The barren wilderness—shall smile,
With sudden greens—and herbage crowned,
And streams—shall murmur all around.

233. Pronunciation—should be so systematic, as to render it capable of being studied from its elementary principles, and become an object of methodical acquirement. Every thing involved in producing sounds, in the conformation of the organs in articulation, the application of all that belongs to accented, half-accented, and un-accented vowels, and every principle of melody and euphony—are included in pronunciation, and tends to its perfection: but the ancients included also Emphasis, Intonation, Inflection, Circumflexes and the other essentials of delivery.

234. If the great object of pronunciation be, to produce the designed effect, in the best manner, we shall find it necessary to attend not only to the preceding principles, and their application, but to watch over useless innovations, and inclinations to senseless changes,—desires to be what is called fashionable—regardless of reason, and ambitious to shine as a leader in some peculiar pronunciation: then, our language will bear a rigid comparison with any other, either ancient or modern, when ends, causes and effects are taken into consideration. Let us not, then, deviate from established principles, and rules, without good and satisfactory reasons.

235. Action and Reaction. Have you ever particularly noticed, the reciprocal action between the voice and the mind, the tongue and the heart? Well might the apostle exclaim, "How great a matter a little fire kindleth!" The tongue is full of power for weal, or for woe, according to the state of the heart, that impels it to action. What is there, that cannot be talked up, or talked down by it? It is full of blessing, or cursing—love or hatred; and oh! how it can sting the soul, when it has been dipped in the gall and wormwood of hell; and how lift it to heaven, when fired with celestial love.

Notes. Always infill, perfectly, the accented vowel, and more so, in proportion as the word is important; i. e. shape the vowel sound completely, by the appropriate organs, and give it all its necessary power, filling it full of the influence of the mind, in the proportion as you wish your ideas to be impressive and abiding. Mind possesses a magnifying power over words, making them mean more than they naturally do: which will be perfectly obvious in the specific practice of the principles which we are gradually approaching.

Anecdote. "I suppose," (said an arrant quack, while feeling the pulse of his patient,) "that you think me a fool." "Sir," (replied the sick man,) "I perceive you can discover a man's thoughts by his pulse."

If all our hopes and all our fears,
Were prisoned in life's narrow bound;
If, travelers through this vale of tears,
We saw no better world beyond;
Oh! what could check the rising sigh?
What earthly thing, could pleasures give?
Oh! who would venture then, to die,
Or who would venture then, to live?

Proverbs. 1. The conduct of men is an index to their hearts; for by their fruits ye shall know them. 2. In arduous and trying circumstances preserve equanimity; and in prosperous hours, restrain the ebullitions of excessive joy. 3. Those things that belong to others generally please us; while those that are our own are more valued by others. 4. Attach yourself to good company and you will be respected as one of them. 5. The most distinguished men, of all ages, have had their imperfections. 6. Cutting jests, when the satire is true, inflicts a wound that is not soon forgotten. 7. Nothing is more disgusting, than a low-bred fellow, when he suddenly attains an elevated station. 8. Either never attempt a thing, or accomplish it. 9. Fortune—favors the bold, and abandons the timid. 10. Acts of kindness, shown to good men, are never thrown away. 11. War—is death's jest. 12. Of two evils—choose the least.

Varieties. 1. If you make a present, give what will be useful. 2. Do not the wings, that form the butterfly, lie folded in the worm? 3. Language—should first be learned by imitation. 4. One of the greatest obstacles, in the road to excellence, is indolence. 5. Humility—is that low, sweet root, from which all heavenly virtues shoot. 6. Acquire a thorough knowledge of all your duties. 7. God—is an infinite abyss of wisdom: which is not comprehensible—either by men or angels, as to one millionth of its parts: of its infinite store, they are to receive fresh supplies to all eternity.

THE MOTHER'S INJUNCTION, ON PRESENTING HER SON WITH A BIBLE.

Remember love, who gave thee this.
When other days shall come:
When she, who had thy earliest kiss,
Sleeps—in her narrow home,
Remember, 'twas a mother—gave
The gift to one—she'd die to save.
That mother—sought a pledge of love,
The holiest—for her son;
And, from the gifts of God above,
She chose a goodly one.
She chose, for her beloved boy,
The source of light, and life, and joy;
And bade him keep the gift,—that, when
The parting hour would come,
They might have hope—to meet again,
In an eternal home.
She said—his faith in that—would be
Sweet incense—to her memory.
And should the scoffer, in his pride,
Laugh that fond faith to scorn,
And bid him cast the pledge aside,
That—he from youth had borne;
She bade him pause, and ask his breast,
If he, or she, had loved him best?
A parent's blessing on her son
Goes with this holy thing;
The love, that would retain the one,
Must to the other cling.
Remember! 'tis no idle toy,
A mother's gift, Remember, boy!

236. The only way that provincialisms, foreign accents and brogues, can be removed, is by individual attention to the first principles of our language, as here exhibited, and, at the same time, following a teacher who can give the true English pronunciation; for sounds can only be learned by imitation; and this is the way in which Elocution and Music must be taught. Our language has suffered, and is suffering, greatly, by being improperly taught by foreigners, who cannot pronounce one half of our words with propriety. But a teacher may be able to pronounce single words with a good degree of correctness, and yet be unable to deliver sentences, in a proper manner. A few minutes every day, for a few weeks, devoted to the study and practice of these principles, will enable almost any one to discover and amend his errors and defects in articulating our forty-four sounds, and pronouncing correctly, the words in common use; and if spelling by sounds and by sight, be faithfully practiced, one may secure another rare excellence,—that of writing our words with correctness and despatch.

237. Every thing in the universe, both of mind and of matter, exists in reference to certain fixed principles, which are called laws of order, originating in the Great First Cause, and thence emanating throughout all creation, animate and inanimate; and so long and so far, as these laws are obeyed, we are shielded from all evils, physical and spiritual: hence, if a man suffers, either in mind, or body, from within, or without, the cause of the suffering is an infringement of the Laws of Life. Such, then, are our constitutions, and relations, that we cannot will, think, or act, without obeying, or violating, these laws of Life, of Being, of God. Oh the lengths, the breadths, the heights, and the depths of the wisdom and love of God, as manifested in the creation, redemption, and SALVATION OF MAN.

Anecdote. Pity. A would-be orator, of very moderate abilities, after a long harangue, asked a real friend, if he did not excite much compassion. He replied, "most certainly, you did sir; every one of the audience pitied you most heartily."

"The way was long, the wind was cold,
The minstrel—was infirm, and old;
His wither'd cheek—and tresses gray,
Seem'd to have known a better day.
The harp, his sole remaining joy,
Was carried—by an orphan boy."

Me—let the tender office long engage,
To rock the cradle of reposing age;
With lenient arts—extend a mother's breath,
Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death;
Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,
And keep, a while, one parent from the sky!

Proverbs. 1. Neither great poverty, nor great riches will hear reason. 2. Wine—is a turncoat; first a friend, then an enemy. 3. Diet and exercise are the two physicians of nature. 4. There is many a good house-wife that can't sing, or dance. 5. Love—can neither be bought, nor sold. 6. He, that is a wise man, by day, is no fool by night. 7. The society of ladies—is a school of politeness. 8. An enemy to beauty is a foe to nature. 9. When a man's coat is thread-bare, it is easy to pick a hole in it. 10. The study of vain things—is laborious idleness. 11. No mine equal to saving. 12. Dependence is a poor trade. 13. All is good that is useful.

CONTENTMENT—produces, in some measure, all those effects, which the alchemist usually ascribes to what he calls the philosopher's stone; and if it does not bring riches, it does the same thing, by banishing the desire of them. If it cannot remove the disquietudes, arising from a man's mind, body or fortune, it makes him easy under them. It has indeed, a kindly influence on the soul of man, in respect of every being to whom he stands related. It extinguishes all murmur, repining, and ingratitude, towards that Being, who has allotted him his part to act in this world. It destroys all inordinate ambition, and every tendency to corruption, with regard to the community wherein he is placed. It gives sweetness to his conversation, and a perpetual serenity—to all his thoughts.

Varieties. Is it not strange, that nations of men could ever have admitted into their creed, the idea of a plurality of Gods; when the whole of Nature bears on it so distinctly, the impress of ONE GOD? 2. He is not the best reader, who speaks his words most rapidly; but he who does justice to them, by pronouncing them correctly, and effectively. 3. If a person delights in telling you the faults of others, be sure he intends to tell others your faults. 4. Never be a minute too late. 5. Avoid loud talking and laughing in the streets. 6. The moral and intellectual man, seems to mould and modify the physical man. 7. We are filled with the life of heaven, just so far as we are emptied of our own, and find in us an utter inability to do good, without divine assistance.

A cloud lay cradled—near the setting sun—

A gleam of crimson—tinged its braided snow;
Long had I watched the glory—moving on;
O'er the still radiance—of the lake below.

Tranquil its spirit seemed—and floated slowly;
Ee'n in its very motion—there was rest,
While every breath of ere, that chanced to blow,

Wafted the traveler—to the beauteous west—
Emblem, methought, of the departed soul,

To whose white robe, the gleam of bliss is given,
And by the breath of mercy—made to roll

Right onward—to the golden gates of heaven;
Where, to the eye of faith, it peaceful lies,
And tells to man—his glorious destinies.

238. Pronunciation, as has been observed, had a very comprehensive meaning among the ancients, taking in the whole compass of delivery, and involving every thing we see and hear in modern elocution: it is now confined within narrower limits, and has reference only to the manner of sounding words. It is much to be regretted, that there is not more agreement, even among literary and scientific men, with regard to this important branch of our subject: but when we reflect, that not one in a hundred, takes it up systematically, and masters its principles, it is not surprising that there is so much discrepancy. This consideration of inattention to the subject should put us on our guard against following their examples in every respect, and of yielding implicit obedience to their whims and oddities. There is so much self-love and pride of intelligence, as well as passion for novelty, prevalent in the world, that the student in elocution, as well as in every thing else, should cleave to acknowledged and well established principles; and regard what is most useful instead of what is new.

239. There are general as well as specific rules, for pronunciation: a partial idea of which, may be obtained from this manual of Elocution. The author has been engaged, for many years, in compiling a Dictionary, on an entirely new plan, so arranged, that when one has learned the definitions of a few hundred words, he can accurately define as many thousands; and with the use of his perfect alphabet, he will know the sound of every letter, the instant he sees it, and how to pronounce each word, without re-spelling, with the same facility. All things are governed by fixed principles, when they are in true order; and when the principles of Pronunciation are properly developed, and applied, they will be found as simple and effective, as those of Elocution and Music.

Notes. 1. As the voice is often affected, by a derangement of the respiratory and articulating organs: a few observations are made on some of their causes and remedies. 2. Colds and Coughs—are the effects of sudden exposure to a cold atmosphere, by which the pores of the skin, (which is an exhalant surface,) becomes constricted and obstructed; which obstructions may be removed, by restoring to the skin, (which is the safety-valve of the system), its usual offices. When one has taken cold, the mucus membrane of the lungs, and air passages, (which are also exhalants), emit a new fluid—to compensate for the interruption in the office of the surface of the body; and, as this new secretion consists of humors, which can be of no further use to the system, it excites a muscular effort, called a Cough; by which it is detached from the surface of this inner skin, and expectorated. One of the best remedies is a Vapor Bath, with an application of cold water, and friction immediately after.

Anecdote. A parish clerk, having, according to custom, published the banns of m matrimony, between a loving couple, was followed by the minister, who gave out the hymn, commencing with these words—"Mistaken souls! that dream of Heaven."

Reason gains all men,—by compelling—none.

Proverbs. 1. Endeavor to improve in conversation. 2. He who is wise in small matters, will be wise in large ones. 3. Never say a foolish thing. 4. None can speak so feelingly of an advantage, as he who has suffered by neglecting it. 5. Let not the sun go down on your wrath. 6. Our minds are moulded and fashioned by the books we read. 7. Better be good, and not seem so, than seem good, and not be so. 8. A pleasant journey is dearly bought, with the loss of home. 9. He, only, is a man, who governs himself. 10. All have power to distinguish between right, and wrong. 11. Turn a deaf ear to obscene words. 12. All things are proven by contrast.

Good Sense. It will preserve us from ensoriousness; will lead us to distinguish circumstances; keep us from looking after visionary perfection, and make us see things in their proper tight. It will lead us to study dispositions, peculiarities, accommodations; to weigh consequences; to determine what to observe and what to pass by; when to be immoveable, and when to yield. It will produce good manners, keep us from taking freedoms, and handling things roughly; will never agitate claims of superiority, but teach us to submit ourselves one to another. Good sense—will lead persons to regard their own duties, rather than to recommend those of others.

Varieties. 1. Is not a true knowledge of the Divine Being, the foundation of religion, and the corner-stone of the church? 2. Every improper indulgence of the passions, increases their strength for evil. 3. Few seem to be aware, how much depends on the culture of our social nature. 4. It is a great happiness—to be free from suspicion; but a greater, to be free from offence. 5. To be without passion, is worse than a beast; and to be without reason, is worse than a man. 6. The refined pleasures of a truly pious mind, are far superior to the coarse gratifications of sense. 7. God gave no faculty of mind, or body, to men, but those which he meant should be exerted, and honor him in his design; the perversion of those faculties, and acting from, in, and by them, contrary to God's design, makes the evil, disease, and death.

THE DAY OF LIFE.

The morning hours—of cheerful light,

Of all the day—are best;

But, as they speed their hasty flight,

If every hour—be spent aright,

We sweetly sink—to sleep—at night,

And pleasant—is our rest.

And life—is like a summer's day,

It seems so quickly past:

Youth—is the morning, bright, and gay;

And, if 'tis spent in wisdom's way,

We meet old age—without dismay,

And death—is sweet—at last.

Of, the cloud, that wraps the present hour,
Lives—but to brighten—all our future days.

240. PAUSES, are indications of silence; they were introduced with the art of printing; and it is questionable, whether they have aided us much in learning to read or speak: for if there were no pauses, we should be compelled to exercise the mind, so far as necessary to understand the author. Pauses in speech, are analogous to rests in music; and there are seven different kinds in each art; all of which must be thoroughly understood, in their essence, to read, write, or sing correctly. The true principles of notation, or pauses, are found only in the measure of speech, which is based on the philosophy of mind, involving the exercise of thinking and feeling. The use of pauses is to aid in making the sense clearer, and should be only just long enough to answer their end.

241. There are TWO KINDS of pauses,—Grammatical and Rhetorical. Grammatical pauses are distinguished by characters, and are addressed to the eye, as well as to the ear. The shortest pause is called a comma, (,) which indicates a silence of one second. The teacher is recommended to count, at every pause, while the pupil reads; the same as is done at the rests in music; this exercise, is the surest to accomplish the object. Ex. 1. Do to others, as you would they should do to you. 2. None can be a disciple of the graces, but in the school of virtue. 3. Be armed with courage, against thyself, against thy passions, and against thy flatterers. 4. Every leaf, every twig, and every drop of water, teems with life. 5. The colors of the rainbow are—violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange and red.

242. Examples to Illustrate the Pauses. The three grand degrees of all existences are—what is natural, human and DIVINE. The three grand divisions of all natural things are—earths, waters and atmospheres. The three kingdoms of nature are—the mineral, the vegetable, and the animal. The three divisions of the mineral kingdom are—the soils, the rocks, and the precious stones. The three divisions of the vegetable kingdom are—grasses, plants and shrubs, and trees. The three divisions of the animal kingdom are—into those that creep and walk on the earth, those that swim, and those that fly. Each of these divisions is divided in trines; according to which, all things exist, and subsist.

Anecdote. An agent, soliciting subscribers for a book, showed the prospectus to a man, who, after reading —“one dollar in boards, and one dollar and twenty-five cents in sheep,”—declined subscribing, as he might not have boards or sheep on hand, when called upon for payment.

The humble man, when he receives a wrong,
Refers revenge—to whom it doth belong.

Proverbs. 1. A bird is known by his note,—and a man by his talk. 2. There are many, who glory in their shame. 3. A good character—is a badge of excellence, that cannot long be concealed. 4. Never more, or less, than enough. 5. Some—rather imitate greatness, than goodness. 6. There is misery in want, and danger in excess. 7. Good sayings, belong to all; evil actions only to their authors. 8. A knowledge of the way, is a good part of the journey. 9. If we go wrong, the farther we go, the farther we are from home. 10. Reform yourself first, and then, others. 11. The fool—wanders; the wise—travels. 12. Words are wind; seeing is believing.

Inadequacy of Language. Words—are poor weapons. The most beautiful verses—are those which we cannot express. The diction of every language is insufficient; and every day, the heart of man finds, in the delicacy of his sentiments, and the imagination discovers—in the impressions of visible nature, things, which the mouth cannot embody for want of words. The heart, and the thought of man—are like a musician—driven to play infinitely varied music—on an organ, which has but few notes. It is sometimes more advisable to be silent than to speak. Silence—is felt by the soul, and appreciated by God; and that is enough.

Varieties. 1. Is not the doctrine of the divinity, and humanity—of the Lord Jesus Christ, the touch-stone, by which the christian church is to be tried? 2. The life of a christian—is his walk; Christ is his way, and heaven—his home. 3. A coward in the field, is like a wise man's fool; he does not know what he professes; but a coward in the faith, is like a fool, in his wisdom, he does not profess what he knows. 4. Virtue—consists in the faithful performance of our duty, from love to God, and love to man; and vice—in the neglect of our duty from a love of self, and a love of the world. 5. The heart of a worthless man—is as unfired, and changeable, as the fitful wind. 6. The tongue may speak the loudest; but the heart—the truest. 7. Look at the form, consider the desire, and act, and mark the end; for thereby you may know the nature of all created beings.

This world's not “all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;”—

He that hath sooth'd a widow's woe,
Or wip'd an orphan's tear, doth know
There's something here of Heaven.

And he, that walks life's thorny way,
With feelings calm and even,
Whose path is lit, from day to day,
By virtue's bright and steady ray,
Hath something felt of Heaven.

He, that the christian's course hath run,
And all his foes forgiven,
Who measures out life's little span
In love to God—and love to man,
On earth, hath tasted Heaven.

243. The Semicolon—is an indication that we should pause long enough to count two, deliberately; and while we are thus resting, from physical effort, we can carry on our mental effort, for the purpose of producing the desired effect: for it is of the first importance, in reading and speaking, to keep the mind employed with the thoughts and feelings; even when there is no external act; except it may be the play of the facial muscles. 1. Envy not the appearance of happiness in any one; for you know not his secret grief. 2. The sign without the substance, is nothing; the substance without the sign, is all things. 3. None are so innocent, as not to be evil spoken of; none so wicked, as to want all commendation. 4. We may know what we will not utter; but we should never utter, what we do not know.

244. The following lines afford a good exercise, in the placing and use of the grammatical pause.

I saw a peacock with a fiery tail
I saw a blazing star that dropt down hail
I saw a cloud begirt with ivy round
I saw a sturdy oak creep on the ground
I saw a pismire swallow up a whale
I saw the brackish sea brim full of ale
I saw a phial glass sixteen yards deep
I saw a well full of men's tears to weep
I saw man's eyes all on a flame of fire
I saw a house high as the moon or higher
I saw the radiant sun at deep midnight
I saw the man who saw this dreadful sight.

245. Natural History—involves the study of all the productions of nature, animal, vegetable and mineral; their qualities, relations and origin. It is divided into three kingdoms, giving rise to the corresponding sciences of Zoology, Botany and Mineralogy; which are divided into classes, orders, genera, and species, founded on prominent distinctions; in which, what most resembles the earth, are placed nearest in relation to it.

Anecdote. "How do you know," (said a traveler to a poor wandering Arab of the desert,) "That there is a God?" "In the same manner," (he replied), "that I trace the footsteps of an animal,—by the prints it leaves upon the sand."

Nor let soft slumber—close your eyes,
Before you've recollected thrice
The train of actions—through the day;
Where have my feet—chose out the way?
What have I learn'd, where'er I've been,
From all I've heard, from all I've seen?
What know I more, that's worth the knowing?
What have I done, that's worth the doing?
What have I sought, that I should shun?
What duty—have I left undone?
Or into what new follies run?
These self-inquiries—are the road,
That leads to virtue—and to God.

Proverbs. 1. Prosperity—engenders sloth. 2. Laziness—grows on people; it begins in cobwebs, and ends in chains. 3. Many have done a wise thing; more a cunning thing; but very few—a generous thing. 4. What cannot be told, had better not be done. 5. No patience, no true wisdom. 6. Those that are careless of themselves, can hardly be mindful of others. 7. Contentment gives a crown, where fortune hath denied it. 8. He, who lives disorderly one year, does not enjoy himself for five. 9. Public men, should have public minds: or private ends will be served, at the public cost. 10. Mildness—governs better than anger. 11. While there is life, there is hope. 12. Good men—are a public good.

Importance of Observation. The external world is designed, by its Creator, to aid essentially in developing the human mind. Ten thousand objects appeal to our observation; and each one is a book—of the most interesting character, which can be had without money, and without price. But we must attend to the animate, as well as to the in-animate world,—to men, as well as to things. We should not be ashamed to ask for information, when we do not understand the whys and wherefores; nor fail of conversing with every one, who can impart to us useful knowledge.

Varieties. 1. Are christians prohibited the proper use of any natural good? 2. When the honor and interest of truth are concerned, it is our duty to use all lawful means—for its support and defence. 3. Tolerance—is odious to the intolerant; freedom—to oppressors; property to robbers; and all kinds of prosperity to the envious. 4. General Washington was born, Feb. 22nd, (O. S.) 1732; and died, Dec. 14th, 1797, aged 67; 21 years after the Declaration of Independence. 5. What is the most perfect Government? that, where an injury done the meanest citizen, is considered an insult upon the constitution. 6. Grammar—speaks; Dialectics—teach truth; Rhetoric—gives coloring to our speech; Music—sings; Arithmetic—numbers; Geometry—weighs; and Astronomy—teaches us to know the stars. 7. As the Apostle saith, so it is, viz: The invisible things of God, and Divine Order, may be seen, and understood by those things which are made, in outward creation; even his eternal power and God-head.

Words are like leaves; and where they most abound, Much fruit of sense beneath—is rarely found. False eloquence, like the prismatic glass, Its gaudy colors spreads—on every place; The face of Nature—we no more survey; All glares alike, without distinction—gay: But true expression, like th' unchanging sun, Clears, and improves, what'er it shines upon: It gilds—all objects, but it alters—none. Expression—is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent—as more suitable.

246. A Colon, (:) marks a pause of three seconds; or while one can count three, deliberately. Principles—are tested by their application; but even then, we must think, as well as feel, and ascertain the whys and wherefores. 1. Read the sacred Scriptures: they are the dictates of divine wisdom. 2. Harbor no malice in thy heart: it will be a viper in thy bosom. 3. Do not insult a poor man: his situation entitles him to our pity. 4. He, that studies only man, will get the body without the soul: he that studies only books, will get the soul, without the body: wisdom says, study both. 5. Partially deaf persons, more easily hear a moderately loud voice with a clear articulation, than a very loud one, that is rapid and indistinct: so it is with a weak voice, in addressing a large assembly.

247. COINCIDENCE. Washington—was born, Feb. 22d, 1732, was inaugurated, 1789; and his term of service expired in the 66th year of his age: John Adams was born, Oct. 19, 1735; inaugurated, 1797; term expired in the 66th year of his age: Thomas Jefferson was born, April 2d, 1743; inaugurated, 1801; term expired in the 66th year of his age: Madison was born, March 5th, 1751; inaugurated, 1809; term expired in the 66th year of his age: Monroe was born, April 24, 1759; inaugurated, 1817; term expired in the 66th year of his age: all these five presidents were men of the Revolution, and ended their term of service in the 66th year of their age.

248. BREATHING. When we sit at our ease, and are not exercising the voice, our breathing is slow and regular; and the more we speak, work, or sing, the more frequently must we inhale fresh air; because the expenditure is greater at such times: many persons fall victims to this neglect; and little is our primary instruction in reading calculated to aid us in appropriate breathing; the results of which are, exceedingly bad habits, inducing impediments in vocal efforts, disease and death. Oh, when shall we be wise, and understand these things! How hard to learn, even by experience!

Anecdote. A Mutual Mistake. Two gentlemen were riding in a stage-coach; when one of them, missing his handkerchief, rashly accused the other of having stolen it; but soon finding it, had the good manners to beg pardon for the affront; saying it was a mistake: to which the other replied, with great readiness, and kind feeling, "Don't be uneasy; it was a mutual mistake: you took me for a thief; and I took you, for a gentleman."

It is a vain attempt

To bind the ambitious and unjust, by treaties;
These—they elude—a thousand specious ways.

Proverbs. 1. Religion says—love all; and hate none. 2. Observe all those rules of politeness at home, that you would among strangers. 3. At the close of each day, carefully review your conduct. 4. Avoid unpleasant looks. 5. Be not over anxious for money. 6. Acquire the useful—first; the brilliant—afterwards. 7. A virtuous youth, will make a happy old age. 8. One ill example—spoils many good precepts. 9. It costs more to revenge injuries, than to bear them. 10. For the evidence of truth, look at the truth itself. 11. A friend is known, when needed. 12. Who robs a scholar, robs the public.

Experience. In early youth, while yet we live among those we love, we love without restraint, and our hearts overflow in every look, word and action. But when we enter the world, and are repulsed by strangers, and forgotten by friends, we grow more and more timid in our approaches, even to those we love best. How delightful to us, then, are the caresses of children! All sincerity, all affection, they fly into our arms; and then only, we feel the renewal of our first confidence, and first pleasure.

Varieties. 1. What is more revolting—than the idea of a plurality of Gods? 2. An evil habit, in the beginning, is easily subdued; but being often repeated, it acquires strength, and becomes inveterate. 3. The bee and the serpent—often extract the same juices; but, by the serpent, they are converted into poison; while by the bee, they are converted into honey. 4. He, that aims at the sun, will not hit it.—but his arrow will fly higher, than if he aimed at an object on a level with himself. 5. Is there not a place and state, for every one, and should not every one be in his proper state and place? 6. Those little words, "try," and "begin," have been great in their results: "I can't"—never did anything, and never will: "I'll try"—has done wonders. 7. The ministry of angels—is that of supplying us with spiritual reasons, truths, and love-principles, whensoever we stand in need of them.

Gold—many hunted, sweat—and bled for gold;
Waked all the night, and labored all the day:
And what was this allurement, dost thou ask?
A dust, dug from the bowels of the earth,
Which, being cast into the fire, came out
A shining thing, that fools admired, and called—
A god; and, in devout and humble plight,
Before it kneeled, the greater—to the less.
And on its altar—sacrificed ease, peace,
Truth, faith, integrity; good conscience, friends,
Love, charity, benevolence, and all
The sweet and tender sympathies of life;
And to complete the horrid—murderous rite,
And signalize their folly, offered up
Their souls, and an eternity of bliss,
To gain them—what? an hour of dreaming joy.
A feverish hour—that hastened to be done,
And ended—in the bitterness of woe.

219. A Period, (,) shows that we should pause four seconds; or while we can count four, deliberately. 1. Envy no man. 2. Know thyself. 3. Guard against idleness. 4. Vilify no person's reputation. 5. Abhor a falsehood. 6. Blessed are the poor in spirit. 7. Jesus uscept. 8. Hurt not thyself. 9. Cherish the spirit of benevolence. 10. Perform your duty faithfully. 11. Make a proper use of time. 12. Cultivate the affections. 13. Do good to all. 14. Be punctual in your engagements. 15. Love humanity. 16. Obey the commandments. 17. Live the Lord's Prayer. 18. Be holy and just. 19. Be perfect. 20. Live for immortality.

250. Pythagorus, about five hundred years before the Christian era, called the visible universe—by the very expressive Greek name, ho kosmos—THE ORDER, which we translate—the world. The Platonic school, afterwards, withdrawing attention from general nature, and fixing it on the epitome—MAX—began to call him—ho mikros kosmos, the miniature world; or, order in miniature. How much useful and instructive history there is in the origin of words! and it is gratifying to know, that these same subjects employed such minds as Plato's, more than two thousand years ago.

251. The intellectual physiognomy of Chatham—was of a severe, and commanding order; his genius—was eminently practical: and while no person—ever surpassed him, in the lofty aspiration and generous enthusiasm of patriotism, few have equalled him, in their calm and christian application. His private character,—shone with a lustre, very different from the unhealthy glare of political fame. His correspondence—presents him under an engaging aspect, and enables the reader to admire the husband and father, not less than the statesman and the orator.

Anecdote. The Far West. "Pray sir," said one gentleman to another, "Is not Indiana—the Far West?" "Oh no sir," was the reply. "Well, is not Illinois?" "Very far from it." "Surely then, when we cross the Mississippi, you are in the Far West!" "No, not exactly." "Where, then, is the Far West?" "Why sir, it is about a half a mile this side of sunset."

Beware, proud man, the first approach to crime. Indulgence—is most dangerous—nay, fatal,—Resist, or soon resistance is in vain. The first—leads to the second, then to the third The fourth succeeds, until, familiar grown With vice, we start not—at our own misdeeds. Temptation comes, so clothed in speciousness, So full of seeming, we behold her not With apprehension, till her baneful pow'r Has wrestled with our virtue: dreadful state! When vice steals in, and, like a lurking thief, Saps—the foundation of integrity.

Proverbs. 1. Put not off repentance—till another day. 2. Rashness—is the fruitful parent of misfortune. 3. Self-exaltation—is the fool's paradise. 4. Sweet is the memory—of departed worth. 5. The covetous man—is his own tormentor. 6. Avail yourself of the wisdom and experience of others. 7. Be ambitious of excelling, that you may do and get the greater good. 8. The first step to greatness is—to be honest. 9. Truth—is the basis of all excellence. 10. Unlawful love—generally ends in bitterness. 11. They that hide, can find. 12. A penny spared, is twice got.

The Gentleman and his Tenant. A COUNTRY gentleman—had an estate of two hundred pounds a year, which he kept in his own hands, till he found himself so much in debt, that he was obliged to sell one half to satisfy his creditors, and let the remainder to a farmer for one and twenty years. Before the expiration of his lease, the farmer asked the gentleman, when he came one day to pay his rent, whether he would sell the land he occupied. "Why, will you purchase it?" said the gentleman. "If you will part with it, and we can agree," replied the farmer. "That is exceeding strange," said the gentleman. "Pray, tell me how it happens, that I could not live upon twice as much land, for which I paid no rent, and that you, after regularly paying me a hundred a year for the half, are able, so soon, to purchase it." "The reason is plain," answered the farmer. "You sat still, and said, Go. I stood up, and said, Come. You lay in bed, and enjoyed your case. I rose in the morning, and minded my business."

Varieties. 1. Who should be more virtuous and intelligent, than the Teacher, who is to educate, and form characters—for time and eternity? 2. The happiness of every one—depends more on the state of his own mind, than any external circumstance: nay more than all external things put together. 3. Borrowed money—makes time short. 4. The lowest condition of life, with prudence, is better than the most exalted station, without it. 5. How absurd, to be complaining, and tormenting ourselves, for what it is impossible to avoid, or attain. 6. Pause, awhile, ye travelers on earth, and candidates for eternity, and contemplate the universe, and the Wisdom and Love of Him who made it. 7. Where there is no union with God, the only source of order, love and light, there is neither order, or love, or light, but their opposites. 8. Art—is long, life—is short.

How terrible—is passion! how our reason Falls down before it; while the tortured frame, Like a ship—dashed by fierce encountering tides, And of her pilot spoil'd, drives round and round, The sport of wind—and ware. Our passions—always fatal counsel give; Through a fallacious glass—our wrongs—appear Still greater—than they are.

252. The Interrogation, (?) indicates a pause, equal to the Colon, or Period, according to circumstances. It is generally used as a sign of asking questions: though sometimes, it is one of the strongest modes of affirmation. 1. Can you see? 2. Can you hear? 3. Can you taste? 4. Can you smell? 5. Can you feel? 6. Who are you? 7. What are you doing? 8. Where are you going? 9. What is your destiny? 10. Who made you? 11. Of what are you thinking? 12. Whom do you love?

253. Among the examples above, are, the first five questions, that are direct: because they admit the answer, yes, or no; all such interrogations require the voice to glide upward, in asking them; the last seven questions are indirect; because they do not admit the answer yes, or no; all such interrogations require the voice to glide downward, in asking them. You can test the theory thus: Can you see? Yes; or no. Who are you? Yes; or no. The former—makes sense; the latter nonsense. Can you hear? Yes. Can you taste? No. What are you doing? Yes. Where are you going? No. However, it will be seen hereafter, that the slides of the voice, up, or down, may be reversed—in every instance, and yet make good sense.

254. Direct Question in reference to our Living Temples. Is not the house, in which we live, a very curious building? Can we conceive of any form—more beautiful than the human form, when it has not been perverted, or deformed? Who knows best, we, or our Creator, what is the proper shape in which we should be? Can we mend his works? Is any thing beautiful—that is not useful? Were we not made right, and have we not, in a measure, unmade ourselves? Is not our house a very convenient one, and its furniture admirably adapted to the wants of its occupant? Would it not be well—frequently to take a view of the form, covering, apartments, furniture, employments, uses and abuses of this wonderful house of ours?

Anecdote. A Challenge. After the battle of Actium, Mark Antony—challenged Augustus,—who disarmed him in the following words. "If Antony—is weary of his life, there are other ways of despatch, besides fighting him; and for my part, I shall not trouble myself to be his executioner."

There are some—heart-entwining hours in life,
With sweet seraphic inspiration rife;
When mellowing thoughts, like music on the ear,
Melt through the soul, and revel in a tear;
And such are they, when, tranquil and alone,
We sit—and ponder—on long periods flow;
And, charmed by fancy's retrospective gaze,
Live in an atmosphere—of other days;
Till friends and faces, flashing on the mind,
Conceal the havoc—time has left behind

Proverbs. 1. Manifest no excitement, when a mistake is made. 2. Be sincere—in your professions of friendship. 3. Cultivate a pure heart, and you will have a pleasant countenance. 4. Never speak to the disadvantage of any one, unless duty requires it. 5. Avoid light and trifling conversation. 6. A civil answer, to a rude speech—costs but little, and is worth a good deal. 7. Dispel corroding care; and consider it sinful—to give way to passion. 8. Charms—strike the sight; but merit—wins the soul. 9. Persons are to be estimated, according to their goodness,—not according to their dress. 10. The sincere and candid man,—has nothing to conceal; for he speaks nothing but the truth. 11. Turn a deaf ear to angry words. 12. He who promises—runs in debt.

Laconics. We esteem most things according to their intrinsic merit; it is strange MAN should be an exception. We prize a horse for his strength and courage,—not for his furniture. We prize a man for his sumptuous palace, his great train, his vast revenue; yet these are his furniture, not his mind.

Varieties. 1. Which is the more important—and useful discovery, the balloon, or the telegraph? 2. What is the cause of sea-currents? 3. Will it take ages—to discover the truth; or ages—to acknowledge it, when it is discovered? 4. What is meant by the words, a pure state of nature? Do they not mean that state, in which the condition, circumstances, and habits of men—are in strict accordance with the laws of his nature? 5. Is not Hip-poc-ra-tes called the Father of Medicine? 6. If we are not happy, is it because our Creator has not endowed us with the capability of becoming so? 7. What is the difference—in reasoning from facts and experience, and reasoning from a mixture of truth and falsehood? Do not many—reason from the latter, instead of from the former?

THE BEACON.

The scene—was more beautiful—far to my eye
Than if day—in its pride—had arrayed it;
The land-breeze blew mild, and the azure arch'd sky
Look'd pure—as the Spirit that made it
The murmur rose soft, as I silently gaz'd
On the shadowy wave's playful motion,
From the dim distant hill, till the beacon-fire blaz'd
Like a star—in the midst of the ocean.
No longer the joy of the sailor boy's breast
Was heard in his wilful breath'd numbers,
The sea-bird—had flown to her wave-girdled nest,
The fisherman—sunk to his slumbers.
One moment I look'd—from the hill's gentle slope,
All hush'd—was the billow's commotion,
And thought—that the beacon look'd lovely as hope,
That star—on life's tremulous ocean.
The time—is long past, and the scene—is afar,
Yet, when my head—rests on its pillow,
Will memory—sometimes—rekindle the star
That blaz'd—on the breast of the billow.
In life's closing hour, when the trembling soul flies,
And death—still the heart's—last emotion,
O then—may the seraph of mercy arise!
Like a star—on Eternity's ocean.

255. The exclamation Point (!) indicates about the same length of silence, as the Interrogation: but the slide of the voice, is generally downward, from the 6th or 8th note, because there is a kind of an outflowing, and then an indrawing of the mind,—an inflowing of the affections, that give rise to this manifestation. 1. What a beautiful Lake! 2. How delightful the music is! 3. What a splendid piece of workmanship! 4. How charming is the prospect! 5. What a majestic scene! 6. How inimitable those strains are! 7. What a piece of work is man! 8. How glorious are all the works of God! 9. What splendid views of heaven! 10. How majestically—the Sun—wheels his mighty round!

256. Examples of Exclamation. 1. Fathers! Senators of Rome! the arbiters of nations! to you I fly for refuge! 2. Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought! 3. Behold the daughter of innocence! what a look! what beauty! what sweetness! 4. Behold—a great, a good man! what majesty! how graceful! how commanding! 5. O, venerable shade! O, illustrious hero! 6. Farewell! a long farewell—to all my greatness! 7. It stands—solid and entire! but it stands alone—and it stands amidst ruins! 8. I am stripped of all my honor! I lie prostrate on the earth! 9. Leave me! oh! leave me to repose! 10. Hear me, O Lord! for thy loving kindness is great!

257. Natural Theology. From the external and internal evidences afforded us, from creation, and the modes of existence, we assume, that man—is naturally a religious being: the stamp of the Deity is upon him even before his birth; and in every subsequent stage of his existence, no matter what may be his social, moral or civil condition, that stamp—remains with him. It is not to be found on the Jew and Christian only, but on all men, in all ages, climes, and conditions of life.

Anecdote. A Lawyer and Physician, having a dispute about precedence, referred the ease to Diogenes, the old philosopher; who gave judgment in favor of the Lawyer, in these words: “Let the thief go before, and let the executioner follow after.”

The rill—is tuneless—to his ear, who feels
No harmony within; the south wind—steals
As silent—as unseen—among the leaves.
Who has no inward beauty, none perceives,
Though all around is beautiful. Nay, more—
In nature's calmest hour—he hears the roar
Of winds, and flinging waves—put out the light,
When high—and angry passions meet in fight;
And, his own spirit into tumult hurled,
He makes a turmoil—of a quiet world:
The fiends of his own bosom—people air
With kindred fiends, that hunt him—to despair.

Not rural sights alone—but rural sounds
Exhilarate the spirits.

Proverbs. 1. Great designs, and small means—have been the ruin of many. 2. He, is a slave to the greatest slave, who serves none but himself. 3. Correct the errors of others, when you can, and inspire them with the love of goodness and truth. 4. It is the act of a base mind, to deceive, by telling a lie. 5. Liberality—consists less in giving profusely, than in giving judiciously. 6. The head and feet cool; the rest will take little harm. 7. We know well, only what has cost us trouble to learn. 8. “Haste not, rest not;” was the motto on Goethe's ring. 9. Keep your thoughts—close, and your coun-tenance—open, and you may go safely through the world. 10. With the humble, there is perpetual peace. 11. Long is the arm of the needy. 12. Poverty is an evil counsellor. 13. Delay—often makes one wise.

War and Truth. A wise minister would rather preserve peace, than gain a victory; because he knows that even the most successful war leaves a nation poor, and always more profligate, than before it. There are real evils that cannot be brought into a list of indemnities, and the demoralizing influence of war is not among the least of them. The triumphs of truth are the more glorious, chiefly, because they are the most bloodless of all victories, deriving their highest lustre from the saved, not from the slain.

Varieties. 1. It is the nature of truth,—never to force. 2. Is not the science of human nature, very comprehensive, as well as complicated and profound? 3. How can the mere knowledge of historical events—avail to the salvation of the soul? 4. What is meant by the martyr Stephen, seeing the HEAVENS OPENED; and, John's being in the spirit, on the Lord's day? 5. To see spiritual existences, must not the eyes of the understanding be opened? 6. There is but one law in being, which the Lord fulfilled, and went through, in the world: He passed through the whole circle—of both spiritual and natural order, and assumed all states, possible for man to be in, when in progression from the state of nature,—to that of perfect grace; and by virtue thereof, can touch us—in all states of trial, we can possibly be in.

'Tis the quiet hour—of feeling,

Now—the busy day is past,

And the twilight shadows—stealing,

O'er the world—their mantle east;

Now, the spirit, worn and saddened,

Which the cares of day had bowed,

By its gentle influence—gladdened,

Forth emerges from the cloud;

While, on Memory's magic pages,

Rise our long lost joys to light,

Like shadowy forms—of other ages,

From the oblivious breast of night;

And the loved—and lost—revisit

Our fond hearts, their place of yore,

Till we long with them to inherit

Realms above—to part—no more.

The patient mind, by yielding, overcomes.

258. The Parenthesis (—) shows, that the words included within it, must be read, or spoken, on a lower pitch, and with a quicker movement, than the other parts of the sentence; as though anxious to get through with the explanation, or illustrative matter—contained in it; and the parenthetical clause, generally, has the same slide, or inflection of voice, as the last word of the sentence, immediately preceding it. 1. An honest man, (says Mr. Pope,) is the noblest work of God. 2. Pride, (as the Scripture saith,) was not made for man. 3. The Tyrians were the first, (if we are to believe—what is told us by writers of the highest authority,) who learned the art of navigation. 4. Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law—hath dominion over a man—as long as he liveth?

259. That strong, hyperbolical manner, which we have long been accustomed to call the Oriental style of poetry, (because some of the earliest poetical productions—came to us from the East,) is, in truth, no more Oriental, than Oc-ci-den-tal; it is characteristic of an age, rather than of a country, and belongs, in some manner, to all nations, at that period, which gave rise to music and song.

260. MINERALOGY—treats of minerals; their properties, composition, classification, and uses. A mineral—is an organic natural substance, either gaseous, as air; liquid, as water; or solid, as earth and stones: it is inseparably connected with GEOLOGY, which treats of the structure of the earth, and the masses that compose it; also, of the changes it has undergone, and to which it is still exposed; while its practical importance is recognized in Agriculture, Mining, and Engineering, it ranks with Botany and Chemistry in its recondite developments, and with Astronomy—in the sublimity of its themes and results, as one of the most profound and interesting of the sciences.

Anecdote. Fashion's Sake. Lord Mansfield, being willing to save a man, who had stolen a watch, directed the jury—to bring it in value—ten pence. “Ten pence, my Lord!” said the prosecutor; “why, the very fashion of it cost fifty shillings.” His lordship replied, “Perhaps so; but we cannot hang a man for fashion's sake.”

I venerate—the pilgrim's cause,

Yet, for the red man—dare to plead:

We—bow to Heaven's recorded laws,

He—turn'd to Nature—for a creed;

Beneath the pillar'd dome,

We—seek our God in prayer;

Through boundless woods—he loved to roam,

And the Great Spirit—worshipped there.

But one, one fellow-throb with us he felt;

To one Divinity—with us he knelt—

Freedom! the self-same freedom—we adore,

Bade him—defend his violated shore.

Proverbs. 1. Discord—reduces strength—to weakness. 2. No sweet, without some sweat: no pains, without some gains. 3. Whatever you do, do it to some purpose; whether conquering, or conquered. 4. We are inclined to believe those we do not know, because they have never deceived us. 5. Gentleness—often disarms the fierce, and melts the stubborn. 6. Stake even life, if necessary, in the support of truth. 7. Listen—to the voice of experimental truth, and confide—in her opinion. 8. A good appetite—gives relish to the most humble fare. 9. There is no secret in the heart, that our actions do not disclose. 10. Where there is a will, there is a way. 11. True valor—is fire; boasting—is smoke.

The Telescope. A spectacle-maker's boy, amusing himself in his father's shop, by holding two glasses between his finger and thumb, and varying the distance, the weathercock of the church spire, (opposite them,) seemed to be much longer than ordinary, and apparently much nearer, and turned upside down. This excited the wonder of the father, and led him to additional experiments; and thence resulted that astonishing instrument, the telescope, as invented by Gal-i-le-o, and perfected by Herschell. This is only one instance, among thousands, that show great effects may result from small causes.

Varieties. 1. Is not prejudice—inveterate, in proportion to its irrationality? 2. The most delicate, and the most sensible, of all pleasures—consists in promoting the happiness of others. 3. Wit—sparkles as a meteor, and like it, is transient; but genius—shines like a splendid luminary, marking its course in traces that are immortal. 4. Men can have no principles, unless they are revealed to them by Deity. 5. Is there anything that melts—and conquers—like love? 6. Confessing a folly, or crime, is an act of judgment: a compliment—we rarely pass on ourselves. 7. Spiritual truth, is the light of heaven: the good—proper to it, is the heat, or love thereof; to be filled with both, is the perfection of life, and true salvation; conferable, only, by the Lord Jesus Christ, the giver of eternal life, and our Redeemer and Savior.

Besides school-friendships are not always to be found Though fair in promise, permanent and sound;
The most disinterested and virtuous minds,
In early years connected, time unbinds:
New situations—give a different cast
Of habit, inclination, temper, taste;
And he, that seem'd our counterpart at first,
Soon shows the strong similitude revers'd.
Young heads are giddy, and young hearts are warm,
And make mistakes—for manhood to reform.
Boys are at best, but pretty buds unblown, [known];
Whose scent and hues—are rather guess'd than
Each—dreams that each—is just what he appears,
But learns his error—in matured years,
When disposition, like a sail unfurl'd,
Shows all its rents and patches to the world.

261. The Rhetorical Pause—is dictated by the thought and feeling, and is usually addressed only to the ear; it is here indicated generally, by a dush (—), and its length—must be determined by the subject, and occasion; it is usually, however, about the length of a Semicolon, or Colon: and one thing must be distinctly observed, that the reader and speaker—is always to inhale breath—at every Rhetorical Pause, and generally, at each Grammatical Pause; if the system be relaxed, inhalation will be almost sure to take place. Indeed, one of the great secrets of reading, speaking and singing—for hours in succession, with effect, and without injurious exhaustion, consists in the proper management of the breath: not that there should be anything stiff and mechanical in the act; for all must be the result of the perfect freedom of nature.

262. The Rhetorical Pause always occurs either before or after—the important word, or words, of a sentence: if the significant word or phrase, is at the beginning, this pause is made immediately after it; but if such word or phrase, is at the end of the sentence, the pause occurs before it. The design of the pause is, in the first instance, to produce a retrospection of mind; and in the second, to excite attention and expectation. Ex. 1. Industry—is the guardian of innocence. 2. Inugery—is the garb of poetry. 3. To err—is human; to forgive—DIVINE. 4. Prosperity—gains friends; adversity—tries them. 5. Feelings—generate thoughts; and thoughts—reciprocate feelings. 6. Vanity—is pleased with admiration; Pride—with self-esteem. 7. Dancing—is the poetry of motion. 8. Some—place the bliss in action; some—in ease; Those call it pleasure; and contentment, these. 9. To hope for perfect happiness—is vain. 10. And now—abideth Faith, Hope, Charity; these three; but the greatest of these is—Charity.

263. Individuals of both sexes, often complain of a very unpleasant sensation at the pit of the stomach; some call it a “death-like feeling,” others speak of it as if “the bottom had fallen out:” one of the principal causes is a want of the proper action of the breathing apparatus: the abdominal and dorsal muscles become relaxed, by wrong positions and want of appropriate exercise and food; when their contents fall by their own weight, and the diaphragm does not, consequently, act in a healthy manner. The remedy is a return to the laws of life and being, as here exhibited.

Conscience—distasteful truths may tell,
But mark her sacred dietate—well;
Whoever—with her—lives at strife,
Loses their better friend—for life.

Proverbs. 1. Pride—is the offspring of folly, and the plague of fools. 2. A bad man's distlike, is an honor. 3. The censure—of some persons—is praise; and their praise, is condemnation—in the eyes of the world. 4. It is a base thing—to lie; truth—alone, becomes the ingenuous mind. 5. Riches—either serve or rule, every one who possesses them; and thus, they are either blessings, or *curse*s. 6. In cases where doubt exists, always lean to the side of mercy. 7. Poets—are born such; orators—are made such. 8. Malice—is a mean, and deceitful engine of mischief. 9. Nature—is superior to Art: have faith in her, and success is yours. 10. All rules and principles, to be of use, must be understood, and practiced. 11. The offender—rarely pardons. 12. Might too often makes right. 13. Truth has a good basis.

Anecdote. When the painter, Leonardi da Vinci, lay upon his death-bed, the king came to see him; and out of respect, he raised himself from the pillow; but the effort being too great, he fell back; when the king caught him, and he expired in his arms. The king was much affected with the event, and left the chamber in tears; when his nobles—endeavored to soothe him, saying,—“Consider, he was only a painter.” “Yes, yes,” replied the monarch, “I do; and though I could make a thousand—such as you, yet God alone can make such a painter, as Leonardi.”

Justice. How many tedious and ruinous law-suits—might have been avoided, had the parties concerned—patiently examined the facts, with coolness and deliberation; instead of giving way to the blindness of interest and to passion, by which mutual hatreds have been generated, or blood spilled,—when a generous search after truth, and a love of justice—would have prevented all the evil.

Varieties. 1. What is requisite—for the right formation of character? 2. The true disciples of nature—are regardless who accompanies them, provided she be the leader: for nature, like truth, is immutable. 3. There is no pride—equal to theirs, who rise from poverty—to riches; for some—have even forgotten their own relations. 4. That form of government is best, which is best adapted to the state of the people, and best administered. 5. Cyrus, when young, being asked—what was the first thing to be learned; replied,—To speak the truth. 6. The orator's field—is the universe of mind—and matter: and his subjects—all that is—and can be known—of God—and man. 7. Every aspiration, desire, and thought—is heard and accepted—in heaven, when we surrender our whole life to the Lord's government and providence.

Gather the rose-buds—while ye may,
Old Time—is still a-flying;
And that same flower, that blooms to-day,
To-morrow,—shall be dying.

264. MISCELLANEOUS EXAMPLES OF ALL THE PAUSES. The pupil must not rely too much on these external indications of silence; for they are only general rules: hence the necessity of being governed by the promptings and guidance of his own feelings and thoughts, after bringing them in subjection to goodness and truth; of which reason—always approves. 1. The ostentatious, feeble, harsh, or obscure style, is always faulty; and perspicuity, strength, neatness, and simplicity—are beauties—ever to be aimed at. 2. Be wise to-day, 'tis madness to defer; next day—the fatal precedent will plead. Thus on, till wisdom—is pushed out of life. 3. How noble 'tis, to own a fault; how generous,—and divine—to forgive it! 4. Who can forbear to smile with nature? Can the stormy passions—in the bosom roll, while every gale—is peace, and ev'ry grove—is melody?

265. 1. The evidence—that TRUTH carries with it, is superior to all argument, and miracles: and it wants neither the support, nor dreads the opposition, of the greatest abilities. 2. True modesty is ashamed to do what is repugnant to reason, and common sense; false modesty—to do what is opposed to the humor of the company; true modesty avoids whatever is criminal; false modesty—whatever is unfashionable. 3. Some—live within their means; some live up to their means—and some—live beyond their means. 4. "To what party do you belong?" said a noisy politician, to one whose soul—grasped the interests of his whole country. "To what party do I belong?" replied the patriot; "I belong to no party, but my country's party."

Punctuate the following, by reading it correctly.

There is a lady in this land
Has twenty fingers on each hand
Five and twenty on hands and feet
All this is true without deceit.

266. BOTANY—treats of plants—their structure, growth, classification, description, localities and uses. They are organized bodies, and endowed with life; but they differ from animals, in wanting sensation and voluntary motion: they differ from minerals, in possessing life; and they contain organs, by which they assimilate new matter to increase their substance, and promote their growth. The study of botany is highly interesting and useful; not only on account of the beauty and variety of plants, but of the important purposes to which they may be applied in sustaining life and curing disease: it is necessary to aid in the development of body and mind.

Anecdote. One day, when the moon was under an eclipse, she complained thus to the sun for the discontinuance of his favor; "My dearest friend," said she, "why do you not shine upon me as you used to do?" "Do I not shine upon thee?" said the sun; "I am very sure I intend it." "O no," replied the moon: "but now I see the reason; that dirty planet, the earth, has got between us."

Proverbs. 1. By deferring our repentance—we accumulate our sorrows. 2. Complaisance—renders a superior—amiable, an equal—agreeable, and an inferior—acceptable. 3. A wound given by a word, is often harder to be cured, than one made by the sword. 4. The human form is the noblest, and most perfect, of which we can conceive. 5. Intentions, as well as actions, must be good, to be acceptable. 6. Every scene in life, is a picture; of which some part is worthy of attention. 7. Receive instruction with gratitude. 8. To such as are opposed to truth, it seems harsh and severe. 9. Never reproach another for doing wrong; unless you are sure he has done it. 10. Knowledge, to be a good thing, must be rightly applied. 11. Replies—are not always answers. 12. A chaste eye—banishes evil desires. 13. Respect and contempt, spoil many a one.

Refinement. It is a doubt, whether the refinements of modern times have, or have not, been a drawback upon our happiness: for plainness and simplicity of manners have given way to etiquette, formality, and deceit; whilst the ancient hospitality has now almost deserted our land; and what we appear to have gained in head, we seem to have lost in heart.

Varieties. 1. What is the difference between the internal and external man? between an internal and external state of mind? 2. Love to God and love to man,—is the life and soul, of all sound philosophy; consequently, no one can become a philosopher, who is not a good man. 3. Riches, and cares, are generally inseparable; and whoever would get rid of one, must become divested of the other. 4. The acquirement of useful knowledge,—is often difficult and troublesome; but perseverance—will reward us for our toil. 5. If we regard our present views—as an infallible test of truth, whatever does not conform to them, we set down as false, and reject it. 6. Ignorance of a fact—may excuse; but not ignorance of the law—which every one is supposed to be acquainted with. 7. Man's will, and understanding,—are receptacles of life, not life itself; as is the reception, such is the persuasion, faith, wisdom, light, and love.

I care not, Fortune! what you me deny;
You cannot rob me of free nature's grace;
You cannot shut the windows of the sky,
Thro' which Aurora shows her bright'ning face:
You cannot bar my constant feet—to trace
The wood and lavens, by living stream at eve:
Let health my nerves and finer fibres brace,
And I their toys—to the great children leave:
Of fancy, reason, virtue—nought can me bereave.
Another day—is added to the mass
Of buried ages. Lo! the beauteous moon,
Like a fair shepherdess, now comes abroad,
With her full flock of stars, that roam around
The azure meads of heaven. And O how charmed,
Beneath her loveliness, creation looks!
Far-gleaming hills, and light-inweaving streams,
And sleeping boughs, with dewy lustre clothed,
And green-haired valleys—all in glory dressed,—
Make up the pagantry of night.

267. DELIVERY AND PAINTING. There is a striking analogy or correspondence, between painting and delivery. We have, what are called, seven primary colors, and seven pitches of sound—though strictly speaking, but three of each. Letters are like compounded paints; words like paints, prepared for use; and, when these words are arranged into proper sentences, they form pictures on the canvas of the imagination. Let the following beautiful landscape be sketched out in the mind: "On a MOUNTAIN, (stretched beneath a hoary willow) lay a shepherd swain,—and view'd the rolling billow." Now review it; and see every thing as it is—the mountain covered with trees; the shepherd, reclining under the willow tree, with his flock near by, some feeding, and some lying down; and what is he doing? Looking out upon the ocean, covered with pleasure boats, vessels, &c. In this way, you may behold, with the mind's eye, (for the mind has its eye, as well as the body), the ideas of the author; and then picture out whatever you hear and read, and give to it life, habitation, and a name; thus you will see the thoughts, receive the light, and catch, or draw out their latent heat; and having enlightened and warmed your own mind, you will read and speak from your own thoughts and feelings,—and transfer the living, breathing landscapes of your mind to others, and leave a perfect daguerreotype likeness on the retina of their mind's eye: you feel and think, and therefore speak; and thus you can memorize, so as not to forget: for you will have it by heart.

268. La Fayette. I see the marshals of Napoleon (gorged with the plunder of Europe, and stained with its blood) borne on their flashing chariot-wheels—through the streets of Paris. I see the ministers of Napoleon filling the highest posts of trust and honor—under Louis the XVIII.; and I see the friend of Washington, (La Fayette), glorious in his noble poverty, looking down from the calm and placid height of his consistency and his principles,—on their paltry ambition, and its more paltry rewards.

Anecdote. Means of Happiness. Socrates, when asked his opinion of the king of Persia, and whether he judged him happy,—replied, "he could not tell what to think of him; because, he knew not how much he was furnished with virtue and learning."

Magic, wonder-beaming eye;
In thy narrow circle—lie
All our varied hopes—and fears,
Sportive smiles—and graceful tears;
Eager wishes,—wild alarms,
Rapid feelings,—potent charms,
Wit and genius, taste and sense,
Shed through thee—their influence.

When lovers meet—in adverse hour,
'Tis like the sun-glimpse—through the shower,
A watery ray—an instant seen,
The darkly changing clouds—between.

Proverbs. 1. The act—does not constitute guilt in the eye of the law so much as the design. 2. A certain degree of modesty and reserve, in young persons, is a sure passport to the good will of their superiors. 3. The diligent and industrious—generally prosper; while the indolent—pine in want. 4. Keep your passions in subjection; for unless they obey you, they will govern you. 5. In imparting to a friend—a knowledge of our misfortunes, we often feel them lightened. 6. The body may be enslaved; but no human power can control the mind, without its consent. 7. A flowery path—is not that which conducts us to glory. 8. Let us use, not abuse—the good things of life. 9. A good reputation—is preferable to a girdle of gold. 10. Lofty towers—tumble with a tremendous crash. 11. Dig not your grave with the teeth. 12. April showers, make May flowers.

Enjoyment. When I walk the streets, I use the following natural maxim, viz. that he is the true possessor of a thing who enjoys it, and not he that owns it without the enjoyment of it; to convince myself that I have a property in the gay part of all the gilt chariots that I meet, which I regard as amusements, designed to delight my eyes, and the imagination of those kind of people, who sit in them, gaily attired, only to please me. I have a real, and they only an imaginary, pleasure from their exterior embellishments. Upon the same principle, I have discovered that I am the natural proprietor of all the diamond necklaces, the crosses, stars, brocades, and embroidered clothes, which I see at a play or birth-night, as giving more natural delight to the spectator, than to those that wear them. And I look on the beaux and ladies, as so many parquets in an aviary, or tulips in a garden, designed purely for my diversion. A gallery of pictures, a cabinet, or library, that I have free access to, I think my own. In a word, all that I desire is the use of things, let who will have the keeping of them. By which maxim I am grown one of the richest men in the world; with this difference, that I am not a prey to my own cares, or the envy of others.

Varieties. 1. Can we be responsible, without being endowed with freedom, and rationality? 2. Perfect freedom is the birth-right of man, and heaven forbid that any human authority should infringe upon it; but in the exercise of this right, let us be humble and discreet, and never do wrong. 3. If the roots be left, the grass will grow again. 4. Brutes—have a language peculiar to themselves; so have deaf and dumb persons. 5. There are merchants—with the sentiments, and abilities, of statesmen; and there are persons in the ranks of statesmen, with the conceptions and characters of peppers. 6. The natural world is a world of dreams; for nothing is—as it appears; but the spiritual world—is a world of realities, where we shall see as we are seen, and know—as we are known. 7. The granary—of all heavenly seed, is the Word of God; the ground—is our will, in which that seed must be sown.

269. This Word - Painting, being a subject of such great importance, and one that is inseparably connected with emphasis, we will dwell upon it a little longer, and apply it practically; for—unless we get into the internals of the subject, all our efforts will be nearly unavailing. A very good way to perfect ourself in this style of painting, is—to close the eyes, after having memorized the words, (or get some one to read them deliberately,) and inflix the thoughts and feelings of the author in the mind, and let there be a commingling of them with your own, in such a way, that there will be an entire re-production, and re-formation of them,—a new creation. The effect of this kind of exercise on the mind, will be like that of the warm sun, and refreshing rain, in developing and perfecting vegetation.

THUNDER STORM ON THE ALPS.

Far along

From peak to peak, the rattling crags among,
Leaps the live thunder! not from one lone cloud,
But every mountain—now, hath found a tongue,
And Jura—answers through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who called aloud.

*Thy spirit—Independence,—let me share,
Lord of the lion heart—and eagle eye!
Thy steps I follow, with my bosom bare,
Nor heed the storms that howl across the sky.*

*Tis greatly wise—to talk with our past hours,
And ask them—what report—they bore to heaven;
And how they might have borne—more welcome news;
Their answers—form—what men—experience call.*

270. CHEMISTRY—treats of the composition of all material substances, their sensible properties and relations, and the effects produced upon them—by cohesion, affinity, light, heat, and electricity. Its study—reflects light upon all these effects, and is subsidiary to the natural and medical sciences: indeed, its application extends throughout the wider range of all the physical arts; and hence, ranks among the most useful of the sciences. If the fair sex—would understand this subject, only so far as it relates to house-keeping, they would see, that there is no necessity of having poor soap, or bad bread, or of making other mistakes in their culinary preparations.

Anecdote. Mad Man. A man, who was apparently more of a wit—than a mad-man, but who, notwithstanding, was confined in a mad-house, being asked how he came there, answered—“Merely a dispute of words; I said that all men were mad; and all said I was ma!; the majority—carried the point, and here I am.”

Walls of brass—resist not

A noble undertaking,—nor can vice—

*Raise any bulwark—to make good a place,
Where virtue—seeks to enter.*

*Lovers say, the heart—hath treble wrong,
When it is barred—the aidance of the tongue.*

Proverbs. 1. He, whose expenditure is more than his income, must be poor; but he that receives more than he spends, must be rich. 2. What some speakers fail in, as to depth, they make up as to length. 3. Money, earned with little labor, is generally spent with little consideration. 4. We often lose those things that are certain, while we pursue others that are doubtful. 5. He, who knows nothing, doubts nothing. 6. Many persons feel an irreconcilable enmity—towards those whom they have injured. 7. Without sweat and labor, no work is perfected. 8. Accumulated wealth—brings care, and a thirst for increasing riches. 9. Whether in prosperity, or adversity, we should always endeavor to preserve equanimity. 10. Do not grieve for that which is irrecoverably lost. 11. Use soft words, and hard arguments. 12. A full purse never lacks friends.

Dissimulation. Dissimulation in youth, is the forerunner of perfidy in old age; its first appearance—is the fatal omen of growing depravity, and future shame. It degrades parts and learning, obscures the lustre of every accomplishment, and sinks us into contempt. The path of falsehood is a perplexing maze. After the first departure from sincerity, it is not in our power to stop; one artifice unavoidably leads on to another; till, as the intricacy of the labyrinth increases, we are left entangled in our snare.

VARIETIES.

Pain—is perfect misery, the worst of evils;
And excessive, overturns all patience.

’Tis base—to change with fortune, and deny
A faithful friend, because in poverty.

Who lives to nature,—rarely can be poor;
Who lives to fancy, never can be rich.

Music—resembles poetry; in each—
Are nameless graces, which no methods teach,
And which a master’s hand alone—can reach.

Bright-eyed fancy—hovering o’er,
Scatters—from her pictured urn,
Thoughts—that breathe, and words—that burn.

If good—we plant not, vice—will fill the place,
And rankest weeds—the richest soil—deface.
But the good man, whose soul is pure,
Unspotted, and of pardon—sure,
Looks thro’ the darkness of the gloomy night,
And sees the dawning—of a glorious light.

Would you taste the tranquil scene?

Be sure your bosom—be serene;
Devoid of hate, devoid of strife,
Devoid of all that poisons life.
And much it ’vaits you—in their place,
To graft the love—of human race.

How deep—yon azure—dyes the sky,
Where orbs of gold—unnumbered lie,
While, through their ranks, in silver pride,
The nether crescent—seems to glide!

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou, enlightened earth, so fresh and gay!
Ye hills and dales, ye rivers, woods, and plains,
And ye that live, and move, fair creatures, tell,
Tell if you can, how came I thus, how here?

271. RYTHM—poetical measure, or verse; of which there are various kinds. Prose—is man's natural language, which is rather loose and unconfined. Poetry—originates in the affections, prose in the thoughts, of the human mind; tho' some poems are occasionally prosaic, and some prose—poetic: feeling predominates in the former,—thought, in the latter. Our rules for reading and speaking are the same, whether in prose or poetry: for in all cases, the manner must be adapted to the matter; the sound to the sense: in other words, the mind's perception and feeling of the matter, must dictate the appropriate manner; "suit the action to the word, the word to the action; and o'erstep not the modesty of nature."

Yon cloud is bright, and beautiful—it floats
Alone in God's horizon; on its edge
The stars seem hung like pearls: it looks as pure
As 'twere an angel's shroud,—the white cymar
Of purity, just peeping through its folds
To give a pitying look—on this sad world.
Go visit it, and find, that all is false;
Its glories—are but fog, and its white form
Is plighted to some coming thunder-gust;—
The rain, the wind, the lightning, have their source
In such bright meetings. Gaze not at the clouds,
However beautiful. Gaze at the sky,
The clear, blue, tranquil, fixed, and glorious sky.

272. AGRICULTURE—is the art of cultivating the ground; it includes, also, the rearing and management of domestic animals; it is sometimes called Farming, and Husbandry: and, although simple in its operations, it derives great benefit from Machinery,—whence it takes its implements; from Chemistry,—whence it derives a knowledge of soils, and the means of fertilizing them; from Botany,—which teaches a knowledge of the plants—to be cultivated or destroyed; and from Zoology—which teaches the habits and peculiarities of the animals it rears, and the means of improving them for use—and profit.

Anecdote. Kosciusko, the hero of Poland, wishing to make a present to a Clergyman, sent it by a young man, and desired him to take the horse, which he himself usually rode. On his return, the young man said—he would never ride his horse again, unless he gave his purse at the same time; for, said he, "as soon as a poor man on the road takes off his hat, and asks charity, the horse immediately stops, and will not stir, till something is given the petitioner; and as I had but little money with me, I was obliged, when it was gone, to feign giving something, in order to satisfy the horse."

Cursed be your senate; cursed your constitution;
The curse of growing factions—and divisions—
Still vex your councils, shake your public safety,
And make the robes of government—you wear,
Hateful to you, as these chains are—to me.

Proverbs. 1. Truth—is but another name—for fact. 2. There is a mental, as well as civil commonwealth. 3. The end of learning, is usefulness,—not reputation. 4. Study the principles of things,—as well as their uses. 5. Common sense—which is very un-common, is the best sense in the world. 6. No one can hit a mark, without aiming at it; and skill is acquired, by repeated attempts. 7. Never do anything with indifference; and do everything as perfectly as possible. 8. Never cut out a piece of a newspaper, till you have looked on the other side. 9. In prosperity,—prepare for a change; in adversity,—hope for one. 10. Haste—is a poor apology; take time, and do your work well. 11. Personal effort—seldom fails to obtain its object. 12. Some people never have enough.

Autumn. It was a glorious day in autumn. The sky, of unsullied blue, glowed like a sapphire. The universal air—was filled with stillness. Not a breeze whispered—not a bird flapped its wing. It was the triumph of repose—when the undying energies of man—slumbered for a moment,—when even the conflict of his passions was suspended. Beautiful, melancholy autumn! whose ruddy ripeness—whispers of decay; whose richest tints—mingle with the "sear and yellow leaf," as if the lusty year—had toiled through youth and manhood for wealth, which overflows, just when waning life—indicates, that the power of enjoyment—is passing away.

Varieties. 1. What is the difference—between reading and reflection? 2. To look away from principles, and see only their application, tends to idolatry. 3. Suspicion is the effect—of the association of ideas—misdirected by the imagination; it never exists—without a shade of insanity.

Tho' deep, yet clear; tho' gentle, yet not dull;
Strong, without rage,—without o'erflowing—full.

5. In what manner—is uniformly in events—depending, apparently, on contingent circumstances, to be accounted for? 6. Only by appealing to first principles—can we recover, or maintain—the spirit and essence, of genuine wisdom, and intelligence. 7. The greatest degree—of self-abasement, if real, is the nearest approach to the Divine Presence.

Nay, shrink not—from the word "Farewell,"

As if 'twere Friendship's final knell:

Such fears—may prove but vain:

So changeful—is life's fleeting day,

Whene'er we sever, Hope may say,

We part, to meet again.

Even the last parting—earth can know,
Brings not unutterable woe

To souls, that heavenward soar;

For humble Faith, with steadfast eye,

Points to a brighter world on high,

Where hearts, that here—at parting sigh,

May meet,—to part no more.

Duties—are ours; consequences—are God's.

273. The three philosophical divisions of Poetry (as well as of Prose) in relation to the mind, are—RELIGIOUS, having reference to the supreme Being, and what is above us in the scale of creation; the SOCIAL and CIVIL, or middle; what is around us, and within, relating to the great family of man; and the external, which refers, principally, to the kingdom of Nature, which is below us; viz. the animal, vegetable, and mineral: (do not include mankind in the animal kingdom; they are human; it is sensualism which has degraded man to rank with animals.) The common divisions of Poetry are—Pastoral, Lyric, Didactic, Satire, Sonnets, Descriptive, Epic, Tragic, and Comic; to which some add, Sacred, Classic, Romantic, Elegiac, Mythologic, Eclogue, Ballad, and Epitaph.

274. Management of the Breath. From what we have said, you see the importance of attending to this subject. Very few persons—breathe sufficiently often, when reading, speaking, or singing. All the directions the author has seen on this subject—are at variance with truth and nature. There are a few instances, when a long breath is necessary; but they are very rare. To acquire a long breath, exercise on all the difficulties of respiration,—and pursue a similar course for strengthening a weak voice; also, practice long quantily, walking up hill, and running, when reclining. In the following, breathe at least once, while reading each period. “He died young, (breathe,) but he died happy. His friends have not had him long, (breathe,) but his death—(breathe) is the greatest trouble and grief, (breathe,) they ever had. He has enjoyed the sweets of the world—(breathe,) only for a little while, (breathe,) but he never tasted its bitters.” The writer is aware of being, in this respect, in opposition to authorities; but he cannot be influenced by that, so long as he is persuaded that truth and nature are with him. If one does not breathe sufficiently often, he will be almost sure to speak too rapidly: and, as the object of Elocution is—to convince and persuade, how can one expect to do this, if he does not give his hearers time to think, or reason, about what he says? How can a jury—keep pace with a lawyer, whose language rides post-haste? If his reason, and arguments, are hurled upon the ear, like flashes of lightning upon the eye, how can they be remembered, or produce the intended effect? If one does not breathe at the proper times and places, the sense is not fully conveyed, and the lungs are injuriously affected. Too unfrequent breathing, and rapid speaking, must be avoided; but beware of the opposite extreme, unless you wish to lull your hearers to sleep.

Ask of mother earth—why oaks—were made—
Taller and stronger—than the weeds they shade.

Proverbs. 1. Never begin things, and then leave them unfinished. 2. Have a place for every thing: and when you have used it, put it back again. 3. Proverbs—bear age; and he, who would do well, may see himself in them, as in a looking-glass. 4. Politeness—costs nothing, and may do much good. 5. Tediousness—is often fatal to our object. 6. Where there is no hope, there is no endeavor. 7. Unequal friendships—are easily dissolved. 8. Sloth—consumes faster than labor. 9. Lost time—is never found again; and time enough yet, is always little enough. 10. Industry—payz debts; despair—increases them. 11. Troops of furies—march in the drunkard's triumph. 12. Success—consecrates the foulest crimes.

Anecdote. The Boys and Frogs. L'Es-trange tells us, in his fables, that a number of boys were one day watching frogs at the side of a pond; and that when any of them put their heads above the water, the boys pelted them down again, with stones. One of the frogs, appealing to the humanity of the boys, made this striking observation,—“Children, you do not consider, that though this may be sport to you, it is death to us.”

Folly and Wisdom. Many parents—labor hard, and live sparingly, that they may give their children a start in the world: but setting a son afloat with money left to him—is like tying bladders under the arms of one who cannot swim; and ten to one he will drown; but teach him to swim, and he will never need bladders: give a child a good education, and it will give him such a start—as will secure usefulness and victory in the race he is to run.

Varieties. 1. Is it possible—for a created being to merit any thing—at the hands of God? 2. The instincts of animals—are their laws of life; they seem to be sensible of their ends of being, and the means of attaining them. 3. Truth—is that resemblance, to, or conformity with Nature, that is presented to the mind, by the relation of ideas, whether simple, or complex. 4. There is a divinity—shapes our ends, rough hew them as we will. 5. 'Tis better, to be lowly born, and range with humble lives—in content, than to be pricked up—in glittering grief, and wear a golden sorrow. 6. Whatever is seen, by the bodily eye, or perceived by the outward senses, is but an effect—from the spiritual world, and a true representative of some principle therein, and proper to it; for that world is in the human soul,—and mind.

I ramble—by the evening sea

The light-house—glimmering from afar,

And fleecy clouds—are scouring free

O'er rising moon, and twinkling star;

In distance—floats the wailing sail,

Or brightly gleams the plashing oar,

And mingles—with the shining gale

The billow—murmuring on the shore;

But one thing wants the wanderer there—

A kindred soul, the scene to share.

275. Emphasis. This is a very important part of our subject; and unless the pupil is certain, that he perfectly understands Accent, he is advised to review it again. Accented syllables, are to other syllables, in the same word, what emphatic syllables, are to words in the same sentence,—hence, it may be seen, that as the idea—is always associated with the accented vowel, and changes, when the seat of accent is changed; as in Au-gust, and au-gust; so, the mind's eye—always accompanies the emphatic word. Ex. Doctor Johnson, (says Cicero,) was a great orator. Thus emphasised, we make Cicero say, that Dr. Johnson—was a great orator. Corrected, thus: Dr. Johnson says—Cicero was a great orator. Practice on this sentence, till every thing appertaining to correct emphasis is familiar. All the words in this book, printed in different type, are more or less emphatic: and some are emphatic that are in the common type.

276. Emphasis—is an increase of accent on the accented vowels of important words, the more perfectly to convey the sense of the author. There are only two ways of making it: which are the same as in accent; viz: by stress and quantity. First, by stress: Ex. 1. The difference—between what is true—and false, good—and evil, is very great. 2. Some reports—are true: others—are false. 3. Truth tells us, that certain affections—are evil: but False says, they are good. 4. Good men—love, and practice, what is good and true; but wicked men—love, and practice, what is false, and evil. 5. Heaven—consists of all that is good and true; but Hell—consists of all that is false, and evil.

277. Horticulture—or Gardening, is the art of preparing and cultivating gardens, including pleasure-grounds, and ornamental shrubbery: its close relation to Agriculture, renders it difficult to distinguish between them. As involving principles of taste, and elements of beauty, it may be classed with the Fine Arts; but its connection with the Useful Arts—presents a stronger relation; and, whether considered in reference to usefulness, or ornament, it deserves much attention, and exerts a salutary influence over its votaries.

Anecdote. Working a Passage. An Irishman, having applied to work his passage on a canal-boat, and being employed to lead the horses on the tow-path; on arriving at the place of destination, declared he would sooner go on foot, than work his passage in America.

Honest index—of the soul,
Nobly scorning all control,
Silent language—ever flowing,
Every secret thought avowing,
Pleasure's seat,—Love's favorite throne,
Every triumph—is thy own.

Proverbs. 1. Every act of violence—leads to difficult results. 2. The house of a true friend—is always a sure asylum. 3. It is sweet—to soothe the wretched, and mitigate their misfortunes. 4. He has done the mischief, and I bear the blame. 5. It is common to fools—to mention their neighbor's faults; while they are forgetful of their own. 6. Endeavor to conquer adverse circumstances; and not submit to them. 7. It is wise—to derive knowledge, even from an enemy. 8. He, who flies from judgment, confesses the crime imputed to him. 9. We are generally willing to believe—what we wish to be true. 10. Let justice be done, tho' the heavens fall. 11. The more riches a fool has, the foolisher he is. 12. When the heart—is past hope, the face—is past shame. 13. Despair—has ruined many a one.

Philosophy of Mind. No philosophy of the mind can be valuable, that does not propose an inquiry into the connection between mind and matter. Attention to the subject of our own consciousness, alone, excludes the possibility of their being well observed, because the conditions of their being well seen—are neglected. That there is a direct connection between mind and matter, the soul and body, is an indisputable fact; and it is perfectly idle, to pretend to examine the qualities of the former, without reference to the latter. The comprehension of the action of mind and the reaction of matter, involves the true principles of Intellectual Philosophy and Psychology.

Varieties. 1. Which is the most desirable, to know and understand much; or, to make a right use of what we know and understand! 2. The Jew—asks a sign; the Greeks—seek after wisdom. 3. Do not the shadows of great thoughts, sometimes fall on our minds?

Who friendship—with a knave has made,
Is judged a partner—in the trade;
'Tis thus, that on the choice of friends,
Our good, or evil name—depends.

5. Envy no man's good, or truth: seek not to be him. If less than thee, give that which he asketh of thee, at all times; if more than thee, envy not: neither seek to depreciate; and beware of rashly condemning what is above thee,—lest thou materially hurt thyself. 6. We may as soon take fire—into the bosom, without being burned, or touch tar, without being defiled, as to frequent and delight in—bad company, without a stain upon our moral character.

MY SISTER.

Mine eyes—have seen the beautiful,
Mine ears—have heard their thrilling voice,
My heart—has felt their potent rule—
The fears of hope, the hope of joys—
But never—has my sight approved
A fairer—than my sister—no!
None other sound—so much hath moved
As, her "dear brother," spoken low.

278. INVOLUNTARY EFFORTS. Let no one imagine, that it is the design of this system to make arbitrary readers, and speakers; far from it: if the system were not founded in NATURE, such might be the result. By making use of the principles here developed, we return to truth and nature; provided we have wandered from them; consequently, the effort becomes involuntary: as was the case with the whistling of little Jimmy, in school; who, when his teacher was about to correct him, exclaimed, "No, no; it was not I that whistled, it whistled itself." No one can be a good reader, or speaker, till the effort becomes involuntary; he must will, and it shall be done. Unfortunately, some think they must do some great thing; whereas, they have only to wash, and be clean.

279. EPIC, or heroic poetry, has for its subject the exploits of some hero, or heroes, of national celebrity; Lyric poetry is designed to be set to music, as psalms, hymns, odes and songs; Elegiac poetry involves solemn, or mournful subjects; Epitaphs are inscriptions on tomb-stones; Pastoral poetry treats of rural affairs, and the social affections; it is appropriate to shepherds; Didactic poetry is designed to convey instruction; Satyrical poetry is for reproving the vices, errors and follies of the world, by holding them up to ridicule; Descriptive poetry describes interesting subjects, mental or natural; and Romantic poetry has for its subjects, tales, romances, and novels, probable, or supernatural.

280. CAUSE AND EFFECT. Such are the defects of our education, that we are brought up almost as ignorant of our bodies and minds, as of the man in the moon: the consequence is, we are imposed upon by the shoe-maker, the tailor, the mantua-maker, the carpenter and joiner, the cabinet-maker, the mill and baker, the cook and the washer, and by almost every body else: we are a race of abusers of one another. When we get a pair of shoes, the first question is, how well do they look! So also of the coat and dress, the house, the chair, the flour, and bread, &c., &c. Oh, when shall we be wise, and understand the things that so nearly concern our temporal welfare? Having eyes, we see not aright; having ears, we hear wrong: our feelings, taste, and smell—betray us, because they are perversed. The enemy comes in upon us like a flood, and who will lift up a standard against him?

GENERATIONS OF MAN.

Like leaves on trees—the race of man is found,
Now, green in youth, now, withering on the ground.
Another race the following spring supplies;
They fall successive, and successive rise:
So—generations—in their course decay,
So—flourish these, when those—are passed away.

Proverbs. 1. It is well not only to seem pure; but, to be pure. 2. Aim at desert, rather than re-ward. 3. If you are in a thriving way, stick to it, and let well enough, alone. 4. Trifles—often decide much—concerning the character of a person. 5. Believe yourself capable of learning what others have learned. 6. Avoid all extremes; and live, and act, in the golden medium. 7. The louded tree—always tends with its fruits; as virtu—stoops beneath humility. 8. Without frugal, y, none can be rich; and with it—few can be poor. 9. The used key—is always bright. 10. Man is a being who makes bargains; one dog never exchanges bones with another dog. 11. You can do it, if you only think so, and try. 12. Quick believers—need broad shoulders.

Anecdote. New Character. Lord Hardy, who was so much addicted to the bottle, as to be always under the influence of liquor, previous to a masquerade night, inquired of Fool, "what new character he ought to appear in?" "New character," said the other,—"suppose you go sober, my lord." He took the hint of the comedian, and actually reformed.

Industry. If industry is no more than habit, 'tis at least an excellent one. "If you ask me, which is the real hereditary sin of human nature, do you imagine I shall answer pride, or luxury, or ambition, or egotism? No; I shall say—indolence. Who conquers indolence, will conquer all the rest." Indeed, all good principles must stagnate, without mental activity.

Varieties. 1. A prime minister—was asked, how he could perform such a vast amount of business, and yet, have so much leisure? He replied, I do every thing at the time. 2. Would wings—be folded in the worm, if they were not one day to enable it to fly? 3. The perfection of religion and science—will be united; their sphere of operation ascertained, and their periods of vicissitudes known in that better age, which is approaching.

Let fools—the studious despise;
There's nothing lost, by being wise.

Whatever perils—may alarm us,
Kind words—will never harm us.

6. Pure, and undefiled religion, is the sheet-anchor of happiness, the perfection and glory of human nature; its essence—is a conscience void of offence toward God, and man. 7. There is a providence in every pulsation, and in all the particulars that concern it: as the sun—never ceases to shine, so the Lord—never ceases to bless.

There is a voice—I shall hear no more—
There are tones, whose music, for me, is o'er,
Sweet as the odors of spring were they,—
Precious and rich—but, they died away;
They came like peace to my heart and ear—
Never again will they murmur here;
They have gone—like the blush of a summer morn,
Like a crimson cloud—through the sunset borne.

281. EMPHASIS. Words are emphatic, when opposition is expressed, or understood; that is, when our words are contrasted, and when we wish to enforce our ideas, so as to produce their desired effects. As, Oratory—involves feelings, thoughts and words; so, does it also involve ends, or purposes, causes, and effects; beyond which, human minds cannot travel. We may illustrate emphasis, by what is called lever-power; the resistance to be overcome, or the effect to be produced; the lever as a medium, and the weight: thus, I will, or desire, to accomplish a certain object: here, is the region of ends, or purposes; then, I devise ways and means, and determine how it is to be done; here, is the region of causes: and, finally, I put the purpose in operation, through the means, and thus accomplish my object; which, of course, is the region of effects. Here is the philosophy of oratory.

282. EXAMPLES OF EMPHASIS BY STRESS.

1. It is not so easy to hide our faults, as to confess—and avoid them. 2. Never attempt to raise yourself, by depreciating the merits of others. 3. As fools—make a mock at sin, so do the ignorant—often make a mock at knowledge. 4. They are generally most ridiculous themselves, who see most to ridicule in others. 5. Wherever education is neglected,—depravity, and every kind of action, that degrades mankind, are most frequent. 6. The first three volumes; not, the three first volumes; there is only one—first. 7. The first three, and the last two verses; not, the three first, and two last. 8. To be truly—happy, man must be good, and renounce such enjoyments as are grounded in the love of evil. 9. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. 10. Flesh—and blood—cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

283. RULE. Emphasize the important word, or words, with such a degree and kind of stress, or expulsive prolongation of sound, as to convey the entire sense and feeling, in the best manner, and give each idea its relative importance. Example and definition. “Emphasis—is the index of my meaning, and shows more exactly, what I wish the hearers to attend to—particularly.” Indeed, it is to the mind what the finger is to the eye: when we wish a person to see any thing, we naturally point to it: thus, are the manifestations of the mind made by the emphasis, or pointing of the voice.

They are sleeping! Who are sleeping?

Mortals, compassed round with woe—

Eyelids, wearied out with weeping,

Close for very weakness now:

And that short relief from sorrow,

Harassed nature—shall sustain,

Till they wake again—to-morrow,

Strengthened—to contend with pain!

Proverbs. 1. We must submit to authority, till we can discover, or see—reasons. 2. Be not satisfied with the results and applications of knowledge; but search for its fountains. 3. Youth—is not a time to cast away stones, but to gather them. 4. Instead of naturalizing nature, we should naturalize art. 5. The understanding—is a refining vessel, in which knowledge is purified. 6. Endeavor to acquire such knowledge, as will enable you to judge correctly yourself. 7. Time—destroys the speculations of man, but confirms the judgments of Nature. 8. No evil propensity is so powerful, but that it may be subdued, by proper means. 9. No one is so great, or so small, but that he is capable of giving, or receiving—benefits. 10. Be civil—to the great—but intimate—with the good. 11. No religion—is better than an unnatural one. 12. Immoderate sorrow—is a species of suicide. 13. Pay what you owe. 14. Great thieves punish little ones. 15. The absent party is always faulty.

Anecdote. If a private gentleman, in Cheshire England, about the year 1730, had not been overturned in his carriage; it is possible, that the United States, instead of being a free Republic, might have remained a dependent colony: that gentleman—was Augustus Washington, who was thus thrown out of his carriage, into the company of a lady, who afterwards became his wife, emigrated with him to Virginia, and, in 1732, became the mother—of General Washington.

Laconics. When we see birds, at the approach of rain, anointing their plumage with oil—to shield off the drops, should it not remind us, when the storms of contention threaten us, to apply the oil of forbearance, and thus—prevent the chilling drops from entering our hearts?

Varieties. 1. Did mankind fall suddenly, or by degrees? 2. While freedom—is true to itself, every one becomes subject to it; and even its adversaries are instruments in its hands. 3. The preservation of health—depends, principally, on proper diet, early retiring, and early rising, temperance in eating, and drinking, proper exercise, and perfect cleanliness. 4. By a vicious action, we injure our mind, as we should our body, by drinking poison, or inflicting a wound upon it. 5. What is liberty? Willing, thinking, speaking, and doing—what we understand; provided, we violate no law, or principle. 6. Mental pleasures—never cloy; unlike those of the body, they are increased by repetition, approved by reason, and strengthened by enjoyment. 7. Evil action, contrivance and speech, is but the manifestation of the nature of evil; and that it should be made manifest, is consistent with divine intentions.

Freedom—is

The brilliant gift of heaven; 'tis reason's self,
The kin—to Deity.

284. EMPHASIS. There are only two ways of making emphasis, but as many ways of exhibiting it, as there are pitch, qualities, and modifications of voice—in Speech and Song: all of which are very simple, and a knowledge of them easily acquired, by the persevering student. In every sentence, there is a word, or words, on which the sense depends, as the body—on the heart; the voice and gestures, only, can exhibit it. Emphasis, not only illustrates, but often amplifies the sense of the author; and that is the best emphasis, which does this the most effectively; indeed, there are times when, through the emphasis, one may make words mean—more than they were designed to mean by the author.

285. EMPHASIS by expulsive stress. 1. He who cannot bear a joke—should never give one. 2. Avoid a slanderer, as you would a scorpion. 3. A wager—is a fool's argument. 4. He that is past shame, is past hope. 5. What is worth doing at all, is worth doing well. 6. Men of principle, ought to be principal men. 7. Aim at nothing higher, till you can read and speak, deliberately, clearly, and distinctly, and with proper emphasis: all other graces will follow. 8. The head, without a heart, is like a steam engine, without a boiler. 9. As love—thinks no evil, so envy—speaks no good. 10. Variety, delights; and perfection, delights in variety.

286. MUSIC. The cultivation, and frequent practice of music, in schools of every grade, will have a strong, and decidedly beneficial influence on the habits of the pupils. By using the same words, and singing the same pieces in concert, their thoughts will be directed in the same channel, and their affections elevated together; and they will naturally be led into closer association and sympathy with each other. Well chosen music may be made an efficient auxiliary, guiding and controlling the feelings and actions in the school-room, and contribute essentially, to the proper management of its concerns. It was in accordance with this principle, that a certain poet wisely said, "Let me make the songs of the nation, and I care not who makes its laws."

287. GEOGRAPHY—comprises a general description of the earth; and, especially of the nations, by which it is inhabited, in reference to their position and extent; their productions and resources; their institutions and improvements; their manners and customs; including the subject of statistics, voyages, and travels. It is a term, that admits of almost indefinite extension; for in describing a nation, allusion must be made to its language, laws, religion, arts, and literature; and in treating of the earth, and its productions, we may include the whole range of the physical sciences.

True love—is never idle.

Proverbs. 1. It is a fraud—to conceal fraud. 2. Never attempt to do two things—at once. 3. He, labors in vain, who endeavors to please every body. 4. To the resolute and persevering—nothing is difficult. 5. Thieves—are game for the penitentiary, and often, for the galloes. 6. Kindness—begets kindness, and love—begets love. 7. The drop—hollows the stone, not by its force, but by falling often on the same spot. 8. A man who aspires to be an orator, must study by night, as well as by day. 9. There is no sauce equal to a good appetite. 10. To wicked persons—the virtue of others—is always a subject of envy. 11. A man would not be alone, even in paradise. 12. Weigh right, if you sell dear.

Anecdote. Dr. Johnson—observed to Macklin, in a sneering manner, that literary men—should converse in the learned languages; and immediately addressed the dramatist in Latin; after which, Macklin—uttered a long sentence in Irish. The Doctor again returned to the English tongue, saying, "You may speak very good Greek; but I am not sufficiently versed in that dialect—to converse with you fluently."

Of Dress, &c. A creature, who spends its time in dressing, gaming, prating, and gadding, is a being originally, indeed, of the rational make; but who has sunk itself beneath its rank, and is to be considered, at present, as nearly on a level with the monkey-species.

Varieties. 1. What was the design of God, in making man? 2. How absurd, to have half a dozen children, with different dispositions, and capabilities, and yet, give them all—the same education! 3. Are not bigotry, and intolerance—as destructive to morality, as they are to common sense? 4. Observations, made in the cloister, or in the desert, will generally be as obscure—as the one, and barren—as the other; to become orators, or painters, we must study originals. 5. Which side of a pitcher has the handle? The outside, of course. 6. If a book really needs the patronage of a great man; it is a bad book; and if it be a good book, it does not need it. 7. To sow the seeds of order—we must be just; and so, also, to water them; but beware that self—enter not into the action.

Before the gate there sat,
On either side, a formidable shape.
The one seemed scamander—to the waist, and fair;
But ended foul, in many a scaly fold,
Voluminous and east;—a serpent arm'd
With mortal stings.

The other shape,
If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none,
Or substance might be call'd, that shadow seem'd
For each seem'd each, black it stood as night,
Fierce as ten furies,—terrible as hell,
And shook a dreadful dart.

You think this cruel; take it for a rule,
No creature—smarts so little—as a fool.

288. Remember, that Emphasis—is to words, in a sentence, what accent is to letters or syllables, in a word; and, as proper accent—on a right vowel, will impart an impetus to the voice, in going through the word; so, true emphasis on the same, will give an impetus in delivering the sentence, so as to ultimate the end you have in view. Again, the length of long vowel sounds, in emphatic words, is, to the same vowels, in accented words, what accented long ones are, to unaccented long ones: similar observations might be made in reference to force—on emphatic short vowels, and accented and unaccented short ones.

289. The various effects, produced by changing the seat of Emphasis, from one word to another, may be seen in the following sentence, of emphatic memory; provided it be read according to the notation. “Will you ride to town to-day?” That is: will you ride, or will you not? “Will you ride to town to-day?” That is: will you ride, or will you send some one. “Will you ride to town to-day?” That is: will you ride, or walk? “Will you ride to town to-day?” That is: will you ride to town, or will you ride somewhere else? “Will you ride to town to-day?” That is: will you ride to town to-day, or to-morrow; or, next week? By using other modifications of voice, as many shades of meaning may be given, even to this short sentence, as there are letters in it.

290. APPLICATION. It is incredible, how much may be accomplished by diligence, and industry. The present state of the world, enlightened by the arts and sciences, is a living proof, that difficulties, seemingly insuperable, may finally be overcome. This consideration ought to stimulate us to industry and application. We do not know our own strength, till we try it; nor to what extent our abilities will carry us, till we put them to the test. Those who want resolution, often desist from useful enterprises, when they have more than half effected their purposes: they are discouraged by difficulties and disappointments, which ought rather to excite their ardor, and cause them to redouble their efforts to succeed.

Anecdote. While Athens—was governed by the thirty tyrants. Socrates, the philosopher, was ordered to assist in seizing one Leon, a man of rank and fortune, whom they determined to put out of the way, that they might enjoy his estate; but Socrates positively refused: saying, “I will not willingly assist—in an unjust act.” “Dost thou think,” (said one of them,) “to talk in this high tone, and not to suffer?” “Far from it,” replied he; “I expect to suffer a thousand ills; but none so great—as to do unjustly.”

Proverbs. 1. Wisdom—excelleth folly, as much as light excels darkness. 2. Opinion—is free; and conduct alone—amenable to the law. 3. Some—affect to despise—what they do not understand. 4. In trying to avoid one danger, we sometimes fall into another. 5. Decency—is the natural characteristic of virtue, and the deceptive coloring of vice. 6. Never despair; speak the commanding word, “I WILL,” and it is done. 7. Never chase a lie; for if you keep quiet, truth—will eventually overtake it. 8. A punctual man, is rarely a poor man; and never—a man of doubtful credit. 9. Persons of fashion, starve their happiness, to feed their vanity; and their love, to feed their pride. 10. There is a great difference—between repeating a maxim, or proverb, and a practical observance of it. 11. Diseases—are the interest of sensual pleasures. 12. The half is often better than the whole. 13. Justice—should rule over all.

Bigots. Bigots, who are violent, positive, and intolerant, in their religious tenets, ought to feel very much humbled, when they reflect, that they would have been equally so for any other religion, had it been the religion of their parents, or of the country in which they had been born and educated.

Varieties. 1. Why is a tale-bearer—like a brick-layer? Because he raises stories. 2. When you have nothing to say, say nothing; for a weak defence—strengthens your opponent: and silence—is better than a bad reply. 3. We might enjoy much peace, and happiness, if we would not busy ourselves, with what others say and do. 4. Never think of yourself, when reading, speaking, or singing; but of your subject; and avoid an artificial, and grandiloquent style of delivery. 5. It is not enough—to be left to the tuition of Nature, unless we know what lessons she teaches. 6. Morals—too often come from the pulpit, in the cold abstract; but men smart under them when good lawyers are the preachers. 7. When we become perfectly rational, and act wholly from ourselves—in consequence of it, we are accountable for all our actions, and they are then imputed to us, if evil,—but not before.

Where the gentle streamlets flow,
Where the morning dew-drops glow,
Where the zephyrs—wing their flight,
In the cool and welcome night,
Whispering through the fragrant grove
To the heart, that “God is love,”
Where the light cloud skims the sky,
Worship! “God is passing by!”

Hoary forest, rugged rock,
Roaring torrents, earthquake's shock,
Mighty tempests, lightning's glare,
Ocean, raging in despair,
And the desert—lone and drear,
Wake the soul of man to fear;
And when thunder rends the sky,
Tremble! “God is passing!”

291. EMPHASIS. If your articulation, and pronunciation, be clear and correct, and you are free from all unnatural tones, and other bad habits, nothing can prevent your succeeding in this important art, if you perfect yourself in Emphasis: hence, the reason of dwelling on the subject so long, and of giving such a variety of examples. But remember; that books, rules, teachers, or all combined, cannot make orators of you, without you throw your whole heart and soul into the exercises, and let your zeal be according to knowledge. Become independent of your book, and speak from memory, as soon as possible; then, you will be left to the promptings and guidance of your own mind, and become free.

292. 1. Men live, and prosper, but in mutual trust, and confidence of one another's truth. 2. Those, who are teaching our youth—to read with science and effect, are doing much to increase the power, and extend the influence—of standard authors.

Peace—is the happy, natural state of man;

War—his corruption, and disgrace.

To native genius—would you prove a friend!

Point out his faults—and teach him how to mend.

Let us

Act with prudence, and with manly temper,

As well as manly firmness;

'Tis God-like magnanimity—to keep,

When most provoked, our reason—calm, and clear.

Notes. The ancients very properly called man a micro-cosm, or little world. But what were this world—without a sun, to impart to it light and heat? Of what use the body—without the soul? Of what use the house, without the inhabitant? and of what use words, without thought and feeling? And of what use are all these, if they cannot be made manifest? The body—is the mind's servant, and depends on its care, as the mind itself does on the Father of mind. Body, and soul—are best taken care of, when both are minded together.

293. ARCHITECTURE—teaches the art of building; and is one of the most useful, as well as ancient, of all the arts: it demands much more attention, than it has ever received; especially, in this country: and many—would save time, labor and money, and have better houses, as to comfort and appearance, if they would make themselves acquainted with this important art. Most persons will find it much to their benefit, to call upon an architect, when about to erect a building of importance.

Anecdote. King James I., of England, went out of his way one day, to hear a noted preacher. The clergyman, seeing the king enter, left his text—to declaim against swearing; for which vile practice—the king was notorious. After service, the king thanked him for his sermon; and asked him, what connection swearing had with his text. The minister replied, "Since your majesty came out of your way, thro' curiosity, I could not, in compliance, do less than go out of mine—to meet you."

Proverbs. 1. Temperance—and intemperance—reward, and punish themselves. 2. Riches—are servants to the wise,—but tyrants to fools. 3. None can be great, who have ceased to be virtuous. 4. Money—does no good, till it is distributed. 5. If you have one true friend, think yourself happy. 6. Silks, and satins, often put out the kitchen fire. 7. Hunger—looks into the working-man's house; but dare not enter. 8. When the well is dry, people know the worth of water. 9. Business—makes a man, as well as tires him. 10. For the evidence of truth, look at the truth itself. 11. Better go away longing, than loathing. 12. Of saving—cometh having. 13. God—never made a hypocrite.

Reading, Writing, and Speaking. Habits of literary conversation, and still more, habits of extempore discussion in a popular assembly, are peculiarly useful in giving us a ready and practical command of our knowledge. There is much good sense in the following aphorism of Bacon: "Reading makes a full man, writing a correct man, and speaking a ready man."

Varieties. 1. Through an affected contempt—for what some call little things, many remain ignorant—of what they might easily know. 2. A harmless hilarity, and buoyant cheerfulness—are not unfrequent concomitants of genius; and we are never more deceived, than when we mistake gravity—for greatness, solemnity—for science, and pomposity for erudition. 3. It is better to have recourse to a quack, who can cure our disease, tho' he cannot explain it, than to one who can explain, but cannot cure it. 4. Early rising—not only gives us more life, in the same number of years, but adds to the number; and not only enables us to enjoy more of existence, in the same measure of time, but increases also their measure. 5. For his honesty, there was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas, that grew the more, by reaping. 6. Let us admire the results of truth, while we ascend to the source of truth. 7. Look first inwardly, for the coming of the Lord, and of his kingdom; and when certainly found there, then look in outward nature, for a harmony agreeing with it; but not before.

Tell me not, in mournful numbers,

Life—is but an empty dream!

For the soul is dead, that slumbers,

And things are not—what they seem.

Life is real! Life is earnest!

And the grave—is not its goal;

Dust thou art, to dust returnest,

Was not spoken—of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,

Is our destined end or way;

But to act, that each to-morrow

Finds us farther—than to-day.

Let us, then, be up and doing,

With a heart for any fate;

Still achieving, still pursuing,

Learn to labor, and to wait.

294. EMPHASIS—is sometimes exhibited by changing the seat of accent. 1. What is done, cannot be undone. 2. If he did not do it directly, he did it indirectly. 3. There are probably as many invisible as visible things. 4. Did he act honestly, or dishonestly? 5. There is a difference between giving, and for-giving. 6. Does he speak distinctly, or in-distinctly? 7. Better be untaught than ill-taught; and better be alone, than in bad company. 8. He that ascended, is the same as he that descended. 9. Pure religion raises men above themselves; irreligion—sinks them to the brute. 10. Similitude—joins; dissimilitude—separates.

295. EMPHASIS—by changing the seat of accent, in words of the same structure, and of different structure, to convey the full meaning. 1. To do, and to un-do—is the common business of the world. 2. Reason, truth, and virtue—are the proper measures of praise, and dis-praise. 3. Mind, and voice—act, and re-act upon one another. 4. We may have sen-sibility, without manifesting ir-ritability. 5. Some things are con-venient; while others are in-convenient. 6. It is necessary to observe the division, and the sub-division. 7. In the suitableness or un-suitableness, in the proportion or dis-proportion, which the desire bears to the cause, and the object, consists the propriety, or im-propriety, the de-cency, or in-decency—of the consequent action.

296. DYSPEPSIA. Many persons of the present day do not chew their food like a man, but boll it whole, like a boa-constrictor: they neither take the trouble to dissect, nor the time to masticate it. It is no wonder they lose their teeth, for they rarely use them; and their power of digestion, for they exhaust it by overeating. They load their stomachs, as a drayman does his cart, as full as it will hold, and as fast as they can pitch it in; and then complain that their load is too heavy.

297. ZO-OI-O-GY. Almost every child—is a naturalist: hence, among the earliest plays of childhood, the observation of the habits of different animals, holds a prominent place. How delighted are they with dogs, cats, calves, lambs, sheep, oxen, and horses! What a pity, that so much pains should be taken in an imperfect education, to sever their young minds from these interesting objects; so well calculated to induce close observation, and open new fountains in the youthful mind! But how greatly are these studies increased in value, by adding the treasures of Botany, and Mineralogy, beautiful flowers, and precious stones! What a glorious world, and how admirably designed—to aid in the development of body and mind.

Eye nature's walks, shoot folley, as it flies,
And catch the manners—living, as they rise.

Proverbs. 1. Many, who possess much, en-joy but little. 2. Never sound the trumpet of your own funne. 3. Faction—is the bane of society. 4. Religious contention—is Satan's harvest. 5. Sell not virtue to purchase wealth. 6. The dis-course of flatterers, is like a rope of honey. 7. Truth may languish, but it never dies. 8. Under-take—no more than you can perform. 9. Value a good conscience more than praise. 10. We are bound to be honest, but not to be rich. 11. He is idle, that might be better employed. 12. The more laws—the more offenders.

Anecdote. Sailor and Highwayman. A stage—was once stopped by a highwayman, who, being informed by the driver, that there were no inside passengers, and only one on the outside, and he a sailor,—the robber proceeded to exercise his functions upon the bold and honest tar; when, waking him up, Jack demanded to know what he wanted: to which the son of plunder replied,—"Your money;" "You shan't have it," says Jack. "No?" rejoined the robber, "then I'll blow your brains out." "Blow away, then; I may as well be without brains, as without money. Drive on, coachee!"

Independence. Always form your own opinion of a person, and never allow another, even your most intimate friend, to judge for you; as he may not have half the power of discriminating character, that you yourself possess. Never allow yourself to be talked out of any thing—against your better judgment; nor talked into any thing; unless you see clearly, that the reasons advanced—are more powerful than your own.

Varieties. 1. If your principles are false, no apology can make them right; if founded in truth, no censure can make them wrong. 2. Do your best to do your best, and what you lack in power, supply with will. 3. Every plant that is produced, every child that is born, is a new idea; a fresh expression of the wisdom and goodness of our Creator. 4. When I see a tight laced girl, or woman, I think,—well, there goes another fool. 5. Can one passion, though it predominate, act without assistance of the other passions? 6. The state of the three kingdoms in nature, speak the same at all times; as also the state of every nation, and what is passing in it; all these things are a language, as are also many smaller particulars, tho' attended by none.

There will come,

Alike, the day of trial—unto all,
And the rude world—will buffet us alike:
Temptation—hath a music—for all ears;
And mad ambition—trumpeteth to all;
And ungovernable thought, within,
Will be in every bosom—eloquent:
But, when the silence—and the calm come on,
And the high seal—of character—is set,
We shall not all—be similar.

298. EMPHASIS, by changing the seat of Accent, and, of course, the Emphasis too. 1. Does he pronounce correctly, or incorrectly? 2. In some kinds of composition, plausibility is deemed as essential as probability. 3. Does that man speak rationally, or irrationally? 4. We are not now to inquire into the justice, or the injustice, the honor, or the dishonor of the deed; nor whether it was lawful, or unlawful, wise, or unwise; but, whether it was actually committed. 5. He who is good before invisible witnesses, is eminently so before visible ones. 6. This corruptible—must put on incorruption, and this mortal—immortality. 7. What fellowship hath righteousness, with unrighteousness? or what communion hath light—with darkness? 8. We naturally love what is agreeable, and hate what is disagreeable.

299. It is surprising, how few, even of our better readers, emphasize the right words, in a proper manner; this is more especially the case in reading, than in speaking; and yet children emphasize, correctly, everything that is the result of their own feelings and thoughts. Incorrect emphasis, always perverts the sense; and, to the hearer, it is like directing a traveler in the wrong road. Ex. 1. "Dr. Syntax told Jack, to saddle his horse; and Jack saddled him." Thus emphasized, there is no possibility of doubt, but that Jack—put the saddle on the Doctor. Place the emphasis on saddled, and you will get the true meaning. 2. Now, therefore, the said John, (says the said Thomas,) is a thief. 3. Now, therefore, the said John, says the said Thomas is a thief. Apply emphasis in a variety of ways, to other examples.

300. CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES. How little attention is paid to the construction of our dwellings! They seem to be built, principally, for their looks; and without regard to health, and comfort. Our sleeping apartments—appear to be of secondary consideration: they are generally made small; are poorly ventilated, with low ceilings, while all ingress and egress of air is carefully prevented. It would be much better to reverse this arrangement, and have our dwelling apartments constructed like our sleeping apartments; for the former are often ventilated through the day. Beware of low stories, or low ceilings: houses with attic stories, or half stories, or garrets, used for sleeping or study rooms, are hot-beds of disease and death; excellent places, with the addition of highly seasoned food, and a plenty of coffee, to generate bilious and other fevers. Fine economy this! and then pay the physician a few hundred dollars a year, to cure, or kill you!

But if the intent be good, excuse the deed.

Proverbs. 1. One may have a thousand acquaintances, and not one real friend among them all. 2. The richer a country is in talent, and good sense, the happier will it be. 3. Always to speak—what we think, is a sure way—to acquire the habit of thinking and acting with propriety. 4. All finery—is a sign of littleness. 5. In proportion as we know ourselves, we are enabled to know others. 6. The government—and people—should never regard each other, as opposite parties. 7. Time and labor—change a mulberry-leaf into satins. 8. As virtue—is its own reward; so vice—is its own punishment. 9. It is torture, to enemies, to return their injuries with kindness. 10. Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it, after many days. 11. He, may find fault, who cannot mend. 12. A bird is known by its note, and a man—by his talk.

Anecdote. No rank in life—precludes the efficacy—of a well-timed compliment. When Queen Elizabeth, who was highly accomplished, both in mind and person, asked an ambassador, how he liked her ladies, who attended on her; he replied, "It is hard to judge of stars—in presence of the sun."

An Honest Means of getting a Living. There seems to be but three ways for a nation to acquire wealth; the first is by war, as the Romans did, in plundering their conquered neighbors—this is robbery; the second, by commerce, which is generally cheating; the third, by agriculture, the only honest way, wherein a man receives a real increase of the seed thrown into the ground, in a kind of continual miracle, wrought by the hand of God in his favor, as a reward for his innocent life and his virtuous industry.

Varieties. 1. Should not every one beware of the evils, attendant on his own condition? 2. Children, as well as adults, are benefitted by their own conjectures and reasonings; even about things and principles, that they cannot as yet comprehend. 3. What does education mean, but the regeneration of the mind? 4. The present families of mankind—seem but the wrecks and ruins of men; like the continents, that compose the earth. 5. How apt we are—to make ourselves—the measure of the universe; and with the span of one life, or the world's history, to crowd the magnitude, and extent of the works of God; these are but parts—of one stupendous whole. 6. Our bodies are new-formed every seven years. 7. Only, that external worship is profitable, in which an internal feeling, and a sense of what is said and done, exists; for without such sense, it must needs be merely external.

Lo! like a glorious pile of diamonds bright
Built on the steadfast cliff, the waterfall
Pours forth its gems of pearl and silver light;
They sink, they rise, and, sparkling, cover all
With infinite refulgence: while its song,
Sublime as thunder, rolls the woods along.

301. EMPHASIS—may be exhibited by stress, and higher pitch: that is, force and loudness of voice, and elevation to the upper notes of the scale. 1. Little minds—are tamed—and subdued—by misfortunes; but great ones—rise above them. 2. VIRTUE—leads to happiness; vice—to misery. 3. TRUE liberty—can exist—only where JUSTICE—is impartially administered. 4. TYRANNY—is detestable—in every shape; but in none so formidable, as when assumed and exercised, by a NUMBER of tyrants. 5. FROWN INDIGNANTLY, upon the first DAWNING—of an attempt, to alienate any portion of this Union from the rest: the UNION—it must be preserved. 6. DRUNKENNESS—destroys more of the human race, and alienates more property, than all the other crimes on earth. 7. A day, an hour—of virtuous liberty, is worth a whole eternity in bondage. 8. I tell you, tho' (5) you; tho' all the (6) world; tho' an angel from (8) HEAVEN—declare the truth of it, I could not believe it. N. B. The words in small capitals have both stress and elevation.

302. STRONG POINTS. There are, in all kinds of sentences, paragraphs, speeches, &c., what may be called strong points, which are to be shown, principally, by the voice: hence, the importance of throwing all weak parts into the back-ground, and bringing out the strong ones—into the fore-ground. Now if the little words, that are insignificant, are, in their pronunciation and delivery, made significant, the proper effect will be destroyed. Therefore, we should never make prominent such words as are not emphatic; and especially, such words as at, by, of, for, from, in, on, up, with, &c., unless they are contrasted with their opposites: as—of, or for; by, or through; from or to; in or out; on, or under; up, or down, &c.

303. RECITATIONS. Frequent recitations, from memory, are very useful, as they oblige the speaker to dwell on the ideas, which he wishes to express, discern their particular meanings, and force, and give him a knowledge of emphasis, tones, &c., which the pieces require: and they will especially relieve him from the influence of school-boy habits—of reading differently from conversation, on similar subjects, and afford far greater scope for expression and gestures.

304. ETHICS. Moral Philosophy,—treats of our duties to our Maker, to our fellow-men, and to ourselves; and the reasons by which those duties are enforced. Its great object seems to be—to promote the cause of virtue, by showing its reasonableness, excellence and beauty, and the melancholy effects of neglecting or forsaking it.

Honor—is an isle,—whose rocky coast
When once abandoned, is forever lost.

Proverbs. 1. He, who goes no further than bare justice, stops at the beginning of virtue. 2. The blameless—should not bear the effects of vice. 3. The faults, and misfortunes of others, should serve as beacons, to warn us against the causes, by which they have been overwhelmed. 4. Some—have such a love for contention, that they will quarrel, even with a friend, for a matter devoid of all importance. 5. The human mind—can accomplish almost any thing that it determines to effect; for patience, and perseverance, surmount every surmountable difficulty. 6. Keep your appetite—under the control of reason. 7. The indulgence of a satirical disposition—is always dangerous: it betrays a malicious spirit, a bad heart, and often creates enmities, and dislikes, that no lapse of years can soften, and death—can hardly extinguish. 8. While the tongue and expression of some—seem to be honed, their heart—abounds with vinegar. 9. Superfluity—often leads to profusion. 10. Characters—in every other respect virtuous and amiable, if tinged with haughtiness and reserve, become odious. 11. Solitude—dulls thought; too much society—dissipates it. 12. The longest life—is but a parcel of moments. 13. Without prudence, fortitude is mad.

Anecdote. A paver, who had often dunned a Doctor, was one day answered by him,—"Do you pretend to be paid for such work? You have spoiled my pavement, and covered it with earth—to hide its defects." "Mine is not the only bad work, that the earth hides; as your practice abundantly proves,"—rejoined the man.

Legendary Tales. In countries, where education and learning abound, legendary and miraculous tales lose ground; exciting but little interest, and less belief, and at last almost becoming a dead letter. Mankind, in a state of ignorance, with little education, are credulous, and fond of the marvellous; and there have not been wanting, in all ages, men of craft and invention, to gratify that passion in others, and turn it to their own advantage.

Varieties. 1. The Bible—has truth for its subject, the mind for its object, and the Father of mind for its Author. 2. Such is the arrangement of Divine Order, in the government of the universe, that no evil can be practiced, or intended, without eventually falling on the contriver. 3. A knowledge of man's physical organization, as well as mental, is essentially requisite for all, who would successfully cultivate the field of education. 4. Experience—is the knowledge of every thing in the natural world, that is capable of being received through the medium of the senses. 5. Where liberty dwells, there—is my country. 6. Intemperance—drives wit out of the head, money out of the pocket, elbows out of the coat, and health out of the body. 7. In the choice of a wife, take the obedient daughter of a good mother.

305. EMPHASIS—is made, secondly, by quantity and force; i. e. prolongation of sound, and stress of voice, on either high, low, or medium pitches. 1. Roll on,—thou dark—and deep blue ocean—ROLL; Ten THOUSAND fleets SWEET—over thee in vain. 2. Let our object be—our country; our WHOLE country; and nothing BUT—our country. 3. I warn you—do not DARE—to lay your hand on the constitution. 4. Hail! Universal LORD! Be bounteous still—to give us ONLY GOOD; and if the night—have gathered—ought of evil—or concealed—disperse it now, as light—dispels the dark. 5. A Deity—believed—is joy begun; a Deity—adored—is joy ADVANCED,—a Deity—BELOVED—is joy matured. 6. Prayer—ardent—opens heaven; lets down a stream of glory—on the consecrated hours of MAN,—in audience—with the DEITY. N. B. The first Ex. is an instance of the lowest division of subjects—the Natural; the second and third, of the middle division—the Human; and the fourth and fifth, of the upper—the Divine: see previous article on this subject.

306. SHERIDAN, of whose oratorical powers, every elocutionist has heard, after having excited a great interest among his friends, who were filled with hope at his prospects, made a signal failure, on his first appearance in Parliament; inasmuch, that he was entreated never to make another attempt. He nobly replied—“I will; for by Heaven, it is in me, and it shall come out.” He did try, and his efforts were crowned with success. In like manner, almost every orator failed at first; but perseverance made them more than conquerors. It is not unfrequent that the most abashed, and ill-omened, succeed the best. Take courage; let your motto be “onward and upward, and true to the line.”

My crown is in my heart,—not on my head;
Nor decked with diamonds, and Indian stones:
Nor to be SEEN; my crown—is called—CONTENT;
A crown it is—that seldom KINGS enjoy.

If there is a Power above us,
(And that there is—all Nature—cries aloud,
Thro' all her works.) He—must delight in virtue;
And that which He delights in—must be happy.
He hath a heart—as sound as a BELL,
And his tongue—is the CLAPPER;
For what his heart—THINKS, his tongue—SPEAKS.
Where'er thou journeyest—or whate'er thy care,
My heart shall follow, and my spirit—share.

5. American Literature—will find, that the intellectual spirit—is her TREE OF LIFE; and the union of the STATES,—her garden of Paradise. 6. God—is our FATHER; and although we, as children, may be EVER so guilty, his compassion towards us—fails not; and he will pity, forgive, and counsel, advise, teach, and lead us out of evil, whenever we sincerely wish it.

Proverbs. 1. A desire to resist oppression—is implanted in the nature of man. 2. The faults and errors of others, are lessons of caution—to ourselves. 3. No shield is so impeneetrable, no security so effectual, as a mind—conscious of its innocence. 4. Our most delightful enjoyments—are always liable to interruption. 5. If our passions are not kept under control, they will soon master us. 6. Those things that are unbecoming, are unsafe. 7. Ardent spirits—have drowned more people, than all the waters in the world. 8. He, is never tired of listening, who wishes to gain wisdom. 9. All true religion relates to life; and the life of that religion is—to do good from a love of it. 10. A wise man is a great wonder. 11. Be courteous to all, and intimate with few. 12. Defile not your mouth with swearing.

Anecdote. Law Practice. A lawyer told his client, that his opponent—had removed his suit to a higher court: “Let him remove it where he pleases, (quoth the client;) my attorney will follow it—for money.”

Common Sense. It is in the portico of the Greek sage, that that phrase has received its legitimate explanation; it is there we are taught, that “common sense” signifies “the sense of the common interest.” Yes! it is the most beautiful truth in morals, that we have no such thing as a distinct or divided interest from our race. In their welfare is ours, and by choosing the broadest paths to effect their happiness, we choose the surest and the shortest to our own.

Varieties. 1. The universe—is an empire; and God—its sovereign. 2. The smoothness of flattery—cannot now avail,—cannot save us, in this rudded and awful crisis. 3. I had much rather see all—industrious and enlightened,—than to see one half of mankind—slaves to the other, and these—slaves to their passions. 4. The condition of scuffers, is of all—the most dangerous; as well from the particular state of mind, that constitutes their character, as because they are incapable of conviction—by argument; whoever knew such a one converted to the truth? 5. Watch against, and suppress—the first motions of spiritual pride; such as—prone-ness to think too highly of yourselves, or a desire to have others think highly of you, on account of your spiritual attainments. 6. How many villains—walk the earth with credit, from the mere fulfilment of negative decencies. 7. Study history, not so much for its political events, as for a knowledge of human nature.

Away! away to the mountain's brow,

Where the trees are gently waving;

Away! away to the mountain's brow,

Where the stream is gently laving.

Away! away to the rocky glen,

Where the deer are wildly bounding;

And the hills shall echo in gladness again

To the hunter's bugle sounding.

397. QUANTITY AND RHETORICAL PAUSE. 1. Dwell on such words as are expressive of the kindlier affections, with a slow and adhesive movement of voice, as if you parted with the ideas reluctantly. 2. Very deliberate subjects require more or less of quantity in their emphasis: so also do the sublime, the grand, and the solemn; particularly, the reverential, the grave; so also do earnest entreaty, prayer, deep pathos, &c. Ex. "Join—all ye creatures—to extol—Him—first; Him—last; Him—midst, and—without end." "O Mary! dear—departed shade, Where is thy place of blissful rest? Seest thou thy lover—lowly laid? Hear'st thou the groans, that rend his breast?"

398. Read, or rather speak from memory, these lines with quantity, and on the lower pitches of voice.

Night, (sable goddess) from her ebon throne,
In rayless majesty, now stretches far
Her leaden sceptre—o'er a slumbering world.
Silence—how dead! and darkness—how profound!
Nor eye, nor listening ear, an object finds.
Creation—sleeps. 'Tis—as if the general pulse
Of LIFE—stood still, and Nature—made a pause,
An awful pause,—prophetic of her end.

399. IMPORTANT CONSIDERATIONS. If the evils of tight lacing, and tight dressing could only stop with the guilty, one consolation would still be left us; but even this is denied us: no! there is not even one drop of joy to be cast into our cup of bitterness—the draught is one of unmingled gall: the human form divine is sadly deformed; the fountain of innumerable evils and diseases is opened by this suicidal practice; and thousands of human beings are yearly coming into life, cursed from head to foot, from mind to body, with the awful effects of this infernal fashion, which originated in the basest passions of the human heart. Oh, who can measure the accumulating woe, which this accursed custom has entailed, and is yet entailing on the human race!

Anecdote. To prevent Suicide. A Hibernian Senator, speaking on the subject of preventing suicide, said,—“The only way I can conceive, of stopping the business, is,—to make it a capital offence, punishable with death.”

O how weak

Is mortal man! How trifling—how confined
His scope of vision!—Puff'd with confidence,
His phrase—grows big with immortality;
And he, poor insect of a summer's day,
Dreams of eternal honors to his name;
Of endless glory, and perennial bays.
He idly reasons of Eternity,
As of the train of ages—when, alas!
Ten thousand thousand of his centuries
Are, in comparison, a little point,
Too trivial for account.

Unlearn the evils you have learned.

Proverbs. 1. You cannot appease envy, even by sacrificing virtue. 2. The envious man grows base, by contemplating the success of another. 3. A government, that undervalues the affections of the people, and expects to find a firm basis in terrors, will be mistaken, and short-lived. 4. He, who passes over a crime, unreprieved, or unpunished, encourages its repetition. 5. He, who controls his passions, subdues his greatest enemy. 6. He, alone is wise, that can adapt himself to all the contingencies of life; but the fool—vainly contends, and struggles against the stream. 7. The ways of the lazy—are as a hedge of thorns. 8. To a lazy man—every exertion is painful, and every movement a labor. 9. Innocence—and mysteriousness—seldom dwell together. 10. It is folly—to expect justice—at the hands of the unjust. 11. Great are the charms of novelty. 12. Custom—is no small matter. 13. Consider thy ways, and be wise.

Humbugs. All new developments of truth—are called, by many, who do not appreciate them, or dare to think and act for themselves—“HUMBUGS!” and this dreadful name—has no doubt had the effect—to lead some—to condemn them, without further inquiry. But the worst of all humbugs, the most deplorable of all delusions—is that, which leads men to shut their eyes to the truth, lest they should be laughed at—for acknowledging it.

Varieties. 1. Is not this world—a world of dreams, and the spirit-world—a world of realities? 2. Some are only in the love of knowing what is good, and true; others, of understanding them; and others—of living according to them; to which class do I belong? 3. Xerxes—whipped the sea, because it would not obey him. 4. That, which some people pride themselves in, often becomes the cause of their undoing; and what they very much dislike, becomes the only thing that saves them. 5. Possession—is eleven points of the law: hence, never let a valuable thing go out of your possession, without an ample security. 6. The world below—is a glass, in which we may see the world above: remove the veil, and see where spirit, and matter are connected. 7. The heart-felt prayer, only, is available; and to produce it, there must be deep-felt want; and the stronger it operates, the more perfect, and acceptable must be the prayer.

“Oh! tell me, step-dame Nature, tell,

Where shall thy wayward child abide?

On what fair strand his spirit dwell,

When life has spent its struggling tide?

Shall hope no more her taper burn,

Quenched—in the tears that sorrow sends?

Nor from the feast, misfortune spurn

The wishful wretch, that o'er it bends?”

“Can storied urn, or animated bust,

Back to its mansion, call the fleeting breath?

Can honor's voice—provoke the silent dust?

Or flattery soothe the dull, cold ear of death?

310. EMPHASIS—by prolongation, and depressed monotone: that is, quantity of voice on the first, second, or third note: it is sometimes used in the grave and sublime, and produces astonishing effects. Monotony—occurs when the voice is inflected neither up nor down, but is confined to a few words. The figures refer to the notes of the diatonic scale. The following free translation of a paragraph from one of Cicero's orations, will serve as a good illustration: but no one should attempt it, without committing it to memory.

311. (COMMENT ON THE FOURTH NOTE.)
 "I appeal to you—O ye hills, and groves of (5) Alba, and your demolished (6) altars! I call you to (8) WITNESS! (4) whether your (5) altars, your (6) divinities, your (8) rowers! (5) which Clodius had polluted with all kinds of (6) wickedness, (5) did not (4) avenge themselves, when this wretch was (3) extirpated. (1) And thou, O holy (2) Jupiter! (3) from the (4) height of this (5) sacred (6) mount, whose lakes—and groves—he had so often (3) contaminated."

COLUMBIA! Columbia! to glory arise,
 The queen of the world, and the child of the skies;
 Thy genius commands thee; with rapture behold,
 While ages—on ages thy splendors unfold.
 Thy reign is the last—and the noblest of time;
 Most fruitful thy soil, most inviting thy clime;
 Let the crimes of the east—ne'er euer smother thy name;
 Be freedom, and science, and virtue—thy fame.

312. The only way in which children, or adults, can be taught to read, or speak, naturally, is—to memorize short or longer sentences, and deliver them in a perfectly intelligent, impressive, and unrestrained manner. Abecarians: first teach them the sounds of the vowels; then of the consonants, interspersing the exercises with select, or original sentences. Ex. "Time and tide—wait for no man." Or, if it is a rainy day, "This is a very rainy day." If pleasant, "This is a delightful day." Which sentences, after being recited in concert, should be spoken by the class individually. In this way, even small children may be taught a great variety of things, natural and spiritual; and an immense field of usefulness opened before the mind of the real teacher: i. e. one who teaches from the love of teaching; and no others should engage in it.

Notes. 1. Remember—the figures, placed before words, in sentences, indicate the pitch of voice, and have reference to the diatonic note; they are aids to break up the monotonous delivery. 2. Still continue your efforts to smooth the apparent roughness of the orations, in regard to the dash, (—) pauses, (,) (:) (?) and Emphasis: glide out of the mechanical into the natural.

There is, in every human heart,
 Some—not completely barren part,
 Where seeds of truth—and love might grow,
 And flowers—of generous virtue blow;
 To plant, to watch, to water there—
 This—be our duty, and our care.

Proverbs. 1. A mind conscious of its integrity,—is a most noble possession. 2. In acquiring knowledge, consider how you may render it useful to society. 3. Avoid undue excitement on trivial occasions. 4. When engaged in a good cause, never look back. 5. Poverty—is no excuse for sinning. 6. Never repeat in one company, what is said in another; for all conversation, is tacitly understood—to be confidential. 7. Let reason—go before every enterprise, and counsel—before every action. 8. Look on slanderers—as enemies to society; as persons destitute of honor, honesty, and humanity. 9. Divisions, and contentions—are upheld by pride, and self-love. 10. Patience, when subjected to trials that are too severe, is sometimes converted into rage. 11. Avoid match-makers. 12. Virtue — is often laughed at.

Anecdote. Lord Albermarle—was the lover of Mademoiselle Gaucher, (Gaw-shay.) As they were walking together one evening, he perceived her eyes fixed on a star, and said to her "Do not look at it, my dear; I cannot give it you." "Never," says Marmontel, "did love—express itself more delicately."

Law—is law—law—is law; and as in such, and so forth, and hereby, and aforesaid, provided always, nevertheless, notwithstanding. Law—is like a country dance; people are led up and down in it, till they are tired. Law—is like a book of surgery; there are a great many desperate cases in it. It is also like physic; they that take the least of it, are best off. Law—is like a homely gentlewoman, very well to follow. Law—is also like a scolding wife, very bad when it follows us. Law—is like a new fashion, people are bewitched to get into it: it is also like bad weather, most people are glad when they get out of it.

Varieties. 1. Are we not apt to be proud of that, which is not our own? 2. It is a less crime—to gnaw a man's fingers with your teeth, than to mangle his reputation with your tongue. 3. It is better to yield gracefully, than to be held up as a spectacle of vanquished, yet impertinent obstinacy. 4. Really learned persons—never speak of having finished their education: for they continue students, as long as they live. 5. Equivocation—is a mere expedient—to avoid telling the truth, without verbally telling a lie. 6. True philosophy and contempt of the Deity, are diametrically opposed to each other. 7. Sensual good, has sensual truth for its object; natural good has an order of natural truth, and spiritual good has spiritual truth, agreeing with the spiritual sense of the Bible.

No flocks, that range the valley free,
 To slaughter—do I condemn:
 Taught by that power, that pities me,
 I learn to pity them.

313. RULES. It is impossible to give rules—for reading every sentence, or indeed any sentence; much more is left to the pupil, than can be written. All that is here attempted—is, a meagre outline of the subject; enough, however, for every one who is determined to succeed, and makes the necessary application; and too much for such as are of an opposite character. The road is pointed out, and all the necessities provided for the journey; but each must do the traveling, or abide the consequences. Be what ought to be, and success is yours.

- (3) No radiant pearl, which crested fortune wears,
- (4) No gem, that twinkling, hangs from beauty's ears;
- (5) Nor the bright stars, which night's blue arch adorn,
- (6) Nor rising sun—that gilds the eternal noon,—
- (5) Shine—with such lustre, as the tear that breaks,
- (6) For other's woe, down virtue's manly cheek.

In reading, (rather reciting) these beautiful lines, the voice commences, as indicated by the figures, gradually rises, then yields a little; till it comes to the word shine, which is on the 8th note; and then it gradually descends to the close; because such are the thoughts, and the feelings. Get the inside; never live out of doors; grasp the thoughts, and then let the words flow from feeling.

314. OPENING THE MOUTH. This is among the most important duties of the elocutionist, and singer; more fail in this particular, than in any other: indistinctness and stammering are the sad effects of not opening the mouth wide enough. Let it be your first object to obtain the proper positions of the vocal organs: for which purpose, practice the vocal analysis, as here, presented. The first effort is—separating the lips and teeth; which will not only enable you to inhale and exhale freely, through the nose, when speaking and singing, but avoid uneasiness in the chest, and an unpleasant distortion of the features. The second is, a simultaneous action of the lips, teeth, and tongue: let these remarks be indelibly stamped upon your memory; for they are of immense practical importance.

Anecdote. Alexander and the Pirate. We too often judge of men—by the splendor, and not the merit of their actions. Alexander—demanded of the Pirate, whom he had taken, by what right—he infested the seas? “By the same right,” replied he boldly, “that you enslave the world. I—am called a robber, because I have only one small vessel; but you—are called a conqueror, because you command great fleets and navies.”

The best contrived deceit—
Will hurt its own contriver;
And perfidy—doth often cheat—
Its author's purse—of every steer.

The man, that's resolute, and just,
Firm to his principles—and trust,
Nor hopes, nor fears,—can bind.

Proverbs. 1. A great fortune, in the hands of a fool, is a great mis-fortune. 2. Too many resolve, then re resolve, and die the same. 3. Never give the tongue full liberty, but keep it under control. 4. Character—is the measure of man and woman. 5. We may die of a surfeit, as well as of hunger. 6. Truth—is an ornament, and an instrument. 7. If we meet evil company, it is no reason we should keep it. 8. Provide for the worst, but hope for the best. 9. Though he is wise, that can teach the most, yet he, that learns, and practices what he learns, is wiser. 10. Never be without good books. 11. Time—is the herald of truth. 12. Manners make the man. 13. Dissembled holiness, is double iniquity. 14. Conscience—is in the chamber of justice.

Oratory. Eloquence—may be considered as the soul, or animating principle of discourse; and is dependent on intellectual energy, and intellectual attainments. Elocution—is the embodying form, or representative power; dependent on exterior accomplishments, and on the cultivation of the organs. Oratory—is the complicated and vital existence, resulting from the perfect harmony and combination of Eloquence and Elocution.

Varieties. 1. Is there not the same difference—between actual and hereditary evil, as between an inclination to do a thing, and the commission of the act? 2. Whoever has flattered his friend successfully, must at once think himself a knave, and his friend a fool. 3. Unfriended, indeed, is he, who has no friend good enough—to tell him his faults. 4. If those, who are called good singers, were as sensible of their errors in reading, as they would be, if similar ones were made in their singing, they would be exceedingly mortified, and chagrined. 5. The sacred light of Scripture—should be shed upon the canvas of the world's history, as well as on that of humanity. 6. The theology of creation—was revealed to the earliest ages; and the science of creation, is now beginning to be revealed to us. 7. What is most spiritual—is most rational, if rightly understood; and it also admits of a perfect illustration—by rational and natural things: to follow God, and to follow right—and pure reason, is all one; and we never give offence to Him, if we do that, which such a reason requires.

THE PROGRESS OF LIFE.

I dreamed—I saw a little rosy child,
With fixen ringlets—in a garden playing;
Now stopping here, and then afar off straying,
As flower, or butterfly—his feet beguiled.
’Twas changed. One summer's day I step aside,
To let him pass; his face—and manhood seeming,
And that full eye of blue—was fondly beaming
On a fair maiden, whom he called “his Bride!”
Once more; ’twas autumn, and the cheerful fire
I saw a group—of youthful forms surrounding,
The room—with harmless pleasantry resounding,
And, in the midst, I marked the smiling Sire.
The heavens were clouded! and I heard the tone,
Of a stote—moving bell—the white haired man was gone.

315. As Emphasis is the same thing as Accent, only more of it; so, it is inseparably connected with the Pauses; indeed, whatever distinguishes one word from the others, may be called Emphasis; which is sometimes only another name for Expression: it is, at least, one of the mediums of expression. Hence, Emphasis is often exhibited in connection with a Rhetorical Pause, placed before, or after, emphatic words, which may be elevated, or depressed, with force and quantity, according to sentiment. When this pause is made after the important word, or words, it causes the mind to revert to what was last said; and when it is made before such word, the mind is led to anticipate something worthy of particular attention. The book is full of illustrations.

316. EX. 1. BENEVOLENCE—is one of the brightest gems—in the crown of christian perfection. 2. Melody—is an agreeable succession of sounds; Harmony—an agreeable concordance of sounds. 3. Homer—was the greater genius; Virgil—the better artist: in one, we most admire the man; in the other—the work; Homer—hurries us with commanding impetuosity; Virgil—leads us with an attractive majesty. Homer—scatters with a generous profusion; Virgil—bestows, with a careful magnificence. 4. What man could do, is done already; (S) HEAVEN—and (5) earth—will witness,—if—R-o-m-e-c-m-u-s-l-f-a-ll,—that we are innocent.

Note. Prolong the words with the hyphens between the letters.

317. POLITICAL ECONOMY—teaches us to investigate the nature, sources, and proper uses of national wealth; it seems to bear the same relation to the whole country, that Domestic Economy does to an individual family: for, tho' it generally relates to the wealth of nations, it leads us to examine many points of comfort and well-being, that are closely connected with the acquisition, and expenditure of property. Its connection with legislation and government are self-evident; yet every one may derive important lessons, from a knowledge of its facts and principles.

Anecdote. All have their Care. Two merchants, conversing together about the hardness of the times, and observing a flock of pigeons, one said to the other,—“How happy those pigeons are! they have no bills and acceptances to provide for.” “Indeed,” said the other, “you are much mistaken; for they have their bills to provide for as well as we.”

When adverse winds—and waves arise,
And in my heart—despondence sighs;
When life—her throng of cares reveals,
And weakness—o'er my spirit steals,
Grateful—I hear the kind decree,
“That, as my day, my strength—shall be.”

Proverbs. 1. Nothing overcomes passion—sooner than silence. 2. Precepts—may lead, but examples—draw. 3. Rebel not against the dictates of reason and conscience. 4. Sincerity—is the parent of truth. 5. The loquacity of fools—is a lecture to the wise. 6. Unruly passions—destroy the peace of the soul. 7. Valor—can do but little, without discretion. 8. Modesty—is one of the chief ornaments of youth. 9. Never insult the poor; poverty—entitles one to our pity. 10. Our reputation, virtue, and happiness—greatly depend on the choice of our companions. 11. Wisdom—is the greatest wealth. 12. Pride—is a great thief.

Laconics. No more certain is it, that the flower was made to waft perfume, than that woman's destiny—is a ministry of love, a life of the affections.

Varieties. 1. Those authors, (says Dr. Johnson,) are to be read at school, that supply most axioms of prudence; and most principles of moral truth. 2. The little and short sayings of wise and excellent men, (saith Bishop Tillotson,) are of great value; like the dust of gold, or, the least sparks of diamonds. 3. The idle, who are wise rather for this world than the next, are fools at large. 4. Let all your precepts be succinct, and clear, that ready wits may comprehend them. 5. None—better guard against a cheat, than he, who is a knave complete. 6. Scarcely an ill—to human life—belongs; but what our folly cause, or mutual wrongs. 7. What our Lord said to all, is applicable to all, at all times; namely, “watch,”—and it appears to relate to the admission of every thought and desire, into the mind.

THE MOTHER PERISHING IN A SNOW-STORM.

“In the year 1821, a Mrs. Blake perished in a snow-storm in the night-time, while traveling over a spur of the Green Mountains in Vermont. She had an infant with her, which was found alive and well in the morning, being carefully wrapped in the mother's clothing.”

The cold winds—swept the mountain's height,

And pathless—was the dreary wild,
And, 'mid the cheerless hours of night,

A mother wander'd—with her child:
As through the drifting snow she press'd,
The babe—was sleeping—on her breast.

And colder still the winds did blow,

And darker hours of night came on,

And deeper grew the drifting snow:

Her limbs—were chill'd, her strength—was gone;

“Oh, God!” she cried, in accents wild,
“If I must perish, save my child!”

She stripp'd her mantle from her breast,

And bared her bosom to the storm,

And round the child—she wrapp'd the vest,

And smiled—to think her babe was warm.

With one cold kiss—one tear she shed,

And sunk—upon her snowy bed.

At dawn—a traveler passed by,

And saw her—'neath a snowy vail;

The frost of death—was in her eye,

Her cheek was cold, and hard, and pale;

He moved the robe from off the child,

The babe look'd up—and sweetly smiled!

318. EMPHASIS, in connection with the Rhetorical Pause. 1. A friend—cannot be known—in prosperity; and an enemy cannot be hidden—in adversity.

Passions—are winds—to urge us o'er the wave,
Reason—the rudder—to direct—or save.

He—raised a mortal—to the skies,
She—drew an angel—down.

4. Charity—suffereth long; and is (3) kind: (4) charity—envieth not; (5) charity—vaunteth not itself; (3) is not puffed up; (4) doth not behave itself (5) unseemly; (6) seeketh not her own; (5) is not easily (4) provoked; (3) thinketh no evil; (5) rejoiceth—not in (4) iniquity, but (5) rejoiceth in the truth; (4) beareth all things; (5) believeth all things, (6) hopeth all things; (7) endureth all things; (6) CHARITY—(8) NEVER faileth.

319. THE THREE DEGREES OF SPEECH. There are three different modes in which one may read and speak; only two of which, under any circumstances, can be right. The first is—reading and speaking by word, without having any regard to the sentiment; the second is—reading or speaking only by word and thought; and the third is—reading and speaking by word, thought and feeling—all combined, and appropriately manifested. In the Greek language, we find these three modes definitely marked by specific words, such as lalleo, eiro and eiros. Children are usually taught the first, instead of the third, and then the second and third—combined: hence, very few of them ever have any conception of the meaning of the words they use, or of the subject matter about which they are reading: they seem to regard these as something foreign to the object. Here we again see the natural truth of another scripture declaration: “The letter killeth: the spirit giveth life.”

And from the prayer of want, the plaint of woe;
Oh! never, NEVER—turn away thine ear:
Forlorn, in this bleak wilderness below, [hear.
Ah! what were man, should HEAVEN—refuse to
To others do—(the law is not severe;)
What—to thyself—thou wishest to be done;
Forgive thy foes, and love thy parents dear,
And friends and native land; nor those alone [own.
All human woe, or woe, learn thou to make thine

Anecdote. Mahomet—made his people believe, that he would call a hill to him; and, from the top of it, offer up his prayers for the observers of his law. The people assembled; Mahomet called the hill again and again to come to him; and the hill not moving, he was not at all abashed at it; but put it off with a jest; saying—“If the hill will not come to Mahomet, he—will go to the hill.”

When people—once are in the wrong,
Each line they add—is much too long;
Who fastest walks, but walks astray,
Is only furthest—from his way.

Proverbs. 1. Every thing—tends to educate us. 2. Always have a good object in view. 3. Actions—should be led by knowledge; and knowledge followed by actions. 4. It is better to be saved without a precedent, than damned by example. 5. There is no security among evil companions. 6. Never be unwilling to teach, if you know; nor ashamed to learn, if you can. 7. Better yourself when young; you will want rest in old age. 8. When you find yourself inclined to be angry, speak in a low tone of voice. 9. Bear—and forbear—is excellent philosophy. 10. Seek—and practice—the truth, and you are made—forever. 11. Lookers on see, more than players. 12. Wake not a sleeping lion.

Laconics. Sincerity—should be the pruning-knife of friendship, and not the monster scythe—of an unfeeling rudeness, which, for one weed that it eradicates, mows down a dozen of those tender flowers, which bloom—only on our affections.

Varieties. 1. Our Orators, (says Cicero,) are, as it were, the actors of truth itself; and the players are the imitators of truth. 2. Whence this disdain of life, in every breast, but from a notion—on their minds impress'd, that all, who, for their country die, are bless'd. 3. You'll find the friendship of the world—is show; all—outward show. 4. Errors, like straws upon the surface flow: He, who would search for pearls—must dive below. 5. What you keep by you, you may change and mend; but words, once spoke, can never be recalled. 6. Let thy discourse be such, that thou mayest give profit to others, or, from them receive. 7. Beware of ever exceeding the boundaries of truth, in any form; for the mind loses strength, whenever it puts its foot beyond the circle, or passes the boundaries.

THE HARVEST MOON.

All hail! thou lovely queen of night,
Bright empress of the stary sky!
The meekness—of thy silvery light
Beams gladness—on the gazer's eye,
While, from thy peerless throne on high
Thou shinest bright—as cloudless noon,
And bidd'st the shades of darkness fly
Before thy glory—Harvest moon!
In the deep stillness of the night,
When weary labor is at rest,
How lovely is the scene!—how bright
The wood—the lawn—the mountain's breast,
When thou, fair moon of Harvest, hast
Thy radiant glory all unfurled,
And sweetly smilest in the west,
Far down—upon the silent world.
Shine on, fair orb of light!—and smile
Till autumn months—have passed away.
And labor—hath forgot the toil
He bore—in summer's sultry ray;
And when the reapers—end the day,
Tired with the burning heat of noon,
They'll come—with spirits light and gay,
And bless thee—lovely Harvest Moon!

320. EMPHASIS—by a pause just before, or after, the important word. The pause before—awakens curiosity, and excites expectation; after—carries back the mind to what was last said. How would a tyrant, after having ruled with a rod of iron, and shown compassion to none, speak of his own death, in allusion to the setting sun, in a tropical climate; where the sun is severely hot as long as it shines, and when it sets, it is very soon dark? 1. (5) "And now—my race—of terror—run, (6) Mine—be the eve—of tropic (6) sun; No pale (6) gradations—quench his ray; (5) No twilight (7) dews—his wrath alay: (4) With (5) disk, (like battle target)—red, (6) He rushes—t' his burning bed, (5) Dyes the wide wave—with bloody (6) light; Then sinks—at once—(2) and all is (1) night." The last clause, pronounced in a deep monotone, and a pause before it, adds much to its beauty and grandeur. 2. "Will all great Neptune's ocean—wash—this blood—clean—from my hands? No: these, my hands, will rather the multitudinous sea—incarnadine: making the green—(1) one red." Macbeth's hands are so deeply stained, that, to wash them in the ocean, would make it red with blood.

SATAN, LAMENTING THE LOSS OF HEAVEN, AND INVOKING HELL.

"Is this the region. this the soil, the clime,"—
Said then the lost archangel, "this the seat,
That we must change—for heaven?
This the mournful gloom—
For this CELESTIAL LIGHT? Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy—forever dwells. Hail, horrors—hail
Infernal world! And thou—profoundest hell,
Receive—thy new—possessor!"

THE DRUNKARD.

"Hand me the bowl—ye jocund band,"—
He said, "'twill rouse my mirth;"
But conscience—seized his trembling hand,
And dashed the cup—to earth.
He looked around, he blush'd, he laugh'd,—
He sipped the sparkling wave;
In it, he read,—"who drinks this draught,
Shall fill—a murderer's grave."

He grasped the bowl,—to seek relief;—
No more—his conscience said;
His bosom-friend—was sunk in grief,
His children—begged for bread.

Thro' haunts of horror—and of strife,
He passed down—life's dark tide;
He curst—his beggared babes—and wife;
He curst his God,—and died!

321. CREATION. If we studied creation more, our minds would much sooner become developed; then, the heavens, the earth, the water, with their respective, various, and numerous inhabitants, the productions, natures, sympathies, antipathies; their uses, benefits and pleasures, would be better understood by us: and eternal wisdom, power, majesty and goodness, would be very conspicuous, thro' their sensible and passing forms; the world, wearing the marks of its Maker, whose stamp is everywhere visible, and whose character is legible to all, who are willing to understand, and would become happy.

Proverbs. 1. An oak tree—is not felled with a blow. 2. Beware of him, who is obliged to guard his reputation. 3. Concealing faults—is but adding to them. 4. Defile not your mouth with impure words. 5. Envy—preys on itself; flattery—is nauseous—to the truly wise. 6. Gluttony—kills more than the sword. 7. Hasty resolutions seldom speed well. 8. Inconstancy—is the attendant of a weak mind. 9. Keep good company, and be one of the number. 10. While one is base, none can be entirely free and noble. 11. Sin—is the parent of disease. 12. Oftener ask, than decide questions. 13. Avoid all superfluities.

Anecdote. Witty Reply. A gentleman lately complimented a lady, on her improved appearance. "You are guilty of flattery," said the lady. "Not so," replied he; "for you are as plump as a partridge." "At first," said she,—"I thought you guilty of flattery only; but I now find you actually make game of me."

Mark to Hit. Never forget, that by your advancement, you have become an object of envy—to those whom you have outstripped—in the race of life, and a tacit reproach—to their want of energy or capacity, which they never forgive. You must, therefore, lay your account—to be made a mark for "envy, hatred, and malice, and all uncharitableness."

Varieties. 1. We have three orders, or degrees of faculties; the religious, civil and scientific; the first, regards the Deity; the second, Humanity; and the third, Nature; i. e. the Workman and his works. 2. It is the object of the Bible—to teach religious, rather than scientific truths. 3. Cannot our minds—be imbued with the spirit of heaven; or tainted with the breath of Hell? 4. In man, we see blended the geological, the vegetable, and animal: to which is superadded, the human; all harmonizing, and yet each successive series predominates over the preceding one; till at length, the human rises above every thing; earth—passes away, and heaven—is all in all. 5. Let your trust be so implicit—in the Divine Providence, that all things will be disposed for the best, after you have done the part assigned, that your only care shall be, how you may perform the greatest amount of good, of which your being is capable.

This world's a hive, you know, 'tis said,
Whose bees—are men, ('tis true as funny,)
And some—fill cells—with bitter bread,
While others gather sweetest honey;
Yet each, alike, his duty does,
Each—brings what's needful for the other:
Though divers ways—they hum and buz,
Yet all obey the common mother.

322. EMPHASIS. On every page may be found nearly all the principles of elocution; and in aiming at a compliance with the rules given, great care must be taken to avoid a stiff, and formal mode of reading and speaking. We must never become enslaved to thought alone, which rules with a rod of iron: but yield to feeling, when it is to predominate: in a perfect blending of feeling, thought and action, there is all the freedom and gracefulness of nature; provided they are in harmony with nature. It is better to be natural, than mechanically correct. Every thought and feeling has its peculiar tone of voice, by which it is to be expressed, and which is exactly suited to the degree of internal feeling: in the proper use of these tones, most of the life, spirit, beauty, and effect of delivery consists. Hence, emphasis, or expression, is almost infinite in variety; yet none should be discouraged; because we cannot do every thing, is no reason why we should not try to do something.

323. MISCELLANEOUS. 1. In your conversation, be cautious what you speak, to whom you speak, how you speak, when you speak; and what you speak, speak wisely, and truly. 2. A fool's heart—is in his tongue; but a wise man's tongue—is in his heart. 3. Few things—engage the attention—and affections of men—more than a handsome address, and a graceful conversation. 4. For one—great genius, who has written a little book, we have a thousand—little geniuses, who have written great books. 5. Words—are but air; and both—are capable of much condensation. 6. Nature—seldom inspires a strong desire for any object, without furnishing the ability—to attain it. 7. All—is not gold—that glitters. 8. If I were an AMERICAN—as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop—was landed in my country, I never—would lay down my arms; no,—(5) never! (4) never! (2) never! 9. The price of LIBERTY—is eternal vigilance. 10. The true disciples of Nature, are regardless who conducts them, provided she be the leader; for Nature, like truth—is immutable.

There is a tide—in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood,—leads on to FORTUNE;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life—
Is bound in shallows—and in miseries;
On such a full sea—are WE—now afloat,
And we must take the current, when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Anecdote. One thing at a time. The famous pensioner of Holland, who was the greatest genius of his time, and a famous politician, on being asked, how he could transact such a variety of business, without confusion, replied, that he never did but one thing at a time.

Face to face—the truth comes out.

Proverbs. 1. The foreknowledge of an approaching evil, is a benefit of no small magnitude. 2. We may get a world of false love, for a little honesty. 3. The love of mankind—may be good while it lasts; but the love of God—is everlasting. 4. Too many condemn the just, and not a few justify the wicked. 5. Some people's threats—are larger than their hearts. 6. Discreet stages—make short journeys. 7. Imitate the good, but avoid the evil. 8. Rather do good, without a pattern, than evil, by imitation. 9. Prize a good character above any other good. 10. Well qualified teachers—are benefactors of their race. 11. Plain dealing is a jewel. 12. Perfect love—casteth out fear.

Science. Science, the partisan of no country, but the beneficent patroness of all, has liberally opened a temple, where all may meet. She never inquires about the country, or sect, of those who seek admission; she never allots a higher, or a lower place, from exaggerated national claims, or unfounded national antipathies. Her influence on the mind, like that of the sun on the chilled earth, has long been preparing it for higher cultivation and farther improvement. The philosopher of one country should not see an enemy in the philosopher of another; he should take his seat in the temple of science, and ask not who sits beside him.

Varieties. 1. Is not the innocence of flowers enough to make wicked persons blush—to behold it? 2. Are there not as many beautiful flowers in the other world, as there are in this? 3. Those are the best diversions, that relieve the mind, and exercise the body, with the least expense of time and money. 4. Give us knowledge of our own, and we will persevere. 5. Let us call tyrants—TYRANTS: and maintain, that FREEDOM comes only, by the grace of God.

Truth—needs no champion; in the infinite deep
Of everlasting Soul—her strength abides:
From Nature's heart—her mighty pulses leap,—
Through Nature's veins, her strength, undying, tides.
Peace—is more strong than war; and gentleness,
When force were vain, makes conquests o'er the
And Love lives on, and hath a power to bless. [wave;
When they, who loved, are hidden—by the grave.

'Tis not a century—since they,

The red men, traversed here.

And o'er these pleasant hills and valleys,

Pursued the bounding deer;

Here, too, that eloquence was poured

Around the council light,

That made the sturdy warrior bold,

And ready for the fight!

And oft they came—exulting back,

The husband, sire and son,

To vaunt before their savage shrines,

The ill—their hands had done!

Yet, of their mortal weal or woe,

No trace is left to-day;

For, like the foam upon the wave,

They all have passed away!

324. SHOUTING, or High and Loud—implying force of utterance. The last words of Marmion afford excellent means, when memorized, for the student to try the compass of his voice upwards, as well as its power on high pitches. It is not often that these high and almost screaming notes are required in public speaking; yet, there are times, especially in the open air, when they may be introduced with great effect. And it is always well to have an inexhaustible capital of voice, as of money; indeed, there is no danger of having too much of either, provided we make a proper use of them. In giving the word of command, on occasions of fire, erecting buildings, on the field of battle, martial exercise, &c., power and compass of voice are very desirable.

325. 1. "The war, that for a space did fail, Now, trebly thundering, swell'd the gale, And (10) "Stanley!" (6) was the cry: A light on Marmion's visage spread, and fired his glazing eye: With dying hand, above his head, he shook the fragment of his blade, and shouted (8) "VICTORY!" (9) CHARGE! CHESTER, (10) CHARGE! ON, (11) STANLEY—(12) ON!" (3) Were the last words of Marmion. 2. (6) LIBERTY! (8) FREEDOM! (5) TYRANNY IS DEAD! (6) Run (7) HENCE! PROCLAIM it about the STREETS! 3. The combat deepens: (4) "ON! ye BRAVE! Who rush—to (6) GLO'RY,—or the (3) grave; (9) WAVE—MUNICH! all thy (10) BANNERS wave! (8) And charge—with all thy (3) CHIVALRY."

926. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, in its extended sense, includes the study of the constitutions, or fundamental laws of the various Nations: i. e. the structure, and mechanism of their government, and the appointments, powers, and duties of their officers. The United States Constitutional Law, may be considered under five different heads; viz: Legislative Power, Executive Power, Judicial Power, State Rights Restrictions, and United States Statutes and Treaties. The Legislative power is vested in a Congress, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives, elected by the people, or their State Legislatures; the Executive power, in a President, who holds his office four years; the Judicial power, in a Supreme Court, which consists of one Chief Justice, and eight Associate Justices, and in such inferior courts, as Congress may ordain, or establish. State rights and restrictions—are powers not delegated by the Constitution to the United States, nor prohibited by it to the States, but reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

Anecdote. Patience. A youth, who was a pupil of Zeno, on his return home, was asked by his father, "what he had learned?" The lad replied, "that will appear hereafter." On this, the father, being enraged, beat his son; who, bearing it patiently, and without complaining, said, "This have I learned, to endure a parent's anger."

Rather suffer wrong than do wrong.

Proverbs. 1. A bitter jest—is the poison of friendship. 2. Be ever vigilant, but never suspicious. 3. Cheerfulness—is perfectly consistent with true piety. 4. Demonstration—is the best mode of instruction. 5. Entertain not sin, lest you like its company. 6. Finesse—is unworthy of a liberal mind. 7. Good counsel—is above all price. 8. Hearts—may agree, tho' heads—differ. 9. Idleness—is the parent of want, shame, and misery. 10. Learn to live, as you would wish to die. 11. Content—is the highest bliss. 12. Tax not yourself, when ill spoken of.

Force of Habit. Habit—hath so vast a prevalence over the human mind, that there is scarcely any thing too strange, or too strong, to be asserted of it. The story of the miser, who, from long accustoming to cheat others, came at last to cheat himself, and with great delight and triumph picked his own pocket of a guinea, to convey to his hoard, is not impossible or improbable. In like manner it fares with the practisers of deceit, who, from having long deceived their acquaintance, gain at last a power of deceiving themselves, and acquire that very opinion, however false, of their own abilities, excellences, and virtues, into which they have for years, perhaps, endeavored to betray their neighbors.

Varieties. 1. Eternity, (wrote a deaf and dumb boy,) is the lifetime of the Deity. 2. No evil can be successfully combatted, or removed, but from the opposite good, from a desire for it, and an attachment to it; i. e. till the mind is perfectly willing to relinquish the evil. 3. A man's ruling love—governs him; because, what he loves, he continues to will. 4. Sweet harmonist, and beautiful as sweet, and young as beautiful, and soft as young, and gay as soft, and innocent as gay. 5. Had Cæsar genius? he was an orator! Had Cæsar judgment? he was a politician! Had Cæsar valor? he was a conqueror! Had Cæsar feeling? he was a friend! 6. Music—is one of the sweetest flowers of the intellectual garden; and, in relation to its power—to exhibit the passions, it may be called—the universal language of nature. 7. Whatever the immediate cause may be, the effect is so far good, as men cease to do evil, they learn to do well.

THE FISHERMAN.

A perilous life, and sad—as life may be,
Hath the lone fisher—on the lonely sea;
In the wild waters laboring, far from home,
For some poor pittance, e'er compelled to roam!
Few friends to cheer him—in his dangerous life,
And none to aid him—in the stormy strife.
Companion of the sea and silent air,
The lonely fisher thus must ever fare;
Without the comfort, hope—with scarce a friend,
He looks through life, and only sees—its end!

"Thou art, O God! the life and light

Of all this wondrous world we see;

Its glow by day, its smile by night,

Are but reflections—caught from thee!"

Where'er we turn, thy glories shine,

And all things bright and fair—are thine."

327. SPEAKING THE GAUNTLET. We have all heard of the practice, that prevails among some tribes of Indians, called "running the gauntlet;" when a company arrange themselves in two rows, a few yards apart, and their prisoner is obliged to run between them; when each throws his hatchet at him; and if he passes through without being killed, he is permitted to live. In the important exercise, here recommended, each member of the class, after making some proficiency, memorizes and recites, a strong and powerful sentence, and the others try to put out, or break down, the one that is speaking, by all sorts of remarks, sounds, looks, and actions; tho' without touching him; and the gauntlet speaker, girds up the loins of his mind, and endeavors to keep the fountain of feeling higher than the streams: and so long, he is safe; but alas for him, that shrinks into himself, and yields to his opponents.

But this,—and ills severer—he sustains;
As gold—the fire, and, as unhurt remains:
When most reviled, altho' he feels the smart,
It wakes—to nobler deeds—the wounded heart.
The noble mind—unconscious of a fault,
No fortune's frown—can bend, or smiles—exalt:
Like the firm rock—that in mid-ocean—braves
The war of whirlwinds, and the dash of waves:
Or, like a tower—he lifts his head on high—
And fortune's arrows—far below him fly.

328. MOUTHING. Some—think that words are rendered more distinct, to large assemblies, by dwelling longer on the syllables; others, that it adds to the pomp and solemnity of public declamation, in which they think every thing must be different from private discourse. This is one of the vices of the stage, and is called theatrical, in opposition to what is natural. By "trippingly" on the tongue," Shakspeare probably means—the bounding of the voice from accent to accent; trippingly along from word to word, without resting on syllables by the way. And, by "mouthing," dwelling on syllables, that have no accent, and ought therefore to be pronounced as quickly as is consistent with a proper enunciation. Avoid an artificial air, and hold, as it were, the mirror up to nature. See the difference in the following, by pronouncing them with the accent, extending thro' the whole word, in a dawdling tone, and then, giving them properly: con-jec-ture, en-croach-ment. hap-pi-ness, grat-i-tude, for-tu-nate-ly; which is very far from true solemnity, which is in the spirit; not alone in the manner.

Anecdote. A student in college—carried a manuscript poem, of his own composition, to his tutor, for his inspection. The tutor, after looking it over, inquired the author's reason, for beginning every line with a capital letter, "Because it is poetry," said the student. "It is!" said the teacher, "I declare, I should not have thought it."

By frequent use—EXPERIENCE—gains its growth,
But knowledge—flies from laziness and sloth.

Proverbs. 1. Soft hands, and soft brains—generally go together. 2. Let time be the judge, and common sense the jury. 3. Cherish an ardent love of nature and of art. 4. The region beyond the grave, is not a solitary one. 5. Each night—is the past day's funeral: and each morn—its resurrection. 6. Better be exalted by humility, than brought low by exaltation. 7. Tight-lacing—is a gradual suicide, and tends to enkindle impure desires. 8. Good manners—are always becoming. 9. The candid man has nothing to conceal; he speaks nothing but truth. 10. Plato said—read much; but read not many books. 11. Marry in haste; repent at leisure. 12. If you will not keep, you cannot have. 13. Prune off useless branches.

Government. It is time that men should learn to tolerate nothing ancient, that reason does not respect, and to shrink from no novelty, to which reason may conduct. It is time that the human powers, so long occupied by subordinate objects and inferior arts, should mark the commencement of a new era in history, by giving birth to the art of improving government, and increasing the civil happiness of man. It is time, that legislators, instead of that narrow and dastardly coasting, which never ventures to lose sight of usage and precedent, should, guided by the polarity of reason, hazard a bolder navigation, and discover, in unexplored regions, the treasure of public felicity.

Varieties. 1. Did not Mr. Pitt, by the force of his eloquence, raise himself to be the prime minister of England? 2. A rick man's son—generally begins—where his father left off; and ends—where his father began—penniless. 3. A proneness to talk of persons, instead of things, indicates a narrow, and superficial mind.

The world—may scorn me, if they choose; I care
But little for their scuffings: I may sink
For moments; but I rise again, nor shrink
From doing—what the faithful heart inspires:
I will not flatter, fawn, nor crouch, nor wink
At what high mounted wealth, or power desires;
I have a LOFTIER aim—to which my soul aspires.

Be humble—learn thyself to scan;
Know—PRIDE—was never made for man.

6. Where there is emulation—there will be vanity; and where there is vanity, there will be folly. 7. Each man has his proper standard to fight under, and his peculiar duty to perform: one tribe's office—is not that of another: neither is the inheritance the same.

I wander—by the mountain's side,
Whose peaks—reflect the parting day,
Or stoop—to view the river glide
In silvery ripples—on its way.
The turf is green, the sky is blue,
The sombre trees—in silence rest,
Save where a songster—rustles through
The drooping foliage—to his nest;
Yet one thing—wants the pilgrim there—
A kindred soul, the scene to share.

329. REVISION. Before entering on a consideration of the Inflections, and other higher modifications of voice, the pupil is again earnestly solicited—to review all the principles, that have been brought forward; especially all that relates to Accent, Pauses, Emphasis, and the alphabet of music, or the eight notes; and, in this revision, be careful not to confound one principle with another; as stress with quantity, high sounds with loud ones, and low ones with feeble. Remember, that stress is a quick blow, or ick-tus of the voice; quantity—length of sound; high sounds—on, or above the sixth note; loud ones—hallooing; low sounds—on, or below the third note; feeble ones, softly, as from weakness. Practice the examples, till you make them fit you, and produce on yourselves and others, the desired effects.

330. I came to the place of my birth, and said; "The friends of my youth—where are they?" And echo answered,—"Where?" 2. When the Indians were solicited to emigrate to the West, they replied; What! shall we say, to the bones of our fathers—Arise! and go with us into a foreign land?

The truly lovely—

Are not the fair, who boast but of outward grace,
The nought, but beautiful of form and face;
They—are the lovely—THEY, in whom unite, [light,
Earth's fleeting charms—with virtue's HEAVENLY
Who, tho' they wither,—yet, with faded bloom—
Bear their all of sweetness—to the tomb.

Notes. 1. Such is the careless and ignorant manner in which many have been permitted to come up, instead of being brought up, that it will often be found necessary to use a variety of means to become divested of bad habits and their consequences. 2. Probably the lunge suffer more than any other part of the body, by being cooped up in a small cavity. To enlarge the chest, side-wise, practice the elevation of the elbows to a horizontal plane nearly level with the shoulders, and commence gently tapping the breast between the shoulders, the ends of the fingers of both hands being nearly together; and then, during the exercise, strike back from the sternum toward each shoulder, drawing the hands farther and farther apart, till the ends of the fingers reach the armpits, and even out on the arm, without depressing the elbows: try it, and you will see and know.

Anecdote. Flying To; not From. Some years ago, a person requested permission of the Bishop of Salisbury, in England, to fly from the spire of his church. The good bishop, with an anxious concern for the man's spiritual, as well as temporal safety, told him, he was very welcome to fly to the church; but he would encourage no one to fly from it.

THE BUTTERFLY.

Child of the sun! pursue thy rapturous flight,
Mingling with her thou lov'st—in fields of light;
And, where the flowers of Paradise unfold,
Quaff fragrant nectar—from their cups of gold,
There shall thy wings, rich as an evening sky,
Expand—and shut—in silent ecstasy.
Yet, wert thou once a worm, a thing, that crept
On the bare earth, then wrought a tomb, and slept;
And such—is man; soon, from his cell of clay,
To burst a seraph—in the blaze of day.

Proverbs. 1. Pride—is the greatest enemy to reason; and discretion—the great opposite of pride. 2. The wise—shape their apparel to the body; the proud—shape their body to their apparel. 3. A sound and vigorous mind, in a healthy body, is an invaluable possession. 4. Experience—is the mother of the arts. 5. He, is never tired of listening, who wishes to gain knowledge. 6. Better consider for a day, than repent for a year. 7. Economy—is the foundation of liberality, and the parent of independence. 8. Use no tobacco, if you would be decent, clean, and healthy. 9. The path of literature is more difficult, than that which leads to fortune. 10. That which is well done, is twice done. 11. Of a little—take a little. 12. A hasty man—never wants woe.

Providence. If a man lets his hand lie in the ice, it is highly probable Providence will ordain it to be frozen; or if he holds it in the fire, to be burnt. Those who go to sea, Providence will sometimes permit to be drowned; those, on the other hand, who never quit dry ground, Providence will hardly suffer to perish in the sea. It is therefore justly said, "Help yourself, and Heaven will help you." The truth is, that God has helped us from the beginning; the work of the master is completed; and, so far as it was intended to be so, perfect; it requires, therefore, no further extraordinary aids and corrections from above; its further development and improvement in this world is placed in our own hands. We may be good or bad, wise or foolish, not always perhaps in the degree which we, as individuals, might choose, were our wills perfectly free, but so far as the state of the human race, immediately preceding us, has formed us to decide.

Varieties. 1. Is animal, or human magnetism, true? 2. When the spirit is determined, it can do almost anything; therefore, never yield to discouragement in doing, or getting, what is good and true. 3. What temptation is greater, than permitting young persons, and especially young men, in this degenerate world, to handle much money, that is not their own. 4. Exhibit such an example in your dress, conversation, and temper, as will be worthy of imitation. 5. We often hear it said, "that people, and things, are changed." Is it not ourselves that have changed? The heart—makes all around, a mirror of itself.

REAL glory—

Springs from the silent conquest of ourselves,
And, without that—the conqueror is nought,
But the first slave.

7. Every word, spoken from affection, leaves an everlasting impression in the mind; every thought, spoken from affection, becomes a living creation; and the same also, if not spoken,—if it be fully assented to by the mind.

When the stem dies, the leaf, that grew
Out of its heart, must perish too.

331. EVERY emotion of the mind has its own external manifestation; so that no one emotion can be accommodated to another. Observe the native eloquence of a hungry child, when asking for a piece of bread and butter; especially, the third or fourth time; and mark its emphasis, and tones: also the qualities of voice, with which it expresses its grief, anger, joy, &c. The manner of each passion is entirely different; nor does it ever apply one for another; indeed, children in their own efforts, always make the proper emphasis, inflections, and gestures; and they are graceful in all, when under the sole influence of nature. Thus, from nature, unso-phisticated, may be derived the whole art of speaking. The author is free to acknowledge, that he has learned more about true eloquence, from children, and the Indians, and his consequent practice, than from all other sources.

332. CICERO—copied, and imitated, every body; he was the very mocking-bird of eloquence, which is his greatest distinction, and glory: for who so various as he; who so sweet, so powerful, so simply eloquent, or so magnificently flowing, and each, and all, by turns! His mind was a perfect pan-harmonicon. Your original writer,—your original character, has no sympathies; he is heart-bound, brain-bound and lip-bound; he is truly an oddity; he is like no-body, and no-body is like him; he feeds on self-adoration, or the adulation of fools; who mistake the oracles of pride and vanity, for the inspirations of genius.

333. There are some, even in this enlightened age, who affect to despise the acquisition of eloquence, and other important and useful accomplishments; but such persons are generally very awkward themselves, and dislike the application and practice, that are necessary to render them agreeable and impressive speakers. It is an old adage—that many—despise that, which they do not possess, and which they are too indolent to attain. Remember the fox and the grapes.

Anecdote. A colonel was once complaining, that from the ignorance, and inattention of the officers, he was obliged to do the whole duty of the regiment. Said he, "I am my own captain, my own lieutenant, my own cornet, and"—"Your own trumpeter," said a lady present.

NOW came still evening on, and twilight gray
Had, in her sober livery, all things clad.
Silence—accompanied; for beast, and bird,
They, to their grassy couch, these—to their nest
Were sunk, all, but the wakeful nightingale;
She, all night long, her amorous descant sung;
Silence—was piteas'd. Now glow'd the firmament
With living sapphires: Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length,
Apparent queen, unvail'd her peerless light,
And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw.

Proverbs. 1. A wise governor, would rather preserve peace, than gain a victory. 2. It is sometimes a benefit, to grant favors, and at other times, to deny them. 3. An angry person is angry with himself, when he returns to reason. 4. Wherever you are, conform to the usual customs and manners of the country. 5. To encourage the unworthy, is to promote vice. 6. Ingratitude to the benevolent—generally ends in disgrace. 7. Esteem virtue, tho' in a foe: abhor vice, tho' in a friend. 8. The more one speaks of himself, the less willing is he, to hear another talked about. 9. Nature—is always content with herself. 10. Form your opinions of a person, by his questions, rather than by his answers. 11. Say—can wisdom—e'er reside, with passion, envy, hate, or pride? 12. In a calm sea, every man is pilot. 13. A good life—keeps off wrinkles.

Debt. There is nothing—more to be dreaded, than debt: when a person, whose principles are good, unhappily falls into this situation, adieu to all peace and comfort. The reflection imbitters every meal, and drives from the eyelids refreshing sleep. It corrodes and cankers every cheerful idea; and, like a stern Cerberus, guards each avenue to the heart, so that pleasure does not approach. Happy! thrice happy! are those, who are blessed with an independent competence, and can confine their wants within the bounds of that competence, be it what it may. To such alone, the bread of life is palatable and nourishing. Sweet is the morsel, that is acquired by an honest industry, the produce of which is permanent, or that flows from a source which will not fail. A subsistence, that is precarious, or procured by an uncertain prospect of payment, carries neither wine nor oil with it. Let me, therefore, again repeat, that the person, who is deeply involved in debt, experiences, on earth, all the tortures, the poets describe to be the lot of the wretched inhabitants of Tartarus.

Varieties. 1. Is not a want of purity, the cause of the fickleness of mankind? 2. A man's character is like his shadow; which sometimes follows, and at others, precedes him; and which is occasionally longer, or shorter, than he is. 3. Admiration—signifies the reception and acknowledgment of a thing, in thought, and affection. 4. We should have good roads, if all the *sinner*s were set to mend them. 5. The world is a hive, that affords both sweets, and poisons, with many empty combs. 6. All earthly enjoyments are not what they appear; therefore, we should discriminate; for some are sweet in hopes, but, in fruition, sour. 7. Order—is the sweetest, most pacific, regular, and delightful melody: the first motion is one, and the end is one: the final end is the similitude of the beginning.

Self, alone, in nature—rooted fast,
Attends us first, and leaves us—last.

334. INFLECTIONS. These are the rising and falling slides of the voice, terminating on a higher, or lower pitch, than that on which it commenced; being continuous from the radical, or opening fullness of voice, to the vanish, or terminating point; and not discrete, as the seven notes are. In the intonations, the voice steps up or down, by discrete degrees; but in the inflections, it glides up or down, by continuous degrees. The piano, organ, &c., give discrete degrees; the harp, violin, &c., continuous degrees.

335. The following sentences may be read, with either the falling, or the rising inflection; and the pupil should determine, from the sense, &c., the object of the question. 1. Is not good reading and speaking a very rare attainment? 2. How are we to recover from the effects of the fall? 3. Are we naturally inclined to evil or good? 4. Is it possible for man to save himself? 5. Who is entitled to the more honor, Columbus, or Washington? 6. Which is the more useful member in society, the farmer, or the mechanic? 7. Ought there to be any restrictions to emigration? 8. Will any one, who knows his own heart, trust himself?

336. The inflections—may, perhaps, be better understood, by contrasting them with the monotone; which is nearly one continued sound, without elevation, or depression, and may be represented by a straight horizontal line, thus; —————. In the use of the inflections, the voice departs from the monotone, and its radical, in a continued elevation or depression, two, three, five, or eight notes, according to the intensity of the affirmation, interrogation, command, petition, or negation; which are the five distinctive attributes of the vital parts of speech.

337. SOME OF MAN'S CHARACTERISTICS. His position is naturally upright; he has free use of both hands: hence, he is called the only two-handed animal: the prominence of his chin, and the uniform length of his teeth, are peculiar: he is, physically, defenceless, having neither weapons of attack nor of defence: his facial angle is greater than that of any other animal; being from 70° to 90°: he has generally the largest brains: he is the only animal that sleeps on his back: the only one that laughs and wreps; the only one that has an articulate language, expressive of ideas: and he is the only one endued with reason and moral sense, and a capacity for religion; the only being capable of serving God intelligibly.

MILTON.

Thy soul—was like a star—and dwelt apart;
Thou hadst a voice—whose sound was like the sea,
Pure—as the naked heavens, majestic, free.
So didst thou travel—on life's common way,
In cheerful godliness; and yet—thy heart
The lowliest duties—on herself did lay.

Proverbs. 1. As you sow, you shall reap. 2. Betray no trust, and divulge no secret. 3. Chide not severely, nor punish hastily. 4. Despise none, and despair of none. 5. Envy cannot see; ignorance cannot judge. 6. Gossiping and lying, generally go hand in hand. 7. He, who swears, distrusts his own word. 8. It is not easy to love those, whom we do not esteem. 9. Labor brings pleasure; idleness—pain. 10. Many a true word is spoken in jest. 11. He who serves—is not free. 12. First come, first served. 13. When gold speaks, all tongues are silent.

Anecdote. Don't know him. Lord Nelson, when a boy, being on a visit to his aunt's, went one day a hunting, and wandered so far, that he did not return, till long after dark. The lady, who was much alarmed by his absence, scolded him severely; and among other things said; I wonder Fear did not drive you home. "Fear," replied the lad, "I don't know him."

Progress of Society. Whoever has attentively meditated—on the progress of the human race, cannot fail to discern, that there is now a spirit of inquiry amongst men, which nothing can stop, or even materially control. Reproach and obloquy, threats and persecution, will be in vain. They may im-bitter opposition and engender violence, but they cannot abate the keenness of research. There is a silent march of thought, which no power can arrest, and which, it is not difficult to foresee, will be marked by important events. Mankind were never before in the situation in which they now stand. The press has been operating upon them for several centuries, with an influence scarcely perceptible at its commencement, but by daily becoming more palpable, and acquiring accelerated force, it is rousing the intellect of nations; and happy will it be for them, if there be no rash interference with the natural progress of knowledge; and if by a judicious and gradual adaptation of their institutions to the inevitable changes of opinion, they are saved from those convulsions, which the pride, prejudices and obstinacy of a few may occasion to the whole.

Varieties. 1. A good wife—is like a snail. Why? Because she keeps in her own house: a good wife is not like a snail. Why? Because she does not carry her all on her back: a good wife is like a town clock. Why? Because she keeps good time: a good wife is not like a town clock. Why? Because she does not speak so loud, that all the town can hear her: a good wife is like an echo. Why? Because she speaks when spoken to: a good wife is not like an echo. Why? Because she does not tell—all she hears.

Ye maidens fair—consider well,
And look both shrewd, and sly,
Ere rev'rend lips, make good the knot,
Your teeth—will ne'er untie

338. INFLECTIONS. An anecdote may serve to present this important branch of our subject, in a light easy to be understood by all. An elderly gentleman asked the author, if he thought it possible for him to learn to sing? He was answered in the affirmative, provided he loved music, and was anxious to learn. His voice was quite flexible, and varied, in conversation, and he used all the notes of the scale, except two. It was thought, upon the spur of the moment, to get the old man a little angry, (and afterwards beg his pardon,) in order to induce him to slide his voice through the octave: the effort was successful; and with much feeling, he again asked, "Do you say sir, that (1) I—can learn to sing? an old man like me?" carrying his voice from the first to the eighth note, on I, sing, and me. Just then a friend came in, to whom he observed, with incredulous surprise, mingled with a little contempt,—"He says I can learn to sing:" and his voice fell from the eighth to the first note, on I.

339. No one can read the following sentence of ors, even in the common manner, without any regard to inflections, and not give the word before or, the rising inflection, and the one after it, the falling inflection; and the reader's ear must be the judge. Good, or bad; true, or false; right, or wrong; this, or that; boy, or girl; man, or woman; male, or female; land, or water; over, or under; above, or below; before, or behind; within, or without; old, or young; strength, or weakness; fine, or coarse; one, or two; you, or I; well, or ill; kind, or unkind; black, or white; red, or green; rough, or smooth; hard, or soft; straight, or crooked; long, or short; round, or square; fat, or lean; swift, or slow; up, or down. If the reader does not satisfy himself the first time, let him practice on these phrases till he does.

340. READING. The purposes of reading are three: the acquisition of knowledge, assisting the memory in treasuring it up, and the communication of it to others: hence, we see the necessity of reading aloud. The ancient Greeks never read in public, but recited from memory; of course, if we wish to succeed as they did, we must follow in their footsteps. How much better it would be, if clergymen would memorize those portions of the Bible, which they wish to read in public! But it may be said, that the task would be a severe one: true, but how much more effect might be produced on themselves and others: and then to have a large part, or the whole, of that blessed book, stored up in the mind, for use here and hereafter!

The business that we love, we raise betime.
And go to—with delight.

Proverbs. 1. The remedy is often worse than the disease. 2. To him that wills, ways are seldom wanting. 3. A well-balanced mind—will resist the pressure of adversity. 4. Be always on your guard, against the advices of the wicked, when you come in contact with them. 5. Blessed is he, that readeth, and understandeth what he readeth. 6. Take it for granted, there can be no excellence, without labor. 7. The rich man is often a stranger to the quiet and content of the poor man. 8. Beware of gathering scorpions, for this, or the future world. 9. There is no general rule, without exceptions. 10. Every light—is not the sun. 11. Never be angry—at what you cannot help.

Anecdote. Use of Falsehood. A jury, which was directed by the Judge, to bring in a certain prisoner guilty, on his own confession and plea, returned a verdict of "Not Guilty;" and offered, as a reason, that they knew the fellow to be so great a liar, they did not believe him.

Talent. One man, perhaps, proves miserable in the study of the law, who might have flourished in that of physic, or divinity; another—runs his head against the pulpit, who might have been serviceable to his country at the plough; and a third—proves a very dull and heavy philosopher, who possibly would have made a good mechanic, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or anvil.

Varieties—in the Uses of Inflections. 1. Is genuine repentance founded in love, or fear? 2. Can we intentionally offend a person, whom we truly love? 3. Have not angelic, as well as satanic beings, once been men, and women, on some of the countless earths in the universe? 4. Has any one actual sin, till he violates the known will of God, and wilfully sins against his own conscience? 5. How can the Red man be forgotten, while so many of the states, territories, mountains, rivers and lakes, bear their names? 6. Since decision of character can be acquired by discipline, what is the best method to acquire it! The firm resolve—to obtain that knowledge, necessary for a choice, and then to do what we know to be right, at any, and every peril. 7. What places are better adapted than theatres, in their present degradation, to teach the theory and practice of fashionable iniquity? 8. What is a more faithful, or pleasant friend, than a good book?

When you mournfully rivet—your tear-laden eyes,

That have seen the last sunset of hope—pass away,

On some bright orb, that seems, through the still sapphire sky,
In beauty and splendor, to roll on its way:

Oh remember, this earth, if beheld from afar,

Would seem wrapt in a halo—as clear and as bright

As the pure silver radiance—enshrining you star,

Where your spirit—is eagerly soaring to-night.

And at this very moment, perhaps, some poor heart,

That is aching and breaking in that distant sphere,

Gazes down on this dark world, and longs to depart

From its own diurnal home, to a brighter one here.

341. THE RISING INFLECTION ('). This indicates that the voice glides upward continuously, on the more important words. Ex. Do you say that I can learn to sing? Are you going to town to-day? Is he a good mán? Do you love and practice the truth? Is it your desire to become úseful? Do you wish to become a good réader, spíaker, and sínger? Is there not a difference between wóords, thóughts, and féelings?

342. THREE MODES OF EXISTENCE. May we not appropriately contemplate our bodies, and our minds, as consisting of three degrees, each having its own legitimate sphere? Is not each like a three story hoúse, with three successive suits of apartments, which may be called—the lower, the middle and the upper? Are there not three vital degrees of the body, the abdominal, the thoracic, and the encephalic? And does not the mind consist of as many degrees, called scientific, rational and afféctuous? or, natural, spirítual and heavénly? Is there not in us, as it were, a ladder reaching from earth to heavén? Shall we not ascend, and descend upon it, and thus take a view of both the worlds in which we live! But will not the material part soon die, and the soul—live forev'er? Then does not wísdom say, attend to each, according to its importánce? Are we not wonderfully made? Doth our soul know it right well? And will we praise our Redeemer, by doing his will?

343. On examining children, in an unpérverted state, and all animals, it will invariably be found, that they use the lower muscles for breathing, and producing sounds. Who is not aware that children will halloo, all day long, without becoming hóarse, or exhausted? And how often it is the case, that parents wish their children to call persons at a distance, being aware that they have themselves lost the power to speak as formerly. Now all that is necessary to be done, by such individuals, is to retrace their steps to truth and nature. Remember, that examples, in this art especially, are better than precepts: rules are to prevent faults, not to introduce beauties; therefore, become so familiar with them, that they may govern your practice involuntarily.

Anecdote. Gold Pills. Dr. Goldsmith, having been requested by a wife, to visit her husband, who was melancholy, called upon the patient, and seeing that the cause was poverty, told him he would send him some pills, which he had no doubt would prove efficacious. He immediately went home, put ten guineas into a paper, and sent them to the sick man: the remedy had the desired effect.

Suspicion—overturns—what confidence—builds;
And he, who dares but doubt when there's no ground,
Is neither to himself, nor others—sound.

Proverbs. 1. Good manners are sure to procure respect. 2. Self-conceit makes opinion obstinate. 3. Knowledge is the mind's treasure. 4. Make the best of a bad bargain. 5. Never speak to deceive, nor listen to betray. 6. Passion—is ever the enemy of truth. 7. Prefer loss, to unjust gain; and solid sense, to wit. 8. Quit not certainty for hope. 9. Rejoice in the truth, and maintain it. 10. Seek not after the failings of others. 11. Might—does not make right. 12. Divinity—cannot be defined. 13. Deride not the unfortunate.

Philosophy. Philosophy, so far from deserving contempt, is the glory of human nature. Man approaches, by contemplation, to what we conceive of celestial purity and excellence. Without the aid of philosophy, the mass of mankind, all over the terraqueous globe, would have sunk in slavery and superstition,—the natural consequences of gross ignorance. Men, at the very bottom of society, have been enabled, by the natural talents they possessed, seconded by favorable opportunities, to reach the highest improvements in philosophy; and have thus lifted up a torch in the valley, which has exposed the weakness and deformity of the castle on the mountain, from which the oppressors sallied, in the night of darkness, and spread desolation with impunity. Despots: the meanest, the basest, the most brutal and ignorant of the human race, who would have trampled on the rights and happiness of men unresisted, if philosophy had not opened the eyes of the sufferers, shown them their own power and dignity, and taught them to despise those giants of power, as they appeared thro' the mists of ignorance, who ruled a vassal world with a mace of iron. Liberty—is the daughter of philosophy; and they who detest the offspring, do all that they can to vilify and discountenance the mother.

Varieties. 1. What is humility, and what are its effects? 2. Vice—stings us, even in our pleasures; but virtue—consolates us, even in our pains. 3. Cowards—die many times; the valiant—never taste of death but once. 4. True friendship is like sound health; the value of it is seldom known till it is lost. 5. Young folks tell what they do; old ones, what they have done; and fools, what they will do. 6. Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues, we write in sand. 7. The natural effects of (4) fidelity, (5) clemency and (6) kindness, in governors, are peace, good-will, order and esteem, on the part of the governed. 8. Never make yourself too little for the sphere of duty; but stretch, and expand yourself to the compass of its objects. 9. (4) Friends, (5) Romans, (6) countrymen—lend me your ears; I come to bury Cesar, not to praise him. 10. All truths—are but forms of heavenly loves; and all falsities—are the forms of infernal loves.

If you would excel in arts, excel in industry.

344. INFLECTIONS. One very encouraging feature of our interesting subject is, that all our principles are drawn from nature, and are therefore inherent in every one; the grand design is to develop our minds and bodies in accordance with these principles; which can be done, not by silently reading the work, or thinking about its contents; but, by patient, persevering practice: this, only, can enable us to overcome our bad habits, and bring our voices, words, and mind into harmony, so that the externals may perfectly correspond to the internals.

345. 1. Is there aught, in eloquence—that can warm the heart? She draws her fire from natural imagery. Is there aught in poetry—to enliven the imagination? There—is the secret of her power. 2. Do you love to gaze at the (3) sun, the (4) moon, and the (6) planets? This affection contains the science of ASTRONOMY, as the seed—contains the future tree. Would a few pence—duty, on tea, for raising a revenue, have ruined the fortunes of any of the Americans? No! but the payment of one penny, on the principle it was demanded, would have made them—slaves.

346. INVALIDS—will find the principle, and practice, here set forth, of great service to them, if they possess the strength, and have the resolution, to adopt them; and they will often derive special aid by attempting to do something: for the mind, by a determination of the will, can be brought to act upon the nervous system, in such a way, as to start the flow of the blood on its career of health, and strength; and, ere they are aware of it, they will be ready to mount up as with the wings of an eagle, and leave all care, and trouble, and anxiety on the earth. Let them try it, and they will see: persevere.

Anecdote. The Cobbler. A cobbler, at Leyden, who used to attend the public disputations, held at the academy, was once asked if he understood Latin. “No,” replied the mechanic, “but I know who is wrong in the argument.” “How?” replied his friend. “Why, by seeing who is angry first.”

Lift up thine eyes, afflicted soul!

From earth—lift up thine eyes,

Though dark—the evening shadows roll,

And daylight beauty—dies;

One sun is set—a thousand more

Their rounds of glory run,

Where science leads thee—to explore

In every star—a sun.

Thus, when some long-loved comfort ends,

And nature would despair,

Faith—to the heaven of heavens ascends,

And meets ten thousand there;

First, faint and small, then, clear and bright,

They gladden all the gloom,

And stars, that seem but points of light,

The rank of suns assume.

Proverbs. 1. The body contains the working tools of the mind; master your tools, or you will be a bad workman. 2. Here, and there; or, this world, and the next, is a good subject for reflection. 3. An artist lives everywhere. 4. The body—is the image, or type, of the soul; and the soul is visible, only through it. 5. Never refuse a good offer, in hopes of a better one; the first is certain; the last is only hope. 6. A promiscuous and superficial study of books, seldom yields much solid information. 7. Thou’ ruin ensue, justice must not be infringed. 8. Those things become us best, that appertain to our situation in life. 9. Prosperity—intoxicates and disturbs the mind: adversity—subdues and ameliorates it. 10. The strongest symptoms of wisdom in us, is being sensible of our follies. 11. A good man—is not an object of fear. 12. Friendship—is stronger than kindred. 13. Sin is sin, whether seen or not.

Duelling. We read, in Swedish history, that Adolphus, king of Sweden, determining to suppress these false notions of honor, issued a severe edict against the practice. Two gentlemen, however, generals in his service, on a quarrel, agreed to solicit the king’s permission, to decide their difference by the laws of honor. The king consented, and said, he would be present at the combat. He was attended by a body of guards and the public executioner, and before they proceeded to the onset, he told these gentlemen, that they must fight till one of them died. Then, turning to the executioner, he added, do you immediately strike off the head of the survivor. This had the intended effect; the difference between the two officers was adjusted, and no more challenges were heard of in the army of Gustavus Adolphus.

Varieties. 1. Oh! who can describe woman’s love, or woman’s constancy. 2. Can the immortality of the soul be proved from the light of nature? 3. If the sculptor could put life into his works, would he not resemble a good orator? 4. Can we be too zealous in promoting a good cause? 5. Are miracles the most convincing evidences of truth? 6. Is it not very hard to cherish unkind feelings, and thoughts, without showing them in unkind words and actions? 7. Are theatres—beneficial to mankind? 8. Ought any thing be received, without due examination? 9. Do you wish to know the persons, against whom you have most reason to guard yourself? your looking-glass will reveal him to you. 10. If a man is in earnest, would you therefore call him a fanatic.

They are sleeping! Who are sleeping?

Captives, in their gloomy cells;

Yet sweet dreams are o’er them creeping,

With their many-colored spells.

All they love—again they clasp them;

Feel again—their long-lost joys;

But the haste—with which they grasp them,

Every fairly form destroys.

347. THE FALLING INFLECTION (') indicates that the voice glides downwards, continuously, on the more important words. 1. "Where are you going?" 2. Of what are you thinking? 3. Who sendeth the early and the latter rain? 4. What things are most proper for youth to learn? Those that they are to practice, when they enter upon the stage of action. 5. Be always sure you are right, then go ahead." 6. Begin; be bold,—and venture to be wise: He who defers this work, from day to day, Does on a river's brink expecting, stay, Till the whole stream, that stopt him, shall be gone,—That runs, and runs, and ever will run on. 7. I do not so much request, as demand your attention. 8. Seek the truth for its own sake, and out of love for it; and when found, embrace it, let it cut where it will; for it is all powerful, and must prevail.

348. Never begin, or end, two successive sentences on the same pitch: neither two lines in poetry; nor two members of a sentence; nor two words meaning different things; if you do, it will be monotonous. The 3d, 4th, or 5th note is the proper pitch for commencing to read or speak; the force must be determined by the occasion, the size of the room, the scene, &c. If we are in the middle of the pitches, we can rise or fall according to circumstances; but if we begin too high, or too low, we shall be liable to extremes. Look at those of the audience at a medium distance, and you will not greatly err in pitch.

349. MENTAL PHILOSOPHY—treats of the faculties of the human mind; their laws and actions, with a general reference to their use and cultivation. It teaches, that the two constituents of mind—are the WILL and the UNDERSTANDING; the former is the receptacle of all our affections, good, or evil; the latter, of all our thoughts, true or false. Phrenology—may be considered, to a certain extent, as the highway to the philosophy of mind; but it is not a sure guide, being founded on the philosophy of effects, instead of that of causes; as is the case with all the sciences: hence, it cannot be depended on. To judge righteously of the subject of mind, we must have the whole man; which involves phrenology, physiology, and psychology: all of which must be seen in the light of TRUTH, natural, and spiritual.

Anecdote. Rhymetry. When queen Elizabeth visited the town of Falkenstene, the inhabitants employed their parish clerk—to versify their address: the mayor, on being introduced, with great gravity mounted a three legged stool, and commenced his poetical declamation thus:—"O mighty queen, Welcome to Falkenstene!" Elizabeth burst out in a loud roar of laughter; and, without giving his worship time to recover himself, she replied, "You great fool, Get off that stool."

Keep company with the wise and good.

Proverbs. 1. Speech—is the image of action. 2. Superstition—is the spleen of the soul. 3. Suspect a tale-bearer, and trust him not. 4. Suspicion—is the passion of true friendship. 5. Sweet are the slumbers of the virtuous. 6. Safe is he, who serves a good conscience. 7. Never do a mean action. 8. Set not too high a value on your own abilities. 9. Simple diet makes healthy children. 10. Sneer not at that you cannot rival. 11. The best answer to a slander—is silence. 12. Vice—is infamous in every body.

Compassion. Compassion—is an emotion, of which we ought never to be ashamed. Gracious, particularly in youth, is the tear of sympathy, and the heart, that melts at the tale of wo; we should not permit ease and indulgence to contract our affections, and wrap us up in a selfish enjoyment. But we should accustom ourselves to think of the distresses of human life, of the solitary cottage, the dying parent, and the weeping orphan. Nor ought we ever to sport with pain and distress, in any of our amusements, or treat even the meanest insect with wanton cruelty.

Varieties. 1. What does the tree of life signify, and what the knowledge of good and evil, and what the eating from them? 2. What heaps of the ruins of a former world, are piled up to form the stratum, and surface, of the one we inhabit? 3. Why is the Caucasian, or European race, so migratory and unsettled in its habits and propensities, while the African race seems disposed to stay at home, contented, and happy? 4. Where, in the brain, is the determination of the mind, when we think intensely? Is it not where phrenologists locate causality? 5. Why is the eye used to represent wisdom? 6. Who knoweth, (says Solomon,) the spirit of man, that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast, that goeth downward? 7. Why is a circle—used to represent eternity?

THE DYING CHRISTIAN TO HIS SOUL.

Vital spark—of heav'nly flame!

Quit, oh quit this mortal frame;

Trembling, hoping, ling'ring, flying,

Oh, the pain, the bliss—of dying!

Cease, fond nature, cease thy strife,

And let me languish—into life.

Hark! they whisper; angels say,

"Sister spirit, come away."

What is this—absorbs me quite;

Steals my senses,—shuts my sight,

Drowns my spirits,—draws my breath!

Tell me, my soul, can this—be death?

The world recedes; it disappears!

Heav'n—opens on my eyes! my ears

With sounds seraphic ring:—

Lend, lend your wings! I mount! I fly!

O grave! where—'is thy victory?

O death! where—'is thy sting?

I hate to see—a shabby look,

With half the leaves—torn out,

And used, as if its owner—thought

'Twere made—to toss about.

350. INFLECTIONS. The reader sees that the rising inflection is used, when questions are asked, that may be answered by yes, or no; also, in cases of doubt and uncertainty; and that the falling inflection is used, when questions are asked that are not thus answered; and in all cases of strong affirmation. Some authors seem not to have noticed the distinction between a rising inflection of the voice, and a simple suspension of it, when there is a continuation of the sense. Let us not rely too much on the inflections, to enable us to give variety, but on the different *pitch*es of voice: the former gives artificial variety, and the latter, a natural one.

351. 1. Accustom yourself to submit, on all occasions, (even in the most minute, as well as the most important circumstances in life,) to a small, présent evil, to obtain a greater, distant good. This will give decision, tone, and energy to the mind; which, thus disciplined, will often reap victory—from defeat, and honor—from repulse. Having acquired this invaluable habit of rational preference, and just appreciation, start for the prize that endureth forever. 2. The man, whose house is on fire, cries—Fire! FIRE!! FIRE!!! with the falling inflection: but the roguish boy, who would raise a false alarm, cries, Fire, fire, fire, with the rising inflection. 3. This is an (5) open, (4) honorable challenge; why are you (6) silent? Why do you (5) prevàriate? I (6) insist upon this point; I (5) urge you to it: (4) press it; nay, I (3) demand—it.

352. THE END, the CAUSE and the EFFECT, are the three distinct things, which follow each other in regular and successive order; for every thing, in this world, and in the other, proceeds according to these degrees: hence, intelligence—properly consists in knowing and distinguishing them, and seeing them in their order. Illustration: the end of man is the love of his will; for what one loves, he proposes and intends: the cause with him is the reason or the understanding; for the end, by means of the reason, seeks for mediates, or efficient causes: and the effect is the operation of the body from, and according to, them. When these three are exhibited in act, the end is inwardly in the cause, and thro' the cause in the effect; wherefore, they co-exist in the effect. Hence, the propriety of judging every one—by his works; that is, by his fruits: for the end, or the love of the will, and the cause, or the reason of his understanding, are together in the effects; which three constitute the whole man.

Oh how poor

Seems the rich gift of genius, when it lies,
Like the adventurous vulture, with its eyes cast down
His strength—upon the sea, ambition-wrecked—
A thing—the thrush might pity, as she sits,
Brooding in quiet, on her lowly nest.

Proverbs. 1. Through the ear, we must find access to the heart. 2. Hunger makes every kind of food acceptable. 3. Death—is the finishing stroke in the picture of life. 4. The remembrance of labors performed, and difficulties overcome, is always agreeable. 5. The labors of the student are sweeter, the farther he proceeds; because his heart is in them. 6. Always yield to the truth. 7. The improvement of the mind is of the first importance. 8. Beware of going into the way of temptations: many have been ruined, merely by looking on, to see how others do. 9. Tricks and treachery are the practice of fools. 10. The proper study of mankind—is man. 11. Promote virtuous communication. 12. An ape—is ridiculous by nature; men—by art and study. 13. Flattery—is a very fashionable art.

Anecdote. Old Habits. The duke de Nivernois was acquainted with the countess de Rochefort, and never omitted going to see her a single evening. As she was a widow and he a widower, one of his friends observed to him, it would be more convenient for him to marry that lady. "I have often thought so," said he, "but one thing prevents me; in that case, where should I spend my evenings?"

Promises. If promises—from man to man have force, why not from man to woman? Their very weakness is the charter of their power, and they should not be injured because they can't return it.

Varieties. Educational Questions. 1. What are the rights and duties of the family, and of society at large, respecting the education of children? 2. To what sort and degree of education can any human individual, as such, lay claim, independently of fortune, or any other distinction? 3. How far should the education of a child be regulated, according to his natural capacities, and how far should external circumstances be permitted to affect it? 4. What are the chief obstacles to a more general education of the poor; and what are the leading errors committed in this greatest of all charities, so far as it extends at present? 5. What are the chief errors committed in the education of the wealthier classes, and by what means can the education of both poor and rich be made to produce, in the course of time, a more harmonious state of society? 6. How far, hitherto, has Christianity been allowed to influence education, and by what means can the difficulties, arising from discrepancies among Christians, be obviated in it? 7. Who will satisfactorily answer these important questions?

—“From the birth
Of mortal man, the sov'reign Maker said,
Thou art in ambition, nor in brief delight,
Not in the fading echoes of renown,
Power's purple robes, nor pleasure's flowery lap,
The soul—can find enjoyment; but from these Turning, disdainful, to an equidistant
Thro' all th' ascent of things—enlarge her view,
Till every bound—at length—shall disappear,
And infinite perfection—close the scene.”

352. PRECEDING PRINCIPLES. The sooner the pupil begins to rely upon his own resources and experience, the better; and he should not forget, that he must make himself an elocutionist. Hence, the importance of his seeing, rationality, and feeling, in his inmost soul, the truth, or falsehood, of the principles here unfolding. Let every example be thoroughly mastered; and, to prevent the growth of bad habits, in reading, speaking and singing, let him often review; as well as pay special attention to the varieties of illustration, that are to be found on every page.

353. 1. It is too late—to urge objections—against universal education; for the fountains—of the great deep—are broken up, and a flood of information, (4) theological, (5) scientific, (4) civil, and (6) literary, is carrying all before it; filling up the valleys, and scaling the (6) mountain-tops: a spirit of inquiry has gone forth, and sits brooding—on the mind of man. 2. Music—should be cultivated, not as a mere sensual gratification; but, as a means of elevating, and improving the affections; ennobling, purifying, and exalting, the whole man. 3. Beware—of a remorseless thirst for the acquisition of riches; rather—than deliver up yourself in execrable devotion to Mammon, mount the ladder of the most dangerous ambition,—even tho' it were planted on the precipice, and leaned against a cloud.

354. POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY—includes all theories and general views of government, with a description of the forms, and the principles on which they are founded, and the modes in which they are administered. This study rests on the basis of natural law, or justice; and therefore, presupposes a knowledge of ethics; it requires enlarged and elevated views of human nature, and the constitution of society; with the means by which virtue may be diffused, justice enforced, and order preserved throughout the community: it is alike important to the statesman, the legislator, and the private citizen.

Anecdote. Howard's Opinion of Swearers. As he was standing, one day, near the door of a printing-office, he heard some dreadful volleys of oaths and curses from a public house opposite, and, buttoning his parked up before he went in the street, he said to the workmen near him, "I always do this whenever I hear men swear, as I think that any one, who can take God's name in vain, can also steal, or do anything else that is bad." Hope, of all passions, most befriends us here: Passions of prouder name—befriend us less. Joy—has her tears, and transport—has her death: Hope, like a cordial, innocent, though strong, Man's heart, at once, inspirits—and serenes.

Proverbs. 1. Perseverance—overcomes all difficulties. 2. Instruction, by example, is quick and effectual. 3. We are only in the morning starlight of the arts and sciences. 4. Knowledge is not obtained in a moment. 5. Apollo's bow—was not always bent. 6. Reason—is not the test of truth: it is only the organ, through which we see truth. 7. No one is so well qualified to rule, as he, who knows how to obey. 8. Beauty—is like the flower of spring: but virtue—is like the stars of heaven. 9. Vain persons are fond of fine things. 10. Respect, and contempt, spoil many a one. 11. Some—outlive their reputation. 12. When sorrow is asleep, wake it not.

Laconics. And what was it, fellow-citizens, which gave to our La Fayette his spotless fame? The love of liberty. What—has consecrated his memory—in the hearts of good men? The love of liberty. What—nerved his youthful arm with strength, and inspired him in the morning of his days, with sagacity and counsel? The living love of liberty. To what—did he sacrifice power, and country, and freedom itself? To the horror of licentiousness; to the sanctity of plighted faith; to the love of liberty protected by law. Thus, the great principle of your revolutionary fathers, of your pilgrim sires, the great principle of the age, was the rule of his life: The love of liberty—protected by law.

Varieties. 1. When a lady receives the addresses of a gentleman, who is in the habit of tiptling, how is she to determine, to what extent his protestations should be set down to himself, and how much passed to the credit of ardent spirits? In other words, how much is of love, and how much of alcohol? Suppose she test it, by the pledge of total abstinence?

'Tis not the face,—'tis not the form.—

'Tis not the heart—however warm;

It is not these, tho' all combined,

That wins true love:—it is the mind

Canst thou believe thy prophet.—(or, what is more.)

That Power, which made thee. (8) AND thy prophet,

Will (with impunity.) let pass that breach

Of sacred faith, given to the royal Greek?

How (3) poor! how (6) rich! how (4) albeit!

How (9) august! how (4) complicate! how (2) wonderful is man

How (6) passing, He, who made him such! and Centered in his make—such strange extremes!

What can preserve my life? or what destroy?

An (6) angel's arm—can't snatch me from my grave:

Legions of angels—can't confine me there.

My mother's voice! how often—creeps

Its cadence—o'er my lonely hours,

Like healing—sent on wings of sleep,

Or dew—to the unconscious flowers.

I can't forget her melting prayer,

Even while my pulses—madly fly;

And in the still, unbroken air,

Her gentle tones come—stealing by;

And years, and sins, and manhood flee,

And leave me—at my mother's knee!

355. These Inflections may pass through 2, 3, 5, or 8 notes, according to the intensity of the feeling. Ex. 1. "Do you say, that [1 I'3] can learn to sing! 2. Do you say that [1 I'5] can learn to sing? 3. What! do you say that [1 I'8] can learn to sing!" Reverse the inflection; begin at the top, and go down. 4. He said [8 "T 1] can learn to sing, not you!" Thus, you see that the voice may step up or down, by discrete degrees, or glide up and down, by continuous degrees. 5. "To whom the goblin, full of wrath, replied: (1) Art thou that (3) traitor (4) angel? (8) art thou he who first broke peace in heaven, and (6) faith, till then (8) UNBROKEN? (9) BACK to thy punishment—false fugitive, and to thy speed add wings; lest with a whip of scorpions, I pursue thy ling'ring; or with one stroke of this dart, strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before." In speaking this sentence, use all the eight notes.

356. In reading the first example, the voice glides from the first to the third note; because there is no feeling: in reading the second, the voice glides from the first to the fifth note; because there is some feeling, and consequent earnestness; and in the third example, the voice glides from the tonic, to the octave; because there is a great deal of feeling: in the fourth example, the voice begins at the top, or eighth note, and glides down to the first; because there is a consequent change of thought and action. In the fifth example, the voice commences at 1, in a harsh tone, and goes on gradually ascending to angel; then it recedes, and then goes on rising still higher on faith, and highest on unbroken; when it begins to descend, in an unyielding and gradual way, to the close, in a manner that no words can describe.

357. Do not the bees, (says Quintillian) extract honey from very different flowers and juices? Is it any wonder that Eloquence, (which is one of the greatest gifts heaven has given to man,) requires many arts to perfect it! and tho' they do not appear in an oration, nor seem to be of any use, they nevertheless afford an inward supply of strength, and are silently felt in the mind: without all these a man may be eloquent, but I wish to form an orator; and none can be said to have all the requisites, while the smallest thing is wanting.

Anecdote. Good Works. The Russian ambassador at Paris, made the Abbe L'Epee a visit, and offered him a large sum of money through the munificence of the empress. The Abbe declined, saying, "I receive gold of no one; but if the empress will send me a deaf and dumb person to educate, I shall consider it a more flattering mark of distinction."

Proverbs. 1. An evil heart—can make any doctrine false, in its own view. 2. Bad books are fountains of vice. 3. Comply cheerfully, when necessity enjoins it. 4. Despair—blunts the edge of industry. 5. Double-dealing—is the index of a base spirit. 6. Every vice wars against nature. 7. Friendship—is often stronger than kindred. 8. Good intentions—will not justify evil actions. 9. In order to learn, we must pay undivided attention. 10. Mental gifts—often hide bodily infirmities. 11. Lawing—is very costly. 12. The world is his, who enjoys it. 13. Poverty—is often an evil counsellor.

Despotism. All despotism, whether usurped or hereditary, is our abhorrence. We regard it as the most grievous wrong and insult to the human race. But, towards the hereditary despot—we have more of compassion than indignation. Nursed and bro't up in delusion, worshiped from his cradle, never spoken to in the tone of fearless truth, taught to look on the great mass of his fellow-beings as an inferior race, and to regard despotism as a law of nature, and a necessary element of social life; such a prince, whose education and condition almost deny him the possibility of acquiring healthy moral feeling and manly virtue, must not be judged severely. Still, in absolving the despot—from much of the guilt, which seems at first, to attach to his unlawful and abused power, we do not the less account despotism a wrong and a curse. The time for its fall, we trust, is coming. It cannot fall too soon. It has long enough wrung from the laborer his hard earnings; long enough squandered a nation's wealth on its parasites and minions; long enough warred against the freedom of the mind, and arrested the progress of truth. It has filled dungeons enough—with the brave and good, and shed enough of the blood of patriots. Let its end come. It cannot come too soon.

Varieties. 1. What is education, and what are the best means for obtaining it? 2. Why are diamonds valuable? because of their scarcity? 3. Why are professional men in different poets? is it because, as the boundaries of science enlarge, the empire of imagination is diminished? 4. In what does true honor consist? 5. Tamerlane boasted, that he governed men by four great arts; viz: bribery, amusement, diversion, and suspense: are there no Tamalanes now, think you? 6. Is there any alliance between genius and poverty? 7. If we leave the path of duty, shall we not be liable to run into the path of danger? 8. Are there not some, who would make void the word of God, by their own traditions? 9. Is it not a most important part of a teacher's duty, to imbue the minds of his pupils, with the love of all goodness and truth?

358. The Inflections have great influence in expressing, or perverting the sense, according as they are correctly or incorrectly made. 1. In the retirement of a COLLEGE—I am unable to suppress evil thoughts; how difficult then, to do it, amidst the world's temptations! 2. The man who is in the daily use of ardent (6) spirits, (4) if he should not become a (3) drunkard, (6) is in danger of losing his (5) health, and (6) character. The rising inflection on drunkard, would imply that he must become one, to preserve his health and character.

359. Apply the principles to the following, according to the feelings and thoughts, and their objects. 1. But (5) mercy—is (6) above—this separated sway; (4) it is enthroned—in the (5) hearts of kings; it is an (6) attribute—(1) of God himself.

Love, hope,—and joy, fair Pleasure's smiling train;
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of Pain;
These, mixed with art, and to due bounds confined,
Make —and maintain —the balance of the mind.

He knew—

How to make madness—beautiful, and cast,
(O'er erring deeds, and thoughts,) a heavenly hue
Of words, like sunbeams, dazzling (as they passed,)
The eyes, which o'er them shed tears, feelingly, and fast.

Thy words—had such a melting flow,
And spoke of truth—so sweetly well,
They dropped—(like heaven's serenest snow.)
And all was (6) brightness,—where they fell.

360. INDUCING DISEASE. There is no doubt, that the seed of a large number of diseases are sown in childhood and youth; and especially in our progress in obtaining what is called, an EDUCATION. The bad habits of position in and out of school, and our unhealthy mode of living, contribute very essentially to the promotion of various diseases; particularly, dyspepsia, liver and lung complaints, and headaches. Hence, we cannot be too watchful against sitting in a crooked position, nor too prudent in eating, drinking, and sleeping, as well as in our clothing, and our lodging apartments. Let us put forth every effort in the performance of our duties, be they physical, intellectual, or moral.

Anecdote. A Swiss Retort. A French officer, quarrelling with a Swiss, reproached him with his country's vice of fighting on either side for money; "while we Frenchmen," said he, "fight for honor." "Yes, sir," replied the Swiss, "every one fights for that he most wants."

Called a blessing to inherit,
Bless, and richer blessings merit;
Give, and more shall yet be given:
Love, and serve, and look for Heaven.

Would being end—with our expiring breath,
How soon misfortune would be puffed away!
A trifling shock—shrives us to the dust;
But the existence—of the immortal soul,
Futurity's dark road—perplexes still.

Proverbs. 1. The best way to see Divine light—is to put out our own. 2. The proud—shall be abased; but the humble—shall be exalted. 3. As long as you and truth agree, you will do well. 4. No one is born for himself alone, but for the world. 5. Rely not too much on the torches of others; light one of your own. 6. Divest yourself of envy, and lay aside all unkind feelings. 7. If youth knew what age would crave, it would both crave and save. 8. A speaker, without energy, is like a lifeless statue. 9. Deep—and intense feeling—lie at the root of eloquence. 10. Condemn no one, without a candid hearing. 11. Think more, and speak less. 12. Follow the dictates of reason.

Half-Murder. That father, says the learned Baudier, who takes care to feed and clothe his son, but neglects to give him such accomplishments as befit his capacity and rank in life, is more than half his murderer; since he destroys the better part, and but continues the other to endure a life of shame. Of all the men we meet with, nine out of ten are what they are, good or evil, useful or not, by their education; it is that, which makes the great difference in mankind: the little, or almost insensible, impressions on our tender infancy, have very important and lasting consequences.

Varieties. 1. Send your son into the world with good principles, good habits, and a good education, and he will work his way. 2. How absurd to be passionate yourself, and expect others to be placid. 3. Why is swearing—like a ragged coat? because it is a very bad habit. 4. Can there be any virtue, without true piety? 5. Why is rebellion—like drum-drinking? because it is inimical to the constitution. 6. Why do white sheep—furnish more wool than black ones? because there are more of them. 7. Why is one who is led astray, like one who is governed by a girl? Do you give it up? because he is mised, (Miss-led.) 8. Ought there not to be duties on imported goods, to encourage domestic manufactures? 9. Are not physics and metaphysics inseparably joined? if so, what is the connecting link? 10. Is it right, under any circumstance, to marry for money? 11. Is it right to imprison for debt?

I can find comfort—in the words and looks

Of simple hearts and gentle souls; and I

Can find companionship—in ancient books,

When, lonely, on the grassy hills I lie,

Under the shadow—of the tranquil sky;

I can find music—in the rushing brooks,

Or in the songs, which dwell among the trees,

And come in snares—on the summer breeze.

I can find treasure—in the leafy showers,

Which, in the merry autumn-time, will fall;

And I can find strong love—in buds and flowers,

And beauty—in the moonlight's silent hours.

There's nothing, nature gives, can fail to please,
For there's a common joy—pervading all.

361. A speaker--may calculate, beforehand, (so far as human agency is concerned, and other things being equal) the effect of a certain effort, by adapting the manner to the matter, as well as a farmer can in raising a crop, by using the proper means. As a stringed instrument, when touched at given points, infallibly produces certain tunes; so, the human mind, when touched by certain modulations, and corresponding sentiments, as infallibly receives certain impressions. But a speaker, singer, or writer, who thinks much of himself, is in danger of being forgotten by others. If he takes no sincere and heartfelt delight in what he is doing, but as it is admired and applauded by his audience, disappointment will be his portion; for he cannot long succeed. He who would be great in the eyes of others, must first learn to be made nothing in his own.

362. Exs. of the ' and '. 1. Did you say yés, or nò? Shall we crown the author of the public calamities? or shall we destroy him? 2. Beware of ignorance and sloth, and be guided by wisdom. 3. (2) Are they Hebrews? Are they all Hebrews? (4) Are they Hebrews from Palesine? 4. What does the word person mean? That which consists in one's own self, and not any part or quality in another. 5. Is not water the best and safest of all kinds of drink? 6. NATURE--and (4) REASON--answer--yés. 7. The mind--is its own place; and, in itself, can make a heaven--of hell; or hell of heaven.

Good name--in man, or woman,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls:

Who steals my purse, steals trash, 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he, who filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me--poor indeed.

Where is the true man's father-land?

Is it--where he, by chance, is born?

Doth not the yearning spirit--scorn--

In such scant borders to be spann'd?

O, yes! his father-land must be--

As the blue heaven--wide--and free.

Anecdote. A Quaker, who had a great horror of soldiers, on seeing one jump into the Thames, and save a person who was drowning, said on the occasion, "I shall always be a Quaker; but soldiers are good creatures."

What is it, Man, prevents thy God,

From making thee his blest obode?

He says--he loves thee, wills thee heaven,

And for thy good--has blessings given.

I'll tell thee--'Tis thy love of self,

Thy love of rule--thy love of self,

Bind thee to earth--and all her toys,

And robs thee--of substantial joys.

Heaven's gates--are not so highly arched--
As prince's palaces; they who enter there,
Must go--upon their knees.

Proverbs. 1. New times, demand new measures, and new men. 2. Pride--either finds a desert, or makes one. 3. Want of feeling, is one of the worst faults of elocution. 4. He, that catches at more than belongs to him, deserves to lose what he has. 5. Books--associate us with the thinking, and give us the material of thought. 6. Either be silent, or speak what is better than silence. 7. He, who resolves to amend, has God, and all good beings, on his side. 8. If you would have a thing kept secret, never tell it; and if you would not have any thing told of you, never do it. 9. The shortest answer--is doing a thing. 10. Friends--got without desert, will be lost without a cause. 11. Never speak what is not true. 12. If it is not decent, never do it.

Selfishness. The selfish--look upon themselves, as if they were all the world, and no man beside concerned therein; that the good state of things is to be measured by their condition; that all is well, if they do prosper and thrive; all is ill, if they be disappointed in their desires and projects. The good of no man, not of their brethren, not of their friends, not of their country, doth come under their consideration.

Varieties. 1. If we feel well, shall we not try to make others feel so! 2. May not the constitution be injured by over-nursing, and the mind unnerved, by being prevented from relying upon its own resources? 3. Is it expedient to wear mourning apparel? 4. Does curiosity, or love of truth and goodness, induce you to study history? 5. Has the study of the classics, an immoral tendency? 6. Who would be an old maid, or an old bachelor? 7. What is Botany? The science of Plants. 8. Can friendship--exist without sympathy? 9. Is a free or despotic government, more conducive to human happiness? 10. Ought not human nature--to be a chief study of mankind? 11. Are gold and silver mines, on the whole, beneficial to a nation? 12. Is it right, to oblige a jury to give a unanimous verdict?

THE BIBLE--WORTHY OF ALL ACCEPTATION.

This little book--I'd rather own,

Than all the gold and gems,

That e'er in monarch's coffers shone,

Than all their diadems.

Nay, were the seas--one chrysolite,

The earth--a golden ball,

And diamonds all the stars of night,

This book--were worth them all.

Here, He who died on Calvary's tree,

Hath made that promise--blest;

"Ye heavy-laden, come to me,

And I will give you rest.

A bruised reed--I will not break,

A contrite heart--despise;

My burden's light, and all, who take

My yoke, shall win the skies!"

The humble man, when he receives a wrong,
Refers revenge--to whom it doth belong.

363. INFLECTIONS. Although there are given rules, for making these inflections, or slides of the voice, either up or down, yet it should be borne in mind, that every sentence, which has been read with the upward slide, can, under other circumstances, be read correctly with the downward slide: the sense governs everything here, as in emphasis. Ex. 1. Are you going to town? 2. Are you going to town? 3. Why did you speak to her? 4. Why did you speak to her? 5. Do you hear me? 6. Do you hear me? In the first example, we have a simple, direct question; in the second, the same form of words, but so spoken, as if one said, I wish to know, positively, whether you go to town; so of the rest. Thus you see, the sense, the object, the intention determines the manner.

364. 1. Some poets may be compared to others; but Milton and Shakspeare are incomparable. 2. He, who considers himself wise, while his wisdom does not teach him to acknowledge the Lord, is in the profoundest ignorance. 3. We see the effects of many things, the causes of but few; experience, therefore, is a surer guide than imagination, and inquiry than conjecture. 4. It is the indispensable duty, and the inalienable right, of every rational being, to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good.

Get but the truth—once uttered, and 'tis like
A star, new-born, that drops into its place,
And which, once circling its placid round,
Not all the tumult of the earth—can shake.

365. The nearer your delivery agrees with the freedom and ease of common discourse, (if you keep up the dignity and life of your subject, and preserve propriety of expression;) the more just, natural and agreeable it will be. Study nature; avoid affectation, and never use art, if you have not the art to conceal it: for, whatever does not appear natural, is neither agreeable nor persuasive.

Anecdote. A brutal teacher, whipped a little boy, for pressing the hand of a little girl, who sat next to him at school. After which, he asked the child, "Why he squeezed the girl's hand?" "Because," said the little fellow, "it looked so pretty, I could not help it." What punishment did the teacher deserve?

THE EPITAPH.

Here rests his head—upon the lap of earth,
A youth—to fortune, and to fame—unknown:
Fair Science—frown'd not on his humble birth,
And Melancholy—mark'd him for her own.
Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere;
Heaven—did a recompense—as largely send.
He gave to mis'ry all he had—a tear. [friend.
He gain'd from heav'n ('twas all he wish'd)—a
No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
There, they, alike, in trembling hope repose)
The bosom of his Father, and his God.

Proverbs. 1. It is much easier to defend the innocent, than the guilty. 2. Let the press and speech, be free; no good government has anything to fear from paper shot, or airy words. 3. Three things are necessary to make an able man,—nature, study, and practice. 4. Cultivate a spirit of love toward all. 5. Always distinguish between apparent truths, and real truths; between effects and causes. 6. God—is best known and honored, when his word and works are best understood and appreciated. 7. Industry—is essential to usefulness, and happiness. 8. Every one ought to do something. 9. Nothing is stationary; and the human family—the least of all. 10. Mankind are tending to a better condition, or, to actual extinction. 11. Trade—knows neither friends nor kindred. 12. Physicians—rarely take medicine.

Wisdom of our Ancestors. If the "wisdom of our ancestors"—had not taught them to recognize newly discovered truths, and to discard those errors, to which ignorance had given birth, we should not have been indebted to them for the improvements, which, however well they may have served their purpose for a time, are destined to be superseded by still more important discoveries. In the year 1615, a Florentine had the presumption and audacity to assert, contrary to the prevailing opinions of the learned, "the great, the good, and the wise among men," and contrary to the conclusions of all preceding ages, "that the earth revolved round the sun;" and, although he was threatened with death for his heresy, Galileo was right.

Varieties. 1. What is the image of God, and what the likeness of God, into which man was created? 2. What grace is more valuable, than humility? 3. Is hereditary depravity an actual sin, or a calamity? 4. Was not the genius of Archimedes—des the parent of the mechanical arts? 5. Did not the first single pair of mankind—possess the type of all the distinct racets of men,—their innate tendency and genius, which has, or will, reappear in their offspring? 6. What is the meaning of the command to Moses, "See that thou make all things after the pattern, which I have shown thee in the Mount?" 7. If we are hardened under affliction, does it not indicate a very bad state of mind? 8. Are miracles—violations of the laws of Nature? 9. Does not the state and character of parents—affect their offspring? 10. What is the conclusion of the whole matter? Fear God, and keep his commandments.

When Summer's heats—the verdure sear,
Through yonder shady grove I tread,
Or throw me listless—down to hear
The winds—make music over head;
A thousand flowers—are blooming round,
The "wilding bee" goes droning by,
And springs gush out—with lulling sound,
And painted warblers—linger nigh;
Yet one thing—wants the drammer there—
A kindred soul—the scene to share.

365. WAVES, OR CIRCUMFLEXES OF THE VOICE: of these, there are two; which are called the rising circumflex [v] and the falling circumflex [^]: they are formed by the ^ and the ^, and are generally connected with the accented vowels of the emphatic words. Doubt, pity, contrast, grief, supposition, comparison, irony, implication, sneering, rattery, scorn, reproach, and contempt, are expressed by them. Be sure and get the right feeling and thought, and you will find no difficulty in expressing them properly, if you have mastered the voice.

366. Exs. of the rising v. 1. I may go to town to-morrow, though I cannot go to-day. 2. The sun sets in the west, not in the east. 3. He lives in London, not in New York. 4. The desire of praise—produces excellent effects, in men of sense. 5. He is more a knave, than a fool. 6. I see thou hast learn'd to raïl, if thou hast learned nothing else. 7. Better to do well late, than never. 8. A prëtty fellow you are, to be sûre! 9. In some countries—pöverty—is considered a misfortune; in others—a crime. 10. The yöung—are slaves to novelty; the öld—to cüstöm.

367. PROMISCUOUS EXAMPLES. 1. A just appreciation of our duties—is worth any sacrifice, that its attainments may cost. 2. Dearly do we sometimes pay for our wisdom, but never too dearly. 3. Is not the life of animals dissipated at death? 4. The ancients—had the art of singing, before that of writing; and their laws and histories were sung, before they were written. 5. This heavenly Benefactor claims—not the homage of our lips, but of our hearts; and who can doubt that he is entitled to the homage of our hearts? 6. If we have no regard to our own character, we ought to have some regard to the character of others. 7. Tell your invaders this; and tell them, too, we seek no change; and least of all—such change as they would bring us.

368. We must avoid a mechanical variety, and adopt a natural one: this may be seen in children, when relating anything that comes from themselves; then, their intonations, melody, and variety, are perfectly natural, and true to the object in view: let us go and sit at their feet and learn, and not be offended. Let us turn our eye and ear, to TRUTH and NATURE; for they will guide their votaries right. Give us the soul of elocution and music, and that will aid in forming the body.

CONFIDENCE, NOT TO BE PLACED IN MAN.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for—than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope—in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor—on a mast;
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down—
Into the fatal bowels—of the deep.

Maxims. 1. The love of sensual pleasure, is temporary madness. 2. Sacrifice—can be made on bad principles; obedience—only on good ones. 3. Great cry and little wool; applies to those who promise much, but practice little. 4. Do what you think is right, whatever others may think. 5. Learn to disregard alike, the praise and the censure of bad men. 6. Covet that popularity that follows; not that which must be run after. 7. What sculpture is—to a block of marble, education is to the human mind. 8. He, who is unwilling to amend, has the devil on his side. 9. Extensive, various reading, without reflection, tends to the injury of the mind. 10. Proverbs bear age, and are full of various instruction.

Anecdote. John Randolph's Mother. The late John Randolph, some years before his death, wrote to a friend as follows: "I used to be called a Frenchman, because I took the French side in politics; and though that was unjust, yet the truth is, I should have been a French atheist, if it had not been for one recollection, and that was—the memory of the time, when my departed mother—used to take my little hands in hers, and cause me, on my knees, to say, 'Our Father who art in heaven.'"

School Teachers. It is important, that teachers of youth, should not only be respected, but respectable persons. They, who are intrusted with the responsible office of developing the mind, and directing the affections of the young, ought to be worthy of sharing in all the social enjoyments of the most refined society; and they ought never to be excluded from such participation. Yet it is scandalously true, in some parts of our country, that teachers, however worthy, are excluded from the houses of the very parents, who send their children to their schools. This is not only contrary to all republican principles, but is in direct opposition to the dictates of common sense. Wherever such a state of things exists, the people are but half civilized, whatever pretensions wealth, and other circumstances afford them.

Varieties. 1. Enter on the performance of your duties, with willing hearts, and never seek to avoid them. 2. The heart—is woman's world; it is there—her ambition strives for the mastery. 3. The object of recreation is—to soften and refine, not to render ferocious; as is the case with amusements that brutalize. 4. Is capital punishment right? 5. Who has done the more injury—Mahomet, or Constantine? 6. Is tobacco—necessary? 7. Why is the figure of a viper—used to express ingratitude? 8. Is it right to go to war—on any occasion? 9. What is the usual quantity of blood—in a common sized body? About twenty-five or thirty pounds. 10. Is it not singular that Pope's translations should be very profuse, and his original compositions very concise?

369. Exs. of the falling. 1. Who cares for you? 2. He is your friend, is he? 3. You tell me so, do you? 4. If I were to do so, what would you say? 5. It is not prudence, when I trust my secrets to a man who cannot keep his own. 6. You are a very wise man, strong, brave, peaceable. 7. If you had told me so, perhaps, I should have believed you. 8. Sir, you are a fool. and I fear you will remain so.

370. MANNER. What we mean, does not so much depend on what we say, as how we say it; not so much on our words, as on our manner of speaking them: accordingly, in elocution, great attention must necessarily be given to this, as expressive of what our words do not always indicate: thus, nature—fixes the outward expression of every intention and sentiment. Art only adds ease and gracefulness to the promptings of nature: as nature has ordained, that man shall walk on his feet, and not on his hands, art—teaches him to walk gracefully.

371. COMBINATION OF THE WAVES. 1. But you forsooth, are very wise men, deeply learned in the truth; we, weak, contemplable, mean persons; but you, strong, gallant. 2. Mere hirelings, and time-servers—are always opposed to (5) improvements, and (6) originality: so are tyrants—to liberty, and publicanism. 3. Wisdom alone is truly fair; vice, only appears so. 4. How like a fawning publican he looks! 5. How green you are, and fresh in this old world! 6. What! can so young a thorn begin to prick? 7. Money—is your suit? What should I say to you! Should I not say, Hath a dog money? Is it possible—a cur can lend three thousand ducats? 7. They tell us to be moderate; but they, they—are to revel in profusion!

Miscellaneous. 1. Can one phenomenon of mind be presented, without being connected with another? if so,—how? 2. Reputation—often effects that, which did not belong to one's character. Make a child—believe that he is considered aimable, by his friends, and he will generally become so. 3. Affection—is the continuous principle of love,—which is spiritual heat; and hence the very vital principle of man. 4. Must not the first possible idea—of any individual, have been the product of the relation—between two states of the mind, in reference to external objects?

Anecdote. Danger of Bad Company. St. Austin compares the danger of bad company—to a nail driven into a post; which, after the first, and second stroke, may be drawn out with little difficulty; but being once driven up to the head, the pincers can take no hold to draw it out; which can be done only by the destruction of the wood.

Maxims. 1. A wounded reputation is seldom cured. 2. Conciliatory manners always command esteem. 3. Never deride any one's infirmities. 4. Detraction—is a sin against justice. 5. Modesty—has more charms than beauty. 6. No fear should deter us from doing good. 7. Pin not your faith to another one's slave. 8. Reckless youth—makes ruful age. 9. The example of the good is visible philosophy. 10. Truth—never fears rigid examination. 11. Sickness is felt, but not health.

Reason. As the field of true science enlarges, as thought becomes more free, an inquiry upon all subjects becomes more bold and searching; a voice louder and still louder comes up from the honest and thinking men in Christendom, calling for rationality in religion, as well as in every thing else; calling for such principles of biblical interpretation, as shall show the scriptures to be indeed, and in truth, the Word of God. Every ray of truth, which has been sent from heaven—to enlighten and bless mankind, has gained admittance into the world by patient struggling and persevering contest.

Varieties. 1. The words of Seneca, the virtuous Pagan, put to the blush—many a pagan christian. 2. When Socrates was informed, that the judges had sentenced him to death, he replied,—“And hath not Nature passed the same sentence on them?” 4. There is more eloquence, in the tone of voice, in the looks, and in the gestures of a speaker, than in the choice of his words.

Dear Patience—too, is born of woe,
Patience, that opens the gate
Wherethrough the soul of man must go—
Up to each nobler state.

High natures—must be thunder-seared,
With many a searing wrong.

Law, that shocks equity, is reason's murder.

I would not waste my spring of youth,
In idle dalliance; I would plant rich seeds,
To blossom in my manhood, and bear fruit,
When I am old.

Full many a gem—of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear,
Full many a flower is born—to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Beautiful cloud! with folds so soft and fair,
Swimming—in the pure—quiet air!
Thy fleeces, bathed in sunlight, while below,
Thy shadow—o'er the vale moves slow;
Where, 'midst their labor, pause the reaper train,
As cool it comes—along the grain.

Beautiful cloud! I would I were with thee
In thy calm way—o'er land and sea:
To rest—on thy unrolling skirts, and look
On Earth—as on an open book;
On streams, that tie her realms, with silver bands,
And the long ways, that seam her lands;
And hear her humming cities, and the sound
Of the great ocean—breaking round

372. Remember, that Nature abhors monotony, or sameness of sound, as much as she does a vacuum. Hence, give variety in emphasis, inflections, and waves, if they often occur. 1. (3) Happy, (5) happy, (6) happy pair! none but the (2) brave! (6) none but the (5) brave; none (8) BUT the brave deserve the fair! 2. (6) What a piece of work—is man! how noble in (5) reason! how infinite in (6) FACULTIES! in (4) form, and (5) moving, how express and (6) admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, (4) how like a God! 3. My JUDGMENT—approves this measure, and my whole HEART—is in it: all that I have; (4) all that I am; and all that I HOPE, in this life, I am now ready here to stake upon it; and I leave off as I began; th't (4) sink or swim; (5) live or die; survive or (6) PERISH,—I am for the DECLARATION. It is my living sentiment, and (2) by the blessing of God, it shall be my dying sentiment: (5) Independence—(6) now and Independence (9) FOREVER!

373. EFFECT. What is the use of reading, speaking, and singing, if the proper effect is not produced? If the singing in our church choirs, and the reading and speaking in the desk and pulpit, were what they ought to be, and what they may be, the house of God would be more thronged than theatres ever have been. Oh! when will the best of truths be delivered in the best of manners? May the stars of elocution and music, be more numerous than the stars of heaven!

Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,
Smile in man's face, smooth, deceive and coy,
Deck with French words, and apish courtesies,
I must be held—a rancorous enemy.
Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth—must be abused,
By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks!

Tho' plunged in ills, and exercised in care,
Yet, never let the noble mind despair:
When prest by dangers, and beset by foes,
Heaven its timely succour doth interpose, [grief.]
And, (when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelmed with
By unforeseen expedients—brings relief.
If there's a sin—more deeply black than others,
Distinguished from the list of common crimes,
And legion—in itself, and doubly dear
To the dark prince of hell—it is hypocrisy.

Ye gentle gales, beneath my body blow,
And softly lay me—on the waves below.

Wisdom—took up her harp, and stood in place
Of frequent concourse—stood in every gate,
By every way, and walked in every street,
And, lifting up her voice, proclaimed: Be wise,
Ye fools! be of an understanding heart.
Forsake the wicked: come not near his house:
Pass by: make haste: depart, and turn away.
Me follow—me, whose ways are pleasantness,
Whose paths are peace, whose end is perfect joy.

Maxims. 1. A faithful friend—is a strong defence. 2. Avoid that which you blame in others. 3. By doing nothing, we learn to do ill. 4. Confession of a fault, makes half amends for it. 5. Dependence and obedience, necessarily belong to youth. 6. Every art—is best taught by example. 7. Great designs require great consideration. 8. Misfortune is a touchstone of friendship. 9. Never sport with pain, or poverty. 10. Put no faith in tale-bearers.

Anecdote. Point of Law. Blackstone, speaking of the right of a wife to dower, asserts, that if land abide in the husband a single moment, the wife shall be endowed thereof; and he adds, that the doctrine was extended very far, by a jury in Wales, where the father and son were hanged at the same time; but the son was supposed to survive the father, by appearing to struggle the longer; whereby he became seized of an estate by survivorship; in consequence of which seizure, his wife—obtained a verdict for her dower.

Riches and Talent. Nothing is more common than to see station and riches—preferred to talent and goodness; and yet few things are more absurd. The peculiar superiority of talent and goodness—over station and riches, may be seen from hence;—that the influence of the former—will always be the greatest, in that government, which is the purest; while that of the latter—will always be the greatest—in the government that is the most corrupt: so that from the preponderance of the one, we may infer the soundness and vigor of the commonwealth; but from the other, its dotage and degeneracy.

Varieties. 1. Indolence and indecision, tho' not vices in themselves, generally prepare the way for much sin and misery. 2. If the mind be properly cultivated, it will produce a storehouse of precious fruits; but if neglected, it will be overrun with noxious weeds and poisonous plants. 3. A kind benefactor—makes one happy—as soon as he can, and as much as he can. 4. The only sure basis of every government, is in the affection of a people, rendered contented, and happy, by the justness and mildness, with which they are ruled. 5. As moisture is required to the formation of every seed, so natural truth—to the formation of first principles.

They whom
Nature's works can charm, with God himself
Hold converse! grow familiar, day by day,
With His conceptions, act upon His plan,
And form to His—the relish of their souls.
Our present acts, tho' slightly we pass them by,
Are so much seed—sown for Eternity.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose—
An evil soul, producing holy rottenness;
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek;
A goodly apple, rotten at the heart;
O, what a goodly outside—falsehood hath!

374. As the principles of elocution are few and simple, and as practice alone makes perfect, there are all kinds of examples provided for those, who are determined to develop their minds through their bodies, and become all that God and nature—intended them to be. As the ear is most intimately connected with the affections—the motive-power of the intellect, it is absolutely necessary that the student should exercise aloud, that the voice and ear, as well as the thoughts and feelings, may be cultivated in harmony and correspondence. If, then, he finds the task severe, let him persevere, and never mind it.

375. EXAMPLES. 1. The queen of Denmark, in reproving her son, Hamlet, on account of his conduct towards his step-father, whom she married, shortly after the murder of the king, her husband, says to him, "Hamlet, you have your father much offended." To which he replies, with a circumflex on you, "Madam, (3) you—have my father much offended." He meant his own father: she—his step-father; he would also intimate, that she was accessory to his father's murder; and his peculiar reply, was like daggers in her soul. 2. In the following reply of Death to Satan, there is a frequent occurrence of circumflexes, mingled with contempt: "And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heaven, hell-doomed, and breath'st defiance here, and scorn, where I reign king? and, to enrage thee more,—thy king, and lord?" The voice is circumflected on heaven, hell-doomed, king and thy, nearly an octave. 3. Come, show me what thou'lt do; would'st weep? would'st fight? would'st fast? would'st tear thyself? I'll do't. Dost thou come here to whine? to outface me, with leaping in her grave? be buried quick with her, and so will I; and if thou prate of mountains, let them throw millions of acres on us, till our ground, singeing her pate against the burning zone, make Ossa—like a wart. Nay, an thou'lt mouthe, I'll rant as well as thou.

Anecdote. A clergyman, once traveling in a stage-coach, was abruptly asked by one of the passengers, if any of the heathens would go to heaven. "Sir," answered the clergyman, "I am not appointed judge of the world, and, consequently, cannot tell; but, if ever you get to heaven, you shall either find some of them there, or a good reason why they are not there."

Too High or too Low. In pulpit elocution, the grand difficulty is to give the subject all the dignity it so fully deserves, without attaching any importance to ourselves. The christian minister cannot think too highly of his Master, or too humbly of himself. This is the secret art which captivates and improves an audience, and which all who see, will fancy they could imitate; while many who say, will not succeed, because they are not influenced by proper notives, and do not use the right means.

Proverbs. 1. Forbearance—is requisite in youth, in middle age, and in old age. 2. Peculiarities—are easily acquired; but it is very difficult to eradicate them. 3. Good principles are of no use to us, unless we are governed by them. 4. Covetousness—is the vice of a small mind. 5. Pure metals—shine brighter, the more they are rubbed. 6. Pride—lives on very costly food,—its keeper's happiness. 7. Extraneous—are generally hurtful; for they often expose us to damage, or render us ridiculous. 8. In the days of affluence, always think of poverty. 9. Never let want come upon you, and make you remember the days of plenty. 10. No one can become a good reader or speaker in a few weeks, or a few months.

Woman. I have always observed, says Ledyard, that women, in all countries, are civil, obliging, tender, and humane; that they are inclined to be gay and cheerful, timorous and modest, and that they do not, like man, hesitate to perform a generous action. Not haughty, arrogant, or supercilious, they are full of courtesy, and fond of society; moribund, in general, to err than man, but in general, also, more virtuous, and performing more good actions than he. To a woman, whether civilized or savage, I never addressed myself in the language of decency and friendship, without receiving a decent and friendly answer. With man it has been often otherwise. In wandering through the barren plains of inhospitable Denmark; thro' honest Sweden, and frozen Lapland, rude and churlish Finland, unprincipled Russia, and the wide-spread regions of the wandering Tartar; if hungry, dry, cold, wet, or sick, the women—have ever been friendly to me, and uniformly so; and to add to this virtue, (so worthy to be called benevolence), their actions have been performed in so free and kind a manner, that if I were dry, I drank the sweetest draught, and if hungry, ate the coarsest morsel, with a double relish.

Varieties. 1. When Baron, the actor, came from hearing one of Massillon's sermons, he said to one of his comrades of the stage; here is an orator; we—are only actors. 2. Some people—wash themselves for the sake of being clean; others, for the sake of appearing so. 3. Of all the pursuits, by which property is acquired, none is preferable to agriculture,—none more productive, and none more worthy of a gentleman. 4. It is a maxim with unprincipled politicians, to destroy, where they cannot intimidate, nor persuade. 5. Good humor, and mental charms, are as much superior to external beauty, as mind is superior to matter. 6. Be wise, be prudent, be discreet, and temperate, in all things.

Patriots have toiled, and in their country's cause Bled nobly, and their deeds, as they deserve, Receive reward and recompense. We give in charge Their names—to the sweet lyre. The historic muse, Proud of her treasure, marches with it—down To latest times; and sculpture, in her turn, Gives bond, in stone—and ever-during brass, To guard them—and immortalize her trust.

376. INTONATIONS. The intonations are opposite to monotones, and mean the rise and fall of the voice, in its natural movements through a sentence: they are demonstrated in music, and here, in elocution. In all common kinds of reading and speaking, the voice should not generally rise and fall more than one note, in its passage from syllable to syllable, and from word to word: its movement will then be gentle, easy and flowing. But when the passion, or sentiment to be exhibited, is powerfully awakening or exciting, it may rise or fall several notes, according to the predominance of feeling.

377. Our (6) sight—is the most (4) perfect, and most (5) delightful—of all our senses. (4) It fills the mind with the largest variety of (3) ideas; (5) converses with its objects at the greatest (6) distance; and continues the longest in (5) action, without being (4) tired—or (3) satiated, with its proper enjoyments. The (6) sense of (8) feeling, can, indeed, give us the idea of (5) extension, (6) shape, and all other properties of matter, th't are perceived by the (5) eye, except (4) colors. (3) At the same time—it is very much (5) straightened—and (4) confined in its operations, to the (3) number, (4) bulk, and (5) distance, of its peculiar objects.

378. When we read, or speak, without any feeling, the voice ranges between our first and fourth notes; when there is a moderate degree of feeling, and the subject somewhat interesting, it ranges between our second and sixth notes; when there is a high degree of feeling and interest, it ranges between our fourth and eighth notes; descending, however, to the third and first, in a cadence, or close of the effort. It is highly necessary to keep the voice uplaid, and never let it run aground; that is, let the feeling and thought keep it on the proper pitches, and do not let it descend to the first, or ground-note, till the piece is completed; except in depressed monotony. Memorize the preceding, and talk it off in an easy, graceful and appropriate manner.

Abstract Question. Which is more probable, that our judgment, in respect to external phenomena, has been warped, by comparing their operations with those of the mind; or, that our metaphysical mistakes have been occasioned, by forming a false analogy between its internal operations, and outward appearances?

The midnight moon—serenely smiles
O'er nature's soft repose;
No towering cloud obscures the sky,
No ruffling tempest blows.

Now, every passion—sinks to rest;
The throbbing heart lies still;
And varying schemes of life—no more
Distract the laboring will.

Proverbs. 1. A clear conscience fears no accusation. 2. An open door will tempt a saint. 3. Confidence—is the companion of success. 4. Cruelty to a woman is—the crime of a monster. 5. A smart reproof is better than smooth deceit. 6. Add not trouble to the grief-worn heart. 7. Affection—is at best a deformity. 8. Bear misfortunes with patience and fortitude. 9. A good maxim is never out of season. 10. Ambition—never looks behind. 11. A wise man wants but little. 12. Knowledge—makes no one happy.

Anecdote. A tragedy of Æschylus was once represented before the Athenians, in which it was said of one of the characters, "that he cared more to be just, than to appear so." At these words, all eyes were instantly turned upon Aristides, as the man who, of all the Greeks, most merited that distinguished character: and ever after he received, by universal consent, the surname of—"The Just."

Courtesy. St. Paul, addressing himself to christians of all grades and classes, even down to menial servants, exhorts them to be courteous. Courtousness—must mean, therefore, a something, which is within the reach of all sorts of people; and, in its primary and best sense, is exactly such a behavior, as spontaneously springs from a heart, warm with benevolence, and unwilling to give needless pain, or uneasiness to a fellow-being. We have no more right, wantonly or carelessly to wound the mind, than to wound the body of a fellow-being; and, in many instances, the former—is the more cruel of the two.

Varieties. 1. Some start in life, without any leading object at all; some, with a low aim, and some, with a high one; and just in proportion to the elevation at which they aim, will generally be their success. 2. Guard against fraud, and imposition; and forego some advantages, rather than gain them at a risk, that cannot be ascertained. 3. In the determination of doubtful and intricate cases, the nicest discrimination, and great solidity of judgment, are required. 4. We have an instinctive expectation of finding nature everywhere the same,—always consistent, and true to herself; but whence this expectation? 5. Is there not something in the native air of true freedom, to ulter, expand, and improve the external form, as well as the internal? 6. Is not affluence—a snare, and poverty,—a temptation? 7. Man is a true epitome of the spiritual world, or world of mind; and to know himself, is the perfection of wisdom.

CURIOSITY.

It came from Haven.—it reign'd in Eden's shades,
It roves on earth—and every walk invades;
Childhood—and age—alike its influence own;
It haunts the beggar's nook, the monarch's throne;
Hangs o'er the cradle, leans above the bier,
Gazed on old Babel's tower,—and lingers here.

379. INTONATIONS AND MELODY OF SPEECH. By the first—is meant the movement of the voice through the different notes of the scale, as-cending and de-scending, with an appropriate and agreeable variety of sounds; by the second, an agreeable succession of sounds, either in speech or song. A dull repetition of words or sounds, on nearly the same pitch, is very grating to the ear, and disgusting to correct taste; and yet it is one of the most common faults of the bar, the senate and pulpit; indeed, in every place where there is public speaking: which is the melancholy result of the usual course of teaching children to read.

380. EXAMPLES PARTIALLY EXHIBITED. 1. (5) Seest thou a man (5) diligent in his (6) business? (5) He shall stand before (4) kings, (3) he shall (4) stand before (5) mean men. 2. (3) O swear not by the (6) moon, the (5) inconstant (4) moon, (3) that monthly (5) changes in its circled (3) orb. 3. Said Mr. Pitt, to his aged accuser, in debate, (4) "But (6) youth, it seems, is not my (5) only (3) crime," (4) I have been accused—of (5) acting (6) a (8) theatrical part." 4. (5) Standing on the ascent of the (6) past, we survey the (5) present, and (4) extend our views into (3) futurity. 5. (5) No one—will ever be the (4) happier, for (5) talents, or (4) riches, (3) unless he makes a right (3) use of them. 6. (5) Truths—have (4) life in them; and the (6) effect of that life is (3) unceasing expansion. 7. (6) He, who loves the (5) Lord, with all his (4) heart, and his neighbor as (4) himself, needs no (5) compass, or (4) helm to steer his (3) course; because (5) truth and (4) love are his (3) wind and (2) tide. N. B. The inflections, circumflexes, &c., commence with the accented vowel, which is supposed to be on the note indicated by the preceding figure.

381. PROMISCUOUS EXAMPLES WITHOUT NOTATION. The predominant characteristics of the female mind is affection: and that of the male mind is thought: tho' both have affection and thought; but disparity—does not imply inferiority. The sexes are intended for different spheres of life, and are created in conformity to their destination, by Him, who bids the oak—brave the fury of the tempest, and the Alpine flower—lean its check on the bosom of eternal snow.

Abstract Question. Is not that propensity of the human mind, which seeks for a medium of communication, between two physical phenomena, to be traced to the fact, that every admitted truth, is derived from a medium of knowledge; and that there is a connection among all intellectual phenomena; so much so, that we cannot conceive a new idea, without a medium of communication?

Laconics. 1. By minding our own business, we shall be more useful, more benevolent, more respected, and ten times happier. 2. That student will live miserably, who lies down, like a camel, under his burden. 3. Remember, while you live, it is by looks—that men decide. 4. A foolish friend may cause more woe, Than could indeed the wisest foe. 5. He, who confides in a person of no honor, may consider himself very lucky, if he is not a sufferer by it. 6. The condition of mankind is such, that we must not believe every smooth speech—the cover of a kind intention. 7. Who is wise? He who learns from every one. 8. Who is rich? He, who is contented. 9. Nothing is so dumb—as deep emotion. 10. Where there is much mystery, there is generally much ignorance. 11. Catch not soon at offence. 12. Whoso loseth his spirits, loseth all.

Anecdote. Choice of a Husband. An Athenian, who was hesitating, whether to give his daughter in marriage to a man of worth with a small fortune, or to a rich man, who had no other recommendation, went to consult Themistocles on the subject. "I would bestow my daughter," said Themistocles, "upon a man without money, rather than upon money without a man."

True Philosophy—consists in doing all the good that we can, in learning all the good we can, in teaching to others all the good we can, in bearing, to the best of our ability, the various ills of life, and in enjoying, with gratitude, every honest pleasure—that comes in our way.

Varieties. 1. Should not our intentions, as well as our actions—be good? 2. True love—is of slow growth, mutual and reciprocal, and founded on esteem. 3. Graces, and accomplishments—are too often designed for beau-teaching, and coquetry. 4. There is time for all things. 5. An individual—inclined to magnify every good, and minify every evil—must be a pleasing companion, or partner—for life,—whether male or female. 6. Knowledge—is not wisdom; it is only the raw material, from which the beautiful fabric of wisdom is produced; therefore, let us not spend our days in gathering materials, and live, and die, without a shelter. 7. Every evil—has its limit; which, when passed, plunges the wicked into misery. 8. One thief in the house, is more to be dreaded than ten—in the street. 9. The more haste, generally the worst speed. 10. The moral government, under which we live, is a kingdom of uses; and whatever we possess, is given us for use; and with it, the opportunity and power of using it.

Thou art, O God, the life and light

Of all this wondrous world we see,
Its glow by day, its smile by night.

Are but reflections—caught from thee;
Where'er we turn, thy glories shine,
And all things fair and bright are thine.

382. INTONATIONS CONTINUED. Listen attentively, to a person under the influence of nature, of his own feelings and thoughts: he relates stories, supports arguments, commands those under his authority, speaks to persons at a distance, utters exclamations of anger and rage, joy and rapture, pours forth lamentations of sorrow and grief, breathes affection, love, &c. in different pitch- es, tones, qualities, emphasis, inflection, and circumflexes. elevations and depressions of voice. The only possibility of success, therefore, is—to get perfect control of the vocal organs, by practicing these principles, and conforming the whole manner to the sense and objects of the composition.

383. INTONATION AND MELODY. These examples are given as general guides; the figures refer to the notes in the Diatonic Scale. 1. (4) But, (5) from the (4) tomb, (5) the (4) voice of (5) nature (6) cries, (6) And, (5) in our (4) ashes, (5) live (4) their won- (3) ted (2) fires. 2. But (5) yonder comes, (4) rejoicing in the (6) east, (5) The (4) powerful (3) king of (2) day. 3. (6) AWAKE! (5) ARISE! (6) or (5) be (3) forever (2) fallen. 4. (3) He expired in a (5) victualing-house, (4) which I hope (5) I (3) shall (2) not. 7. (5) Fair (6) angel, thy (5) desire, which tends to (6) know The works of (5) God, doth (4) merit (3) praise. 8. (5) Such (4) honors Ilion to (6) her lover paid, And (5) peaceful slept (4) the mighty (3) Hector's (2) shade. Note. Construct a scale on faint ruled paper, and place the words on it as indicated; the same as notes are on the musical staff.

Miscellaneous. 1. Beauty—is the outward form of goodness: and this is the reason, we love it instinctively, without thinking why we love: but we cease to love, when we find it unaccompanied with truth and goodness. 2. Make not your opinions, the criterion of right and wrong: but make right and wrong—the criterion of your actions and principles.

Few—bring back at eve,
Immaculate, the manners of the morn;
Something we thought—is blotted, we resolved—
Is shaken, we renounced—returns again.
There is no greater punishment of vice—
Than that it have its own will;
Hence, guilty—in infernal love becomes the Most deadly hate.

The intent, and not the deed,
Is in our power; and therefore, who DARES greatly,
Does greatly.

6. Words—are things; a small drop of ink, (falling like dew—) upon thought, produces that, which makes thousands, perhaps millions think. 7. Something—is at all times—flowing into us.

Too much the beautiful—we prize,
The useful—often we derise.

Proverbs. 1. The remedy for injuries is—not to remember them. 2. To read, and not understand, is to pursue, and not overtake. 3. Truth refines, but does not obscure. 4. He who teaches, often learns himself. 5. Worth—has been underrated, ever since wealth—has been overrated. 6. Antiquity—cannot sanction an error, nor novelty injure a truth. 7. A man in a passion, rides a horse that runs away with him. 8. A small leak will sink a great ship. 9. Never forget a good turn. 10. Lying—is the vice of a slave. 11. Self-conceit—is the attendant of ignorance. 12. The love of society is natural.

Anecdote. The emperor of China—inquired of Sir George Staunton, about the manner in which physicians were paid in England. When he was moved to understand what the practice was, he exclaimed,—“Can any man in England afford to be ill? Now, I have four physicians, and pay all of them a weekly salary; but the moment I am sick, that salary is stopped, till I am well again; therefore, my indisposition is never of long duration.”

Woman. The prevailing manners of an age depend, more than we are aware of, or are willing to allow, on the conduct of the women: this is one of the principal things on which the great machine of human society turns. Those, who allow the influence which female graces have in contributing to polish the manners of men, would do well to reflect, how great an influence female morals must also have on their conduct. How much, then, is it to be regretted, that women—should ever sit down, contented, to polish, when they are able to reform—to entertain, when they might instruct. Nothing delights men more than their strength of understanding, when true gentleness of manners is its associate; united, they become irresistible orators, blessed with the power of persuasion, fraught with the sweetness of instruction, making woman the highest ornament of human nature.

Varieties. 1. Fear—is a bad preserver of anything intended to endure; but love—will generally ensure fidelity, even to the end. 2. He, who knowingly defends the wrong side of a question, pays a very bad compliment to his hearers: as much as to say; Falsehood, supported by my talents, is stronger than truth, supported by yours. 3. Before a man should be convicted of a libel, the jury must be satisfied, that it was his intention to libel; not to state facts, which he believed to be true, or reasonings, which he thought just. 4. The difference between the word of God, and the compositions of man, is as great, as between real flame and painted flame. 5. Dissimulation, even the most innocent, is ever productive of embarrassments; whether the design is evil, or not, artifice is always dangerous, and almost inevitably disgraceful.

384. REVISIONS. Let all the preceding principles be reviewed, with an illustration of each, and endeavor to fix them, permanently, in the mind, by seeing their truth, and feeling their power in practice; so that you can write a work yourself on the philosophy of mind and voice. Remember, that nothing is yours, till you make it your own, by understanding it scientifically, rationaly and affectuously, and then by applying it to its proper object: do not forget effects, causes, ends, their successive order, and simultaneous development.

EVE'S LAMENT ON LEAVING PARADISE.

(Plaintive. with quantity.)

O, unperpeted stroke, worse than of Death!
Must I thus leave thee, Paradise? thus leave
Thee, native soil, these happy walks and shades,
Fit haunt of gods? where I had hoped to spend,
(Quiet, tho' sad.) the respite of that day,
That must be mortal to us both;
O flowers, (that will never in other climate grow),
My early visitation, and my last
At ev'n, which I bred up, with tender hand,
From the first opening bud, and gave ye names;
Who, now, shall rear you to the sun, and rank
Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount?
Thee, (lastly,) nuptial bower, by me adorned
With what to sight, or smell, was sweet, from THEE
How shall I part, and whither wander—down
Into a lower world, to this—obscure
And wild? How shall we breathe in other air,
Less pure, accustomed to immortal fruits!

385. How mean,—how timid,—how ab- ject, must that spirit be, which can sit down,
—contented with mediocrity. As for myself
—all that is within me is on fire. I had rather be torn into a thousand pieces, than relax
my resolution, of reaching the sublimest heights of virtue—and knowledge, of good- ness—and truth, of LOVE—and WISDOM.
Nothing is so arduous,—nothing so ADMIR-
ABLE, in human affairs, but may be attained by the industry of man. We are descended from heaven; thither let us go, whence we derive our origin. Let nothing satisfy us,— lower than the summit of all excellence.

Nominalists and Realists. The Nom- inalists—were a sect, the followers of Ros- celinus and Abelard: according to these philosophers, there are no existences in nature corresponding to general terms, and the objects of our attention in all our general speculations, are not ideas, but words. The Realists—were their opponents, and adhered to the principles of Aristotle.

Of—may the spirits of the dead—descend
To watch—the silent slumbers of a friend;
To hover—round his evening walk—unseen,
And hold sweet converse—on the dusky green;
To hail the spot—where first their friendship grew,
And heaven—and nature—opened to their view.
Of, when he trims his cheerful hearth, and sees
A smiling circle—emulous to please,
There—may these gentle guests—delight to dwell,
And bless the scene—they loved in life so well.

Laconics. 1. The great battle and contest
among politicians is—not how the government shall be administered, but who shall administer it.
2. They who go to church out of vanity, or curi- osity, and not for worship and instruction, should not value themselves on account of their religion; for it is not worth a straw. 3. Allow time for consideration; everything is badly executed, that is done by force or violence. 4. Occasional mirth, is not incompatible with wisdom; and the man of reserved habits, may sometimes be gay. 5. Happy are they, who draw lessons of prudence—from the dangers, in which others are involved. 6. Elo- quence—can pierce the reluctant wonder of the world, and make even monarchs tremble on their thrones.

Anecdote. Spinola. “Pray, of what did your brother die?” said the Marquis Spinola.
one day to Sir Horace Vere. “He died, sir,” replied he, “of having nothing to do.” “Alas!
sir,” said Spinola, “that is enough to kill any general of us all.” Motesquieu says, “We,
in general, place illness among the beatitudes of heaven; it should rather, I think, be put amid the tortures of hell. Austin calls it
—the burying a man alive.”

Female Education. How greatly is it to be regretted, that for the benefit of both sexes, women are not generally so educated, that their conversations might be still much more useful to us, as well as beneficial to themselves! If, instead of filling their heads with trifles, or worse than trifles, they were early taught what might be really useful, they would not then be so continually in pursuit of silly, ridiculous, expensive, and many times criminal amusement; neither would their conversation be so insipid and impertinent, as it too often is. On the con- trary, were their minds properly improved with knowledge, which it is certain they are exceedingly capable of, how much more agreeable would they be to themselves, and how much more improving and delightful to us? How truly charming does beauty appear, when adorned by good nature, good sense, and knowledge? And when beauty fades, as soon it must, there will then be those qualities and accomplishments remain- ing, which cannot fail to command great re- gard, esteem, and affection.

VARITIES.

But—shall we wear these glories for a day,
Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?

While there is hope, do not distrust the gods,
But wait, at least, till Cesar's near approach,
Force us to yield. 'Twill never be too late—
To sue for chains, and own a conqueror.

In faith, and hope, the world will disagree,
But all mankind's concern—is charity.
'Tis education—forms the common mind,
Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined.
The mind, that would be happy, must be great;
Great in its wishes, great in its surveys;
Extended views, a narrow mind extend.

386. As so much depends upon the proper movement of the voice, through the different notes of the scale, and as our primary instruction in reading is often diametrically opposed to what is natural, it is deemed necessary to be more explicit in directions, as well as in examples. Imitate, with the voice, accompanied by corresponding motions of the hand, the gentle undulations of the waters, when the waves run moderately high; letting the movement of your voice resemble that of a small boat. Observe the various movements of different kinds of birds through the air, some hobbling up and down, others moving more gracefully; some flapping their wings, others sailing, soaring: but the movements of the voice are infinitely more various than all other external motions; for it contains them all.

THE EIGHT NOTES OF THE SCALE.

6. cries, and
5. from the the nature in our es live
4. But tomb voice of ash- their won-

Blessed—we sometimes are! and I am now
Happy in quiet feelings; for the tones—
Of a pleasant company of friends—
Were in my ear, just now, and gentler thoughts
From spirits, whose high character I know;
And I retain their influence, as the air—
Retains the softness—of departed day.

There is a spell—in every flower,
A sweetness—in each spray,
And every simple bird—has power—
To please us—with its lay.
And there is music—on the breeze,
That sports along the glade,
And crystal dew-drops—on the trees,
The gems—by fancy made.
O, there is joy—and happiness,
In every thing I see,
Which bids my soul rise up—and bless
The God, that blesses me.

Method. In speaking extempore, or in writing, METHOD, or the proper arrangement of the thoughts, is of the first importance; to attain which, you must fix, in your mind, the precise object you have in view, and never lose sight of it; then, determine the grand divisions; which should be natural, and distinct; not an unnecessary thought, or illustration—should be admitted: and even in the amplification of the subject, every part should have its proper place, and all—present a whole.

Anecdote. Mr. Summerfield. It is said, of the late Mr. Summerfield, that being asked by a bishop, where he was born, he replied, "I was born in England, and born again in Ireland." "What do you mean?" inquired the bishop. "Art thou a master in Israel, and knowest not these things?" was the reply.

Laconics. 1. The antidote, to the baneful influence of flattery is, for every one to examine himself, and truly estimate his own qualities, and character. 2. Let us make ourselves steatfast in what is certainly true, and we shall be able to answer objections, or reject them as unworthy of an answer. 3. Argument—cannot disprove fact; no two opposing facts can be produced; all objections to a fact must therefore be negative. 4. Elocution—includes all the influences, that serve to unfold the faculties,—and determine the character; thus involving the mental, and physical. 5. To render good for evil, is God-like; to render good for good, is man-like; to render evil for evil, is beast-like; to render evil for good—is devil-like.

Varieties. Has a wise and good God—furnished us with desires, which have no correspondent objects, and raised expectations in our breasts, with no other view but to disappoint them? Are we to be forever in search of happiness, without arriving at it, either in this world or in the next? Are we formed with a passionate longing for immortality, and yet destined to perish, after this short period of existence? Are we prompted to the noblest actions, and supported through life, under the severest hardships and most delicate temptations, by the hopes of a reward, which is visionary and chimerical,—by the expectation of praises, of which it is utterly impossible for us, ever to have the least knowledge or enjoyment?

Effects of Knowledge. The more widely knowledge is spread, the more will they be prized, whose happy lot it is—to extend its bounds, by discovering new truths, to multiply its uses—by inventing new modes of applying it in practice. Real knowledge—never prompted either turbulence, or unbelief; but its progress is the forerunner of liberality and enlightened toleration. Who so dreads these, let him tremble; for he may be well assured, that their day is at length come, and must put to sudden flight the evil spirits of tyranny and persecution, which haunted the long night, now gone down the sky.

VARIETIES.

Soft peace she brings wherever she arrives;
She builds our quiet, as she forms our lives;
Lays the rough path of peevish nature even,
And opens, in each breast, a little heaven

Man—is the rugged lofty pine,

That frowns o'er many a wave-beat shore;
Woman's the slender—graceful vine,
Whose curling tendrils—round it twine,
And deck its rough bark—sweetly o'er.

Teach me to soothe the helpless orphan's grief,
With lively aid—the widow's woes assuage;
To mis'ry's moving cries—to yield relief,
And be the sure resource of drooping age.

Our doubts—are traitors,
And make us lose the good—we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt.

387. Cadence—means a descent, or fall of the voice: here, it means the proper manner of closing a sentence. In the preceding examples, the pupil sees how it is made. The best cadence, that which rests most pleasantly on the ear, is the fall of a trial; i. e. a regular gradation of three notes from the prevalent pitch of voice; which is generally the fourth or fifth: tho' different voices are keyed on different itches: hence, each must be governed by his own peculiarities in this respect. Beware of confounding cadence with inflections; and never end a sentence with a feeble and depressed utterance.

Tho' nature—weigh our talents, and dispense,
To every man, his modicum of sense,
Yet—much—depends, as in the tiller's toil,
On culture, and the sowing of the soil.

The brave man—is not he, who feels no fear,
For that—were stupid—and irrational;
But he, whose noble soul his fear subdues, [from.
And bravely dares the danger, which he shrinks
He holds no parly with unmanly fears;
Where duty bids, he confidently steers;
Faces a thousand dangers at her call,
And trusting in his God, surmounts them all.

What is life?

'Tis not to stalk about, and draw in fresh air,
From time to time, or gaze upon the sun;
'Tis to be FREE.

388. WORD-PAINTING. There is nothing in any of the other fine arts, but what is involved in oratory. The letters are analogous to uncompounded paints; words—to paints prepared for use; and, when arranged into appropriate and significant sentences, they form pictures of the ideas on the canvas of the imagination: hence, composition, whether written or spoken, is like a picture, exhibiting a great variety of features, not only with prominence, but with degrees of prominence: to do which, the painter, speaker, or writer, applies shades of the same color to features of the same class, and opposing colors to those of different classes.

Government. The ordinary division of governments into republican, monarchical, and despotic, appears essentially erroneous; for there are but two kinds of government, good and bad: governments are national and special. The essence of the former—consists in the will of the nation constitutionally expressed; that of the latter, where there are other sources of power, or right, than the will of the nation.

Anecdote. Punctual Hearer. A woman, who always used to attend public worship with great punctuality, and took care to be always in time, was asked how it was—she could always come so early; she answered very wisely, "that it was part of her religion—not to disturb the religion of others."

I hate to see a scholar gape,
And yawn upon his seat,
Or lay his head upon his desk,
As if almost asleep.

Laconics. 1. No change in external appearance, can alter that, which is radically wrong. 2. Seize an opportunity, when it presents itself; if once lost, it may never be regained. 3. Vicious men, endeavor to impose on the world, by assuming a semblance of virtue, to conceal their bad habits, and evil propensities. 4. Beware of self-love, for it hardens the heart, and shuts the mind to all that is good and true. 5. The excessive pleasure one feels—in talking of himself, ought to make him apprehensive, that he affords little to his auditor. 6. In our intercourse with the world, we should often ask ourselves this question—How would I like to be treated thus? 7. In all ages and countries, unprincipled men may be found, who will slander the most upright character, and find others as base as themselves, to join in the propagation of their falsehoods.

Confinement of Debtors. The prosperity of a people is proportionate to the number of hands and minds usefully employed. To the community, sedition is a fever, corruption is a gangrene, and idleness is an atrophy. Whatever body, and whatever society—wastes more than it acquires, must gradually decay: and every being, that continues to be fed, and ceases to labor, takes away something from the public stock. The confinement, therefore, of any man in the sloth and darkness of a prison, is a loss to the nation, and no gain to the creditor. For, of the multitudes, who are pining in those cells of misery, a very small part is suspected of any fraudulent act, by which they retain, what belongs to others. The rest are imprisoned by the wantonness of pride, the malignity of revenge, or the acrimony of disappointed expectation.

VARIETIES.

'Tis slander:

Whose edge—is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath—
Rides on the sporting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states,
Maids and matrons, the secrets of the grave—
This viperous slander enters.
Mercy to him that shows it, is the rule,
And righteous limitation of its act,
By which heaven moves, in pardoning guilty man.
And he, that shoes none, (being ripe in years,
And conscious—of the outrage he commits,)
Shall seek it, and not find it, in his turn.
His words—are bonds; his oaths—are oracles;
His love—sincere; his thoughts—innoculate;
His tears—pure messengers, sent from his heart:
His heart—is as far from fraud,—as heaven—from earth.

Be earnest!—why shouldst thou for custom's sake,
Lay a cold hand upon thy heart's warm pulse.
And crush those feelings back, which, uttered, make Links in the chain of love? Why thus convulse
A soul, that overflows with sympathy
For kindred souls, when thou art called to be
The Heart's Apostle, loving, pure, and true?
The smooth hypocrisies, the polished lies,
The cold dead forms—and hollow mockeries
Current among the many, by the few,
Who know their manhood, should be held in scorn!
Speak freely thy free thought—and other souls
To thine shall answer—as from living coals
Together kindled, light and heat are born!

389. DYNAMICS. This, in mechanical philosophy, means the science of moving-powers; in elocution and singing, it relates to the force, loudness, harshness, strength, roughness, softness, swell, diminish, smoothness, abruptness, gentleness of voice: that is, its qualities, which are as various as those of the human mind; of which, indeed, they are the representatives. Observe—that the names of these qualities, when spoken naturally, express, or echo, their natures. The Loud, Rough, Soft, Smooth, Harsh, Forceful, Full, Strong, Tremulous, Slender, &c. all of which are comprehended in force, pitch, time, quantity, and abruptness of voice.

390. Let the following examples be rendered perfectly familiar—the feelings, tho'ts, words and appropriate voice: nothing, however, can be done, as it should be, without having the most important examples memorized, here and elsewhere. (Loud) "But when loud surges—lash the sounding shore; (Rough) The hoarse rough voice, should like the torrent roar." (Soft) "Soft is the strain, when Zephyr gently blows; (Smooth) And the smooth stream, in smoother numbers flows." (Harsh) "On a sudden, open fly, with impetuous recoil and jarring sound, the infernal doors, and on their hinges grate harsh thunder." (Soft) "Heaven opened wide her ever-during gates (harmonious sound) on golden hinges turning." (Soft) "How charming—is divine philosophy! (Harsh) Not harsh, and rugged, as dull fools suppose. (Soft) But musical—as is Apollo's lute." (Harsh, Strong and Forceful.) "Blow wind, and crack your cheeks! rage! blow your cataracts, and hurricane spout, till you have drenched our *steeple*s. You *sulphur*ious and thought-executing fires, vaunt couriers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts; and thou, all shaking thunder, strike flat the thick roundness of the world."

(Soft and Smooth.)

How sweet the moon-light sleeps upon this bank;
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music,
Creep in our ears; soft stillness, and the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.

(Quick and Joyous.)

Let the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebeck sound,
To many a youth—and many a maid,
Dancing—in the checkered shade.

A want of occupation—is not rest,
A mind quite vacant—is a mind distressed.

As rolls the ocean's changing tide,

So—human feelings—ebb—and flow :—
And who could in a breast confide,

Where stormy passions—ever glow!

Remote from cities—lived a swain,
Unvexed—with all the cares of gain;
His head—was silvered o'er with age,
And long experience—made him sage.

Maxims. 1. The credit that is got by a lie,—only lasts till the truth comes out. 2. Zeal, mixed with love, is harmless—as the dove. 3. A covetous man is, as he always fancies, in want. 4. Hypocrites—first cheat the world, and at last, themselves. 5. The borrower is slave to the lender, and the security—to both. 6. Some are too stiff to bend, and too old to mend. 7. Truth has always a sure foundation. 8. He, who draws others into evil courses—is the devil's agent. 9. To do good, is the right way to find good. 10. A spur in the head—is worth two in the heel. 11. Better spared, than ill spent. 12. Years teach more than books.

Anecdote. Love and Liberty. When an Armenian prince—had been taken captive with his princess, by Cyrus, and was asked, what he would give to be restored to his kingdom and liberty, he replied: "As for my kingdom and liberty, I value them not; but if my blood—would redeem my princess, I would cheerfully give it for her." When Cyrus had liberated them both, the princess was asked, what she thought of Cyrus? To which she replied, "I did not observe him; my whole attention was fixed upon the generous man, who would have purchased my liberty with his life."

Prejudice—may be considered as a continual false medium of viewing things; for prejudiced persons—not only never speak well, but also, never think well, of those whom they dislike, and the whole character and conduct is considered—with an eye to that particular thing which offends them.

Varieties. 1. Every thing that is an object of taste, sculpture, painting, architecture, gardening, husbandry, poetry, and music—come within the scope of the orator. 2. In a government, maintained by the arm of power, there is no certainty of duration; but one cemented by mutual kindness, all the best feelings of the heart are enlisted in its support. 3. Who was the greater tyrant, Dionysius or the bloody Mary? 4. Beauty, unaccompanied by virtue, is like a flower, without perfume; its brilliance may remain, but its sweetness is gone; all that was precious in it, has evaporated. 5. We might as well throw oil on a burning house to put out the fire, as to take ardent spirits into the stomach, to lessen the effects of a hot sun, or severe exercise. 6. The understanding must be elevated above the will, to control its desires; but it must be enlightened by the truth, that it may not err.

The pathway—to the grave—may be the same,
And the proud man—shall tread it,—and the low,
With his bowed head, shall bear him company.
But the temper—of the invisible mind,
The god-like—and undying intellect,
These are distinctions, that will live in heaven,
When time,—is a forgotten circumstance.

391. DYNAMICS CONTINUED. These contrasts produce great effects, when properly exhibited, both in elocution and music. The rushing loud, indicates dread, alarm, warning, &c.; the soft, their opposites: the tendency of indistinctness is, to remove objects to a distance, throwing them into the background of the picture; and of fullness, to bring them into the fore-ground, making them very prominent; thus—the polyphonist deceives, or imposes upon the ear, making his sounds correspond to those he would represent, near by, and at a distance.

392. FOUCIBLE. Now storming fury rose, and elamor; such as heard in heaven, till now, was never: arms on armor, clashing, brayed horrible discord; and the maddening wheels of brazen chariots raged. Full: high on a throne—of royal state, which far outshone the wealth of Ormus, and of Inde; or where the gorgeous East, with richest hand, showers on her kings barbarie, pearl and gold, Satan, EXALTED, sat. Strong: aim, the Almighty Power hurled headlong, flaming from the ethereal skies with hideous ruin and combustion, down to bottomless perdition—there to dwell in adamant chains, and penal fire,—who durst defy the Omnipotent to arms.

So MILLIONS—are smit—with the glare of a toy: They grasp at a pebble—and call it—a gem, And tinsel—is gold, (if it glitters,) to them; Hence, dazzled with beauty, the lover is smit, The hero—with honor, the poet—with wit; The fop—with his feather, his snuff-box and cane, The nymph with her novel, the merchant with gain: Each finical priest, and polite pulpitier, Who dazzles the fancy, and tickles the ear, With exquisite tropes, and musical style, As gay as a uolip—as polished as oil, Sell truth—at the shrine of polite eloquence, To please the soft taste, and allure the gay sense.

Miscellaneous. 1. Fair sir, you spit on me—on Wednesday last; you spurned me—such a day; another time—you called me dog; and for these courtesies, I'll lend thee thus much moneys. 2. I stand—in the presence—of Almighty God, and of the world; and I declare to you, that if you lose this charter, never, no NEVER—will you get another. We are now, perhaps, arrived at the varling point. Here, even HERE, we stand—on the brink of fate! Pause! for HEAVEN'S sake, pause. 3. Can you raise the dead? Pursue and overtake the wings of time? And can you bring about again, the hours, the DAYS, the YEARS, that made me happy? 4. But grant—that others can, with equal glory, look down on pleasure, and the bait of sense, where—shall we find a man, that bears afflictions, great and majestic in his ills, like Cato?

Oh then, how blind—to all that truth requires, Who think it freedom, where a part—aspire.

Maxims. 1. All is soon ready in an orderly house. 2. Barchus has drowned more than Nep-tune. 3. Despair—has ruined some, but presumption—multitudes. 4. Flattery—sits in the parlor, while plain-dealing is kicked out of doors. 5. He is not drunk for nothing, who pays his reckoning with his reason. 6. If the world knew what passes in my mind, what would it think of me. 7. Give neither counsel nor salt, till you are asked for it. 8. Close not a letter—without reading it, nor drink water—without seeing it. 9. A fool, and his money, are soon parted. 10. If few words—will not make you wise, many will not.

Anecdote. Charity Sermon. Dean Swift—was requested to preach a charity sermon; but was cautioned about having it too long; he replied, that they should have nothing to fear on that score. He chose for his text these words—"He that hath pity on the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given—will he pay him again." The Dean, after looking around, and repeating his text in a still more emphatic manner, added—"My beloved friends, you hear the terms of the loan; and now, if you like the security,—down with your dust." The result was, as might be expected,—a very large collection.

Precept and Example. Example—works more cures than precept; for words, without practice, are but councils without effect. When we do as we say, it is a confirmation of the rule; but when our lives and doctrines do not agree, it looks as if the lesson were either too hard for us, or the advice not worth following. If a priest—design to edify by his sermons, concerning the punishment of the other world, let him renounce his lust, pride, avarice, and contentiousness; for whoever would make another believe a danger, must first show that he is apprehensive of it himself.

Varieties. 1. The first book read, and the last one laid aside, in the child's library, is the mother: every look, word, tone, and gesture, nay, even dress itself—makes an everlasting impression. 2. One who is conscious of qualities, deserving of respect, and attention, is seldom solicitous about them; but a contemptible spirit—wishes to hide itself from its own view, and that of others, by show, bluster and arrogant pretensions. 3. The blood of a coward, would stain the character of an honorable man; hence, when we chastise such wretches, we should do it with the utmost calmness of temper. 4. Cultivate the habit—of directing the mind, intently, to whatever is presented to it; this—is the foundation of a sound intellectual character. 5. We are too apt, when a jest is turned upon ourselves, to think that insufferable, in another, which we looked upon as very pretty and facetious, when the humor was our own.

Never purchase friendship by gifts.

393. Words—are paints, the voice—the brush, the mind—the painter; but science, practice, genius, taste, judgment and emotion—are necessary—in order to paint well: and there is as much difference between a good and bad reader, as there is between a good painter and a mere dauber. What gives expression to painting? EMPHASIS. We look upon some pictures and remark, “that is a strong outline,” “a very expressive countenance,” this is emphasis: again, we look upon others, and there is a softness, delicacy, and tenderness, that melts the soul, as she contemplates them; this is emotion.

394. Throw the following lines on the canvas of your imagination; i. e. picture them out there.

BEAUTY, WIT AND GOLD.

In her bower—a widow dwelt;
At her feet—three suitors knelt:
Each—adored the widow much,
Each—essay’d her heart to touch;
One—had wit, and one—had gold,
And one—was cast in beauty’s mould;
Guess—which was it—won the prize,
Purse, or tongue, or handsome eyes?
First, appeared the handsome man,
Proudly peeping o’er her fan;
Red his lips, and white his skin;
Could such beauty—fail to win?
Then—stepped forth—the man of gold,
Cash he counted, coin he told,
Wealth—the burden of his tale;
Could such golden projects fail?
Then, the man of wit, and sense,
Moved her—with his eloquence;
Now, she heard him—with a sigh;
Now—she blushed, she knew not why:
Then, she smiled—to hear him speak,
Then, the tear—was on her cheek:
Beauty, vanish! gold, depart!
WIT, has won the widow’s heart.

IN POLITENESS, as in everything else, connected with the formation of character, we are too apt to begin on the outside, instead of the inside: instead of beginning with the heart, and trusting to that to form the manners, many begin with the manners, and leave the heart to chance and influences. The golden rule—contains the very life and soul of politeness: “Do unto others—as you would they should do unto you.” Unless children and youth are taught—by precept and example, to abhor what is selfish, and prefer another’s pleasure and comfort to their own, their politeness will be entirely artificial, and used only when interest and policy dictate. True politeness—is perfect freedom and ease, treating others—just as you love to be treated. Nature—is always graceful: affection, with all her art, can never produce anything half so pleasing. The very perfection of elegance—is to imitate nature; how much better—to have the reality, than the imitation! Anxiety about the opinions of others—fetter the freedom of nature, and tends to awkwardness; all would appear well, if they never tried to assume—what they do not possess. Every one is respectable and pleasing, so long as he or she, is perfectly natural and truthful, and speaks and acts from the impulses of an honest and affectionate heart, without any anxiety as to what others think.

Laconics. 1. Modesty—in your discourse, will give a lustre—to truth,—and excuse—to your errors. 2. Some—are silent, for want of matter, or assurance; others—are talkative, for want of sense. 3. To judge of men—by their actions, one would suppose that a great proportion was mad, and that the world—was one immense mad-house. 4. Prodigals—are rich, for a moment—economists, forever. 5. To do unto others, as we would they should do to us, is a golden maxim, that cannot be too deeply impressed on our minds. 6. Continue to add a little—to what was originally a little, and you will make it a great deal. 7. The value—of sound, correct principles, early implanted in the human mind, is incalculable.

Those who are talentless, themselves, are the first to talk about the conceit of others; for mediocrity—bears but one flower—ENVY.

Anecdote. Too Hard. About one hundred years ago, Mahogany—was introduced in England as ballast for a ship, that sailed from the West Indies; and one Dr. Gibbons wished some furniture made of it: but the workmen, finding it too hard for their tools, laid it aside. Another effort was made; but the cabinet-maker said it was too hard for his tools. The Doctor told him, he must get stronger tools then: he did so, and his effort was crowned with success. Remember this, ye who think the subject of eloquence, as here treated, too difficult: and if you cannot find a way, make one. Press on!

Varieties. 1. A good reader may become a good speaker, singer, painter and sculptor: for there is nothing in any of these arts, that may not be seen in true delivery. 2. Old Parr, who died at the advanced age of 152, gave this advice to his friends; “Keep your head cool by temperance, your feet warm by exercise: rise early, and go early to bed; and if you are inclined to grow fat, keep your eyes open, and your mouth shut.” Are not these excellent life-pills? 3. As the lark—sings at the dawn of day, and the nightingale at even, so, should we show forth the loving kindness of the Lord—every morning, and his faithfulness—every night. 4. Is not the science of salvation—the greatest of all the sciences?

Without a star, or angel—for their guide,
Who worship God, shall find him: humble Love,
(And not proud Reason,) keeps the door of heaven:
Love—finds admission, where Science—fails.

395. MODULATION—signifies the accommodation of the voice, (in its diversifications of all these principles,) to every variety and shade of thought and feelings. The upper pitches of voice, we know, are used in calling persons at a distance, for impassioned emphasis of certain kinds, and for very earnest arguments; the middle pitches—for general conversation, and easy familiar speaking, of a descriptive and didactic character; and the lower ones, for cadences, and the exhibition of emphasis in grave and solemn reading and speaking.

Notes. The pitch of the voice is exceedingly important in every branch of our subject, and particularly, in the higher parts; and this—among the rest. You must not often raise your voice to the eighth note; for it will be harsh and unpleasant to the ear, and very apt to break: nor drop it to the first note; for then your articulation will be difficult and indistinct, and you cannot impart any life and spirit to your manner and matter; as there is little or no compass below this pitch: both these extremes must be carefully avoided.

Patrick Henry's Treason. When this worthy patriot, (who gave the first impulse to the ball of the revolution,) introduced his celebrated resolution on the stamp act, in the Virginia House of Burgesses, in 1765, as he descanted on the tyranny of that obnoxious act, exclaimed—"Cesar—had his Brutus; Charles the First, his Cromwell; and George the Third—"Treason!" cried the speaker; "treason; treason; TREASON;" re-echoed from every part of the house. It was one of those trying moments, which are decisive of character; but Henry faltered not for an instant; and rising to a loftier attitude, and fixing on the speaker—an eye, flashing with fire, continued—"may PROFIT—by these examples: if this be treason, make the most of it."

The hills,

Rock-ribb'd—and ancient as the sun; the vales—
Stretching in pensive quietness—between;
The venerable woods; rivers, that move
In majesty, and the complaining brooks, [all,
That make the meadows green; and, pour'd round
Old ocean's gray and melancholy waste;
Are but the solemn decorations all—
Of the great tomb of man.

Maxims. 1. The follies of youth—are food for repentance—in old age. 2. Truth—may languish, but it can never die. 3. When a vain man hears another praised, he thinks himself injured. 4. Antiquity—is not always a mark of truth. 5. That trial is not fair—where affection is judge. 6. Business—is the salt of life. 7. Dependence—is a poor trade. 8. He, who lives upon hope, has but a slender diet. 9. Always taking out of the meal tub, and never putting in, soon comes to the bottom. 10. He, who thinks to deceive God, deceives himself.

Anecdote. An ill thing. Xenophanus, an old sage, was far from letting a false modesty lead him into crime and indiscretion, when he was upbraided, and called timorous, because he would not venture his money at any of the games. "I confess," said he, "that I am exceedingly timorous, for I dare not do an ill thing."

Education. It is the duty of the instructors of youth to be patient with the dull, and steady with the froward,—to encourage the timid, and repress the insolent,—fully to employ the minds of their pupils, without overburdening them,—to awaken their fear, without exciting their distike,—to communicate the stores of knowledge, according to the capacity of the learner, and to enforce obedience by the strictness of discipline. Above all, it is their bounden duty, to be ever on the watch, and to check the first beginnings of vice. For, valuable as knowledge may be, virtue is infinitely more valuable; and worse than useless are these mental accomplishments, which are accompanied by depravity of heart.

Varieties. 1. Can charcoal—paint fire; chalk—light, or colors—live and breathe? 2. Tattlers—are among the most despicable of bad things; yet even they—have their use; for they serve to check the licentiousness—of the tongues of those, who, without the fear of being called to account, through the instrumentality of these babbling knaves, would run riot in backbiting and slander.

'Tis the mind, that makes the body rich;
And, as the sun—breaks the darkest cloud,
So, honor—'pearleth—in the meanest habit.

No: let the eagle—change his plume,
The leaf—its hue, the flower—its bloom;
But ties—around the heart were spun,
That could not, would not, be undone.

Oh, who—the exquisite delights can tell,
The joy, which mutual confidence imparts?
Or who—can paint the charm unspeakable,
Which links, in tender bands, two faithful hearts?
6. Many things — are easier felt, than told.
7. It is no proof of a man's understanding, to be able to affirm—whatever he pleases; but, to be able to discern, that what is true, is true, and that what is false, is false—is the mark and character of intelligence.

Nature—sells everything for labor.

397. MODULATION CONTINUED. The situation of the public reader and speaker, calls for the employment of the most refined art in the management of his voice: he should address a whole assembly with as much apparent ease and pleasure to himself and audience, as tho' there were but a single person present. In addressing an auditory, which meets for information, or amusement, or both, the judicious speaker—will adopt his ordinary and most familiar voice; to show that he rises without bias, or prejudice, that he wishes reason, not passion, should guide them all. He will endeavor to be heard by the most distant hearers, without offending the ear of the nearest one, by making all his tones audible, distinct and natural.

Friendship! thou soft, propitious power,
Sweet regent of the social hour,
Sublime thy joys, nor understood,
But by the virtuous, and the good.

Ambition is, at a distance,

A goodly prospect, tempting to the view;
The height delights us, and the mountain-top
Looks beautiful, because 'tis near to heaven;
But we never think how sandy's the foundation; [it.
What storms will batter, and what tempests shake

O be a man; and let proud reason—tread
In triumph, on each rebel passion's head.

At thirty, man suspects himself a fool;
Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan;
At fifty, chides his infamous delay,
Pushes his prudent purpose—to resolve,
In all the magnanimity of thought,
Resolves and re-resolves—then, dies the same.

398. Some tell us, that when commencing an address, the voice should be directed to those most distant; but this is evidently wrong. At the beginning, the mind is naturally clear and serene, the passions unawakened; if the speaker adopt this high pitch, how can it be elevated, afterwards, agreeably to those emotions and sentiments, which require still higher pitches? To strain the voice thus, destroys all solemnity, weight and dignity, and gives, to what one says, a squeaking effeminacy, unbecoming a manly and impressive speaker; it makes the voice harsh and unmusical, and also produces hoarseness.

Anecdote. Speculation. A capitulist, and shrewd observer of men and things, being asked, what he thought of the speculations now afloat, replied—"They are like a cold bath,—to derive any benefit from which, it is necessary to be very quick in, and very soon out."

Not to the ensanguin'd field of death alone
Is valor limited: she sits—serene
In the deliberate council; sagely scans
The source of action; weighs, prevents, provides,
And seems to count her glories, from the feats
Of brutal force alone.

Maxims. 1. A broad hat—does not always cover a wise head. 2. Burn not your house—to frighten away the mice. 3. Drinking water, neither makes a man sick, nor his wife a widow. 4. He has riches enough, who need neither borrow or flatter. 5. True wisdom—is to know what is best worth knowing, and to do what is best worth doing. 6. Many things appear too bad to keep, and too good to throw away. 7. Keep a thing seven years, and you will find use for it. 8. We cannot pluck thorns from another's bosom, without placing roses in our own. 9. Better a half loaf than no bread. 10. Draw not thy bow before the arrow be fixed.

Experience. By what strange fatality is it, that having examples before our eyes, we do not profit by them? Why is our experience, with regard to the misfortunes of others, of so little use? In a word, why is it, that we are to learn wisdom and prudence at our own expense? Yet such is the fate of man! Surrounded by misfortunes, we are supplied with means to escape them; but, blinded by caprice, prejudice and pride, we neglect the proffered aid, and it is only by the tears we shed, in consequence of our own errors, that we learn to detest them.

Varieties. 1. Give to all persons, whom you respect, (with whom you walk, or whom you may meet, especially ladies, the wall side of the walk or street. 2. If we think our evil allowable, tho' we do it not, it is appropriated to us. 3. Why does the pendulum of a clock—continue to move! Because of the uniform operation of gravitation. What is gravitation? 4. Humility—is the child of wisdom: therefore, beware of self-conceit, and an unteachable disposition. 5. Psychology—is the science, that treats of the essence—and nature of the human soul, and of the mode—by which it flows into the actions of the body. 6. The true way to store the memory is—to develop the affections. 7. The only way to shun evils, or sins, is to fight against them. 8. Reading and observation—are the food of the young intellect, and indispensable to its growth. 9. Is it possible, that heart-friends will ever separate? 10. All effects are produced by life, and nature.

Now vivid stars shine out, in brightening files,
And boundless ether glows, till the fair moon
Shows her broad visage—in the crimson'd east;
Now, stooping, seems to kiss the passing cloud,
Now, o'er the pure cerulean—rides sublime.
Nature, great parent! whose directing hand
Rolls round the seasons—of the changing year,
How mighty, how majestic, are thy works!
With what a pleasant dread—they swell the soul,
That sees, astonish'd, and astonish'd, sings!
You too, ye winds, that now begin to blow,
With hoist'rous sweep, I raise my voice to you.
Where are your stores, you viewless beings, say,
Where your aerial magazines—reserved
Against the day of tempest perilous?

399. STRENGTH OF VOICE. The voice is weak, or strong, in proportion to the less, or greater, number of organs and muscles, that are brought into action. If one uses only the upper part of the chest, his voice will be weak; if he uses the whole body, as he should do, (not in the most powerful manner, of course, on common occasions,) his voice will be strong. Hence, to strengthen a weak voice, the student must practice expelling the vowel sounds, using all the abdominal and dorsal nerves and muscles; in addition to which, he should read and recite when standing or sitting, and walking on a level plain, and up hill: success will be the result of faithful practice.

So soft, so elegant, so fair,

Sure, something more than human's there.

Upon my lute—there is one string

Broken; the chords—were drawn too fast:

My heart—is like that string; it tried

Too much, and snap in twain at last.

She will, and she will not, she grants and she de-
Consents, retracts, advances, and then flies. [sings;

Mental fragrance—still will last,

When our youthful charms are past.

If little labor, little are our gains;

Man's fortunes—are according to his pains.

Delightful task—to rear the tender thought,

To teach the young idea—how to shoot,

To pour the fresh instruction o'er the mind,

To breathe th' enliv'ning spirit, and to fix

The generous purpose in the glowing breast.

400. Demosthenes—had three particular defects; first, weakness of the voice; which he strengthened by declaiming on the seashore, amid the roar of waters; which effort would tend directly to bring into use the lower parts of the body; second, shortness of breath; which he remedied by repeating his orations as he walked up hill; which act serves to bring into use the appropriate organs, and fully inflate the lungs; and third, a thick, mumbling way of speaking; which he overcame by reading and reciting with pebbles in his mouth; which required him to make a greater effort from below, and open his mouth wider. Examine yourself and act accordingly.

Inconsistency. Montaigne—condemns cruelty, as the most odious of all vices; yet he confesses, that hunting—was his favorite diversion. He acknowledges the inconsistency of man's conduct, but he does not ascribe it to the right cause; which is the pre-dominance, at the time, of those associations it awakens, conducing to pleasure. If he had not been accustomed to it, the associations of hunting, would have been painful, and his aversion to cruelty in the abstract, would have been realized in the concrete and particulars.

Then, pilgrim, turn, thy cares forego;

All earth-born cares—are wrong;

Man—wants but little—here below,

Nor wants that little—long.

Proverbs. 1. To subdue a trifling error, do not incur a greater. 2. Anger and haste—hinder good counsel. 3. All complaint of want of memory, but none of want of judgment. 4. Good men are a public good, and bad men—a public calamity. 5. Human laws reach not our thoughts. 6. Rulers—have no power over souls. 7. No one ever suffered—by not speaking ill of others. 8. Silly people are generally pleased with silly things. 9. Zeal, without knowledge, is religious wildfire. 10. The example of a good man—is visible philosophy.

Anecdote. Clients' Bones. A certain mechanic, having occasion to boil some cattle's feet, emptied the bones near the court house. A lawyer, observing them, inquired of a bystander, what they were. "I believe they are clients' bones," replied the wit, "as they appear to be well picked."

The Deceiver. A Base Character. Must not that man be abandoned, even to all manner of humanity, who can deceive a woman with appearances of affection and kindness, for no other end, but to torture her with more ease and authority? Is anything more unlike a gentleman, than, when his honor is engaged for the performing his promises, because nothing but that can oblige him to it, to become afterwards false to his word, and be alone, the occasion of misery to one, whose happiness he but *late*ly pretended was dearer to him than his own? Ought such a one to be trusted in his common affairs? or treated, but as one whose honesty—consisted only in his capacity of being otherwise.

Varieties. 1. Is it strange, that beautiful flowers should wither and die? 2. Trust thyself; every heart vibrates to that iron string. 3. Our American character is marked by a more than average delight—in accurate perception; which is shown by the currency of the by-word—"no mistake." 4. In sickness, and languor, give us a strain of poetry, or a profound sentence, and we are refreshed; when the great Herder was dying, he said to his friends, who were weeping around him: "Give me some great thought." Blessed are they, who minister to the cry of the soul. 5. The christian sees, in all that befalls the human race, whether it be good or evil, only the manifestations of Divine Love, as exercised in training and preparing souls, for the approach of that perfection, which they are one day destined to realize. 6. For every friend, that we lose for truth, God gives us a better one.

The love of praise, however concealed by art,

Reigns, more or less, and glows in every heart:

The proud—to gain it—tolls on toils endure,

The modest—shun it, but to make it sure;

O'er globes and scriptors, now on thrones it swells,

Now trims the midnight lamp—in college cells,

'Tis tory, whig; it plots, prays, preaches, pleads,

Harangues in senates, speaks in masquerades.

It aids the dancer's heel, the writer's head,

And heaps the plain—with mountains of the dead;

Nor ends with life; but nods—in saile plumes,

Adorns our hearse, and flatters—on our tombs.

401. TRANSITION—means, in speech, the changes of pitch, from one note to another; as from the eighth to the third; or from the sixth to the first; and vice versa; to correspond in variety and character, to the sentiment and emotion. In singing, it means changing the place of the key-note, so as to keep the tune within the scale of twenty-two degrees. In transition—the itches of voice are not only changed, but its qualities, agreeably to the nature and object of the composition; however, there must never be any sacrifice of other principles—all the proportions must be preserved. Example:

An hour passed on: the Turk awoke,
That (6) bright dream—(3) was his last.
He (5) woke—to hear his sentry's shriek, (Greek!)
(8) "To arms! they (6) come! the (8) Greek! the (10)
He woke—to die—midst (5) flame, and (5) smoke,
And (6) shout, and (3) groan, and sabre stroke,
And death-shots falling thick and fast
As lightnings—from the mountain-cloud;
And heard with voice as trumpet loud,
Borissaris—cheer his band.
(8) Strike! till the last armed foe expires;
(9) Strike! for your (6) altars and your (8) fires;
(10) Strike! for the green graves of your sires,
(8) God—and your native land.

402. To succeed in these higher parts of oratory, one must throw himself into the condition, and shape, he wishes to fill, or be, and bring the body into perfect subjection: by assuming the appropriate language of action and earnestness, he may work himself into any frame of mind, that the subject demands. He must be sure to keep up the life, spirit, and energy of the composition; and let there be a light and glow in his style. He must also cultivate a bold and determined manner; for if he takes no special interest in what he is reading or speaking, he may rest assured others will not.

Lo! from the regions of the north,
The reddening storm of battle pours,
(5) Rols along the trembling earth,
(6) Fastens on the Olynthian towers: {brave!
(8) Where rests the sword? Where sleep the
(9) Aseke! (8) Cætopia's ally save
(6) From the fury of the blast;
(8) Burst the storm—on Phœbi's walls;
(10) Rise, O Greece (8) forever falls:
(12) 'Tis I! or (10) freedom—breathes her (6) last.
(4) The jarring states—obsequious now,
(5) View the patriot's hand on high;
(2) Thunder—gathering on his brow,
(6) Lightning—flashing from his eye:—
(8) Grasp the shield—and draw the (6) sword;
(9) I lead us to (8) Philippi's lord;
(6) Let us (10) conquer him,—(5) or (2) die.

THE BIBLE.

Behold the Book, whose leaves display
Jesus, the life, the truth, the way;
Read it with diligence and prayer,
Search it, and you shall find it there.

Proverbs. 1. Be just to others, that you may be just to yourself. 2. The mind of the idler—never knows what it wishes for. 3. Every rose has its thorn. 4. There is nothing good, that may not be converted to evil purposes. 5. Few persons are aware—of the importance of rigid economy. 6. Do not suffer yourself to be deceived—by outward appearances. 7. Never take advantage of another man's ignorance. 8. The word, that has gone forth—can never be recalled. 9. A bird in the hand, is worth two in the bush. 10. That load appears light, which is borne with cheerfulness. 11. Virtue is the forerunner of happiness. 12. Foresight—is the eye of prudence.

Anecdote. O'ry Orders. A brave veteran officer, reconnoitering a battery, which was considered impregnable, and which it was necessary to storm, laconically answered the engineers, who were endeavoring to dissuade him from the attempt;—"Gentlemen, you may think and say what you please: all I know, is,—that the American flag—must be hoisted on the ramparts to-morrow morning; for I have the order in my pocket."

Effects of Perseverance. All the performances of human art, at which we look with praise or wonder, are instances of the resistless force of perseverance; it is by this that the quarry becomes a pyramid, and that distant countries are united with canals and rail-roads. If a man was to compare the effect of a single stroke of a pickaxe, or of one impression of the spade, with the general design and last result, he would be overwhelmed by the sense of their disproportion; yet those petty operations, incessantly continued, in time, surmount the greatest difficulties, and mountains are levelled, and oceans bounded, by the slender force of human beings.

Varieties. 1. Can Omnipotence do things incompatible and contradictory? 2. St. Augustine described the nature of God, as a circle, whose centre was everywhere, and his circumference nowhere. 3. The walls of rude minds are scrawled all over with facts and with thoughts; then shall one bring a lantern, and read the inscriptions! 4. "My children," said an old man to his boys, scared by a figure in the dark entry, "you will never see anything worse than yourselves." 5. Some one says, "There are no prodigies, but the first death, and the first night, that deserve astonishment and sadness!" 6. When we have broken our god of Tradition, and ceased from our god of Persuasion, then, God may fire our hearts, with his own presence; but not before. 7. No love can be bound by oath, or covenant, to secure it against a higher love.

God—scatters love—on every side,

Fecely—among his children all;

And always—hearts are open wide.

Wherein some grains may fall.

To know and love God, is everything.

403. MALE AND FEMALE VOICES. The voices of men--are generally an octave lower than those of women; or, comparatively, men's voices are like the bass viol, and women's voices like the violin. The voice is made grave, that is, to run on lower pitches, by elongating, and enlarging the vocal chords; and it is made acute, that is, to run on higher pitches, by shortening and diminishing them; in connection, however, with the size of the chest, which always has its influence. Few are aware of the extent to which the voice is capable of being cultivated; and hence, we should beware of setting limits to it.

If every one's internal care

Were written on his brow,

How many would our pity share

Who raise our envy now!

The fatal secret, when revealed,

Of every aching breast,

Would fully prove, that while concealed,

Their lot appears the best.

How calm, how beautiful, comes on

The still hours, when storms are gone;

When warring winds have died away,

And clouds, beneath the glancing ray,

Melt off, and leave the land and sea,

Sleeping--in bright tranquillity.

404. To acquire the ability to change, at will, your pitch of voice, so as to be able to adapt the manner to the matter, practice throwing the voice on different pitches, varying from one to five, five to eight, eight to one, and in other ways; also, recite such pieces as have a number and variety of speakers, as found in dialogues; and imitate the voice and manner of each, as far as possible. But remember, no one can accomplish much, without committing the examples to memory; thus, after long practice in this way, you may make the book talk and speak. All developments are from within--out, not from without--in.

Miscellaneous. 1. Two things are incumbent on the historian; to avoid stating what is false, and fully and fairly to place before us the truth. 2. One of the greatest blunders an orator can commit is, to deviate into abstruse expressions, and out of the beaten track. 3. Man--was created for a state of order, and he was in order, till he fell, or became depraved; or, what is the same thing, disordered--i. e. the reverse of order. 4. Man is in order, when he acts from supreme love to the Lord, and charity towards his neighbor, in obedience to the Divine Will; but he is depraved, and disordered, in the degree he acts from the love of self, and the love of the world. 5. No man is compelled to evil; his consent only makes it his.

A diamond,

Tho' set in horn, is still a diamond,

And sparkles--as in purest gold.

Maxims. 1. Bad counsel confounds the adviser. 2. No one can do wrong, without suffering wrong. 3. He is greatest, who is most useful. 4. Love--and you shall be loved. 5. A great man--is willing to be little. 6. Blame--is safer than praise. 7. All the devils respect virtue. 8. A sincere word was never lost. 9. Curses--always recoil upon the head of him, who imprecates them. 10. God--will not make himself manifest to cowards. 11. The love of society is natural.

Anecdote. An old alderman, after having lived for fifty years on the fat of the land, and losing his great toe with a mortification, insisted, to his dying day, that he owed it to two grapes, which he ate one day, after dinner; he said, he felt them lie cold at his stomach the moment they were eaten.

Education. The time, which we usually bestow on the instruction of our children--in principles, the reasons of which they do not understand, is worse than lost; it is teaching them to resign their faculties to authority; it is improving their memories, instead of their understandings; it is giving them credulity instead of knowledge, and it is preparing them for any kind of slavery which can be imposed on them. Whereas, if we assisted them in making experiments on themselves, induced them to attend to the consequence of every action, to adjust their little deviations, and fairly and freely to exercise their powers, they would collect facts which nothing could controvert. These facts they would deposit in their memories, as secure and eternal treasures; they would be materials for reflection, and, in time, be formed into principles of conduct, which no circumstances or temptations could remove. This would be a method of forming a man, who would answer the end of his being, and make himself and others happy.

Varieties. 1. Did not the Greek philosophy--corrupt the simplicity of the christian religion? 2. There are two sorts of popular corruption; one, when the people do not observe the laws; the other, when they are corrupted by the laws. 3. Cesar--added the punishment of confiscation, for this reason; lest the rich, by preserving their estates, should become bolder in the perpetration of crime. 4. No localities can bound the dominion, or the superiority of man. 5. What constitutes a church? Divine goodness and truth, conjoined by love, and exemplified in the life. 6. Madame de Staël's idea, that architecture--is like frozen music, must have been suggested on a cold day. 7. We are often made to feel, that there is another youth and age, than that which is measured from the year of our natural birth; some thoughts always find us young, and keep us so; such a thought is the love of the Universal and Eternal Beauty.

405. STYLE—comprehends all the principles of elocution, and denotes the manner in which different kinds of composition should be read, or spoken: of course, there are as many kinds of style, as there are of composition; and unless a person has command of body and mind, he cannot harmonize his manner and mutter. If in writing, style—means proper words, in proper places; in speaking, it must signify, proper sounds in proper places. Ex.

What is it? a meteor, bright and rare,
That comes and goes, we know not whence, or where;
A brilliant nothing—out of something wrought,
A mental vacuum—by condensing thought.

O the eye's eloquence,
(Twin-born with thought), outstrips the tardy voice;
Far swifter—than the nimble lightning's flash,
The sluggish thunder-peal, that follows it.
True courage—but from opposition grows,
And what are fifty—what—a thousand slaves,
Matched to the sinew—of a single arm,
That strikes for LIBERTY?

406. What causeth the earth to bring forth and yield her increase? Is it not the light and heat of the sun, that unlocks her native energies and gives them their power? In an analogous manner should the light of the thought, and the heat of its accompanying affection, act upon the mind, which will communicate the influence received to the whole body, and the body to the voice and actions. This is what is meant by imbibing the author's feelings, and bringing before you all the circumstances, and plunging amid the living scenes, and feeling that whatever you describe, is actually present, and passing before your mind.

407. Lyceums and Debating societies, are admirable associations for the improvement of mind, and cultivation of talent, for public or private speaking. Franklin and Roger Sherman, (the one a printer, and the other a shoe-maker), rose from obscurity to great eminence, and usefulness, by their own efforts: so may we, by using the proper means. It was in a debating society, that Lord Brougham first displayed his superior talents and unrivaled eloquence; and there, also, HENRY CLAY, the greatest American orator, commenced his brilliant career. A word to those who would be wise is enough.

Anecdote. An appropriate Sign. A man who had established a tippling-house, being about to erect his sign, requested his neighbor's advice—what inscription to put upon it. His friend replied, "I advise you to write on it—Drunkards and Beggars made here."

Honor's—a sacred tie, the law of kings,
The noble mind's—distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue, when it meets her,
And imitates her actions, where she is not:
It ought not to be sported with.

Proverbs. 1. A good word for a bad one—is worth much, and costs little. 2. He, who knows not when to be silent, knows not when to speak. 3. Oppression—causes rebellion. 4. Where content is, there is a feast. 5. The drunkard continually assaults his own life. 6. Show me a liar, and I will show you a thief. 7. That which helps one man, may hinder another. 8. A good education is the foundation of happiness. 9. Most follies owe their origin to self-love. 10. No tree—takes so deep a root as prejudice. 11. Inform yourself, and instruct others. 12. Truth—is the only bond of friendship.

Learning. We have been often told, that "a little learning is a dangerous thing," and we may be just as well assured, that a little bread is not the safest of all things; it would be far better to have plenty of both: but the sophism—of those who use this argument, is, that they represent the choice between little and much; whereas our election must be made between little—and none at all; if the choice is to be—between a small portion of information, or of food, and absolute ignorance, or starvation, common sense gives its decision in the homely proverb—"half a loaf is better than no bread."

Varieties. 1. The best and surest course is—never to have recourse to deception, but prove ourselves, in every circumstance of life, equally upright and sincere. 2. The most consummate hypocrite—cannot, at all times, conceal the workings of his mind. 3. When we employ money—to good purposes, it is a great blessing; but when we use it for evil and wicked ends, or become so devoted to it, as to endeavor to acquire it by dishonest means, it is a great curse. 4. None are so fond of secrets, as those who do not mean to keep them: such persons cover them, as spendthrifts do money, for the purpose of circulation. 5. Burke—called the French revolutionists, "the ablest architects of ruin, that the world ever saw." 6. Trifles—always require exuberance of ornament; the building that has no strength, can be valued only for the grace of its decorations. 7. We cannot part with our heart-friends: we cannot let our angels go.

Nor fame I slight, nor for her favours call;
She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all.
But, if the purchase cost so dear a price,
As soothing folly, or exalting vice;
And if the music—must flatter lawless sway,
And follow still where fortune leads the way;
Or, if no basis—bear my rising name,
But the fall'n ruins of another's fame;
Then, teach me, heaven, to scorn the guilty bays;
Drive from my breast that wretched list of praise.
Unblenish'd let me live, or die—unknown:
O, grant me honest fame, or grant me none.

'Tis sweet—to hear
The song and oar—of Adria's gondolier,
(By distance mellowed,) o'er the waters sweep,

408. Public speakers ought to live longer, and enjoy better health, than other persons; and if they conform to the principles here taught, and the laws of life and health generally, this will be the result. Pulmonary diseases may be thrown off by these exercises; the author being a living witness, having been given over at three different times with consumption. The celebrated Currier and Dr. Brown, the metaphysician, and many others that might be mentioned, are also witnesses of this truth. One reason is, that natural speaking induces one to use a very large quantity of air, whereby the capacity of the lungs is much enlarged, the quantity of air increased, and the blood more perfectly purified; the use of the whole body insures a free circulation, and, of course, contributes to universal health.

Think'st thou—there are no serpents in the world.
But those, which slide along the grassy sod,
And sting the luckless foot, that presses them?
There are, who, in the path of social life,
Do bask their spotted skins, in fortune's sun,
And sting the soul, aye, till its healthful frame
Is changed to secret, festering, sore disease;
So deadly—is its wound.

The brave, 'tis sure, do never shun the light;
Just are their thoughts, and open are their tempers;
Still are they found—in the fair face of day,
And heaven, and men—are judges of their actions.

409. DISEASES OF THE THROAT—are connected, particularly, with those parts of the body, which are involved in breathing, and relate to the understanding, or reasoning faculties of the mind: thus, thinking and breathing are inseparably connected together; as are feeling and acting; hence, the predominance of thought, in the exercise of the voice, or in any kind of action, and zeal without knowledge, tend directly to such perversions of mind and body, as induce, not only diseases of the throat, but even pulmonary diseases: if, then, we will to be free, in any respect, we must return to truth and nature; for they will guide the obedient in the right way.

Miscellaneous. 1. Whatever one possesses, becomes doubly valuable, by having the happiness of dividing it with a friend. 2. He who loves riches more than his friend, does not deserve to be loved. 3. He who would pass the latter part of his life with honor, and usefulness, must, when he is young, consider that he shall one day be old; and when he is old, remember that he has once been young. 4. The rolling planets, and the glorious sun, Still keep that order, which they first begun; But wretched man, alone, has gone astray, Swerved from his God, and walks another way. 5. The old—live in the past, as the young do—in the future. 6. Fix upon a high standard of character: to be thought well of—is not sufficient.

the point you are to aim at, is, the greatest possible degree of usefulness. 7. He who only aims at little, will accomplish but little.

Anecdote. A silly, but very pretty woman, complained to the celebrated and beautiful Sophia Arnold, of the number of her admirers, and wished to know how she should get rid of them. "Oh, my dear," (was the satiric reply,) "it is very easy for you to do it: you have only to speak."

Proverbs. 1. Those, who possess any real excellence, think and say, the least about it. 2. The active only, have the true relish of life. 3. Many there are, who are everything by turns, and nothing—long. 4. To treat trifles—as matters of importance, is to show our own unimportance. 5. Grief, cherished unseen, is genuine; while that, which has witnesses, may be affected. 6. Error—does not so often arise from our ignorance of the truth, as an unwillingness to receive it. 7. Some—mistake the love—for the practice of virtue, and are not so much good themselves, as they are the friends of goodness. 8. To love any one, and not do him good, when there is ability and opportunity, is a contradiction. 9. Pity—will always be his portion in adversity, who acted with kindness in prosperity. 10. The best mode of proving any science, is by exhibiting it.

A Good Example. Mr. Clay, in a debate upon the Loan Bill, remarked, that, for twenty or thirty years, neither he nor his wife, had owed any man a dollar. Both of them, many years gone by, had come to the conclusion, that the best principle of economy was this,—"never to go in debt. To indulge your wants when you were able to do so, and to repress them when you are not able to indulge them." The example is not only an excellent one for itself, but comes from a high source. To repress a want—is one of the wisest, safest, and most necessary principles of political economy. It prevents, not only the dangerous practice of living beyond our means, but encourages the safe precedent of living within them. If all who could, would live within their means, the world would be much happier and much better than it is. Henry Clay and his noble housewife—give us an example worthy of all imitation.

Varieties. 1. Is pride—a mark of talent? 2. Byron says, of Jack Bunting, "He knew not what to do, and so he swore:" so we may say of many a one's preposterous use of books.—He knew not what to do, and so he read.

Wits—a feather—Pope has said,

And ladies—do not doubt it:

For those, who've least—within the head,

Display the most—about it.

They sin, who tell us love can die;

Its holy flame forever burneth;

From heaven it came, to heaven returneth.

Forgiveness—to the injured does belong;

But they ne'er pardon, who have done the wrong.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,

Thou shalt not escape calumny.

410. DELIVERY—addresses itself to the mind through two mediums, the eye and the ear: hence, it naturally divides itself into two parts, voice and gesture; both of which must be sedulously cultivated, under the guidance of proper feeling, and correct thought. That style is the best, which is the most transparent; hence the grand aim of the elocutionist should be—perfect transparency; and when this part is attained, he will be listened to with pleasure, be perfectly understood, and do justice to his subject, his powers, and his audience.

411. YOUNG GENTLEMEN,—(said William Wirt,) you do not, I hope, expect from me, an oration for display. At my time of life, and worn down, as I am, by the toils of a laborious profession, you can no longer look for the spirit and buoyancy of youth. Spring—is the season for flowers; but I—am in the autumn of life, and you will, I hope, accept from me, the fruits of my experience, in lieu of the more showy, but less substantial blossoms of spring. I could not have been tempted hither, for the puerile purpose of display. My visit has a much graver motive and object. It is the hope of making some suggestions, that may be serviceable in the journey of life, that is before you; of calling into action some dormant energy; of pointing your exertions to some attainable end of practical utility; in short, the hope of contributing, in some small degree, towards making you happier in yourselves, and more useful to your country.

412. The conversational—must be delivered in the most natural, easy, familiar, distinct, and agreeable manner; the narrative and didactic, with a clear and distinct articulation, correct emphasis, proper inflections, and appropriate modulations; because, it is not so much your object to excite the affections, as to inform the understanding: the argumentative, and reasoning, demand great deliberation, slowness, distinctness, frequent pauses, candor, strong emphasis and occasional vehemence. No one can become a good reader and speaker, without much practice and many failures.

Pioneers. The "eccentric" man—is generally the pioneer of mankind, cutting his way the first—into the gloomy depths of unexplored science, overcoming difficulties, that would check meaner spirits, and then—holding up the light of his knowledge—to guide thousands, who, but for him, would be wandering about in all the uncertainty of ignorance, or be held in the fetters of some selfish policy, which they had not, of themselves—the energy to throw off.

'Tis not in folly—not to scorn a fool,
And scarce in human wisdom—to do more.

Proverbs. 1. Constant occupation—shuts out temptation. 2. A flatterer—is a most dangerous enemy. 3. Unless we aim at perfection, we shall never attain it. 4. They who love the longest, love the best. 5. Pleasure—is not the rule for rest, but for health. 6. The President is but the head-servant of the people. 7. Knowledge—is not truly ours, till we have given it away. 8. Our debts, and our sins, are generally greater than we suppose. 9. Some folks—are like snakes in the grass. 10. He—injuries the good, who spares the bad. 11. Beauty will neither feed or clothe us. 12. Woman's work is never done.

Anecdote. What for? After the close of the Revolutionary war, the king of Great Britain—ordered a thanksgiving to be kept throughout the kingdom. A minister of the gospel inquired of him, "For what are we to give thanks? that your majesty has lost thirteen of your best provinces?" The king answered, "No." "Is it then, that your majesty has lost one hundred thousand lives of your best subjects?" "No, no!" said the king. "Is it then, that we have expended, and lost, a hundred millions of money, and for the defeat and tarnishing of your majesty's arms?" "No such thing,"—said the king pleasantly. "What then, is the object of the thanksgiving?" "Oh, give thanks that it is no worse."

Varieties. 1. Who does not see, in Cesar's Commentaries, the radical elements of the present French character? 2. "A man," says Oliver Cromwell, "never rises so high, as when he knows not whither he is going." 3. The virtue, that ruin persons affect to despise, might have saved them; while the beauty, they so highly prized, is the cause of their ruin. 4. He, who flatters, without designing to benefit by it, is a fool; and whoever encourages that flattery, that has sense enough to see through, is a vain coxcomb. 5. The business of the teacher—is not so much to communicate knowledge to the pupil, as to set him to thinking, and show him how to educate himself; that is, he must rather teach him the way to the fountain, than carry him to the water. 6. Many buy cheap, and sell dear; i. e. make as good bargains as they can; which is a trial of skill, between two knaves, to see which shall overreach the other; but honest men set their price and adhere to it. 7. If you put a chain round the neck of a slave, the other end fastens itself around your own.

Would you then learn to dissipate the band

Of these huge threatening difficulties dire,
That, in the weak man's way—like lions stand,

His soul appal, and damp his rising fire?

Resolve, resolve, and to be men aspire.

Exert that noblest privilege, alone,

Here to mankind indulged: control desire;

Let godlike reason, from her sovereign throne,

Speak the commanding word—I will, and it is done!

413. EARNESTNESS OF MANNER—is of vital importance in sustaining a transparent style; and this must be imbibed internally, and felt with all the truth and certainty of nature. By proper exercises on these principles, a person may acquire the power of passing, at will, from grave to gay, and from lively to severe, without confounding one with the other: there are times, however, when they may be united; as in the humorous and pathetic, together.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never, to himself hath said,
"This—is my own, my native land?"
Whose heart—hath ne'er within him burned,
As home—his footsteps he hath turned,
From wandering on a foreign strand?
If such there breathe, go mark him well:
For him, no minstrel raptures swell;
High tho' his titles, powers, or pelf,
The wretch—concentrated all in self,
Living—shall forfeit fair renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust, from whence he sprung,
Unceft'd, unhonored, and unsung.

414. The following are the terms usually applied to style, in writing, and also in speaking; each of which has its distinctive characteristics; though all of them have something in common. Bombastic, dry, elegant, epistolary, flowing, harsh, laconic, lofty, loose, terse, tumid, verbose. There are also styles of occasion, time, place, &c.: such as the style of the bar, of the legislature, and of the pulpit; also the dramatic style, comedy, (high and low,) farce and tragedy.

Illiterate and selfish people, are often opposed to persons traveling through the country, to lecture on any subject whatever; and especially, on such as the grumblers are ignorant of. But are not books and newspapers, itinerants too? In olden time, the worshippers of the goddess Diana, were violently opposed to the Apostles; because, thro' their preaching of the cross, their craft was in danger. The liberally educated, and those who are in favor of a universal spread of knowledge, are ready to bid them "God speed," if they and their subject are praiseworthy.

Anecdote. A Kingly Dinner in Nature's Palace. Cyrus, king of Persia, was to dine with one of his friends; and, on being asked to name the place, and the viands with which he would have his table spread, he replied, "Prepare the banquet at the side of the river, and let one loaf of bread be the only dish."

Bright, as the pillar, rose at Heaven's command:
When Israel—marched along the desert land,
Blazed through the night—on lonely wilds afar,
And told the path,—a never-setting star;
So, heavenly Genius, in thy course divine,
Hope—is thy star, her light—is ever thine.

Proverbs. 1. People generally love truth more than goodness; knowledge more than holiness. 2. Never magnanimity—fell to the ground. 3. He, who would gather immortal palms, must not be hindered by the name of goodness, but must explore—if it be goodness. 4. No author was ever written down, by any but himself. 5. Better be a nettle in the side of your friend, than his echo. 6. Surmise is the gossamer, that malice blows on fair reputation; the corroding dew, that destroys the choicest blossoms. 7. A general prostration of morals—must be the inevitable result of the diffusion of bad principles. 8. To know—is one thing; and to do—is another. 9. Candor—lends an open ear to all men. 10. Art—is never so beautiful, as when it reflects the philosophy of religion and of man.

We cannot honor our country—with too deep a reverence; we cannot love her—with an affection too pure and fervent; we cannot serve her—with an energy of purpose, or a faithfulness of zeal—too steadfast and ardent. And what is our country? It is not the East, with her hills and her valleys, with her countless sails, and the rocky ramparts of her shores. It is not the North, with her thousand villages, and her harvest-home, with her frontiers of the lake, and the ocean. It is not the West, with her forest-sea, and her inland isles, with her luxuriant expanses, clothed in the verdant corn; with her beautiful Ohio, and her majestic Missouri. Nor is it yet the South, opulent in the mimic snow of the cotton, in the rich plantations of the rustling cane, and in the golden robes of the rice-field. What are these, but the sister families of one greater, better, holier family, OUR COUNTRY!

VARIETIES.

Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportioned thought his act.
Be thou familiar; but by no means vulgar.
The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul, with hooks of steel;
But do not dull thy palm—with entertainment
Of ev'ry new hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Beware
Of entrance into quarrel! but, being in,
Bear it, that the opposer—may beware of thee.
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice, [ment.
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment.
Costly thy habit—as thy purse can buy,
But not expressed in fancy; rich, not gaudy.
For the apparel—oft proclaims the man.
Neither a borrower, nor a lender be;
For loan—oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing—dulls the edge of husbandry.
This above all—to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day.
Thou canst not, then—be false to any man.

Dare to be true—nothing—can need a lie;
The fault that needs it—grows two—thereby.

What do you think of marriage?
I take it, as those that deny purgatory;
It locally contains or heaven or hell;
There is no third place in it.

415. Beware of a slavish attention to rules; for nothing should supercede Nature, who knows more than Art; therefore, let her stand in the foreground, with art for her servant. Emotion—is the soul of oratory: one flash of passion on the check, one beam of feeling from the eye, one thrilling note of sensibility from the tongue, one stroke of hearty emphasis from the arm, have infinitely more value, than all the rhetorical rules and flourishes of ancient or modern times. The great rule is—BE IN EARNEST. This is what Demosthenes more than intimated, in his declaring, that the most important thing in eloquence, was action. There will be no execution without fire.

Whoever thinks, must see, that man—was made To face the storm, not languish in the shade;
Action—his sphere, and, for that sphere designed,
Eternal pleasures—open on his mind.

For this—fair hope—leads on the impassioned soul,
 Through life's wild labyrinth—to her distant goal:
 Pains, in each dream, to fan the genial flame,
 The pomp of riches, and the pride of fame;
 Or, fondly gives reflection's cooler eye,
 A glance, an image, of a future sky.

Notes. The standard for propriety, and force, in public speaking is—to speak just as one would naturally express himself in earnest conversation in private company. Such should we all do, if left to ourselves, and early pains were not taken to substitute an artificial method, for that which is natural. Beware of imagining that you must read in a different way, with different tones and cadences, from that of common speaking.

Anecdote. The severity of the laws of Draco, is proverbial; he punished all sorts of crime, and even idleness, with death; hence, De-ma-des said—“He writes his laws, not with ink—but with blood.” On being asked why he did so, he replied,—that the smallest crime deserved death, and that there was not a greater punishment he could find out, for greater crimes.

Miscellaneous. 1. Envy—is the daughter of pride, the author of revenge and murder, the beginning of secret sedition and the perpetual tormentor of virtue; it is the filthy slime of the soul, a venom, a poison, that consumeth the flesh, and drieth up the marrow of the bones. 2. What a pity it is, that there are so many quarter and half men and women, who can take delight in gossip, because they are not great enough for any thing else.

Were I so tall—as to reach the pole,
 And grasp the ocean—with a span,
 I would be measured—by my soul,
 The mind's—the standard of the man.

4. What is the difference between loving the minds, and the persons of our friends?
 5. How different is the affection, the thought, action, form and manners of the male, from the affection, thought, action, form and manners of the female.

Then farewell,—I'd rather make
 My bed—upon some icy lake,
 When thawing suns—begin to shine,
 Than trust a love—as false as thine.

The stomach—hath no ears.

Laconics. 1. God has given us vocal organs, and reason to use them. 2. True gesture—is the language of nature, and makes its way to the heart, without the utterance of a single word. 3. Coarseness and vulgarity—are the effects of a bad education; they cannot be chargeable to nature. 4. Close observation, and an extensive knowledge of human nature alone, will enable one to adapt himself to all sorts of character. 5. Painting—describes what the object is in itself: poetry—what it inspires or suggests: one—represents the visible, the other—both the visible and the invisible. 6. It is uncanonid self-will, that condemns without a hearing. 7. The mind—wills to be free; and the signs of the times—proclaim the approach of its restoration.

Woman. The right education of this sex is of the utmost importance to human life. There is nothing, that is more desirable for the common good of all the world; since, as they are mothers and mistresses of families, they have for some time the care of the education of their children of both sorts; they are intrusted with that, which is of the greatest consequence to human life. As the health and strength, or weakness of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so—the soundness or folly of our minds is not less owing to their first temper and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers. As we call our first language our mother-tongue, so—we may as justly call our first tempers our mother-tempers; and perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language, than to part entirely with those tempers we learned in the nursery. It is, therefore, to be lamented, that the sex, on whom so much depends, who have the first forming both of our bodies and our minds, are not only educated in pride, but in the silliest and most contemptible part of it. Girls are indulged in great vanity; and mankind seem to consider them in no other view than as so many painted idols, who are to allure and gratify their passions.

Varieties. 1. Was England—justified in her late warlike proceeding against China? 2. Fit language there is none, for the heart's deepest things. 3. The honor of a maid—is her name; and no legacy is so rich as honesty. 4. O, how bitter a thing it is—to look into happiness—thro' another's eyes.

Ungrateful man, with liquorish draughts,
 And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
 That from it—all consideration slips.

To persist
 In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
 But makes it much more heavy.

He cannot be a perfect man,
 Not being tried or tutored in the world:
Experience is by industry achieved,
 And perfected—by the swift course of time

A confused report—passed thro' my ears;
 But, full of hurry, like a morning dream,
 It vanished—in the business of the day.

416. THE DECLAMATORY AND HORTATORY—indicate a deep interest for the persons addressed, a horror of the evil they are entreated to avoid, and an exalted estimate of the good, they are exhorted to pursue. The exhibition of the strongest feeling, requires such a degree of self-control, as, in the very torrent, tempest and whirlwind of passion, possesses a temperance to give it smoothness. The DRAMATIC—sometimes calls for the exercise of all the vocal and mental powers: hence, one must consider the character represented, the circumstances under which he acted, the state of feeling he possessed, and every thing pertaining to the scene with which he was connected.

417. ROLLA'S ADDRESS TO THE PERUVIANS. My brave associates—partners—of my toil, my feelings, and my fame! Can Rolla's words—add vigor—to the virtuous energies, which inspire your hearts? No; you have judged as I have, the foulness of the crafty plea, by which these bold invaders would delude you. Your generous spirit has compared, as mine has, the motives, which, in a war like this, can animate their minds and ours. They, by a strange frenzy driven, fight for power, for plunder, and extended rule; we, for our country, our altars, and our homes. They—follow an adventurer, whom they fear, and obey a power, which they hate; we—serve a monarch whom we love,—a God, whom we adore. Whene'er they move in anger, desolation—tracks their progress! Whene'er they pause in amity, affliction—mourns their friendship. They boast, they come but to improve our state, enlarge our thoughts, and free us from the yoke of error! Yes—they will give enlightened freedom to our minds, who are themselves the slaves of passion, avarice, and pride. They offer us their protection. Yes, such protection—as vultures—give to lambs—covering, and devouring them. They call on us to barter all of good, we have inherited and proved, for the desperate chance of something better, which they promise. Be our plain answer this: The throne—we honor—is the people's choice; the laws we revere—are our brave fathers' legacy; the faith we follow—teaches us to live in bonds of charity with all mankind, and die—with hope of bliss—beyond the grave. Tell your invaders this, and tell them too, we seek no change; and, least of all, such change as they would bring us.

GAMBLING.

Oh! vice accursed, that hurst thy victim on
With specious smiles, and false deluding hopes—
Smiles—that destroy, and hopes—that bring despair,
Infatuation—dangerous and destructive,
Pleasure most visionary, if delight, how transient!
Prelude of horror, anguish, and dismay!

Proverbs. 1. The more—women look into their glasses, the less—they attend to their houses. 2. Works, and not words, are the proof of love. 3. There is no better looking-glass, than a true friend. 4. When we obey our superiors, we instruct our inferiors. 5. There is more trouble in having nothing to do, than in having much to do. 6. The best throw of the dice—is to throw them away. 7. Virtue, that parties, is near the surrender. 8. The spirit of truth—dwelleth in meekness. 9. Resist a temptation, till you conquer it. 10. Plain dealing is a jewel.

Anecdote. Faithful unto Death. When the venerable Polycarp—was tempted by Herod, the proconsul, to deny, and blaspheme the LORD JESUS CHRIST, he answered,—“Eighty and six years—have I served my LORD and SAVIOR,—and in all that time—he never did me any injury, but always good; and therefore, I cannot, in conscience, reproach my KING and my REDEEMER.”

A Wife; not an Artist. When a man of sense comes to marry, it is a companion he wants, and not an artist. It is not merely a creature who can paint, and play, and sing, and dance. It is a being who can comfort and counsel him; one who can reason and reflect, and feel and judge, and discourse and discriminate; one who can assist him in his affairs, lighten his sorrows, purify his joys, strengthen his principles and educate his children. Such is the woman who is fit for a mother, and the mistress of a family. A woman of the former description may occasionally figure in a drawing-room, and excite the admiration of the company; but is entirely unfit for a helpmate to man, and to train up a child in the way he should go.

Varieties. 1. He, who is cautious and prudent, is generally secure from many dangers, to which many others are exposed. 2. A fool may ask more questions in an hour, than a wise man may answer in seven years. 3. The manner in which words are delivered, contribute mainly to the effects they are to produce, and the importance which is attached to them. 4. Shall this greatest of free nations be the best? 5. One of the greatest obstacles to knowledge and excellence, is indolence. 6. One hour's sleep before midnight, is worth two afterward. 7. Science, or learning, is of little use, unless guided by good sense.

Men—use a different speech—in different climes,
But Nature hath one voice, and only one.
Her wandering moon, her stars, her golden sun,
Her woods and waters, in all lands and times,
In one deep song proclaim the wondrous story.
They tell it to each other—in the sky,
Upon the winds they send it—sounding high,
Jehovah's wisdom, goodness, power, and glory.
I hear it come from mountain, cliff, and tree,
Ten thousand voices—in one voice united;
On every side—the song envelops me,
The whole round world reverses—and is delighted.
Ah! why, when heaven—and earth—lift up their voices,
Ah! why should man alone, nor worship, nor rejoice?

418. The merging of the Diatonic Scale in the Musical Staff, as some have done in elocution, is evidently incorrect; for then, the exact pitch of voice is fixed, and all must take that pitch, whether it be in accordance with the voice, or not. But in the simple diatonic scale, as here presented, each one takes his lowest natural note for his tonic, or key-note, and then, passes to the medium range of pitches. Different voices are often keyed on different itches; and to bring them all to the same pitch, is as arbitrary as Procrustes's bedstead, according to Hudibras:

"This iron bedstead, they do fetch,
To try our hopes upon;
If we're too short, we must be stretch'd,
Cut off—if we're too long."

Beware of all racks; be natural, or nothing.
What the weak head—with strongest bias rules,
Is (6) PRIDE; the never-failing vice of fools.

A soul, without reflection, like a pile,
Without inhabitant—to ruin runs.
Wit—is fine language—to advantage dressed;
Better often thought, but ne'er so well expressed.
Our needful knowledge, like our needful food,
Unhedged, lies open—in life's common field,
And bids ALL—welcome—to the vital feast.

Let sense—be ever in your view;
Nothing is lovely, that is not true.

419. SUGGESTIONS. Let the pupils memorize any of the proverbs, laconics, maxims, or questions; and recite them on occasions like the following: when they first assemble in the school-room; or, meet together in a social circle: let them also carry on a kind of conversation, or dialogue with them, and each strive to get one appropriate to the supposed state, character, &c. of another: or use them in a variety of ways, that their ingenuity may suggest.

Pride. There is no passion so universal, or that steals into the heart more imperceptibly, and covers itself under more disguises, than pride; and yet, there is not a single view of human nature, which is not sufficient to extinguish in us all the secret seeds of pride, and sink the conscious soul—to the lowest depths of humility.

Anecdote. Sterling Integrity. In 1778, while congress was sitting in Philadelphia, frequent attempts were made, by the British officers, and agents, to bribe several of the members. Governor Johnstone—authorized the following proposal, to be made to Col. Joseph Reed: "That if he would engage his interest to promote the objects of the British, he should receive THIRTY THOUSAND DOLLARS, and any office in the colonies, in his majesty's gift. Col. Reed—indignantly replied,—"I am not worth purchasing; but such as I am, the king of Great Britain is not rich enough to buy me."

Laconics. 1. Any violation of law—is a breach of morality. 2. Music, in all its variety, is essentially one: and so is speech, tho' infinitely diversified. 3. Literary people—are often unpleasant companions in mixed society; because they have not always the power of adapting themselves to others. 4. It is pedantry—to introduce foreign words into our language, when we have pure English words to express all that the exotics contain; with the advantage of being intelligible to every one. 5. Whatever is merely artificial, is unnatural; which is opposed to general eloquence. 6. There can be no great advances made, in genuine scientific truth, without well regulated affections. 7. We can be almost anything we choose; if we will a thing to be done, no matter how high the aim, success is nearly certain.

Anger. Of all passions—there is not one so extravagant and outrageous as this; other passions solicit and mislead us: but this—runs away with us by force, hurries us as well to our own, as to another's ruin: it often falls upon the wrong person, and discharges its wrath on the innocent instead of the guilty. It spares neither friend nor foe; but tears all to pieces, and casts human nature into a perpetual warfare.

VARIETIES.

All the world's—a stage,
And all the men and women—merely players:
They have their exits, and their entrances;
And one man, in his time, plays many parts,
His acts—being seven ages. At first, the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms;
And then, the whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail,
Unwillingly, to school. And then, the lover;
Sighing like a furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow: Then, a soldier,
Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honor, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth: And then the justice;
In fair round belly, with good capon lined,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part: The sixth age—shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloons;
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble—pipes,
And whistles in his sound: Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion;
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.
Charity, decent, modest, easy, kind,
Softens the high, and rears the abject mind;
Knows, with just reins, and gentle hand, to guide
Betwixt vile shame—and arbitrary pride.
Not soon provoked, she easily forgives;
And much—she suffers, as she much—believes.
Soft peace she brings, wherever she arrives;
She builds our quiet, as she forms our lives;
Lays the rough paths—of peevish nature even;
And opens, in each heart, a little heaven.

420. THE SLENDER CHARACTERISTIC OF VOICE. In all cases, endeavor to express by the voice and gesture, the sense and feeling, that are designed to be conveyed by the words; i. e. tell the whole truth. Most of the following words, that Shakspeare puts into the mouth of Hotspur, descriptive of a dandy, requires the use of this peculiarity of voice, in order to exhibit their full meaning. Conceive how a blunt, straight-forward, honest soldier would make his defence, when unjustly accused by his finical superior, of unsoldier-like conduct; and then recite the following.

My liege—I did deny no prisoners.
But I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless, and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord; neat, trimly dress'd;
Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new reap'd,
Showed like stubble-land—at harvest home.
He was perfumed like a milliner;
And, 'twixt his finger and his thumb, he held
A pouncet-box, which, ever and anon,
He gave his nose. And still he smild, and talk'd,
And as the soldiers—bore dead bodies by,
He called them untaught knaves. unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly, unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind—and his nobility.
With many holiday, and lady terms,
He question'd me; amongst the rest, demanded
My prisoners, in her majesty's behalf;
I then, all smarting with my wounds, being gall'd
To be so pestered with a popinjay,
Out of my grief—and my impatience,
Answered negligently,—I know not what—
He should, or should not; for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting gentlewoman, [mark.]
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, (heaven save the
And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth,
Was spermaceti—for an invard bruise:
And that it was great pity, (so it was,)
That villainous saltpetre—should be digg'd,
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good, tall fellow had destroyed
So cowardly, and, but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier:
This bald, unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answered indirectly, as I said;
And I beseech you, let not his report
Come current, for an accusation,
Betwixt my love, and your high majesty.

Number. Unity—is an abstract conception, resembling primary, or incorporeal matter, in its general aggregate; one—appertains to things, capable of being numbered, and may be compared to matter, rendered visible under a particular form. Number is not infinite, any more than matter is; but it is the source of that indefinite divisibility, into equal parts, which is the property of all bodies. Thus, unity and one are to be distinguished from each other.

Plenty—makes dainty.

Maxims. 1. Some are alert in the beginning, but negligent in the end. 2. Fear—is often concealed under a show of daring. 3. The remedy is often worse than the disease. 4. A faint heart never won a fair lady. 5. No man is free, who does not govern himself. 6. An angry man opens his mouth, and shuts his eyes. 7. Such as give ear to slanderers, are as bad as slanderers themselves. 8. A cheerful manner denotes a gentle nature. 9. Proud looks lose hearts, but courteous words—win them. 10. Brevity is the soul of eloquence.

Anecdote. Self-interest. When Dr. Franklin applied to the king of Prussia to lend his assistance to America,—"Pray Doctor," says he, "what is the object you mean to attain?" "Liberty, Sir," replied the philosopher; "Liberty! that freedom, which is the birthright of all men." The king, after a short pause, made this memorable answer: "I was born a prince, and am become a king; and I will not use the powers I possess, to the ruin of my own trade."

Of Lying. Lying—supplies those who are addicted to it—with a plausible apology for every crime, and with a supposed shelter from every punishment. It tempts them to rush into danger—from the mere expectation of impunity; and, when practiced with frequent success, it teaches them to confound the gradations of guilt; from the effects of which there is, in their *imagination*s, at least one sure and common protection. It corrupts the early simplicity of youth; it blasts the fairest blossoms of genius; and will most assuredly counteract every effort, by which we may hope to improve the talents, and mature the virtues of those whom it infects.

Varieties. 1. A very moderate power, exercised by perseverance, will effect—what direct force could never accomplish. 2. We must not deduce an argument against the use of a thing, from an occasional abuse of it. 3. Should we let a painful and cold attention to manner and voice, chill the warmth of our hearts, in our fervency and zeal in a good cause? 4. Youth—often rush on, impetuously, in the pursuit of every gratification, heedless of consequences. 5. The adherence to truth—produces much good; and its appearances—much mischief. 6. Every one, who does not grow better, as he grows older, is a spendthrift of that time, which is more precious than gold. 7. Obedience to the truths of the Word, is the life of all; for truths are the laws of the heavens, and of the church; obedience—implies the reception of them; so far as we receive, so far we are alive, by the coming of the kingdom within us.

Whoe'er, amidst the sons
Of reason, valor, liberty, and virtue,
Displays distinguished merit, is a noble
Of Nature's own making.

421. TREMOR OF VOICE—resembles the trill in singing, and may be indicated in this manner, ~~~~~; the voice ranging from a quarter of a tone, to several tones. It is made deep in the throat, with a dropping of the jaw; and when properly used, it is very effective and heart-stirring: especially, in the higher kinds of oratory. It heightens joy, mirth, rapture, and exultation; adds pungency to scorn, contempt, and sarcasm: deepens the notes of sorrow, and enhances those of distress: often witnessed in children, when manifesting their delights. There are several degrees, from the gross to the most refined.

422. 1. Said Falstaff, of his ragged regiment, "I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat; no eye hath seen such scarecrows." Almost every word requires a kind of chuckle, especially the italic ones; and by making a motion with the chin, up and down, the shake of the voice will correspond to the sign, ~~~~~ . 2. In this example we have an instance of a refined tremor of voice; but the right feeling is necessary to produce it naturally. Queen Catharine said, in commending her daughter to Henry, "And a little to love her, for her mother's sake: who loved him—heaven knows how dearly." The coloring matter of the voice is feeling—passion, which gives rise to the qualities of voice; thus, we employ harsh tones in speaking of what we disapprove, and euphonic ones in describing the objects of love, complacency, admiration, &c.

423. In extemporaneous speaking, or speaking from manuscript, (i. e. making it talk.) when the speaker is under the influence of strong passion, the voice is apt to be carried to the higher pitches: how shall he regain his medium pitch? by changing the passion to one requiring low notes; thus, the surface of his flow of voice, will present the appearance of a country with mountains, hills, and dales. Elocution—relates more to the words and thoughts of others; oratory to our own. To become a good reader and speaker, one must be perfect in elocution, which relates to words: in logic, which relates to thoughts; and in rhetoric, which appertains to the affections: thus involving ends, causes, and effects.

Anecdote. Aged Gallantry. A gallant old gentleman, by the name of Page, who was something of a rhymester, finding a lady's glove at a watering-place, presented it to her, with the following lines:

"If from your glove—you take the letter g,
Your glove—is love—which I devote to—thee."

To which the lady returned the following answer:

"If from your Page, you take the letter p,
Your page—is age,—and that won't do for me."

Proverbs. 1. Proud persons have few real friends. 2. Mildness—governs better than anger. 3. No hope should influence us to do evil. 4. Few things are impossible to skill and industry. 5. Diligence—is the mistress of success. 6. Conscience is never dilatory in her warnings. 7. A vain hope flattereth the heart of a fool. 8. Moderate speed is a sure help to all proceedings. 9. *Liberal*ity of knowledge makes no one the poorer. 10. If you endeavor to be honest, you struggle with yourself.

Names. A man, that should call every thing by its right name, would hardly pass through the streets, without being knocked down as a common enemy.

Varieties. 1. In 1840, there were in the United States, five hundred and eighty-four thousand whites, who could not read or write; five thousand, seven hundred and seventy-three deaf and dumb; five thousand and twenty-four blind; fourteen thousand and five hundred and eight insane, or idiots, and two millions four hundred and eighty-seven thousand slaves. 2. As our population increases thirty-four per cent. in ten years, at this rate, in 1850, our seventeen millions will be twenty-two millions: in 1860, thirty millions; and in 1900, ninety-five millions. 3. The regular increase of the N. E. states is fourteen per cent.; of the middle states twenty-five per cent.; of the southern twenty-two per cent.; and of the western—sixty-eight per cent. 4. Many persons are more anxious to know who Melchisedec was, or what was Paul's thorn in the flesh, than to know what they shall do to be saved. 5. To cure anger, sip of a glass of water, till the fit goes off. 6. An infallible remedy for anxiety—"cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee."

TRY; TRY AGAIN.

'Tis a lesson—you should heed,

Try, try again;

If at first—you don't succeed,

Try, try again;

Then your courage should appear.

For, if you will persevere,

You will conquer, never fear;

Try, try again.

Once, or twice, though you should fail,

Try, try again;

If you would, at last, prevail,

Try, try again;

If we strive, 'tis no disgrace,

Though we may not win the rare;

What should you do in the case?

Try, try again.

If you find your task is hard,

Try, try again;

Time will bring you your reward,

Try, try again;

All that other folks can do,

Why, with patience, should not you?

Only keep this rule in view,

TRY, TRY AGAIN.

424. Before entering on a consideration and illustration of the Passions, the pupil is urged to revise the preceding lessons and exercises; but do not be deceived with the idea, that thinking about them is enough, or reading them over silently; join practice with thought, and the effects are yours. One of the great difficulties in thinking about any art or science, and witnessing the efforts of others in their presentation, is—that one's taste is so far in advance of his own practice, that he becomes disgusted with it, and despairs of his success. Let us remember that nothing is truly our own, that we do not understand, love and practice.

HAMLET'S INSTRUCTIONS ON DELIVERY.

Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you; trippingly on the tongue. But if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town-crier had spoke my lines. And do not saw the air too much with your hand; but use all gently; for in the very torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance, that may give it smoothness. Oh! it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious, periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings; who, (for the most part,) are capable of nothing, but inexplicable dumb-show and noise. I would have such a fellow whipp'd for o'erdoing termagant, it out-Herod's Herod. Pray you, avoid it. Be not too tame, neither; but let your own discretion be your tutor. Suit the action—to the word, the word—to the action; with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for anything, so overdone, is from the purpose of playing; whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is—to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn—her own image,—and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. Now, this overdone, or come tardy off, though it may make the unskillful laugh, cannot but make the judicious—grieve: the censure of one of which, must, in your allowance, o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. Oh! there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise, and that highly, that, neither having the accent of christian, nor the gait of christian, pagan, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well; they imitated humanity so abominably.

425. TENDENCIES OF OUR LANGUAGE. As our language abounds in monosyllables, it affords good means to deliver our thoughts in few sounds, and thereby favors despatch, which is one of our characteristics; and when we use words of more than one syllable, we readily contract them some, by our rapid pronunciation, or by the omission of some vowel; as, drow'n'd, walk'd, dips; instead of drown-ed, walk-ed, dip-peth, &c.; and even proper names of several syllables, when familiarized, often dwindle down into monosyllables; whereas, in other languages, they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable.

Proverbs. 1. Beauty is no longer amiable, than while virtue adorns it. 2. Past services should never be forgotten. 3. A known enemy is better than a treacherous friend. 4. Don't engage in any undertaking, if your conscience says no to it. 5. Benefits and injuries receive their value from the intention. 6. We should give by choice, and not by hazard. 7. He, that does good to another, from proper motives, does good also to himself. 8. He that is false to God can never be true to man. 9. A good principle is sure to produce a good practice. 10. None are truly wise, but those that are pure in heart.

Anecdote. Contrary. A woman, having fallen into a river, her husband went to look for her, proceeding up stream from where she fell in. The bystanders asked him if he was mad? she could not have gone against the stream. The man answered: "She was obstinate and contrary in her life-time, and I suppose for certain she is so at her death."

Intuition. We cannot have an idea of one, without the idea of another to which it is related. We then get the idea of two, by contemplating them both; referring, abstractly, to one of them. We say one and one are equal to two; one one, is less than two ones; therefore, one does not equal two. One and one, are the parts of two, and the parts of a thing are equal to the whole of it. Thus, we come to the knowledge of what has been called intuitive proposition, only by reasoning. When such a principle is clearly admitted, we cannot deny its truth, for a moment; but it is far from being, strictly speaking, an intuitive truth.

Varieties. 1. The virtues of the country are with our women, and the only remaining hope of the resurrection of the genius and character of the nation, rests with them. 2. The present—is the parent of the future. 3. The last words of the Indian chief, who died at Washington, in 1824, were, "When I am gone, let the big guns be fired over me." 4. Beware of turning away from doing good, by thinking how much good you would do, if you only had the means. 5. The pleasure of thinking on important subjects, with a view to communicate our thoughts to the unfolding minds around us, is a most exquisite pleasure. 6. Principle and practice must go hand in hand, to make the man, or woman. 7. The time is fast approaching, when the mind will strike out new fields, and view itself, its Creator, and the Universe from new positions.

HOPE.

Why do those cliffs of shadowy tint appear,
More sweet than all the landscapes shining near?
'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view,
And robes the mountain in its azure hue!
Thus with delight we linger to survey
The promis'd joys of life's unmeasur'd way;
Thus from afar, each dim discover'd scene,
More pleasing seems than all the past hath been,
And every form that fancy can repair,
From dark oblivion, glows divinely there.

426. A just delivery consists in a distinct articulation of words, pronounced in proper tones, suitably varied to the sense, and the emotions of the mind; with due observation of accent, the several gradations of emphasis; pauses or rests in proper places, and well measured degrees of time; and the whole accompanied with expressive looks, and significant gestures. To conceive, and to execute, are two different things: the first may arise from study and observation; the second is the effect of practice.

427. RULES FOR THE ' . When questions are not answered by yes or no; as, Who is that lady? In AFFIRMATIVE sentences; as—I am prepared to go: language of AUTHORITY; as—Back to thy punishment, false fugitive: TERROR; as—The light burns blue: SURPRISE; as—Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet: REPREHENSION; as—You are very much to blame for suffering him to pass: INDIGNATION: Go—false fellow, and let me never see your face again: CONTEMPT; as—To live in awe of such a thing as I myself: EXCLAMATION: O nature! how honorable is thy empire! RHETORICAL DIALOGUE, when one or more persons are represented; as—James said, Charles, go and do as you were bidden; and John said, he need not go at present, for I have something for him to do: and the FINAL PAUSE; as—All general rules have some exceptions.

428. IMPORTANT QUESTIONS. 1. Is there more than one God? 2. Was the world created out of nothing? 3. What is the meaning of the expression, "let us make man in our image, after our likeness?" 4. By what means can we become happy? 5. Can we be a friend, and an enemy, at the same time? 6. Are miracles the most convincing evidences of truth? 7. Will dying for principles, prove any thing more than the sincerity of the martyr? 8. Is it possible for a created being to merit salvation by good works? 9. Have we life of our own; or are we dependent on God for it every moment? 10. What is the difference between good and evil? 11. Is any law independent of its maker? 12. Are miracles—violations of nature's laws?

429. Some think matter is all, and manner little or nothing; but if one were to speak the sense of an angel in bad words, and with a disagreeable utterance, few would listen to him with much pleasure or profit. The figure of Atonis, with an awkward air, and ungraceful motion, would be disgusting instead of pleasing.

Reader, whoso'er thou art,
What thy God has given, impart;
Hide it not within the ground;
Send the cup of blessing round.

Proverbs. 1. To fail, or not—to fail; that is the question. 2. He, that loveth pleasure, shall be a poor man. 3. Flattery is a dazzling meteor, that casts a delusive glare before the mental eye seduces the imagination, perverts the judgment, and silences the dictates of reason. 4. Mankind are governed more by feeling and impulse, than by reason and reflection. 5. Our duty and true interest, always unite. 6. An occasional hearty laugh, is often an act of wisdom. 7. No one can be great, who is not virtuous. 8. We make more than half the evils we feel. 9. No one can estimate the value of a pious, discreet, and faithful mother. 10. The boy—is the father of the man.

Anecdote. Tallow and Talent. Fletcher, bishop of Nesmes, was the son of a tallow-chandler. A great duke once endeavored to mortify the prelate, by saying to him, at the king's levee, that he smelt of tallow. To which the bishop replied, "My lord, I am the son of a chandler, it is true, and if your lordship had been the same, you would have remained a chandler all the days of your life.

Disinterestedness—is the very flower of all the virtues, a manifestation—in the heart of one who feels and acts from it, of heaven on earth,—the very reflection of the sun of Paradise. If mankind more generally, knew how beautiful it is to serve others, from the love of doing them good, there would not be so much cold and narrow selfishness in the world. When we have contributed most to the happiness of others, we are receptive ourselves of the most happiness.

Varieties. 1. Never repay kindness with unkindness. 2. Is pride—commendable? 3. No guarantee for the conduct of nations, or individuals, ought to be stronger than that which honor imposes. 4. True patriotism labors for civil and religious liberty all over the world—for universal freedom; the liberty and happiness of the human race. 5. What is charity, and what are its fruits? 6. When persons are reduced to want, by their own laziness, or vices, is it a duty to relieve them? 7. To read Milton's Paradise Lost, is the pleasure of but few. 8. The argument of the Essay on Man, is said to have been written by Bolingbroke, and versified by Pope. 9. Painting, Sculpture and Architecture—are three subjects, on which nearly all persons, of polite education, are compelled to conceal ignorance, if they cannot display knowledge. 10. Is labor—a blessing, or a curse?

Music!—oh! how faint, how weak!

LANGUAGE—fades before thy spell;

Why should feeling—ever speak,

When thou canst breathe her soul—so well.

Ah! why will kings—forget—that they are men,
And men, that they are brethren? [the ties

Why delight—in human sacrifice! Why burst
Of NATURE, that should knit their souls together
In one soft band—of amity and love?

430. STYLE. The character of a person's style of reading and speaking depends upon his moral perceptions of the ends, causes, and effects of the composition: thus, STYLE may be considered the man himself, and, as every one sees and feels, with regard to everything, according to the state or condition of his mind, and as there are and can be no two persons alike; each individual will have a manner and style peculiar to himself; tho' in the main, that of two persons of equal education and intelligence, may be in a great degree similar.

431. RULES FOR THE '. When questions are answered by yes or no, they generally require the '. Exs. Are you well? Is he gone? Have you got your hat? Do you say yes? Can he accommodate me? Will you call and see me? But when the questions are emphatic, or amount to an affirmative, the ' is used. Are you well? As much as to say: tell me whether you are well. Is he gone? Hâve you done it? All given in an authoritative manner. Hath he said it, and shall he not do it? He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? Is he a man, that he should repent?

432. IMPORTANT QUESTIONS. 1. Is the casket more valuable than the jewel? 2. Will not the safety of the community be endangered, by permitting the murderer to live? 3. Are theatres—beneficial to mankind? 4. Did Napoleon do more hurt than good to the world? 5. Were the Texans right—in rebelling against Mexico? 6. Ought the license system to be abolished? 7. Is animal magnetism true? 8. Who was the greatest monster—Nero, or Catiline? 9. Should we act from policy, or from principle? 10. Is not the improvement of the mind, of the first importance?

Nature. Man is radiant with expressions. Every feature, limb, muscle and vein, may tell something of the energy within. The brow, smooth or contracted,—the eye, placid, dilated, tearful, flashing,—the lip, calm, quivering, smiling, curled,—the whole countenance, serene, distorted, pale, flushed,—the hand, with its thousand motions,—the chest, still or heaving,—the attitude, relaxed or firm, cowering or lofty,—in short, the visible characteristics of the whole external man,—are NATURE'S HAND-WRITING; and the tones and qualities of the voice, soft, low, quiet, broken, agitated, shrill, grave, boisterous,—are her ORAL LANGUAGE: let the student copy and learn. Nature is the goddess, and art and science her ministers.

Since trifles—make the sum of human things,
And half our misery—from our foibles springs;
Since life's best joys—consist in peace and ease,
And few—can save or serve, but all—can please;
O let the ungentle spirit—learn from hence,—
A small unkindness—is a great offence.

Maxims. 1. It does not become a law-maker, to become a law-breaker. 2. Friendship is stronger than kindred. 3. Idleness is the sepulchre of a living man. 4. An orator, without judgment, is like a horse without a bridle. 5. He that knows when to speak, knows when to be silent. 6. The truest end of life—is to know the life that never ends. 7. Wine has drowned more than the sea. 8. Impose not on others a burthen which you cannot bear yourself. 9. He overcomes a stout enemy, that overcomes his own anger. 10. Study mankind as well as books.

Anecdote. Note of Interrogation (?). Mr. Pope, the poet, who was small and deformed, sneering at the ignorance of a young man, who was very inquisitive, and asked a good many impertinent questions, inquired of him if he knew what an interrogation point was? "Yes sir," said he, "it is a little crooked thing, like yourself, that asks questions."

Ideas, acquired by taste—are compound and relative. If a man had never experienced any change, in the sensation produced by external things, on the organs of taste, that which he now calls sweet, (if it had been the quality, subjected to the sense,) would have conveyed to the mind no possible idea; but, alternating with the quality we call bitter, contrariety—produces the first impression, and he learns to distinguish the qualities by names. The sensation—awakened by Madeira wine, must be very acute, to enable a man to discriminate, accurately, without a very careful comparison. Let a particular kind of Madeira wine remain a few years on the lees of many other kinds, and who would detect the compound flavor, but the contriver?

Varieties. 1. Inspire a child with right feelings, and they will govern his actions: hence, the truth of the old adage, Example is better than precept. 2. The great difficulty is, that we give rules, instead of inspiring sentiments; it is in vain to lead the understanding with rules, if the affections are not right. 3. Benjamin West states, that his mother kissed him, eagerly, when he showed her the likeness he had sketched of his baby sister; and, he adds,—that kiss made me a painter. 4. Lay by all scraps of material things, as well as of knowledge, and they will certainly come in use within seven years. 5. Gain all the information you can, learn all that comes in your way, without being intrusive, and provided it does not interfere with the faithful discharge of other duties. 6. It was a maxim of the great William Jones, never to lose an opportunity of learning anything.

A wise man poor,
Is like a sacred book, that's never read;
To himself he lives, and to all else seems dead:
This age—thinks better of a gilded fool,
Than of a threadbare saint—in wisdom's school

433. STYLE. The numerous examples given throughout this work, afford the necessary means for illustrating all the principles of elocution: let the taste, and judgment, as well as the abilities of the student—be tested by a proper selection and application of them. He must not expect too much from others, nor take it unkindly, when thrown upon his own resources: the best way to increase our strength, is to have it often tested. All who become orators, must make themselves orators.

434. IMPORTANT QUESTIONS. 1. If we do well, shall we not be accepted? 2. Which is more useful, fire, or water? 3. Ought circumstantial evidence to be admitted in criminal cases? 4. Can we be too zealous in rightly promoting a good cause? 5. Which is worse, a bad education, or no education? 6. Are not bigotry and intolerance—as destructive to morality, as they are to common sense? 7. Are we not apt to be proud of that which is not our own? 8. Ought there not to be duties on imported goods, to encourage domestic manufactures? 9. Is slavery right? 10. Have steamboats been the cause of more good than evil?

435. IGNORANCE AND ERROR. It is almost as difficult to make one unlearn his errors, as to acquire knowledge. Mal-information is more hopeless than non-information; for error is always more busy than ignorance. Ignorance—is a blank sheet, on which we may write; but error—is a scribbled one, from which we must first erase. Ignorance—is contented to stand still, with her back to the truth; but error—is more presumptuous, and proceeds in the same direction. Ignorance has no light, but error follows a false one. The consequence is, that error, when she retraces her footsteps, has farther to go, before she can arrive at the truth, than ignorance.

Anecdote. Virtue before Riches. The mistocles—had a daughter, to whom two men were wishing to make love; one—was very rich, but a simpleton, and the other—poor, but a very wise man: the father preferred the latter,—saying, “I would rather have a man without riches, than riches without a man.”

The primal duties—shine aloft like stars;
The charities, that soothe, and heal, and bless,
Are scattered at the feet of man, like flowers;
The generous inclination, the just rule,
Kind wishes, and good actions, and pure thoughts.
No mystery is here: no special boon
For high, and not for low; for proudly graced,
And not for meek of heart. The smoke ascends
To heaven as lightly from the cottage hearth,
As from the haughty palace. He, whose soul
Ponders this true equality, may walk
The fields of earth—with gratitude and hope.

Our wishes lengthen—as our sun declines.

Maxims. 1. Punctuality begets confidence, and is the sure road to honor and respect. 2. A picture is a poem, without words. 3. Sensible men show their sense, by saying much in few words. 4. He, who thinks to cheat another, cheats himself. 5. Pride is easily seen in others; but we rarely see it in ourselves. 6. Wealth is not his who gets it, but his who enjoys it. 7. A bad book is one of the worst of thieves. 8. Tolerance should spring from charity, not from indifference. 9. Too much prosperity makes most men fools. 10. He, who serves God, has the best master in the world. 11. One love drives another out. 12. Health is better than wealth.

Influence. Few are aware of the full extent of meaning contained in this word. If we can measure the kind and quantity of influence, that every variety of heat and cold has on the world of matter; if we can tell the influence, that one individual has on another, one society on another, and one nation on another, both for time and eternity; if we can estimate the influence, that spiritual beings have on one another, and on the human race, collectively, and separately; also the influence of the Great Spirit on all creation, then, we are able to see and realize the mighty meaning of this important word. Contemplate and weigh the influence, that different kinds of food and drink have on the human system, by being appropriated to its innumerable parts; the influence on body and mind of keeping and violating the laws of life, by thinking, feeling, and acting; the influence, which a good or bad person has on his associates and also their influence on others, through all coming time, as well as in the eternal world, and you will perceive something of the importance of ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well; of living and practicing what is good and true, and thereby being saved from all that is evil and false.

Varieties. 1. Lord Coke—wrote the following, which he religiously observed; “Six hours to sleep, to law’s great study six, Four spend in prayer, the rest to nature fix.” 2. Wm. Jones, a wise economist of the fleeting hours of life, amended the sentiment thus; Seven hours to law, to soothing slumbers seven, Ten to the world allot, and all to heaven. 3. The truly beautiful and sublime are to be found within the regions of nature and probability: the false sublime sets to itself no bounds: it deals in thunders, earthquakes, tempests, and whirlwinds. 4. Is it any pain for a bird to fly, a fish to swim, or a boy to play? 5. Confound not vociferation with emphatic expression; for a whisper may be as discriminating as the loudest tones. 6. Speech—is the gift of God. 7. Order—is the same in the world, in man, and in the church; man—is an epitome of all the principles of order.

436. STYLE, &c. To accomplish your object, study the true meaning and character of the subject, so as to express the whole, in such a way as to be perfectly understood and felt: thus, you will transport your hearers to the scene you describe, and your earnestness raise them on the tiptoe of expectation, and your just arguments sweep everything before them like a mountain torrent: to excite, to agitate, and delight, are among the most powerful arts of persuasion: but the impressions must be enforced on the mind by a command of all the sensibilities and sympathies of the soul. That your course may be ever upward and onward, remember, none but a good man can be a perfect orator; un-corrupted and incorruptible integrity is one of the most powerful engines of persuasion.

437. IMPORTANT QUESTIONS. 1. Is any government—as important as the principles it should protect and extend? 2. Should we remain passive, when our country, or political rights are invaded? 3. Are bunks beneficial? 4. Have the crusaders been the cause of more evil than good? 5. Was the war waged against the Seminoles of Florida, just? 6. Which is the more important acquisition, wealth, or knowledge? 7. Is there any neutral ground between good and evil, truth and falsehood? 8. Which should we fear most, the commission of a crime, or the fear of punishment? 9. By binding the understanding, and forcing the judgment, can we mend the heart? 10. When proud people meet together, are they not always unhappy? 11. Is not common sense a very rare and valuable article? 12. What is the use of a body, without a soul?

438. MANNER AND MATTER. The secret of success in Music, as well as in Elocution, is, to adapt the manner perfectly to the matter: if the subject be simple, such must be the manner: if it be gay and lively, or solemn and dignified, such, or such must be the manner: in addition to which, the performer must forget himself, or rather lose himself in the subject, body and soul, and show his regard to his audience, by devoting himself to the subject: and hence he must never try to show himself off: but hide behind the thought and feeling, and depend upon them to produce the effect: if there is any affectation, the hold on the heart is in that proportion relinquished. Oh, when shall we take our appropriate place and regard USE as the grand object!

But sure—to foreign climes—we need not range,

Nor search the ancient records of our race,

To learn—the dire effect of time—and change,

Which, in ourselves, alas! we daily trace;

Yet, at the darkened eye, the withered face,

Or hoary hair—I never will repine;

But spare, O Time! whate'er of mental grace,

Of candor, love, or sympathy divine;

Whate'er of fancy's ray, or friendship's flame is mine.

Maxims. 1. Revenge, however sweet, is dearly bought. 2. Life is half spent, before we know what it is to live. 3. The world is a workshop, and the wise only know how to use its tools. 4. A man is valued, as he makes himself valuable. 5. Heaven is not to be had, merely by yearning for it. 6. As often as we do good, we sacrifice. 7. Be careful to keep your word, even in the most trifling matter. 8. Hearts may agree, tho' heads may differ. 9. Honest men are easily bound; but you can never bind a knave. 10. Experience keeps a dear school; but fools will learn in no other.

Anecdote. Curious Patriotism. Some years ago, one of the convicts at Botany Bay, wrote a farce, which was acted with much applause in some of the theatres. Barrington, the notorious pick-pocket, wrote the prologue; which ended with these lines:

True patriots we; for, be it understood,

We left our country—for our country's good.

Ignorance—Willfulness. The ignorant—oppose without discrimination. Harvey, for asserting the circulation of the blood, was styled a vagabond, a quack; and persecuted, through life, by the medical profession. In the time of Francis I., Ambrose Pare—introduced the ligament, to staunch the blood of an amputated limb, instead of boiling hot pitch, in which the bleeding stump had formerly been dipped; and he was persecuted, with the most relentless rancour, by the Faculty, who ridiculed the idea—of risking a man's life upon a thread, when boiling pitch had stood the test for centuries. Medicines have been proscribed as poison, and then prescribed in great quantities; the proscriptions and prescriptions being both adopted with equal ignorance and credulity. There is no hope for man, but a thorough and correct education in the school of truth and goodness.

Varieties. 1. Does the nature of things depend on the matter, of which they are formed; or on the laws of constitution, by which matter is arranged? 2. Is not vegetable matter formed from oxygen and hydrogen; and animal matter from these two and carbon? But what are their constituent parts? Were their essences created, or are they eternal? 3. What large portions of the world there are of which we know comparatively nothing! and although we are familiar with our bodies, externally, yet how little of their internals do even the best physiologists know? 4. How much is really known of the nature of mind? and yet there is presumption enough in some, to decide at once, upon all the phenomena of the mind, and prescribe its limits. 5. Thus, man clothes himself with his fanciful knowledge, and plays such insane tricks before the world, as make the angels weep.

The fisher—is out on the sunny sea,

And the reindeer—bounds o'er the pasture free;

And the pine—has a fringe of a softer green,

And the moss—looks bright, where my foot hath been.

439. EFFECTIVE STYLE. The more your reading and speaking partake of the freedom and ease of common discourse, (provided you sustain the object and life of the composition) the more just, natural, and effective will be your style of delivery: hence the necessity of studying nature, of avoiding all affectation, and of never attempting that in public, which is beyond your ability. Some mar, or spoil what they are going to say, by making so much ado over it, thinking they must do some great thing; when it isal most as simple as—cash and be clean: whatever is not natural is not agreeable or persuasive.

440. IMPORTANT QUESTIONS. 1. Were any beings ever created angels? 2. Is it right ever to do wrong? 3. Why was a revelation necessary? 4. May we not protect our person and character from assault? 5. Does civilization increase happiness? 6. Which excites more curiosity, the works of nature, or the works of art? 7. Ought a witness to be questioned with regard to his religious opinions, or belief? 8. Was the general bankrupt law a benefit to the country? 9. Why are we disposed to laugh, even when our best friend falls down? 10. Which is the greatest, faith, hope, or charity? 11. Should controversy interrupt our friendship and esteem for each other? 12. Have christians any right to persecute each other for their opinions?

441. It is much to be regretted, that our teachers are so illy qualified to instruct their pupils even in the first rudiments of reading: and they are all so much inclined to fall into bad habits, and the imitation of faulty speakers, that it requires constant watchfulness to keep clear of the influences of a wrong bias, and false, and merely arbitrary rules. We never can succeed in this important art, until we take elementary instruction out of the hands of ignoramuses, and insist upon having persons fully competent to take charge of the cause. Away then with the idea, that any one can teach reading and speaking, merely because they can call the letters, and speak the words so as to be understood.

Operating Circumstances. We are too apt, in estimating a law, passed at a remote period, to combine in our consideration, all the subsequent events, which have had an influence upon it; instead of conforming ourselves, as we ought, to the circumstances, existing at the time of its passage.

So live, that, when thy summons comes—to join
The innumerable cavans, that moves
To the pale realms of shade, where each shall take
His chamber—in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave, at night,
Scourged to his dungeon; but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave,
Like one, who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down—in phasant dreams.

Maxims. 1. Happiness is the shadow of contentment, and rests, or moves forever with its original. 2. A drop of wisdom is worth a tun of riches. 3. Whatever does not stand with credit, will not stand long. 4. Business must be attended to, at the expense of every thing else of less importance. 5. Our states of mind differ as much as our spirits and temper. 6. Death—cannot kill what never dies,—mutual love. 7. If you will not hear reason, she will rap you over your knuckles. 8. Open rebuks is better than secret love. 9. Good counsel is thrown away on the arrogant and self-conceited. 10. He, who resolves to amend, has God, and all good beings on his side.

Anecdote. Vanity Reproved. "I am very thankful, that my mouth has been opened to preach without any learning,"—said an illiterate preacher, in speaking against educating ministers, to preach the gospel. A gentleman present replied, "Sir, a similar event took place in Baalun's time."

Education—should give us command of every faculty of body, and mind—call out all our powers of observation and reflection, change the creatures of impulse, prejudice and passion, to thinking, reasoning, and loving beings; lead to objects of pursuits, and habits of conduct, favorable to the happiness of every individual, and to the whole world, and multiply all the means of enjoyment, and diminish every temptation to vice and sensuality; and true education will do all this.

Varieties. 1. What is moral virtue? 2. The greatest danger to public liberty, is from vice and illness. 3. He, that showeth mercy, shall receive mercy. 4. Never attempt anything more, than there is a prospect of accomplishing. 5. Should not beasts—as well as men, be treated with kindness? 6. Rational liberty—is diametrically opposed to the wildness of anarchy. 7. We should never ascribe bad motives, when we can suppose good ones. 8. Nothing is more prejudicial—to the great interests of a nation, than uncertain and varying policy. 9. Is it lawful—to contend with others, on any occasion. 10. Prefer the evident interests of the community, to the suggestions of the pride of consistency. 10. Cleanliness—is next to godliness.

Why have those banished and forbidden legs
Dared once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But more than why—Why have they dared to march
So many miles upon her peaceful bosom;
Frightening her pale-faced villagers with war,
And ostentation of despised arms?
Comest thou because the anointed king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself,
Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French;
Oh, then, how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee,
And minister correction to thy fault!

442. ELOQUENCE. What were all the attributes of man, his personal accomplishments, and his boasted reason, without the faculty of SPEECH? To excel in its use is the highest of human arts. It enables man to govern whole nations, and to enchant, while he governs. The aristocracy of Eloquence is supreme, and, in a free country, can never be subdued. It is the pride of peace, and the glory of war: it rides upon the zephyr's wings, or thunders in the storm. But there is in eloquence, in painting, the life of the canvas, which breathes, moves, speaks, and is full of action: so is there in the dance, the poetry and music of motion, the eloquence of action; whose power consists in the wonderful adaptation of the graces of the body to the harmonies of mind. There is eloquence in every object of taste, both in art and nature; in sculpture, gardening, architecture, poetry and music; all of which come within the scope and plan of the orator, that he may comprehend that intellectual relation, that secret clause in the liberal professions, which, connecting one with another, combines the influence of all.

Virtue, alone, ennobles human kind,
And power—should on her glorious footsteps wait.

Wisdom—finds tongues—in trees; books—in running streams; sermons—in stones, and good—in everything.

You pride you—on your golden hue; [too.
Know—the poor glow-worm—hath its brightness

When men of judgment—feel, and creep their way.
The positive—pronounce—without delay.

'Tis good, and lovely, to be kind;
But charity—should not be blind.

A little learning—is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep—or taste not the Pierian spring;
There, shallow draughts—intoxicate the brain,
But, drinking largely, sobers us again.

Ah me! the laureled wreath, that murder wears,
Blood-nursed and watered with the widow's tears,
Seems not so foul,—so tainted,—and so dead,
As waves the night-shade round the sceptic's bed.

443. Music—is the oral language of the affections; as words are the natural language of the thoughts. The notes of a tune are analogous to letters; the measures—to words; the strains—to sentences; and the tune, or musical piece, to a discourse, oration, or poem. As there is a great variety of affections, and states of affection in the human mind, so there is a great variety of tunes, through the medium of which these affections, and states of affection are manifested. There are three grand divisions of music, which, for the sake of distinction, may be denominated the upper, or that which relates to the Supreme Being; the middle, or that relating to created, rational beings, or social music; and the lower, or what appertains to that part of creation below man—called descriptive music.

Ambition—is like love,—impatient—
Both of delays,—and rivals.

Maxims. 1. Old age and faded flowers, no remedies can revive. 2. Something should be learned every time a book is opened. 3. A truly great man never puts away the simplicity of the child. 4. The gem cannot be polished without friction, nor man—perfected, without adversity. 5. The full stomach cannot realize the evils of hunger. 6. When thought is agitated, truth rises. 7. A child requires books, as much as the merchant does goods. 8. Learn by the vices of others, how detestable your own are. 9. Judge not of men or things, at first sight. 10. Reprove thy friend privately, and commend him publicly.

Anecdote. Sharp Reply. Two country attorneys overtaking a wagoner, with two span of horses, and, thinking to be witty at his expense, asked him, "How it happened, that his forward horses were so fat, and the rear ones so lean?" The wagoner, knowing them, answered, "That his fore span were lawyers, and the other—clients."

Selfishness—seems to be the complex of all vices. The love of self, when predominant, excludes all goodness, and perverts all truth. It is the great enemy of individuals, societies, and communities. It is the cause of all irritation the source of all evil. People, who are always thinking of themselves, have no time to be concerned about others; their own pleasure or profit, is the pivot, on which everything turns. They cannot even conceive of disinterestedness, and will laugh to scorn all, who appear to love others, as well as themselves. Selfishness—is the very essence of the first original sin, and it must be corrected, or we are lost.

Varieties. 1. The wind, the falling of water, humming of bees, a sweet voice reading monotonously, tend to produce sleep; this is not so much the case with musical tones. 2. The trilling and quivering of the voice, which please so much, correspond to the glittering of light; as the moonbeams playing on the waves. 3. Falling from a discord to a concord, which produces so much sweetness in music, correspond to the affections, when brought out of a state of dislike; and also with the taste; which is soon cloyed with what is sweet alone. 4. Music has great effect on mind and body, making us warlike or the reverse, soft and effeminate, grave and light, gentle, kind and pitiful, &c., according to its nature, and performance; the reason is, because hearing is more closely associated with feeling or spirits, than the other senses. Observe the effect of Yankee Doodle, God save the King, Marseilles Hymn, &c. 5. When music speaks to the affection, affection obeys; as when nature speaks, nature replies.

Let gratitude—in acts of goodness flow;
Our love to God, in love to man below.
Be this our joy—to calm the troubled breast,
Support the weak, and succor the distress'd;
Direct the wand'rer, dry the widow's tear;
The orphan guard, the sinking spirit cheer:
Tho' small our power to act, tho' small our skill,
God—sees the heart; he judges—by the will.

444. There are also three great divisions in POETRY, which is closely allied to music; and both of them originate in the WILL, or affections: and hence, the words of the psalm, hymn, poem, and the music in which they are sung, chanted, or played, constitute the forms, or mediums, through which the affections and sentiments are bodied forth. Is not genuine music from heaven? and does it not lead there if not perverted? May not the same be said of poetry? Woe betide the person, that converts them into occasions of evil!

How blind is pride; what eagles are we still—
In matters that belong to other men;
What beetles—in our own.

Who fights

With passions, and overcomes them, is endued
With the best virtue.—

Nature—to each—allots his proper sphere;
But—that forsaken, we like comets are; [broke,
Tossed thro' the void; by some rude shock we're
And all our boasted fire—is lost in smoke.

Thick waters—show no images of things;
Friends—are each others' mirrors, and should be Clearer than crystal, or the mountain springs,
And free from cloud, design, or flattery.

'Tis virtue, that they want; and wanting its Honor—no garments to their backs can fit.

445. THE USES OF ELOQUENCE. In every situation, in all the pursuits of life, may be seen the usefulness and benefits of eloquence. In whatever light we view this subject, it is evident that oratory is not a mere castle in the air: a fairy palace of frost-work; destitute of substance and support. It is like a magnificent temple of Parian marble, exhibiting the most exact and admirable symmetry, and combining all the orders, varieties, and beauties of architecture.

Habits of Industry. It is highly important, that children should be taught to acquire habits of industry; for whatever be their habits while young, such, for the most part, must they continue to be in after life. Children—are apt to think it a great hardship, to be obliged to devote so much time to occupations, at present perhaps, disagreeable to them; but they ought to be made to believe, that their tasks are not only intended for the informing of their minds, but for the bending of their wills. Good habits are as easily acquired as bad ones; with the great advantage of being the only true way to prosperity and happiness.

Anecdote. Conciseness. Louis XIV. who loved a concise style, one day met a priest on the round, whom he asked hastily—"Whence come you? where are you going? what do you want?" The other immediately replied, "From Bruges,—To Paris,—A Benefice." "You shall have it," replied the king.

Servile doubt—

Argues an impotence of mind, that says,—
We fear because we dare not meet misfortune.

Maxims. 1. Want of punctuality is a species of falsehood. 2. Pay as you go, and keep from small scores. 3. He, that has his heart in his learning, will soon have his learning in his heart. 4. The empty stomach has no ears. 5. A man may talk like a wise man, and yet act like a fool. 6. Rather improve by the errors of others, than find fault with them. 7. The devil turns his back, when he finds the door shut against him. 8. Better be upright, with poverty, than depraved with abundance. 9. The value of things, is never so strongly realized, as when we are deprived of them. 10. None are so deaf as those who will not hear.

Reform. He, that looks back to the history of mankind, will often see, that in politics, jurisprudence, religion, and all the great concerns of society, reform—has usually been the work of reason, slowly awakening from the lethargy of ignorance, gradually acquiring confidence in her own strength, and ultimately triumphing over the dominion of prejudice and custom.

Varieties. 1. What is mercy and its uses? 2. Individuals and nations, fail in nothing they boldly attempt, when sustained by virtuous purpose, and determined resolution. 3. Some persons' heads are like beehives: not because they are all in a buzz, but that they have separate cells for every kind of store. 4. What nature offers, with a smiling face, fruit, herb, and grain—are just what man's pure instinct would choose for food. 5. The majority—ought never to trample on the feelings, or violate the just rights—of the minority; they should not triumph over the fallen, nor make any but temperate and equitable use of their power. 6. Death is the enacted penalty of nature's violated laws. 7. Was it causeless, that washing—was introduced, as a religious rite, seeing that its observance is so essential to the preservation of health?

And when the soul—is fullast, the hushed tongue,
Voicelessly trembles—like a lute unstrung.

There's beauty—in the deep;
The wave—is bluer than the sky;
And tho' the light—shine bright on high,
More softly do the sea-gems glow,
That sparkle in the depths below;
The rainbow's tints—are only made
When on the waters they are laid,
And sun and moon—most sweetly shine
Upon the ocean's level brine:

There's beauty in the deep.

There's music—in the deep:
It is not in the surf's rough roar,
Nor in the whispering, shelly shore—
They—are but earthly sounds, that tell
How little—of the sea-nymph's shell,
That sends its loud, clear note abroad,
Or winds its softness through the food,
Echoes through groves—with coral gay,
And dies, on spongy banks, away:
There's music in the deep!

446. OUR FIELD. The orator's field is the universe of mind and matter, and his subjects, all that is known of God and man. Study the principles of things, and never rest satisfied with the results and applications. All distinguished speakers, whether they ever paid any systematic attention to the principles of elocution or not, in their most successful efforts, conform to them; and their imperfections are the results of deviations from these principles. Think correctly—rather than finely; sound conclusions are much better than beautiful conceptions. Be useful, rather than showy; and speak to the purpose, or not speak at all. Persons become eminent, by the force of mind—the power of thinking comprehensively, deeply, closely, usefully. Rest more on the thought, feeling, and expression, than on the style; for language is like the atmosphere—a medium of vision, intended not to be seen itself, but to make other objects seen; the more transparent however, the better.

Hast thou, in feverish, and unquiet sleep.—
Dreamt—th't some merciless DEMON of the air,
Rais'd thee aloft,—and held thee by the hair,
Over the brow—of a down-looking step,
Gaping below, into a CHASM—so deep,
Th't, by the utmost straining of thine eye,
Thou canst no resting place descry;
Not e'en a bush—to save thee, shouldst thou sweep
Adown the black descent; that then, the hand
Suddenly parted thee, and left thee there,
Holding—but by finger-tips, the bare
And jagged ridge above, that seems as sand,
To crumble 'neath thy touch?—If so, I deem Th't thou hast had rather an ugly dream.

447. VOCAL MUSIC. In vocal music, there is a union of music and language—the language of affection and thought; which includes the whole man. Poetry and music are sister arts; their relationship being one of heaven-like intimacy. The essence of poetry consists in fine perceptions, and vivid expressions, of that subtle and mysterious analogy, that exists between the physical and moral world; and it derives its power from the correspondence of natural things with spiritual. Its effect is to elevate the thoughts and affections toward a higher state of existence.

Anecdote. A powerful Stimulus. When Lord Erskine made his debut, at the bar, his agitation almost overcame him, and he was just about to sit down. "At that moment," said he, "I thought I felt my little children tugging at my gown, and the idea roused me to an exertion, of which I did not think myself capable."

'Tis not enough—your counsel still be true;
Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do.
Men must be taught—as if you taught them not,
And things unknown—propos'd as things forgot.
Without good-breding, truth is disapproved;
That, only, makes superior sense—below'd.

Maxims. 1. Poverty of mind is often concealed under the garb of splendor. 2. Vice—is infamous, even in a prince; and virtue, honorable, even in a peasant. 3. Prefer loss—to unjust gain, and solid sense—to wit. 4. He, that would be well spoken of himself, must speak well of others. 5. If every one would mend himself, we should all be mended. 6. A sound mind is not to be shaken with popular applause. 7. The best way to see divine light, is to put out our own. 8. Some blame themselves for the purpose of being praised. 9. Nothing needs a trick, but a trick; sincerity loathes one. 10. As virtue has its own reward, so vice has its own punishment.

What is Worth? The spirit of the age says,—“Worth—means wealth; and wisdom—the art of getting it.” To be rich is considered, by most persons—a merit; to be poor, an offence. By this false standard, it is not so important to be wise and good, as to be rich in worldly wealth; thus it is, every thing, as well as every person, has its price, and may be bought or sold; and thus—do we coin our hearts into gold, and exchange our souls—for earthly gain. Hence, it is said, “a man is worth so much;”—i. e. worth just, as much as his property or money, amount to, and no more. Thus, wealth, worth, or gain, is not applied to science, to knowledge, virtue, or happiness; but to pecuniary acquisition; as if nothing but gold were gain, and everything else were dress. Thus the body—is Dives, clothed in purple and fine linen, and faring sumptuously every day; while the mind—is Lazarus, lying in rags at the gate, and fed with the crumbs, that fall from the tables of Time and Sense.

Varieties. 1. Instead of dividing mankind into the wise and foolish, the good and wicked, would it not be better to divide them into more or less wise and foolish, more or less good or wicked? 2. It was a proof of low origin, among the ancient Romans, to make mistakes in pronouncing words; for it indicated that one had not been instructed by a nursery maid: what is the inference? That those maids were well educated; particularly, in the pronunciation of the Latin language, and were treated by families as favorites. How many nursery maids of our day enjoy such a reputation, and exert such an influence? Indeed, how many mothers occupy such a pre-eminence? Let wisdom and affection answer, and furnish the remedy. 3. The purest and best of precepts and examples should be exhibited to our youth, in the development of their minds, and the formation of their characters.

The seas—are quiet, when the winds are o'er;
So, calm are we, when passions—are no more;
For then, we know how vain it was—to boast
Of fleeting things, so certain to be lost.
Clouds of affliction—from our younger eyes,
Conceal that emptiness, that age desecies;
The soul's dark cottage, litter'd and decay'd,
Lets in new light, through chinks, that time has made.

448. THE HUMAN VOICE. Among all the wonderful varieties of artificial instruments, which discourse excellent music, where shall we find one that can be compared to the human voice? And where can we find an instrument comparable to the human mind! upon whose stops the real musician, the poet, and the orator, sometimes lays his hands, and avails himself of the entire compass of its magnificent capacities! Oh! the length, the breadth, the height, and the depth of music and eloquence! They are high as heaven, deep as hell, and broad as the universe.

THE POWER OF IMAGINATION.

The lunatic, the lover, and the poet,
Are, of IMAGINATION—all compact:
One—sees more devils—than vast hell can hold;
That—is the MADMAN: the LOVER, all as frantic,
Sees Helen's beauty—in a brow of Egypt:
The POET's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling, [HEAVEN;
Doth glance from HEAVEN—to earth, from earth—to
And, as IMAGINATION—bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen,
Forms them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing,
A local habitation, and a name.

449. CICERO AND DEMOSTHENES. An orator, addressing himself more to the passions, naturally has much passionate ardor; whilst another, possessing an elevation of style and majestic gravity, is never cold, though he has not the same vehemence: in this respect do these great orators differ. Demosthenes—abounds in concise sublimity; Cicero,—in diffuseness: the former, on account of his destroying, and consuming everything by his violence, rapidity, strength, and vehemence, may be compared to a hurricane, or thunderbolt: the latter, to a wide extended conflagration, spreading in every direction, with a great, constant, and irresistible flame.

Anecdote. Envy and Jealousy. Colonel Thornton, of the British army, could not bear to hear the Americans praised. When he was at Charleston, S. C., some ladies were enlogising Washington; to which he replied, with a scornful air, "I should be very glad to get a sight of your Col. Washington; I have heard much talk about him, but have never seen him." "Had you looked behind you, at the battle of Cowpens," rejoined one of the ladies, "you might easily have enjoyed that pleasure."

With illustration simple, yet profound, and with unflinching zeal
He spake from a warm heart, and made even cold hearts feel;
This is eloquence—'tis the intense,
Impassioned fervor—of a mind, deep fraught
With native energy, when soul, and sense
Burst forth, embodied in the burning thought;
When look, emotion, tone, and all combine;
When the whole man—is eloquent with mind;
A form that comes not to the call or quest,
But from the gifted soul, and the deep feeling breast.

The farmers patient care:—and toil
Are oftener wanting—than the soil,

Maxims. 1. Blind men must not undertake to judge of colors. 2. Gamblers and race-horses never last long. 3. Forgiveness and smiles are the best revenge. 4. They, are not our best friends, who praise us to our faces. 5. An honest man's word is as good as his bond. 6. Never fish for praise; it is not worth the bait. 7. None but a good man can become a perfect orator. 8. Cultivate a love of truth, and cleave to it with all your heart. 9. Female delicacy is the best preservative of female honor. 10. Idleness is the refuge of weak minds, and the holiday of fools.

The Trine in Man. There are three things of which human beings consist, the soul, the mind and the body; the inmost is the soul, the mediate is the mind, and the ultimate the body: the first is that which receives life from Him, who is life itself; the second, is the sphere of the activities of that life; and the third, is the medium through which those activities are manifested: but it should be remembered, that there is, as the apostle says, "a natural body, and there is a spiritual body."

Varieties. 1. Nature—makes no emendations; she labors for all: her's is not mosaic work. 2. The more there is prosaic in orators, poets and artists, the less are they natural; the less do they resemble the copious streams of the fountain. 3. The more there is of progression, the more there is of truth, and nature; and the more extensive, general, durable, and noble is the effect: thus is formed the least plant, and the most exalted man. 4. Nature is everywhere similar to herself; she never acts arbitrarily, never contrary to her laws: the same wisdom and power produce all varieties, agreeable to one law, one will. Either all things are subject to the law of order, or nothing is.

Home! how that blessed word—thrills the ear!

In it—what recollections blend!

It tells of childhood's scenes so dear,

And speaks—of many a cherished friend.

O! through the world, where'er we roam,

Though souls be pure—and lips be kind,

The heart—with fondness—turns to home,

Still turns to those—it left behind.

The bird, that soars to yonder skies,

Though high to heaven, still seems unblessed,

It leaves them, and with rapture flies

Downward—to its own much-loved nest.

Though beauteous scenes—may meet its view

And breezes blow—from balmy groves,

With wing untired—and bosom true,

It turns—to that dear spot it loves.

When heaven—shall bid this soul depart,

This form—return to kindred earth,

May the last throb, which swells my heart

Heave, where it started into birth.

And should affection—shed one tear;

Should friendship—linger round my tomb;

The tribute may be doubly dear,

When given by those of "home, sweet home."

450. POETRY—may be written in rhyme, or blank verse. Rhyme is the correspondence of sounds, in the ending of two (or more) successive or alternate words or syllables of two or more lines, forming a couplet or triplet: see the various examples given. Rhythm, in the poetic art, means the relative duration of the time occupied in pronouncing the syllables; in the art of music it signifies the relative duration of the sound, that enters into the musical composition: see measures of speech and song.

Lo! the poor Indian,—whose untutored mind,
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind:
His soul proud SCIENCE—never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk, or milky way;
Yet, s'imple nature to his hope has given.
Behind the cloud-topp'd hill, an humble heaven;—
Some safer world—in depth of wood embraced,
Some happier island—in the watery waste;
Where slaves, once more, their native land behold,
No FIENDS torment—no CHRISTIANS thirst for gold.

451. SKIPS AND SLIDES. By closely observing the movements of the voice, when under the perfect command of the mind, you will see that it changes its pitch, by leaps of one or more notes, in passing from word to word, and sometimes from syllable to syllable, and also slides upwards and downwards; which skips and slides are almost infinitely diversified, expressing all the shades of tho't and feeling, and playing upon the minds of the listeners, with a kind of supernatural power, the whole range of tunes from grave to gay, from gentle to severe. The worlds of mind and matter are full of music and oratory.

Even age itself—is cheered with music;
It wakes a glad remembrance of our youth,
Calls back past joys, and warms us into transports.

Nature—is the glass—reflecting God,
As, by the sea—reflected is the sun,
Too glorious to be gazed on—in his sphere.

The night

Hath been to me—a more familiar face
Than that of man; and, in her starry shade
Of dim, and solitary loveliness,
I learned the language—of another world.

Parting—they seemed to tread upon the air,
Twin roses, by the zephyr blown apart,
Only to meet again—more close, and share
The inward fragrance—of each other's heart.

Nothing—is made out of Nothing.
Good, in his "Book of Nature," contends, that there is no absurdity, in the supposition, of God creating something—out of nothing; and he maintains, that the proposition, conveying this idea, is only relatively absurd, and not absolutely. But it is absolutely absurd. When God said, "Let there be light, and there was light," light cannot be said to have been created out of nothing, but from God himself; not out of God, but by his Divine Will, through his Divine Truth. So, we may conceive, that God, by his Will, made atmospheric matter, and then created it in form.

Enough to live in tempest; die in port.

Maxims. 1. It is better to do and not promise, than to promise and not perform. 2. A benefit is a common tie between the giver and receiver. 3. The consciousness of well doing is an ample reward. 4. As benevolence is the most sociable of all virtues, so it is the most extensive. 5. Do not postpone until to-morrow, what ought to be done to-day. 6. Without a friend, the world is but a wilderness. 7. The more we know our hearts, the less shall we be disposed to trust in ourselves. 8. Obedience is better than sacrifice, and is inseparably wedded to happiness. 9. We should not run out of the path of duty, lest we run into the path of danger. 10. He doeth much, that doeth a thing well.

Anecdote. Moro, duke of Milan, having displayed before the foreign ambassadors his magnificence and his riches, which excelled those of every other prince, said to them: "Has a man, possessed of so much wealth and prosperity, anything to desire in this world?" "One thing only," said one of them, "a nail to fix the wheel of fortune."

Swearing. Of all the crimes, that ever disgraced society, that of swearing admits of the least palliation. No possible benefit can be derived from it; and nothing but perverse-ness and depravity of human nature, would ever have suggested it; yet such is its prevalence, that by many, it is mistaken for a fashionable acquirement, and considered, by unreflecting persons, as indicative of energy and decision of character.

Varieties. 1. Duty sounds sweetly, to those who are in the love, and under the influence of truth and goodness: its path does not lead thro' thorny places, and over cheerless wastes; but winds pleasantly, amid green meadows and shady groves. 2. A new truth is, to some, as impossible of discovery, as the new world was to the faithless cotemporaries of Columbus; they do not believe in such a thing; and more than this, they will not believe in it: yet they will sit in judgment on those who do believe in such a contraband article, and condemn them without mercy.

THE FALLS OF NIAGARA.

The thoughts are strange that crowd into my brain,
While I look upward to thee. It would seem
As if God—pour'd thee from his "hollow hand,"
And hung his bow upon thine awful front;
And spoke, in that loud voice, which seem'd to him
Who dwelt in Parnassus—for his Saviour's sake,
"The sound of many waters;" and had bade
Thy flood—to chronicle the ages back.
And notch His centuries—in the eternal rocks.

Deep—calleth unto deep. And what are we,
That hear the question—of that voice sublime?
O! what are all the notes, that ever rung
From war's vain trumpet, by thy thundering side!
Yea, what is all the riot—man can make
In his short life, to thy unceasing roar!
And yet, bold babbling, what art thou—to Him
Who drown'd a world, and heaped the waters far
Above its loftiest mountains?—a light wave,
That breaks, and whispers—of its Maker's might.
Say, what can Chloe want? she wants a heart.

452. OBSERVATIONS. No one can ever become a good reader, or speaker, by reading in a book; because what is thus acquired is more from thought than from feeling; and of course, has less of freedom in it; and we are, from the necessity of the case, more or less constrained and mechanical. What we hear, enters more directly into the affectuous part of the mind, than what we see, and becomes more readily a part of ourselves, i. e. becomes conjoined instead of being adjoined: relatively, as the food which we eat, digests and is appropriated, and a plaster that is merely stuck on the body. Thus, we can see a philosophic reason why faith is said to come by hearing, and that we walk by faith, and not by sight: i. e. from love, that casts out the fear that hath torment; that fear which enslaves body and mind, instead of making both free.

Ever distinguish substances—from sound;
There is, in liberty, what gods approve;
And only men, like gods, have taste to share;
There is, in liberty, what pride perverts,
To serve sedition, and perplex command.
True liberty—leaves all things free, but guilt;
And fetters everything—but art, and virtue;
False liberty—holds nothing bound, but power,
And lets loose—every tie, that strengthens law.

Home—is man's ark, when trouble springs;
When gathering tempests—shade his morrow;
And woman's love—the bird, that brings
His peace-branch—o'er a flood of sorrow.

453. CONQUERING-LOVE. To learn almost any art, or science, appears arduous, or difficult, at first; but if we have a heart for any work, it soon becomes comparatively easy. To make a common watch, or a watch worn in a ring; to sail over the vast ocean, &c., seems at first, almost impossible; yet they are constantly practiced. The grand secret of simplifying a science is analyzing it; in beginning with what is easy, and proceeding to the combinations, difficult, most difficult: by this method, miracles may be wrought: the hill of science must be ascended step by step.

Conceptions. Would it not be well for metaphysicians—to distinguish between the conception of abstract truth, and the conception of past perception, by calling the latter—mental perception, as contradistinguished from all other?

Anecdote. Rouge. A female, praising the beautiful color, used by the artist on her miniature, was told by him, that he did not doubt she was a woman of good taste; for they both bought their rouge at the same shop.

True philosophy discerns
A ray of heavenly light—gilding all forms
Terrestrial,—in the vast, the minute,
The unambiguous footsteps of a God,
Who gives his lustre—to an insect's wing,
And wheels his throne. upon the rolling worlds.

Maxims. 1. A people's education—is a nation's best defence. 2. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. 3. Who aims at excellence, will be above mediocrity; and who aims at mediocrity, will fall short of it. 4. Forbearance is a domestic jewel. 5. The affection of parents is best shown to their children, by teaching them what is good and true. 6. Feeble are the efforts in which the heart has no share. 7. By taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over—he is superior. 8. Loveliness needs not the aid of ornament; but is, when unadorned, adorned the most. 9. No one ever did, nor ever can, do any one an injury, without doing a greater injury to himself. 10. It is better not to know the truth, than to know it, and not do it.

Pursuit of Knowledge. He, that enlarges his curiosity after the works of nature, demonstrably multiplies the inlets to happiness; therefore, we should cherish ardor in the pursuit of useful knowledge, and remember, that a blighted spring makes a barren year, and that the vernal flowers, however beautiful and gay, are only intended by nature as preparatives to autumnal fruits.

Varieties. 1. Business letters should always be written with great clearness and perspicuity: every paragraph should be so plain, that the dullest fellow cannot mistake it, nor be obliged to read it twice, to understand it. 2. Lawyers and their clients remind one of two rows of persons at a fire; one—passing full buckets, the other returning empty ones. 3. The bump of self-esteem is so prominent on some men's heads, that they can't keep their hats on in a windy day. 4. A crow will fly at the rate of 20 miles an hour; a hawk, 40; and an eagle 80. 5. The heaviest fetter, that ever weighed down the limbs of a captivity, is as the robe of the gossamer, compared with the pledge of a man of honor. 6. An envious person, waxeth lean with the fatness of his neighbor. 7. Nature—supplies the raw material, and education—is the manufacturer.

The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap, exulting, like the bounding roe.

Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks.

Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness, come,
And, from the bosom of yon dropping cloud,
(While music wakes around,) veiled in a shower
Of shadowing roses, on the plains descend.

The man, that dares traduce, because he can,
With safety to himself, is not a man.

Slander—meets no regards from noble minds;
Only the base—believe what the base utter.

If I lose mine honor, I lose myself;
Mine honor—is my life; both grow in one;
Take honor from me—and my life is done.

He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

454. INFLECTIONS AND INTONATIONS.

The author is perfectly satisfied, that most of his predecessors have depended entirely too much upon the inflections, to produce variety, instead of upon the intonations of the voice: the former, invariably makes mechanical readers and speakers; while the latter, being founded in nature, makes natural ones: the one is of the head, and is the result of thought and calculation; and the other of the heart, and is the spontaneous effusion of the affections: the former spreads a veil before the mind; the latter takes it away. Is it not so? Choose ye. Nature knows a great deal more than art; listen to her teachings and her verdict.

There are two hearts, whose movements thrill
In unison, so closely sweet!

That, pulse to pulse, responsive still,
That both must heave, or cease to beat;
There are two souls, whose equal flow
In gentle streams—so calmly run,
That when they part, (they part!) ah no;
They cannot part,—their souls are one.

No marvel woman should love flowers, they bear
So much of fanciful similitude
To her own history; like herself, repaying,
With such sweet interest, all the cherishing,
That calls their beauty, and their sweetness forth;
And, like her, too, dying—beneath neglect.

455. IGNORANCE AND ERROR. How frequently an incorrect mode of pronunciation, and of speaking, is caught from an ignorant nurse, or favorite servant, which infects one through life! so much depends on first impressions and habits. Lisper, stammering, and smaller defects, often originate in the same way, and not from any natural defect, or impediment. If parents and teachers would consider the subject, they might see the importance of their trust, and be induced to fulfill their respective offices in a conscientious manner: to do wrong, in any way, is a sin.

Association of Ideas. We may trace the power of association—in the growth and development of some of the most important principles of human conduct. Thus, under the feudal system, appeals from the baronial tribunals were first granted to the royal courts, in consequence of the delay, or refusal of justice; afterwards, they were taken, on account of the injustice or iniquity of the sentence. In the same way, a power, appealed to from necessity, is at length resorted to from choice; till finally, what was once a privilege is, in certain cases, exacted as an obligation. This principle is full of political and social wisdom, and cannot be too deeply studied by those, who wish to analyze the causes and motives of human conduct.

The purest treasure,—mortal ties afford,
Is—spotless reputation; that—away,
Men are but gilded loam, and painted clay.

Maxims. 1. The wise man thinks he knows but little; the fool thinks he knows it all. 2. He, who cannot govern himself, cannot govern others. 3. He is a poor wretch, whose hopes are confined to this world. 4. He, who employs himself well, can never want for something to do. 5. Umbrage should never be taken, where offence was never intended. 6. Deride not the unfortunate. 7. In conversation, avoid the extremes of talkativeness and silence. 8. Lawyers' gowns are often lined with the willfulness of their clients. 9. Good books are the only paper currency, that is better than silver or gold. 10. No man may be both accuser and judge. 11. At every trifle—scorn to take offence.

Anecdote. A Rose. A blind man, having a shrew for his wife, was told by one of his friends, that she was a rose. He replied, "I do not doubt it; for I feel the thorns daily."

Laconics. He who would become distinguished in manhood, and eminently useful to his country, and the world, must be contented to pass his boyhood and youth in obscurity,—learning that which he is to practice, when he enters upon the stage of action. There are two kinds of education; the liberal and the servile; the former puts us in possession of the principles and reasons of actions and things, so far as they are capable of being known or interrogated: the latter stops short at technical rules and methods, without attempting to understand the reasons or principles on which they are grounded.

Varieties. 1. We may apprehend the works and word of God, if we cannot fully comprehend them. 2. A man passes, for what he is worth. The world is full of judgment-days; and into every assembly, that a man enters, in every action he attempts, he is guas'd and stamp'd. 3. It is base, and that is the one base thing in the universe, to receive favor, and render none. 4. How shall we know, that Washington—was the most prudent and judicious statesman, that ever lived! By carefully observing his actions, and comparing them with those of other men, in like circumstances. 5. The union of science and religion, is the marriage of earth and heaven. 6. Mankind can no more be stationary than an individual. 7. The virtue of women is often the love of reputation and quiet.

SATAN'S SUPPOSED SPEECH TO HIS LEGIONS.

Princes, Potentates,
Warriors, the flower of Heaven! once yours, now—lost,
If such astonishment as this—can seize
Eternal spirits; or have ye chosen this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue, for the case you find
To slumber here, as in the valies of Heaven?
Or, in this abject posture—have ye sworn—
To adore the Conqueror! who now beholds
Cherub—and seraph—rolling in the flood,
With scatter'd arms and ensigns; till anon
His swift pursuers—from Heaven's gates—discern
The advantage, and descending, tread us down,
Thus drooping, or with linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf?
Awake, ARISE, or be forever fallen!

456. THE PASSIONS AND ACTIONS. The human mind we contemplate under two grand divisions, called Will and Understanding: the former is the receptacle, or continent, of our passions, emotions, affections; the latter—of our thoughts. To attend to the workings of mind, to trace the power that external objects have over it, to discern the nature of the emotions and affections, and to comprehend the reasons of their being affected in a particular manner, must have a direct influence on our pursuits, character and happiness, as private citizens, and as public speakers.

What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,
The soul's calm sunshine, and the heartfelt joy,
Is VIRTUE'S prize.

In faith, and hope, the world will disagree;
But all mankind's concern—is charity.

He gave to mercy—all he had, a tear; [friend.
He gained from heaven, ('twas all he wished,) a
In the faithful husbandman—you see,
What all—true christians—ought to be.

Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught—in malice.

Honor, and shame, from no condition rise;
As fact tell your part, there all the honor lies.

457. An accurate analysis of the passions and affections is, to the moralist, as well as the student in elocution, what the science of anatomy, and physiology is to the physician and surgeon: it constitutes the first principles of rational practice for both; it is, in a moral view, the anatomy of the heart; discloses why and how it beats; indicates appearances in a sound and healthy state, and detects diseases, with their causes, and is much more fortunate in applying remedies.

Stages of Progress. Useful discoveries and improvements generally have four distinct stages in their progress to universality. The first is, when the theory is pronounced false, contrary to experience, absurd and unworthy of the attention of sensible men. The second is, when they are claimed as having been known before; thus, depriving the medium—of all credit for more industry, discrimination and originality, than others. The third is, when they are denounced as perilous innovations, endangering the religion and morals of society. The fourth is, when they are received as established truths by every body; the only wonder being, that they should ever have been doubted, they are in such perfect harmony with the laws of the universe.

The meek-eyed morn appears, mother of dew,
At first, faint glimmering—in the dappled east;
Till, far o'er ether—spreads the wid'ning glow;
And, from before the hstre of her face,
White break the clouds away. With quicken'd step,
Brown night—retires; young day pours in apace,
And opens all the lawn's prospect wide,
The dripping rock, the mountain's misty top,
Swell on the sight, and brighten—with the dawn.

If, on a sudden, he begins to rise,
No man that lives, can count his enemies.

Laconics. 1. All men, possessed of real power, are upright and honest: craft is but the substitute of power. 2. To answer wit by reason, is like trying to hold an eel by the tail. 3. Frequent intercourse often forms such a similarity, that we not only assure a mental likeness, but contract some resemblance in voice and features. 4. The more ideas included in our own words, and the more cases an axiom is applied to, the more extensive and powerful will they be. 5. The improvement of the internal, will also be the improvement of the external. 6. A little vice often deforms the whole countenance; as one single false trait in a portrait, makes the whole a caricature. 7. The noblest talents may rust in indolence; and the most moderate, by industry, may be astonishingly improved.

Anecdote. A Good Hint. A clergyman and Garrick the tragedian, were spending an evening together; and among other topics of conversation, that of delivery was introduced. The man of the pulpit asked Garrick, "Why is it, you are able to produce so much more effect, with the recital of your fictions, than we do, by the delivery of the most important truths?" The man of the stage replied—"My Lord, you speak truths, as if they were fictions; we speak fictions, as if they were truths."

Action. To do an ill action is base; to do a good one, which involves you in no danger, is nothing more than common; but it is the property of a truly good man, to do great and good things, though he risk everything by it.

Varieties. 1. The coin, that is most current among mankind—is flattery: the only benefit of which is, that by hearing what we are not, we may be instructed what we ought to be. 2. Bring the entire powers of your mind, to bear on whatever study you undertake, with a singleness of purpose, and you will not fail of success. 3. The predominance of a favorite study, affects all the subordinate purposes of the intellect. 4. Vex not thy heart, in seeking—what were far better unfound. 5. In reference to certain principles and persons, unstable people cry out, at first, "ALL HAIL,"—but afterwards, "CRUCIFY! CRUCIFY!" 6. Luxury is an enticing pleasure, which hath honey in her mouth, but gall in her heart, and a sting in her embrace. 7. Let your rule of action be, to perform, faithfully, and without solicitude, the duty of the present hour; let the future take care of itself.

Two tasks are ours, to know—and understand,
Evil, and good, and name their various band;
But worthier far, with cheerful will, to choose
What'er is good, and all the ill—refuse.

Why all this toil—for triumphs of an hour?
What though we wade in wealth, or soar in fame?
Earth's highest station ends in—"Here he lies!"
And—"dust—to dust!"—concludes her noblest song.

Virtue itself, 'scapes not calumnious strokes.

458. THE PASSIONS. There are three things involved in the exhibition of the passions; viz. the tones of the voice, the appearance of the countenance, and rhetorical action; the first is addressed to the ear only, the latter to the eye. Here, then, is another language to learn, after the pupil has learned the written, and the vocal languages: however, the language of the passions may be said to be written—by the hand of Nature. Contemplate the passions separately, and combined, and seek for examples to illustrate them.

For praise, too dearly loved, or warmly sought,
Enfeebles all internal strength of thought;
And the weak, within itself unblest,
Leans, for all pleasures, on another's breast.

Friendship, like an evergreen,
Will brave the inclement blast,
And still retain the bloom of spring,
When summer days—are past;
And tho' the wint'ry sky should lower,
And dim the cheerful day,
She still perceives a vital power,
Unconscious—of decay.

Jealousy! thy own green food,
Thy joy—is vengeance, death, and blood!
Thy love—is verath! thy breath—is sighs!
Thy life—suspicious sacrifice!

459. TRUTH. Some men say, that "wealth is power"—and some that "talent—is power"—and some that "knowledge—is power"—and others, that "authority—is power"—but there is an apothegm, that I would place on high above them all, when I assert, that, "TRUTH—is power." Wealth cannot purchase, talent—cannot refute, knowledge—cannot over-reach, authority—cannot silence her; they all, like Felix, tremble at her presence: cast her into the sevenfold heated furnace of the tyrant's wrath—fling her into the most tremendous billows of popular commotion—she mounts aloft in the ark—upon the summit of the deluge. She is the ministering spirit, who sheds on man that bright and indestructible principle of life, which is given, by its mighty author, to illuminate and to inspire the immortal soul—and which, like himself, "is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

The wintry blast of death—

Kills not the buds of virtue; no: they spread
Beneath the heavenly beams—of brighter suns,
Through endless ages—into higher powers.
The scale of being—is a graduated thing;
And deeper,—than the vanities of power.
On the vain pomp of glory—there is writ—
Gradation—in its hidden characters.

EPITAPH.

Here rests his head—upon the lap of earth,
A youth—to fortune and to fame unknown;
Fair science—frown'd not—on his humble birth,
And melancholy—mark'd him for her own.

A dandy—is a thing, that would
Be a young lady—if he could;
But, as he can't, does all he can,
To show the world—he's not a man.

The course of true love—never did run smooth.

Maxims. 1. A well instructed people, only, can be a free people. 2. To ask for a living, without labor, would be to ask for a curse, instead of a blessing. 3. No one looks after his own affairs, as well as himself. 4. Fruitless advice is like pouring water on a duck's back. 5. The more our talents are exercised, the more will they become developed. 6. Unless the laws are executed on the great, they will not be obeyed. 7. He, who toils with pain, will reap with pleasure. 8. The torment of envy—is like sand in the eye. 9. Laziness often gives occasion to dishonesty. 10. The error of an hour—may become the sorrow of a whole life.

Anecdote. Father Aurius said, when Bourdaloue preached at Rouen, the tradesmen forsook their workshops, the lawyers their clients, and the physicians their sick, to hear the orator: but when I preached there, the following year, I set all things right; every man minded his own business.

Luxury. When I behold a fashionable table, set out in all its magnificence, I fancy that I see gouts and dropsies, fevers and lethargies, with other innumerable distempers, lying in ambuscade among the dishes. Nature delights in the most plain and simple diet. Every animal, but man, keeps to one dish. Herbs are the food of this species, fish of that, and flesh of a third. Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not the smallest fruit or excrement of the earth, scarce a berry or a mushroom can escape him.

Varieties. 1. Without exertion and diligence, success in the pursuits of life, is rarely attained. 2. It is the business of the judge to decide as to the points of law, and the duty of the jurors—to decide as to the matters of fact. 3. The essence of our liberty is—to do whatever we please, provided we do not violate any law, or injure another. 4. A handful of common sense is worth a bushel of learning. 5. Few things are more injurious to our health and constitution, than indulgence in luxuries. 6. Did God, after creating the universe, and putting it in motion, leave it to itself? 7. Credit—is of inestimable value, whether to a nation, or an individual.

THE MINISTRY OF ANGELS.

And is there care in heaven? and is there love

In heavenly spirits—to these creatures base,
That may compassion of their evils move? [cane
There is: else, much more wretched were the
Of men than beasts. But, oh! the exceeding grace
Of highest Heaven! that loves his creatures so:

And all his works—with mercy doth embrace,
That blessed angels he sends to and fro,
To serve to wicked man,—to serve his wicked foe.

How oft—do they their silver bowers leave,
To come to succor us, that succor want!
How oft—do they, with golden pinions, cleave

The flitting skies, like flying pursuivants,
Against foul fiends—to aid us militant!
They for us fight, they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant,
And all for love, and nothing for reward:

Oh! why should the Lord to man have such regard!

TRANQUILLITY, &c.

460. Tranquillity appears by the open and composed countenance, and a general repose of the whole body; mouth nearly closed; eyebrows a little arched; forehead smooth; eyes passing with an easy motion, from one object to another, but not dwelling long on any; cast of happiness, bordering on cheerfulness; desiring to please and be pleased; gaily, good humor, when the mouth opens a little more.

CHEERFULNESS IN RETIREMENT.

Now my co-mates, and brothers in exile,
Hath not old custom—made this life more sweet,
Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods
More free from peril, than the envious court?
Here—feel we but the penalty of Adam;
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery; these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am:
Sweet—are the uses of adversity,
That, like a toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in its head.
And this our life, exempt from public haunts,
Finds tongues, in TREES, BOOKS, in running BROOKS,
Sermons in STONES, and GOOD in everything.

Miscellaneous. 1. Timidity—often obscures the brighest powers of orators, at their outset; like the chilling vapor, awhile retarding the beauty of a morning in spring; but the day of success, attained by persevering efforts, when it comes, will well repay for its late appearance, and its splendor more than atone for its morning shade. 2. By taking in the widest possible range of authors of all ages, one seems to create, within himself, a sympathy for the whole brotherhood of man, past, present, and to come, and to approximate continually, to a view of Universal Truth, tho' never attaining it. 3. All good speakers and writers, are addicted to imitation: no one—can write or speak well, who has not a strong sympathy with, and admiration for—all that is beautiful.

Anecdote. A Pun. Purcell, the famous punster, being desired, one evening, when in company, to make an extempore pun, asked, "on what subject?" "The king;" was the answer. "O sir," said he, "the king is not a subject."

I hate to see a boy—so rude,
That one might think him—raised
In some wild region of the wood,
And but half-civilized.

Maxims. 1. The follies we tell of others, are often only mirrors to reflect our own. 2. Righteousness—exalteth a nation; but sin—is a reproach to any people. 3. The best mode of dealing with a quarrelsome person, is, to keep out of his way. 4. Good thought, couched in an appropriate simile, is like a precious stone, set in gold. 5. Great minds may produce great rices, as well as great virtues; an honest man—is the noblest work of God. 6. Nature, and natural causes, are nothing else, than the way in which God works. 7. 'Tis use that constitutes possession. 8. No sooner is a law made, than the wicked seek to evade it. 9. One lie draws ten more after it. 10. Idleness—buries a man alive.

Irresolution. In matters of great concern, and which must be done, there is no surer argument—of a weak mind, than irresolution; to be undetermined, where the case is so plain, and the necessity so urgent. To be always intending to live a new life, but never to find time to set about it; this is as if a man should put off eating, and drinking, and sleeping, from one day and night to another, till he is starved and destroyed.

Varieties. 1. Every evil, that we conquer, is a benefactor to our souls. The Sandwich Islander believes that the strength and valor of the enemy he kills, passes into himself. Spiritually, it is so with us; for we gain strength, from every temptation we resist. 2. It is absurd, to think of becoming good, in any thing, without understanding and practicing what we learn. 3. Have we life of our own? or, are we dependent on God for it, every moment of our lives? 7. All the moments of our lives, produce eternal consequences.

How sweet—the words of truth,
Breathed from the lips—we love.

One alone

May do the task of many, when the mind
Is active in it.

Corcombs—are of all realms, and kind;
They're not to sex, or age confined,
Of rich, or poor, or great, or small,
'Tis vanity—besets them all.

True happiness—had no localities;
No tones provincial; no peculiar gurb.
Where duty went, she went; with justice went;
And went with meekness, charity, and love.
Where'er a tear was dried; a wounded heart
Bound up; a bruised spirit—with the dew
Of sympathy anointed; or a pang
Of honest suffering soothed; or injury,
Repeated oft, as oft—by love—forgiven;
Where'er an evil passion was subdued,
Or Virtue's feeble embers fanned; where'er
A sin was heartily abjured, and left;
Where'er a pious act was done, or breathed
A pious prayer, or wished a pious wish—
There—was a high—and holy place, a spot
Of sacred light, a most religious fane.

Faith—is not built—on disquisition's ruins.

JOY; DELIGHT.

461. JOY, a pleasing elation of mind on the actual or assured attainment of good; or deliverance from some evil. When moderate, it opens the countenance with smiles, and throws a sunshine of delectation over the whole frame; when sudden and violent, it is expressed by clapping the hands, exultation and weeping, raising the eyes to heaven, and perhaps suffusing them with tears, and giving such a spring to the body, as to make attempts to mount up as if it could fly: and when it is extreme, goes into transport, rapture, and ecstacy; the voice often raises on very high pitches, and exhilarating; it has a wildness of look and gesture that borders on folly, madness and sorrow; hence the expression, "frantic with joy." Joy, mirth, &c., produce a rousing, exciting, lively action.

JOY EXPECTED.

Ah! Juliet, if the measure of thy joy
Be heaped, like mine, and that thy skill be more
To blazen it, then sweeten, with thy breath,
This neighbor air, and let rich music's tongue
Unfold the imagin'd happiness, that both
Receive, in either, by this dear encounter.

See! my lord, [veins

Would you not deem it breath'd, and that those Did verily bear blood? O sweet Paulina,
Make me think so twenty years together;
No settled senes of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Talents—angel-bright,
If wanting worth,
Are shining instruments
In false ambition's hand—to finish faults
Illustrious, and give to infamy renown.

'Tis easiest—dealing with the firmest mind, [kind.
More just. when it resists, and when it yields, more

A mirror—has been well defined—
An emblem—of a thoughtful mind,
For, look upon it—when you will,
You find—it is reflecting still.

Life—is a sea. where storms must rise;
'Tis folly—talks of cloudless skies;
He, who contracts his swelling sail,
Ebbs the fury of the gale.

Anecdote. A painter—was employed in painting a ship, on a stage, suspended under her stern. The captain, who had just got into the boat to go ashore, ordered the cabin boy to let go the painter. The boy went aft, and let go the rope by which the painter's stage was held. The captain, surprised at the boy's delay, cried out, "Confound you for a lazy dog; why don't you let go the painter's?" "He's gone sir," replied the boy, "pots and all."

Maxims. 1. The abuse of money is worse than the want of it. 2. Revenge is a mean pleasure; but no principle is more noble, than that of forgiving injuries. 3. Without friends, the world is but a wilderness. 4. Flattery to ourselves—does not change the nature of that which is wrong. 5. When a man is not liked, whatever he does is amiss. 6. If a man is unfortunate, and reduced in the world, it is easy to find fault with him. 7. A pure heart makes the tongue impressive. 8. A man's best fortune, or his worst—is a wife. 9. Health is better than wealth. 10. Unexperienced persons think all things easy.

Free Schools; or the road to Honor open to all. When the rich man—is called from the possession of his treasures, he divides them as he wills, among his children and heirs. But an equal Providence deals not so with the living treasures of the mind. There are children, just growing up in the bosom of obscurity, in town and country, who have inherited nothing but poverty and health, and who will, in a few years, be striving, in stern contention, with the great intellects of the land. Our system of free schools, has opened a straight way from the threshold of every abode, however humble, in the village, or in the city, to the high-places of usefulness, influence and honor. And it is left for each, by the cultivation of every talent, by watching, with an eagle-eye, for every chance of improvement; by bounding forward like a gray-hound, at the most distant glimpse of honorable opportunity; by grappling, as with hooks, the prize, when it is won; by redeeming time, by defying temptation, and scorning sensual pleasures; to make himself useful, honored and happy.

Varieties. 1. God, who loveth all his creatures, and is no respecter of persons, would have us be good for our own sakes. 2. What is the difference, between the love of being wise, and the love of wisdom? 3. Every age has its own predominant features, taste and propensities, that each may be fitted, and inclined, to discharge the offices allotted to it. 4. God has planted in the irrational brute, memory, sense, and appetite; but to rational man—he has given all these, and superadded thought, intelligence, will, immortal reason, and undying affection. 5. All orders of good and truth are capable of an infinite display of the varieties, proper to that order; and of an infinite multiplication of each.

Music! thou rest of life, and balm of age,
To cheer man's path—through this dark pilgrimage,
In every state—be thou my partner made:
By night, by day, in sunshine, and in shade;
Teach me, while here, the strain that angels sing,
From hearts devout, to Heaven's Eternal King;
Tune my last breath—with pure seraphic love,
And hymn my passage—to the choir above.
So very still, that echo—seems to listen;
We almost hear—the music of the spheres,
And fancy, that we catch the notes of angels.

MIRTH, JOLLY LAUGHTER.

462. When delight arises from ludicrous or fugitive amusements, in which others share with us, it is called MIRTH, LAUGHTER OR MERRIMENT; which opens the mouth horizontally, shrivels the nose, raises the cheeks high, lessens the aperture of the eyes, and fills them with tears.

INVOCATION OF THE GODDESS OF MIRTH.

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne;
And of men—heart-easing MIRTH;
Whom lovely Venus bore:
Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful Jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek;
Sport, that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter, holding both his sides;
Come, and trip it as you go
On the light fantastic toe,
And in thy right hand—lead with thee
The mountain-nymph, sweet Liberty.

MIRTH AND MELANCHOLY.

Now, by two-headed Janus,
Nature hath framed strange fellows in her times;
Some, that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots at a bag-piper;
And others—of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

463. THEATRES. If the lofty powers of the master tragedian were concentrated to the development of mind, in the presence of those, only, who can appreciate his genius; if the public display of them, on the stage, were unaccompanied by any of those excesses, which cling, incubus-like, to modern theatres; the evil of which the philanthropist and patriot complain, would seem to be trifling. But when he throws himself in the midst of such scenes, as he must necessarily meet, in all the theatres of the present day, he gives the sanction of his presence, his example and reputation, to some of the most monstrous abuses, which exist among men. Although his moral character may be irreproachable, yet a man is always known by the company he keeps; and, in spite of himself and his friends, he is identified with all the theatres, in which he performs: his character is assimilated to his debased associates, who boast of his society; and ape his greatness. It is because he is among them, that they are countenanced by so large a portion of the American people.

Maxims. 1. He, that hearkens to counsel, is wise. 2. Courage—ought to have eyes, and ears, as well as arms. 3. Credit, lost, is like a broken looking-glass. 4. It is sweet to do good unseen and in secret. 5. Nature—unites the beautiful with the useful: hence, handsome is, that handsome does. 6. The mob hath many heads, but no brains. 7. A superior mind cares but little about dress, provided it be decent. 8. The world—is a large and interesting book, and is opened to us day and night. 9. Vanity—renders beauty contemptible. 10. Vows, made in storms, are forgotten in calms; because they are the offspring of fear.

Anecdote. Play upon words. A poor drunken loafer—was picked up in the street, by the watchman, when the following decision was made: There is no sense in his head, no cents in his pocket, and a powerful scent in his breath: he was of course sent to the watchhouse.

The Feet. There are seven bones in the ankle, five in the metatarsus, and fourteen phalanges in the foot, which are strongly fastened together by means of a gristle, which yields—so as to enable us to tread, with equal ease, on level or unequal surfaces. We often hear of the small feet of the Chinese ladies; and we also see some ladies in a christian land who try to make themselves heathens, by wearing a very small shoe, under the false notion, that it is genteel to have small feet. Genteel to have corns, impeded circulation, and all their train of horrors! Oh, when shall we come to our senses, leave off tight shoes, and cease to worship the god of fashion?

VARIETIES.

Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field,
I'll hang my head, and perish.

Her sunny locks
Hang on her temples, like a golden fleece.

She looks as clear,
As morning roses, newly washed with dew.

There's nothing in the world can make me joy;
Life—is as tedious—as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of drowsy man.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The petty follies, that themselves commit.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So—shines a good deed—in this naughty world.
Penetration—has an aid of divination.

HONESTY.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'dst thy words before thou giv'st them breath,
Therefore, these steps of thine fright me the more:
For such things, in a false display knave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
They are close denotements, working from the heart,
That passions cannot rule.

Gold, silver, vases sculptur'd high,
Paint, marble, gems, and robes of Persian dye,
There are, who have not, and, thank heaven! there are,
Who, if they have not, think not worth their care.

ECSTASY, RAPTURE, &c.

464. ECSTASY, RAPTURE, TRANSPORT, express an extraordinary elevation of the spirits, an excessive tension of mind: they signify to be out of one's self, out of one's mind, carried away beyond one's self. ECSTASY—benumbs the faculties, takes away the power of speech, and sometimes of thought: it is generally occasioned by sudden and unexpected events: but RAPTURE often invigorates the powers and calls them into action. The former is common to all persons of ardent feelings; especially, children, &c., the illiterate: the latter is common to persons of superior minds, and circumstances of peculiar importance.

What followed, was all ecstasy, and trances:
Immortal pleasures round my swimming eyes did dance.

By swift degrees, the love of nature works,
And warms the bosom, till at last, sublim'd
To rapture and enthusiastic heat,
We feel the present Deity.

Scorns the base earth and crowd below,
And, with a peering wing, still mounts on high.

He play'd so sweetly, and so sweetly sung,
That on each note the enraptur'd audience hung.

465. GARRICK. It is believed, that this tragedian greatly surpassed his predecessors, in his genius for acting, in the sweetness and variety of his tones, the irresistible magic of his eye, the fire and vivacity of his action, the elegance of his attitudes, and the whole pathos of expression. The cause of whose success was, his intimate and practical knowledge of human nature. Example. A certain gentleman, on returning from the theatre, asked his postillion. (who sat in his private box,) what he thought of the great Mr. Garrick. "Not much, my lord," was his reply, "for he talked and acted just like John and I in the stable." When this was repeated to the tragedian, he declared it the greatest compliment ever paid him: for, said he, if nature's own children can't distinguish me from themselves, it is a pretty sure indication that I am about right.

RAPTURES.

But, in her temple's last recess inclos'd,
On dullness's lap, th' appointed head repos'd.
Him close she curtains round—with vapors blue,
And soft besprinkles—with Cimmerian dew;
Then raptures high—the seat of sense o'erflow,
Which only heads—refin'd from reason, know;
Hence, from the strave, where Bedlam's prophet
He hears loud oracles, and talks with gods: [nois,
Hence, the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The air-built castle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantic wish, the chemist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame.

How dost thou wear, and weary out thy days,
Restless ambition; never at an end.

Maxims. 1. He is not wise, who is not wise for himself. 2. If you wish a thing done, go; if not, send. 3. The silence of the tongue is often the eloquence of the heart. 4. The perfection of art is, to conceal art. 5. Every day is a little life; and a whole life but a day repeated. 6. We find it hard to forgive those, whom we have injured. 7. Fashionable women are articles manufactured by milliners;

They want but little—here below,
And want that little—for a show.

8. Do nothing you would wish to conceal. 9. Appearances are often deceiving. 10. Riches cannot purchase mental endowments.

Anecdote. Look at Home. The advice of a girl, to Thales, a Milesian astronomer, was strong and practical. Seeing him gazing at the heavens, as he walked along, and perhaps piqued, because he did not cast an eye on her attractions, she put a stool in his path, over which he tumbled and broke his shins. Her excuse was, that she wanted to teach him, before he indulged himself in star-gazing, to "look at home."

VARIETIES.

A proper judge—will read each work of wit,
With the same spirit, that its author writ.

It comes o'er the ear, like the sweet south wind,
Which breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing—and giving odor.

Th't mind and body—often sympathize,
Is plain; such—is this union, nature ties:
But then, as often too, they disagree,
Which proves—the soul's superior progeny.

Yet this is Rome,
That sat on her seven hills, and from her throne
Of beauty—ruin'd the world.

Beware of desperate steps; the darkest day,
(Live till to-morrow,) will have passed away.

With pleasure—let us own our errors past,
And make each day—a critic—on the last.

Thinking—leads man to knowledge. He may see and hear, and read and learn, whatever he pleases, and as much as he pleases: he will never know any thing of it, except that which he has thought over; that which, by thinking, he has made the property of his mind. Is it then saying too much, that man, by thinking only, becomes truly man. Take away thought from man's life, and what remains?

'T was the bow of Omnipotence: bent in His hand,
Whose grasp at creation the universe spann'd;
'T was the presence of God, in a symbol sublime;
His vow from the flood to the exit of Time!

Not dreadful, as when in the whirlwind he pleads,
When storms are his chariot, and lightnings his steeds,
The black clouds his banner of vengeance unfurl'd,
And thunder his voice to a guilt-stricken world;—

Not such was the rainbow, that beautiful one!
Whose arch was refraction, its keystone the sun;
A pavilion it seem'd, which the Deity graced,
And justice and mercy met there, and embraced.

Awile, and it sweetly bent o'er the gloom,
Like love o'er a death-couch, or hope o'er the tomb;
Then left the dark scene; whence it slowly retired;
As love had just vanish'd, or hope had expired.

Virtue, not rolling suns—the mind matures.

LOVE, &c.

466. Love gives a soft serenity to the countenance, a languishing to the eyes, a sweetness to the voice, and a tenderness to the whole frame: forehead smooth and enlarged; eye-brows arched; mouth a little open; when entreating, it clasps the hands, with intermingling fingers, to the breast; eyes languishing and partly shut, as if doating on the object; countenance assumes the eager and wistful look of desire, but mixed with an air of satisfaction and repose; accents soft and winning, voice persuasive, flattering, pathetic, various, musical and rapturous, as in Joy: when declaring, the right hand, open, is pressed forcibly on the breast; it makes approaches with the greatest delicacy, and is attended with trembling hesitancy and confusion; if successful, the countenance is lighted up with smiles; unsuccessful love adds an air of anxiety and melancholy.

467. To the above may be added, Shakspeare's description of this affection, as given by the Good Shepherd, who was requested to tell a certain youth, what 'tis to love:

It is to be all made of sighs and tears :
It is to be all made of faith and service :
It is to be all made of fantasy,
All made of passion, and all made of wishes :
All adoration, duty, and observance,
All humbleness, all patience, and impatience,
All purity, all trial, all observance.

LOVE DESCRIBED.

Come hither boy ; if ever thou shalt love,
In the sweet pangs of it remember me :
For such as I am—all—true lovers are :
Unstaid and kitish in all motions else ; [below'd.
Save in the constant image of the creature, that is LANGUISHING LOVE.

O fellow, come, the song we had last night :
Mark it Cesario ; it is old and plain ;
The spinsters, and the knitters in the sun, [bones,
And the free maids, that weave their threads with
Do use to chant it ; it is silly, sooth,
And dallies with the innocence of love,
Like to old age.

Hail, need'd love, mysterious law, true source
Of human offspring, sole propriety
In paradise, of all things common else !

By thee adult'rous lust—was driv'n from men
Among the bestial herds to range ; by thee
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
Here, love his golden shafts employs, here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings,
Reigns here and revels : not in the bought smile
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd,
Casual fruition ; not in court amours,
Mix'd dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball.

Maxims. 1. We must strike while the iron is hot ; but we must sometimes make the iron hot by striking. 2. Books are to the young, what capital is to the man of business. 3. It is not good husbandry, to make a child's fortune—great, and his mind—poor. 4. Some—excuse their ignorance, by pretending, that their taste lies in another direction. 5. Reading, makes a full man, and thinking, a correct man. 6. Not the pain, but the cause—makes the martyr. 7. Learn some useful art or trade, that you may be independent of the caprice of fortune. 8. Nothing is harder for honest people, than to be denied the privilege of speaking their minds. 9. Some—are penny-wise, and pound-foolish. 10. A true friend sometimes ventures to be offensive.

Anecdote. Two Lawyers. A wealthy farmer, being engaged in a law-suit against one of his opulent neighbors, applied to a lawyer, who happened to be engaged on the opposite side ; but, who told him he would give him a recommendation to a professional friend ; which he did in the following lines :

"Here are two fat wethers, fallen out together,
If you'll fleece one, I'll fleece the other,
And make them agree like brother and brother."

The letter being unsealed, the farmer had the curiosity to open and read it ; he did so, and instead of carrying it to the other lawyer, he took it to the person, with whom he was at variance. Its perusal cured both parties, and ended the dispute. Inference—Lawyers live by the violation of the laws of goodness and truth.

Conversation. When five or six men are together, it is curious—to observe the anxiety every one has to speak. No one wishes to hear ; all he desires, is—an auditor. Rather than defer telling their respective stories, they frequently all speak at the same time.

Varieties. The United States—is on a conspicuous stage ; and the world—marks her demeanor. 2. If a parent—withhold from his children—the light, and influence of Divine Truth, is he not, in part, responsible for their crimes ? 3. Eloquence—is the language of Nature,—of the soul ; it cannot be acquired in the schools, though it may be cultivated there. 4. What is the object of courtship ? to get acquainted ; to show off ; to take in ; or, to marry ? 5. What a dreadful thing it is—to be "cut out,"—and to "get the mitten !"

They—know not my heart, who believe there can be
One stain of this earth—in its feelings for thee ;
Who think, while I see thee in beauty's young hour,
As pure as the morning's first dew on the flower,
I could harm what I love—as the sun's wanton ray
But smiles on the dew-drop—to waste it away !

No—heaving with light—as those young features are,
There's a light round thy heart, which is lowlier far :
It is not that cheek—'tis the soul—dawning clear
Through its innocent shawl, makes thy beauty so dear—
As the sky we look up to, though glorious and fair,
Is look'd up to the more, because heaven is there !

PITY, COMPASSION.

468. PITY, benevolence to the afflicted; a mixture of love for an object which suffers, whether human or animal, and a grief that we are unable to remove those sufferings. It is seen in a compassionate tenderness of voice, a feeling of pain in the countenance; features drawn together, eyebrows drawn down, mouth open, and a gentle raising and falling of the hands and eyes; as if mourning over the unhappy object.

Hadst thou but seen, as I did, how at last,
Thy beauties, Belvidera, like a wretch
That's doom'd to banishment, came weeping forth:
Whilst two young virgins, on whom she once
Kindly look'd up, and at her grief grew sad! [lean'd,
Ev'n the loud rabble, th't were gather'd round
To see the sight, stood mute, when they beheld
Her: govern'd their roaring threats, and grumb'd PITY.

How many bleed,
By shameless variance, between man and man!

On the bare earth, exposed, he lies,
With not a friend to close his eyes.

Show mercy, and thou shalt find it.

Life, fill'd with grief's distressful train,
Forever asks the tear humane.

The quality of mercy—is not strain'd;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest—in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch—better than his crown;
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe—and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy—is above this scepter'd sway,
It is enthroned—in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute—to God himself:
And earthly power—doth then show likest God's,
When mercy—seasons justice.

But from the mountain's grassy side,
A guiltless feast I bring:
A serip, with fruits and herbs supplied,
And water from the spring.

Thou great, thou best prerogative of power!
Justice may guard the throne, but join'd with thee,
On rocks of adamant it stands secure,
And braves the storm beneath.

Mercy—is the beaming smile of justice;
This—makes her lovely, as her rigor—dreadful;
Either, alone, defective:—but, when join'd,
Like clay and water in the potter's hands,
They mingle influence, and together rise,
In forms, which neither, separate, could bestow.
The sweetest cordial—we receive at last,
Is—conscience—of our virtuous actions past.

Maxims. 1. He that feels as he ought, will be polite without knowing it. 2. Common sense is the growth of all countries and all ages, but it is very rare. 3. Modesty is one of the chief ornaments of youth. 4. In every condition be humble; the loftier the condition, the greater the danger. 5. Feelings and thoughts are the parents of language. 6. To gain a good reputation, be what you desire to appear. 7. In prosperity, we need consideration; in adversity—patience. 8. Kindness is more binding than a loan. 9. Right should be preferred to kindness. 10. A wise man adapts himself to circumstances, as water does to the vessel that contains it.

Anecdote. When Woodward first acted Sir John Brute, Garrick was induced, either by curiosity or jealousy, to be present. A few days afterward, they happened to meet, when Woodward asked Garrick, how he liked him in the part; adding, I think I struck out some beauties in it. Garrick replied, "I think you struck out all the beauties in it."

Discretion. At the same time, that I think discretion—the most useful talent a man can be master of, I look upon cunning to be the accomplishment of little, mean, ungenerous minds. Discretion—points out the noblest ends to us, and pursues the most proper and laudable methods of attaining them; cunning—has only private, selfish aims, and sticks at nothing which may make them succeed. Discretion—has large and extensive views, and, like a well-formed eye, commands a whole horizon; cunning—is a kind of short-sightedness, that discovers the minutest objects, which are near at hand, but is not able to discern things at a distance.

Varieties. 1. Said an Indian chief to the President, "May the Great Spirit bear up the weight of thy gray hairs, and blunt the arrow, that brings them rest." 2. The great truth has finally gone forth to the ends of the earth, that man shall no more render account to man, for his belief, over which he himself has no control. 3. Let every one feel, think, act and say whatever he pleases; provided, he does not infringe upon like privileges of others. 4. Virtue—promotes worldly prosperity; vice destroys it. 5. Who can fully realize the strength of parental affection, without experiencing it? and even then, who can describe it. 6. Grief, smothered, preys upon the vitals; give it vent into the bosom of a friend. 7. Nothing is of any service, that does not help to re-unite the soul to God.

But, what'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time,
If ever you have looked on better days,
If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church;
If ever sat at any good man's feast!
If ever, from your eye-lids, wip'd a tear,
And know what 'tis to pity, and be pitied,
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be

DESIRE, HOPE.

469. HOPE is a mixture of joy and desire, agitating the mind, and anticipating its enjoyment; it ever gives pleasure; which is not always the case with wish and desire; as they may produce or be accompanied with pain and anxiety. Hope erects and brightens the countenance, opens the mouth to half a smile, arches the eye-brows, gives the eyes an eager and wistful look; spreads the arms with the hands open, ready to receive the object of its wishes, towards which it leans a little; the voice is somewhat plaintive, and manner inclining to eagerness, but colored by doubt and anxiety; the breath drawn inward more forcibly than usual, in order to express our desires more strongly, and our earnest expectation of receiving the object of them.

But thou, O HOPE! with eyes so fair,

What was thy delighted measure?

Still it whisper'd—promis'd pleasure,

And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail;

Still would her touch the strain prolong,

And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,

She called an echo still thro' all her song;

And where her sweetest theme she chose,

A soft responsive voice was heard, at every close.

And HOPE, enchanted, smil'd, and wav'd her golden hair. [health!

Thou captive's freedom, and thou sick man's

Thou lover's victory, thou beggar's wealth!

Thou manna, which from heaven we eat,

To every taste a several meat;

Hope! thou first fruit of happiness!

Thou gentle dawning of a bright success!

Who, out of fortune's reach doth stand,

And art a blessing still at hand!

Brother of faith! 'twixt whom and thee,

The joys of heaven and earth divided be;

The future's thine,—the present's his.

Thou pleasant, honest flatterer; for none

Flatter unhappy men, but thou alone!

O Hope, sweet flatterer, whose delusive touch

Sheds on afflicted minds, the balm of comfort,

Relieves the load of poverty; sustains

The captive, bending under the weight of bonds,

And smooths the pillow of disease, and pain;

Send back the exploring messenger with joy,

And let me hail thee—from that friendly grove.

Anecdote. A traveler in a stage-coach, not famous for its swiftness, inquired the name of the coach. A fellow passenger replied, "I think it is the Regulator, for I observe that all the other coaches go by it."

Hast thou power?—the weak defend;

Light?—give light: thy knowledge lend;

Rich?—remember Him, who gave;

Free?—be brother to the slave.

A disputable point—is no man's ground.

Maxims. 1. It is one thing to know us give, and another to know how to keep. 2. Every thing perfected by art, has its source in nature. 3. He who tells you the faults of others, intends to tell others your faults. 4. Opinion is free, and conduct alone amenable to the law. 5. Extravagant praise is more mortifying than the keenest satire. 6. Love all beauty, and you will love all goodness. 7. A foolish friend does more harm than a wise enemy. 8. When our hatred is violent, it sinks us below those we hate. 9. There should be no delay in a benefit, but in the modesty of the receiver. 10. A cup of cold water, in time of need, may save a man's life.

Acquaintance with Human Nature. He, who has acquired a competent knowledge of the views, that occupy the generality of men; who has studied a great variety of characters, and attentively observed the force and violence of human passions; together with the infirmities and contradictions they produce in the conduct of life, will find in this knowledge, a key to the secret reasons and motives which gave rise to many of the most important events of ancient times.

Varieties. 1. Some people will do almost anything, rather than own a fault; tho' everything depends on it: thus, Seneca's wife, to conceal her blindness, declared that the whole world was in darkness, and none could see. 2. What is the difference between pleasure and happiness? 3. There is, in all things, a threefold principle, by which they exist; an inmost, middle, and outermost; and in human beings, there is a soul, mind, and body; will, understanding, and act; affection, thought and speech; intellectual, rational, and scientific; end, cause, and effect, all essentially distinct. 4. Our Lord does not say—if a man see a miracle, he shall know that my doctrine is from God; but, "if any man will do my will."

The flower—soon dies, but hope's soft ray

Unchang'd—undying shines

Around that form—where pale decay,

A peaceful heart enshrines:

Like ivy—around the blighted tree,

It twines around the heart,

Amid poor—frail humanity,

The only verdant part.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;

Kings it makes Gods, and meaner creatures Kings.

Hope, though 'tis pale sorrow's only cordial,

Has yet—a dull and opiate quality,

Enfeebling—what it lulls.

A beacon shining o'er a stormy sea;

A cooling fountain—in a weary land;

A green spot—on a waste and burning sand;

A rose—that o'er a ruin sheds its bloom;

A sunbeam—smiling o'er the cold dark tomb.

Westward—the course of empire takes its way;

The four first acts already past,

A fifth—shall close the drama with the day;

Time's noblest offspring—is the last.

HATRED, AVERSION.

470. When, by frequent reflections on a disagreeable object, our disapprobation of it is attended with a strong disinclination of mind towards it, it is called hatred; and when this is accompanied with a painful sensation upon the apprehension of its presence and approach, there follows an inclination to avoid it, called aversion: extreme hatred is abhorrence, or detestation. Hatred, or aversion expressed to, or of any person, or any thing, that is odious, draws back the body to avoid the hated object, and the hands, at the same time, thrown out and spread, as if to keep it off; the face is turned away from that side, which the hands are thrown out; the eyes looking angrily and obliquely, or askint, the way the hands are directed; the eyebrows are contracted, the upper lip dislignfully drawn up; the teeth set; the pitch of the voice is loud, surly, chiding, languid and vehement; the sentences are short and abrupt.

HATRED—CURSING THE OBJECT HATED.

Poisons—be their drink,

Gall—coarse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste;
Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees;
Their sweetest prospects, murdering basilisks;
Their music—frightful as the Serpent's hiss:
And boding screech-owls make the concert full;
All the foul terrors of dark-seated HELL.

The mortal coldness of the soul, like death itself comes down;
It cannot feel for other's woes, it dare not dream its own;
That heavy chill has frozen o'er the fountain of our tears,
And though the eye may sparkle still, 'tis where the ice appears.
Tho' wit may flash from fluent lips, and mirth distract the breast,
Tho' midnight hours, that yield no more their former hope of rest;
'Tis but as icy leaves—around the ruin'd turret wreath,
All green and wildly fresh without, but worn and gray beneath.

On Adam last thus judgment he pronounc'd:
"Because thou hast hearken'd to the voice of thy
And eaten of the tree, concerning which [wife],
I charg'd thee, saying, 'Thou shalt not eat thereof,'
Curs'd is the ground for thy sake; thou, in sorrow,
Shalt eat thereof all the days of thy life;
Thorns, also, and thistles it shall bring thee forth
Unbid; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field.
In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,
Till thou return unto the ground; for thou
Out of the ground wast taken: know thy birth,
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return."

Anecdote. SATISFACTION. A ruined debtor, having done every thing in his power to satisfy his creditors, said to them, "Gentlemen,—I have been extremely perplexed, till now, how to satisfy you: and having done my utmost to do so, I shall leave you to satisfy yourselves."

He, whose mind

Is virtuous, is alone—of noble kind;

Tho' poor—in fortune, of celestial race;

And he—commits a crime, who calls him base.

Maxims. 1. One true friend is worth a hundred relations. 2. Happiness is to be found every where, if you possess a well regulated mind. 3. Between good sense and good taste, there is the same difference as between cause and effect. 4. He, who profits by the mistakes, or oversights of others, learns a lesson of great importance. 5. The flight of a person accused, is a tacit acknowledgment of his guilt. 6. He, is wise, who does every thing at the proper time. 7. Confession is as a medicine—to him who has gone astray. 8. The love of liberty makes even an old man brave. 9. Children are heirs to the diseases of their parents, as well as to their possessions. 10. A man, who cannot forgive, breaks the bridge over which he might pass to Heaven.

Thoughts. A man would do well to carry a pencil in his pocket, and write down the thoughts of the moment. Those that come unsought for, are commonly the most valuable, and should be secured, because they seldom return.

Varieties. 1. What do you think of one, who gives away ten dollars, when he owes a hundred more than he can pay? 2. Let us follow nature, who has given shame to man for a scourge; and let the heaviest part of the punishment be—the infamy attending it. 3. Can we perceive any quality in an object, without an act of comparison? 4. Falsehood often decks herself in the outer garments of truth, that she may succeed the better in her wily deceptions. 5. The thing, which has been done, it is that which shall be; and that which is, it is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun. 6. Society cannot be held together without morals; nor can morals maintain their station in the human heart, without religion; and no religion is worth having, unless it is founded on truth, which is the corner-stone of the fabric of human nature. 7. How far have moral perceptions been influenced by physical phenomena?

How very precious—praise
Is—to a young genius, like sunlight—on flowers,
Ripening them into fruit.

One hour—

Of thoughtful solitude—may nerve the heart
For days of conflict—girding up its armor—
To meet the most insidious foe, and lending
The courage—sprung alone from innocence—
And good intent.

There is not, in this life of ours,

One bliss—unmixed with fears;

The hope, that wakes our deepest powers,

A face of sadness wears;

And the dew, that shows o'er our dearest flow'rs.

Is the bitter dew—of tears.

In all our strictures—placid we will be,

As Haleys—brooding on a summer sea.

No man—is born into the world, whose work—
Is not born with him; there is always work—
And tools—to work withal, for those who will!

ANGER, RAGE, FURY,

471. Imply excitement or violent action: when hatred and displeasure rise high, on a sudden, from an apprehension of injury received and perturbation of mind in consequence of it, it is called ANGER: and rising to a very high degree, and extinguishing humanity, it becomes RAGE and FURY: anger always renders the muscles protuberant; hence, an angry mind and protuberant muscles, are considered as cause and effect. Violent anger or rage, expresses itself with rapidity, noise, harshness, trepidation, and sometimes with interruption and hesitation, as unable to utter itself with sufficient force. It wrinkles and clouds the brow, enlarges and heaves the nostrils; every vein swells, muscles strained, nods or shakes the head, stretches out the neck, clenches the fists, breathing hard, breast heaving, teeth shown and gnashing, face bloated, red, pale, or black; eyes red, staring, rolling and sparkling; eye-brows drawn down over them, stamps with the foot, and gives a violent agitation to the whole body. The voice assumes the highest pitch it can adopt, consistently with force and loudness; Tho' sometimes, to express anger with uncommon energy, the voice assumes a low and forcible tone.

Hear me, rash man; on thy allegiance hear me;
Since thou hast striv'n to make us break our vow,
Which, nor our nature, nor our place can bear,
We banish thee forever from our sight,
And our kingdom: If when three days are expired,
Thy hated trunk be found in our dominions,
That moment is thy death.—Away.

Anger is like

A full hot horse; who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him.

The short passing anger but seem'd to awaken
New beauty, like flowers, that are sweetest when shaken.

They are as gentle

As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchain'd, as the rud'st wind,
That, by the top, doth take the mountain pine,
And make him stoop to the vale.

You are yoked with a lamb,

That carries anger—as the flint bears fire;
Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

Anecdote. Sowing and Reaping. A countryman, sowing his ground, two upstarts, riding that way, one of them called to him with an insolent air—"Well, honest fellow, 'tis your business to sow, but we reap the fruit of your labor." To which the countryman replied—" 'Tis very likely you may; for I am sowing hemp."

The world's a book,—writ by the eternal art
Of the great Author, and printed—in man's heart.

Laconics. 1. A little neglect may breed great mischief. 2. Retrospection and anticipation may both be turned to good account. 3. He, who would be well spoken of himself, must speak well of others. 4. Wildness of eccentricity, and thoughtlessness of conduct, are not necessary accompaniments of talent, or indications of genius. 5. Vanity and affectation, often steal into the hearts of youth, and make them very ridiculous; yet, no one is contemptible, for being what he is, but for pretending to be what he is not. 6. No speech can be severe, unless it be true; for if it be not true, it cannot apply; consequently, its severity is destroyed by its injustice. 7. Mutual benevolence must be kept up between relatives, as well as between friends; for without this cement, whatever the building is called, it is only a castle in the air, a thing talked of, without the reality.

Education. Education is to the mind, what cleanliness is to the body; the beauties of the one, as well as the other, are blemished, if not totally lost, by neglect; and as the richest diamond cannot shoot forth its lustre, wanting the lapidary's skill, so, will the latent virtue of the noblest mind be buried in obscurity, if not called forth by precept, and the rules of good manners.

Varieties. 1. He that thinks he can be negligent of his expenses, is not far from being poor. 2. Extended empire, like expanded gold, exchanges solid strength for feeble splendor. 3. Similarity in sound, weakens contrast in sense. 4. There being differences of mind, each member of a family, and of the community, is best qualified for the performance of specific duties. 5. The notions of some parents are very extravagant, in wishing the teacher to make great men of their sons; while they would be much more useful, and happy, in the field, or in the workshop. 6. Write down all you can remember of a lecture, address, or book, and the result will enable your teacher, as well as yourself, to decide, with a good degree of accuracy, upon your character, and the studies most appropriate for you to pursue.

What is wedlock forced, but a hell,
An age of discord, and continued strife!
Whereas the contrary—bringeth forth bliss,
And is a pattern—of celestial peace.

Immortality o'ersweeps

All pains, all tears, all trials, all fears, and peals,
Like the eternal thunder of the deep,
Into my ears, this truth—"Thou livest forever."

Oh! life is a waste of wearisome hours,
Which seldom the rose of enjoyment adorns;
And the heart that is soonest awak'd to the flower's,
Is always the first to be touched by the thorns.

The soul of music—slumbers in the shell,
Till waked and kindled, by the master's spell,
And feeling hearts, (touch them but lightly,) pour
A thousand melodies, unheard before.

When all things have their trial, you shall find,
Nothing is constant, but a virtuous mind.

REVENGE.

472. REVENGE—is a propensity & endeavor to injure or pain the offender, contrary to the laws of justice: which is attended with triumph and exultation, when the injury is indicted, or accomplished. It expresses itself like malice, or spite, but more openly, loudly and triumphantly; sets the jaws; grates the teeth; sends blasting flashes from the eyes; draws the corners of the mouth towards the ears; clenches both fists, and holds the elbow in a straining manner: the tone of voice and expression are similar to those of anger; but the pitch of voice is not so high, nor loud.

If they but speak the truth of her, [honor, These hands shall tear her; if they wrong her The proudest of them shall well hear of it. Time hath not so dried this blood of mine, Nor age so eat up my invention, Nor fortune made such havoc of my means, Nor my bad life—reft me so much of friends, But they shall find awak'd, in such a kind, Both strength of limb and policy of mind, Ability in means, and choice of friends, To quit me of them thoroughly.

473. If it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hinder'd me of half a million; laugh'd at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorn'd my nation, thwarted my bargains, cool'd my friends, heated mine enemies. And what's his reason? I am a Jew! Hath not a Jew eyes? Hath not a Jew hands? organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? Is he not fed with the same food; hurt with the same weapons; subject to the same diseases; heal'd by the same means: warm'd and cool'd by the same summer and winter, as a Christian is! If you stab us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? And if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian what is his humility? Revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by christian example? Why, REVENGE. The villiany you teach me, I will execute; and it shall go hard, but I will better the instruction.

O sacred solitude; divine retreat!
Choice—of the prudent! envy—of the great!
By thy pure streams, or in thy waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid:
The genuine offspring—of her lov'd embrace,
(Strangers—on earth,) are innocence—and peace.
There, from the ways of men laid safe ashore
We smile—to hear the distant tempest roar;
There, bless'd with health, with bus'ness unplex'd,
This life we relish, and ensure the next.

When will the world shake off such yokes! oh,
Will that redeeming day shine out on men, [when
That shall behold them rise, erect and free,
As Heaven and Nature—meant mankind should be!
When Reason shall no longer blindly bow
To the vile pagod things, that o'er her brow,
Like him of Jaghernaut, drive trampling now;
Nor Conquest dare to desolate God's earth;
Nor drunken Victory, with a Nero's mirth,
Strike her lewd harp amidst a people's groans;—
But, built on love, the world's exalted thrones
Shall to the virtuous and the wise be given—
Those bright, those sole legitimates of Heaven!

Human Testimony. The judgment must be employed, to discern the truth or falsehood of assertions, by attending to the credibility and consistency of the different parts of the story: the veracity and character of witnesses in other respects; by comparing the assertions with accounts received from other witnesses, who could not be ignorant of the facts; and lastly, by bringing the whole to a test of a comparison with known and admitted facts.

Anecdote. Scientific Enthusiasm. The enthusiasm of ardent and forcible minds, appears madness, to those who are dull and phlegmatic. The pleasure it inspires is the greatest and the most independent remuneration, that men of genius receive for their efforts and exertions. Do-na-tel-lo, the great Florentine sculptor, had been long working at his statue of Juvith; and, on giving the last stroke of the chisel to it, he was heard to exclaim, "Speak now! I am sure you can."

Varieties. 1. How beautiful the arrangement of all living creatures, with the boundaries of their habitation! But how much nore beautiful, could we but discover the law of this arrangement, or the reason, by which it is founded; that law, and the source from which it proceeds, must be the perfection of intelligence. 2. A good natured man has the whole world to be happy in. He is blest with everybody's blessing, and wherever he goes, he finds some one to love; "Unto him that hath, shall be given." 3. Parents should beware of discouraging their children, by calling them fools, half-witted, and telling them they will never know anything, &c.; but let the current flow on, and it will soon run clear: dam it up, and mischief will most certainly ensue. 4. The agitations among the nations of the earth, cannot be mistaken: they are the struggles of opinion, writhing in its chains, and indignantly striving to cast them off; the soul bursting its trammels, forsaking its bondage, and soaring away to its native heaven of thought, where it may range at large, emancipate and free.

"Peace!" shall the world, out-wearied, ever see
Its universal reign? Will states, will kings,
Put down those murderous—and unholy things,
Which fill the earth—with blood and misery?
Will nations learn—that love—not enmity—
Is Heaven's first lesson.

ANGER, HATRED, REPROACH.

474. REPROACH—is settled anger, or hatred, chastising the object of its dislike, by casting in his teeth the secret causes of his misconduct, or imperfections: the brow is contracted, the lip turn'd up with scorn, the head shaken, the voice low, as if abhorring, and the whole body expressive of aversion, contempt and loathing.

*Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy forever dwells ! Hail, horrors ! hail,
Infernal world ! and thou, profoundest Hell,
Receive thy new possessor ; one who brings
A mind not to be chang'd by place or time.
The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a heav'n of hell, a hell of Heav'n :
What matter where, if I be still the same,
And what I should be, all but less than he Whom thunder hath made greater ? Here, at least
We shall be free ; th' Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy ; will not drive us hence :
Here we may reign secure ; and in my choice,
To reign is worth ambition, though in hell :
Better to reign in hell, than serve in Heaven.*

*He is my bane, I cannot bear him ;
One heav'n and earth can never hold us both :
Still shall we hate, and with defiance deadly,
Keep rage alive, till one be lost forever ;
As if two suns should meet in one meridian,
And strive, in fiery combat, for the passage.
Who does one thing, and another tell,
My heart detests him as the gates of hell.
Hence, from my sight !
Thy father cannot bear thee ;
Fly with thy infamy to some dark cell,
Where, on the confines of eternal night,
Mourning, misfortunes, cares and anguish dwell.*

REPROACHING WITH WANT OF COURAGE AND SPIRIT.
*Thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward !
Thou little valiant, great in villany,
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side !
Thou fortune's champion, thou dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety ! thou art perjured too,
And soothe'st up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool ; to brag, to stamp, and swear,
Upon my party ! Thou cold-blooded slave !
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side,
Been sworn my soldier ? bidding me depend,
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength ?
And dost thou now fall over to my foes ?
Thou wear a lion's hide ; doff it, for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs.*

Debasing tendency of Anger. What a wretched thing is anger, and the commotion of the soul. If anything interposes itself between me and the object of my pursuits, what is incumbent upon me is, that I should put forth my powers, and remove it. How shall I do this ? By the exercise of my understanding. To the employment of this power, a cool and exact observation is necessary ; but the moment I am the slave of passion, my power is lost ; I am turned into a beast, or rather into a drunkard ; I can neither preserve my footing, nor watch my advantage, nor strike an effectual blow. Did you never see a passionate and a temperate man—pitched against each other ? How like a fool did the former appear ! how did his adversary turn and wind him as he pleased, like some god—controlling an inferior nature ! It is by this single implement, his reason, that man tames horses, camels, and elephants, to his hand ; that he tames the lion of the desert, and shuts up the hyena with bars.

Anecdote. Servile Imitation. The Chinese tailors do not measure their customers, but make clothes according to the pattern given them. An American captain, being at Canton, and wanting a new coat made, sent the proper quantity of cloth, and an old one for a pattern : but, unluckily, the old coat had a patch at the elbow, which the tailor copied, to the no small mortification of his employer.

Varieties. 1. Whatever tends to dissolve the Union, or lessen the sovereign authority, is hostile to our liberty and independence. 2. As the true christian religion, which is to become universal, had one local origin, so, have all genuine and specific creations had their origin, or local centre, whence they have been diffused. 3. Let an unbeliever in this religion, write down, fairly and truly, all the absurdities he believes instead of it, and he will find that it requires more faith to reject it, than it does to embrace it. 4. Reverence paid to man, on account of what is good and true ; as divine in them, and as their own, is the worship of the creature, instead of the Creator, and is idolatry. 5. Man is the end of the whole creation ; and all particulars of it conspire, that conjunction of him with God may be attained, and that the end may be brought to pass.

False views, like that horizon's fair deceit,
Where earth and heaven both seem, alas, to meet
Deceit—is the false road to happiness ;
And all the joys we travel to through vice,
Like fairy banquets, vanish when we touch them.

Oh ! colder than the wind, that freezes
Founts, that but now in sunshine play'd,
Is that congealing pang, which seizes
The trusting bosom, when betray'd.
In vain my lyre would lightly breathe
The smile, that sorrow fain would wear,
But mocks the woe, that lurks beneath,
Like roses—o'er a sepulchre.

As the ivy—climbs the tallest tree,
So—round the loftiest souls his toils he wound,
And, with his spells, subdu'd the fierce and free.

An honest man's the noblest work of God.

TERROR, OR FRIGHT.

475. When violent and sudden, it opens very wide the mouth, shortens the nose, draws down the eye-brows, gives the countenance an air of wildness, covers it with deadly paleness, draws back the elbows parallel with the sides, lifts up the open hands—with the fingers spread to the height of the breast, at some distance before it, so as to shield it from the dreadful object. One foot is drawn back behind the other, so that the body seems shrinking from the danger, and putting itself in a posture for flight. The heart beats violently, the breath is quick and short, and the whole body is thrown into a general tremor. The voice is weak and trembling, the sentences short, and the meaning confused and incoherent. Inminent danger produces violent shrieks, without any articulate sounds: sometimes confuses the thoughts, produces faintness, which is sometimes followed by death.

Ah! mercy on my soul! What is that! My old friend's ghost? They say none but wicked folks walk; I wish I were at the bottom of a coal-pit. See! how long and pale his face has grown since his death: he never was handsome; and death has improved him very much the wrong way. Pray do not come near me! I wish'd you very well when you were alive; but I could never abide a dead man, cheek by jowl with me. Ah, ah, mercy on us! No nearer, pray; if it be only to take leave of me that you are come back, I could have excused you the ceremony with all my heart; or if you—mercy on us! no nearer, pray, or, if you have wronged anybody, as you always loved money a little, I give you the word of frightened christian; I will pray as long as you please for the deliverance, or repose of your departed soul. My good, worthy, noble friend, do, pray disappear, as ever you would wish your old friend to come to his senses again.

Passion, when deep, is still—the glaring eye, That reads its enemy with glance of fire; The lip, that curls and writhes in bitterness; The brow contracted, till its wrinkles hide The keen fixed orbs that burn and flash below; The hand firm clench'd and quivering, and the foot Planted in attitude to spring and dart Its vengeance, are the language it employs.

While passions glow, the heart, like heated steel, Takes each impression, and is work'd at pleasure.

Anecdote. Printing. It is related that Faust, of Mentz, one of the many to whom the honor of having invented the invaluable art of printing is ascribed, having carried some of his Bibles to Paris, and offered them for sale as MSS., the French, after considering the number of the books, and their exact conformity to each other, and that the best book writers could not be so exact, concluded there was witchcraft in the case; and, by either actually indicting him as a conjuror, or threatening to do so, they extorted the secret; hence, the origin of the popular story of the Devil and Dr. Faustus.

Their breath is agitation, and their life A storm whereon they ride, to sink at last, And yet so nurs'd and bigoted to strife, That should their days, surviving perils past, Melt to calm twilight, they feel overcast With sorrow and supineness, and so die; Even as a flame unfed, which runs to waste With its own flickering, or a sword laid by Which eats into itself, and rusts ingloriously.

Friendship. The water, that flows from a spring, does not congeal in the winter. And those sentiments of friendship, which flow from the heart, cannot be frozen in adversity.

Varieties. 1. As in agriculture, he, who can produce the greatest crop, is not the best farmer, but he, who can effect it with the least labor and expense; so, in society, he is not the best member, who can bring about the most apparent good, but he, who can accomplish it with the least admixture of concomitant evil. 2. Cicero says, that Roscius, the Roman comedian, could express a sentence in as many ways by his gestures, as he himself could by his words. 3. The eye of a cultivated person is full of meaning; if you read it attentively, it will seem like a mirror, revealing the inner world of thought and feeling; as the bosom of the smooth lake reflects the image of the earth around, and the heavens above. 4. A good reader and a bad singer, is without excuse; for the same strength, purity, distinctness, flexibility and smoothness of voice, that either requires, and promotes, are subservient to each other.

Should fate—command me to the farthest verge Of the green earth, to distant, barbarous climes, Rivers—unknown to song; where first the sun— Gilds Indian mountains, or his setting beams Flame on the Atlantic Isles; 'tis nought to me; Since God—is ever present, ever felt, In the void waste—as in the city full; And where He—vital breathes, there must be joy. When e'en, at last, the solemn hour shall come, And wing my mystic flight—to future worlds, I cheerful, will obey; thee, with new powers, Will rising wonders sing; I cannot go— Where universal love—smiles not around, Sustaining all yon orbs, and all their sons: From seeming evil,—still educating good, And better,—thence again, and better—still— In infinite progression But I lose Myself in Haze—in light ineffable: Come then, expressive Silence—muse his praise.

GRIEF AND REMORSE,

476. Are closely allied to sorrow and remorse; or a painful remembrance of criminal actions and pursuits; casts down the countenance, clouds it with anxiety; hangs down the head, shakes it with regret, just raises the eyes as if to look up, and suddenly casts them down again with sighs; the right hand sometimes beats the heart or head, and the whole body writhes as if in self-aversion. The voice has a harshness, as in hatred, and inclines to a low and reproachful tone: weeps, stamps, hurries to and fro, runs distracted, or faints away. When it is violent, grovels on the ground: tears the clothes, hair or flesh: screams; sometimes it produces torpid sullen silence, resembling total apathy.

477. REMORSE FOR DRUNKENNESS. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, nothing wherefore. O that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains; that we should with joy, pleasure, revel, applause, transform ourselves into beasts: I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me—I am a drunkard: had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool—and presently—a beast! O strange! every inordinate cup is unblest'd, and the ingredient is a devil.

GRIEF DEPLORING LOSS OF HAPPINESS.

I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioneers and all, had wrong'd my love,
So had I nothing known: O now, forever,
Farewell the tranquil mind; farewell, content;
Farewell the plumed troop and the big war
That make ambition—virtue! O farewell:
Farewell the neighing steel, and the shrill trumpet,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner, and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstances of glorious war!
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone.

Ow, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth
Is to be made, then, shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
Makes ill deeds done! Hadst not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of Nature marked,
Quoted and signed, to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind;
But, taking note of thy abhorred aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villany,
Apt, liable to be employed in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death;
And thou, to be endeared to a king,
Madest it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Freedom of the Press. The liberty of the press—is the true measure of the liberty of the people. The one cannot be attacked, without injury to the other. Our thoughts ought to be perfectly free; to bridle them, or stifle them in their sanctuary, is the crime of perverted humanity. What can I call my own, if my thoughts are not mine.

Anecdote. Prize of Immortality. On its being remarked to Zeuxis, a celebrated painter, that he was very long in finishing his works, he replied, "I am, indeed, a long time in finishing my works; but what I paint—is for ETERNITY."

Varieties. 1 Many projects, which, at the first, appear plausible and inviting, in the end—prove to be very injurious. 2. Science, philosophy and religion, are our food in youth, and our delight in more advanced life; they are ornaments to prosperity, and a comfort and refuge, in adversity; armor at home, and abroad, they pass their days and nights with us, accompany us in our travels, and in rural retirements. 3. Which is more to be dreaded, a false friend or an open enemy? 4. Guard against being led into imprudence, by yielding to an impetuous temper. 5. There is no virtuous person, who has not some weakness or vice; nor is there a vicious one, who cannot be said to possess some virtue. 6. What a difficult thing it is, not to betray guilt in the countenance, when it exists in the mind! 7. The strength of one vital faculty is sometimes the occasion of a weakness in another; but, that it may not exist, exercise no faculty or principle beyond its strength or bounds. 8. Science—relates to whatever addresses us thro' the five senses; which are the ultimates—upon which the interiors of the mind, and the inmost of the soul—rest.

Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home!
What tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace, in captive bonds, his chariot-wheels?
You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless
O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, [things!
Knew ye not Pompey? Many a time and oft
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops,
Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
The live-long day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome:
And when you saw his chariot but appear,
Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath his banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds,
Made in his concave shores?
And do you now put on your best attire?
And do you now cull out a holiday?
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?
Begone;
Run to your houses; fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague,
That needs must light on this ingratitude.

DESPAIR.

477. As a condemned criminal, or one who has lost all hope of salvation, bends the eyebrows downward, clouds the forehead, rolls the eyes around fretfully, eyeballs red and inflamed like a rabid dog; opens the mouth horizontally, bites the lips, widens the nostrils, and gnashes the teeth; the head is pressed down upon the breast; heart too hard to permit tears to flow; arms are sometimes bent at the elbows; the fists clenched hard; the veins and muscles swollen; the skin livid; the whole body strained and violently agitated; while groans of inward torture are more frequently uttered than words. If any words are spoken, they are few, and expressed with a sullen eager bitterness; the tones of the voice often loud and furious, and sometimes in the same pitch for a considerable time. This state of human nature is too terrible, too frightful to look, or dwell upon, and almost improper for representation: for if death cannot be counterfeited without too much shocking our humanity, despair, which exhibits a state ten thousand times more terrible than death, ought to be viewed with a kind of reverence to the great Author of Nature, who seems sometimes to permit this agony of mind, as a warning to avoid that wickedness, which produces it: it can hardly be over-acted.

Bring me to my trial when you will.

Died he not in his bed? where should he die?

Can I make men live, whether they will or no?

Oh! torture me no more, I will confess.—

Alive again? then show me where he is,

I'll give a thousand pounds to look upon him.—

He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them—

Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright,

Like lime-twigs, set to catch my winged soul!

Give me some drink, and bid the apothecary

Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;

To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;

This sensible warm motion to become

A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit

To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside

In thrilling regions of thick-ribbed ice;

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,

And blown with restless violence about

The pendant world; or to be worse than worst

Of those, that lawless and uncertain thoughts

Imagine howling!—'tis too horrible!

The weariest and most loathed worldly life,

That age, ache, penury, and imprisonment

Can lay on nature, is a paradise

To what we fear of death.

Critics are like a kind of flies, that breed

In wild fig-trees, and, when they're grown up, feed

Upon the raw fruit of the nobler kind,

And by their nibbling on the outward rind,

Open the pores, and make way for the sun

To ripen it sooner than he would have done.

Virtue and Vice. Every man has actually within him, the seeds of every virtue and every vice; and the proportion, in which they thrive and ripen, depends, in general, upon the situations in which he has been, and is placed, and his life.

Anecdote. Filial Piety. Valerius Maximus relates, that a woman of distinction, having been condemned to be strangled, was carried to prison, in order to be put to death; but the jailor was so struck with compunction, that, resolving not to kill her, he chose to let her die with hunger; meanwhile, he permitted her daughter to visit her in prison, taking care that she brought nothing to eat. Many days passing by, and the prisoner still living, the jailor at length, suspecting something, watched the daughter, and discovered that she nourished her mother with her own milk. He informed the authorities, and they the people; when the criminal was pardoned, and the mother and daughter maintained at the public expense; while a temple was erected—SACRED TO FILIAL PIETY.

Varieties. 1. The mind should shine through the casket, that contains it; its eloquence must speak in the cheek; and so distinctly should it be wrought in the whole countenance, that one might say, the body thinks, as well as feels; such oratory will never cloy; it is always enchanting, never the same. 2. A gentleman, lecturing before a lyceum, remarked: a lady, when she married, lost her personal identity—her distinctive character—and was like a dew-drop, swallowed by a sunbeam. 3. Let ignorance talk, learning hath its value. 4. Where mystery is practiced, there is generally something bad to conceal, or something incompatible with candor, or ingenuousness, which form the chief characteristic of genuine innocence. 5. The worst man is often he, who thinks himself the best. 6. A benefit is a good office, done with intention and judgment. 7. He, who punishes an enemy, has a momentary delight; but he who forgives him, has an abiding satisfaction.

Despair shall round their souls be twin'd,

And drink the vigor of their mind:

As round the oak rank ivy cleaves,

Steals its sap, and blasts its leaves.

Like yonder blasted boughs, by lightning riven,
Perfection, beauty, life, they never know,
But frozen on all, that pass, a monument of woe.

I saw, on the top of a mountain high

A gem, that shone like fire by night;

It seem'd a star, that had left the sky,

And dropp'd to sleep on the lonely height.

I clomb the peak, and found it soon

A lump of ice, in the clear cold moon—

Can you its hidden sense impart?

'Twas a cheerful look, and a broken heart.

Favors—to none, to all, she smiles extends,

On she rejects,—but never once—offends.

SORROW AND SADNESS.

478. In sorrow, when moderate, the countenance is dejected, the eyes are cast down, the arms hang lax, sometimes a little raised, suddenly to fall again; the hands open, the fingers spread, the voice plaintive, and frequently interrupted with sighs. But when immoderate, it distorts the countenance, as if in agonies of pain; raises the voice to the loudest complainings, and sometimes even to cries and shrieks; wrings the hands, beats the head and breast, tears the hair, and throws itself on the ground; like some other passions in excess, it borders on phrenzy.

Say that again; the shadow of my sorrow!
Ha! let's see:

'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament,
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells, with silence, in my tortured soul;
There—lies the substance;
And I thank thee, king,
For the great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wail, but teaches me the way,
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.

Pelayo—stood confused: he had not seen
Count Julian's daughter, since in Roderick's court,
Glittering in beauty and in innocence,
A radiant vision, in her joy, she moved:
More like a poet's dream, in form divine,
Heaven's prototype of perfect womanhood,
So lovely was the presence,—than a thing
Of earth and perishable elements.

Now, had he seen her in her winding-sheet,
Less painful would that spectacle have proved;
For peace is with the dead, and piety
Bringeth a patient hope to those, who mourn
O'er the departed; but this alter'd face,
Bearing its deadly sorrow character'd,
Came like a ghost, which in the grave,
Could find no rest. He, taking her cold hand,
Rais'd her, and would have spok'n; but his tongue,
Fail'd in its office; and could only speak
In under-tone, compassionate, her name.

The voice of pity—sooth'd, and melted her,
And, when the prince bade her be comforted,
Proffering his zealous aid in whatsoever
Might please her to appoint, a feeble smile
Past slowly over her pale countenance,
Like moonlight—on a marble statue.

For forms of government, let fools contest;
Whate'er is best administered—is best:
For modes of faith—let graceless zealots fight;
His—can't be wrong, whose life—is in the right.
Those hearts, that start at once into a blaze,
And open all their rage, like summer storms,
At once discharged, grow cool again, and calm.

Love of Justice. A sense of justice should be the foundation of all our social qualities. In our most early intercourse with the world, and even in our most youthful amusements, no unfairness should be found. That sacred rule, of doing all things to others, according as we wish they would do unto us, should be engraved on our minds. For this end, we should impress ourselves with a deep sense of the original and natural equality of man.

Anecdote. When king Agrippa was in a private station, he was accused, by one of his servants, of speaking ill of Tiberius, and was condemned by the emperor to be exposed in chains before the palace gate. The weather being hot, he was thirsty, and called to Caligula's servant, Thaumastus, who was passing with a pitcher of water, to give him some drink; assuring him, if he got out of his captivity, he would pay him well. Tiberius dying, Caligula succeeded him, and set Agrippa at liberty, making him king of Judea; in which situation, he remembered the glass of water, sent for Thaumastus, and made him controller of his household.

Varieties. 1. The following is the title of a book, published in England, in Cromwell's time: "Curious custards, carefully conserved for the chickens of the covenant, and sparrows of the spirit, and the sweet swallows of salvation." 2. Superabundant prosperity, tends to involve the human mind in darkness: it takes away the greatest stimulus to exertion, represses activity, renders us idle, and inclines us to vice. 3. Venture not on the precipice of temptation; the ground may be firm as a rock under your feet, but a false step, or a sudden blast, may be your destruction. 4. Discretion has been termed the better part of valor; and diffidence, the better part of knowledge. 5. To combine profundity with perspicuity, wit with judgment, sobriety with vivacity, truth with novelty, and all of them with liberality, are six very difficult things. 6. Disguise it as we will, tyranny is a bitter thing. 7. What accident gains, accident may take away.

Seems, madam! nay, it is: I know not seems.
'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forced breath;
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,
Nor the dejected 'havior of the visage,
Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,
That can denote me truly: these, indeed seem,
For they are actions that a man might play;
But I have that—within, which passeth show,
These—but the trappings and the suits of woe.

Sorrow preys upon
Its solitude, and nothing more diverts it
From its sad visions of the other world,
Than calling it, at moments, back to this.
The busy—have no time for tears.

ATTENTION, LISTENING, &c.

497. A T-
TENTION—to an esteemed or superior character, has nearly the same aspect as INQUIRY, and requires SILENCE: the eyes are often cast upon the ground, sometimes fixed upon the speaker; but not too pertly, or familiarly; when looking at objects at a distance, and listening to sounds, its manifestations are different. INQUIRY into some difficult subject fixes the body in nearly one position, the head somewhat stooping, the eyes poring, and the eye-brows contracted.

Pray you, once more—

Is not your father grown incapable
 Of reas'nable affairs? is he not stupid [hear,
 With age, and altering rheums? Can he speak,
 Know man from man, dispute his own estate?
 Lies he not bed-ridden, and again does nothing,
 But what he did being childish.

Angelo—

There is a kind of character in thy life—
 That, to the observer, doth thy history—
 Fully unfold: thyself and thy belongings,
 Are not thine own so proper as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtue, then on thee.
Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,
 Not light them for themselves: for if our virtues
 Did not go forth of us, 'twere all as if
 We had them not: spirits are not finely touch'd—
 But to fine issues; nature never lends—
 The smallest scruple of her excellence;
 But like a thrifty goddess, she determines
 Herself the glory of a creditor,
 Both thanks and praise.

While Chaos, hush'd, stands listening to the noise,
 And wonders at confusion not his own.

I look'd, I listen'd, dreadful sounds I hear,
 And the dire form of hostile gods appear.
 Yet hear what an unskillful friend may say:
 As if a blind man should direct your way:
 So I myself, tho' wanting to be taught,
 May yet impart a hint, that's worth your thought.

What can the fondest mother wish for more,
 Ev'n for her darling sons, than solid sense,
Perceptions clear, and flowing eloquence?

Mourners. Men are often ingenious, in making themselves miserable, by aggravating, beyond bounds, the evils, which they are compelled to endure. "I will restore thy daughter again to life," said an eastern sage to a prince, who grieved immoderately for the loss of a beloved child; "provided, thou art able to engrave on her tomb, the names of three persons, who have never mourned." The prince made inquiry after such persons; but found the inquiry vain, and was silent.

Maxims. 1. We shall never be free from debt, till we learn not to be ashamed of industry and economy. 2. All should be taught how to earn, save and enjoy money. 3. Teach children to save everything; not for their own use exclusively, for this would make them selfish; teach them to share everything with their associates, and never to destroy anything. 4. True economy can be as comfortable with a little, as extravagance can with much. 5. Never lessen good actions, nor aggravate evil ones. 6. Good works are a rock; ill ones a sandy foundation. 7. Some receive praise, who do not deserve it. 8. It is safer to learn, than to teach. 9. He, who conceals his opinion, has nothing to answer for. 10. Reason, like the sun, is common to all.

Anecdote. The late king of England, being very fond of Mr. Whiston, celebrated for his various strictures on religion, happened to be walking with him one day, in Hamp-ton Court gardens, during the heat of his persecution. As they were talking upon this subject, his majesty observed, "That however right he might be in his opinions, it would be better, if he kept them to himself." "Is your majesty really serious in your advice?" answered the old man. "I really am," replied the king. "Why, then," says Whiston, "had Martin Luther been of this way of thinking, where would your majesty have been at this time?"

Varieties. 1. What are the three learned professions? 2. Great minds can attend to little things; but little minds cannot attend to great things. 3. To marry a rake, in hopes of reforming him, and to hire a high-wayman, in hopes of reclaiming him, are two very dangerous experiments. 4. A clear idea, produces a stronger effect on the mind, than one that is obscure and indistinct. 5. Those that are teaching the people to read, are doing all they can to increase the power, and extend the influence of those that write: for the child—will read to please his teachers, but the man—to please himself. 6. A faithful friend, that reproveth of errors, is preferable to a deceitful parasite. 7. He that follows nature, is never out of the way. 8. Time, patience, and industry, are the three grand masters of the world.

If music be the food of love, play on;
 Give me excess of it; that, surfeiting,
 The appetite may sicken, and so die.
 That strain again;—it had a dying fall;
 O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet south,
 That breathes upon a bank of violets,
 Stealing and giving odor. Enough, no more;
 'Tis not so sweet now as it was before.
 O spirit of love, how quick and fresh art thou!
 That, notwithstanding thy capacity
 Receivest as the sea, nought enters there,
 Of what validity and pitch soever,
 But falls into abatement and low price,
 Even in a minute! so full of shapes is fancy,
 That it alone is high fantastical.

SURPRISE, WONDER, AMAZEMENT.

480. An uncommon object produces wonder; if it appears suddenly, it begets surprise, which continued, produces amazement, and if the object of wonder comes gently to the mind, and averts the attention by its beauty and grandeur, it excites admiration, which is a mixture of approbation and wonder; so sure is the observation of the poet; Late time shall wonder, that my joys shall raise; For wonder is involuntary praise.

WONDER OR AMAZEMENT—opens the eyes and makes them appear very prominent: sometimes it raises them to the skies; but more frequently fixes them upon the object, if it be present, with a fearful look: the mouth is open and the hands held up nearly in the attitude of fear; and if they hold anything, they drop it immediately, and unconsciously; the voice is at first low, but so emphatical that every word is pronounced slowly and with energy, though the first access of this passion often stops all utterance; when, by the discovery of something excellent in the object of wonder, the emotion may be called admiration, the eyes are raised, the hands are lifted up, and clapp'd together, and the voice elevated with expressions of rapture.

Thou art, O God! the life and light

Of all this wondrous world we see;

Its glow by day, its smile by night,

Are but reflections caught from thee.

Where'er we turn, thy glories shine,
And all things fair and bright are Thine!

When Day, with farewell beam, delays

Among the opening clouds of even,

And we can almost think we gaze

Through golden vistas into Heaven,
Those hues, that make the sun's decline
So soft, so radiant, Lord! are Thine.

When Night, with wings of starry gloom,

O'ershadows all the earth and skies,

Like some dark, beauteous bird, whose plume

Is sparkling with unnumber'd eyes,—

That sacred gloom, those fires divine,

So grand, so countless, Lord! are Thine.

When youthful Spring around us breathes,

Thy spirit warms her fragrant sigh;

And every flower the Summer wreathes,

Is born beneath that kindling eye.

Where'er we turn, thy glories shine,

And all things fair and bright are Thine!

How inexpressibly various are the characteristics impressed by the Creator on all human beings! How has he stamped on each its legible and peculiar properties! How especially visible in this the lowest class of animal life! The world of insects, is a world of itself: how great the distance between it and man! Through all their forms, and graduations, how visible are their powers of destruction, of suffering and resisting, of sensibility and insensibility!

Importance of Early Principles. If men's actions are an effect of their principles, that is, of their notions, their belief, their persuasions, it must be admitted, that principles—early sown in the mind, are the seeds, which produce fruit and harvest in the ripe state of manhood. How lightly soever some men may speak of notions, yet, so long as the soul governs the body, men's notions must influence their actions, more or less, as they are stronger or weaker: and to good or evil, as they are better or worse.

Anecdote. Cyrus, the great king of Persia, when a boy, being at the court of his grandfather As-ty-a-ges, engaged to perform the office of cup-bearer at table. The duty of this office required him to taste the liquor, before presenting it to the king; but without performing this duty, Cyrus delivered the cup to his grandfather, who observed the omission, which he imputed to forgetfulness. "No," said Cyrus, "I purposely avoided it: because I feared it contained poison: for lately, at an entertainment, I observed that the lords of your court, after drinking it, became noisy, quarrelsome and frantic."

Varieties. 1. In every departure from truth, it is the deceit and hypocrisy we exert, to compass our purpose, that does the evil, more than the base falsehood, of which we are guilty. 2. It is a strong proof of the want of proper attention to our duty, and of a deficiency of energy and good sense, to let an opportunity pass, of doing or getting good, without improving it. 3. Of all the passions, jealousy is that which exacts the hardest service, and pays the bitterest wages; its service is to watch the success of a rival; its wages—to be sure of it. 4. Base envy withers at another's joy, and hates that excellence it cannot reach. 5. How does the mental and bodily statures of the ancients, compare with those of the moderns? 6. It seems like a law of order, that no one shall be long remembered with affection, by a race whom he has never benefitted. 7. The charity, that relieves distressed minds, is far superior to that, which relieves distressed bodies. 8. Think'st thou—it is honorable—for a noble man still to remember wrong? 9. This is the monstrosity of love, that the will—is infinite, and the execution—confined; that the desire—is boundless, and the act—a slave to limit.

What's in a name; that which we call a rose,
By any other name—would smell as sweet.

Glory—is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,

Till, by broad spreading, it disperses to nought.

God's benison go with you; and with those,

That would make good of bad, and friends—of foes.

The things we must believe—are few, and plain.

VENERATION, DEVOTION.

481. VENERATION—to parents, teachers, superiors or persons of eminent virtue and attainments is an humble and respectful acknowledgment of their excellence, and our own inferiority: the head and body are inclined a little forward, and the hand, with the palm downwards, just raised to meet the inclination of the body, and then let fall again with apparent timidity and diffidence; the eye is sometimes lifted up, and then immediately cast downward, as if unworthy to behold the object before it; the eyebrows drawn down in the most respectful manner; the features, and the whole body and limbs, all composed to the most profound gravity; one portion continuing without much change. When veneration rises to adoration of the Almighty Creator and Redeemer, it is too sacred to be imitated, and seems to demand that humble annihilation of ourselves, which must ever be the consequence of a just sense of the Divine Majesty, and our own unworthiness. This feeling is always accompanied with more or less of awe, according to the object, place, &c. Respect—is but a less degree of veneration, and is nearly allied to modesty.

Almighty God! 'tis right, 'tis just,
That earthly frames—should turn to dust;
But O, the sweet, transporting truth,
The SOUL—shall bloom in endless youth.

In its sublime research, philosophy
May measure out the ocean-deep—may count
The sands, or the sun's rays—but, God! for thee
There is no weight nor measure: none can mount
Up to thy mysteries; Reason's brightest spark,
Though kindled by thy light, in vain would try
To trace thy counsels, infinite and dark:
And thought is lost, ere thought can soar so high,
Even like past moments—in eternity.

This world—is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;
The smiles of joy,—the tears of woe,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow—
There's nothing true—but Heaven!
And false the light—on glory's plume,
As fading hues of even;
And love, and hope, and beauty's bloom,
Are blossoms—gather'd for the tomb:—
There's nothing bright—but Heaven!
Poor wanderers—of a stormy day,
From wave—to wave—we're driven,
And fancy's flash, and reason's ray,
Serve but to light—the troubled way—
There's nothing calm—but Heaven!

He was too good—
Where ill men were: and was best of all—
Among the rarest of good ones.

When usefulness, and pleasure join,
Perfection—crowns the grand design.

Anecdote. Pulpit Flattery. One of the first acts, performed by the young monarch, George the Third, after his accession to the throne of England, was, to issue an order, prohibiting any of the clergy, who should be called before him, from paying him any compliments in their discourse. His majesty was led to this, from the fulsome adulation which Dr. Thomas Wilson, prebendary of Westminster, thought proper to deliver, in the royal chapel; and for which, instead of thanks, he received a pointed reprimand; his majesty observing, "that he came to hear the praise of God, and not his own."

Love. The brightest part of love is its confidence. It is that perfect, that unhesitating reliance, that interchange of every idea and every feeling, that perfect community of the heart's secrets and the mind's thoughts, which binds two beings together more closely, more dearly than the dearest of human ties; more than the vow of passion, or the oath of the altar. It is that confidence which, did we not deny its sway, would give to earthly love a permanence that we find but very seldom in this world.

Varieties. 1. Some misfortunes seem to be inevitable; but they generally proceed from our want of judgment, and prudence. 2. Ignorance of the facts, upon which a science is based, precludes much proficiency in that science. 3. Trade, like a restive horse, is not easily managed; where one is carried to the end of a successful journey, many are thrown off by the way. 4. No accident can do harm to virtue; it helps to make it manifest. 5. True faith is a practical principle; it is doing what we understand to be true. 6. It is very difficult to talk and act like a matman, but not like a fool. 7. Rely not on the companions of your pleasure; trust not the associates of your health and prosperity; it is only in the hour of adversity, that we learn the sincerity of our friends. 8. The genuine feelings of human nature, are always the same; and the language of passion every where understood. 9. Demosthenes said, that action, or delivery, constitutes the beginning, middle and end of oratory. 10. In proportion as a truth is great, and transcending the capacity of the age, it is either rejected, or forgotten.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds

Admit impediments. Love is not love,
Which alters when it alteration finds,

Or bends with the remover to remove:

O no! it is an ever-fixed mark,

That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;

It is the star to every wandering bark, [ken.

Whose worth's unknown, altho' his height be ta-

Love's not Time's fool, tho' rosy lips and cheeks

Within its bending sickle's compass come;

Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,

But bears it out even to the edge of doom.

If this be error, and upon me prov'd,

I never writ, nor no man ever lov'd.

SCORN, CONTEMPT.

482. SNEER is ironical approbation; with a voice and countenance of mirth, somewhat exaggerated, we cast the severest censure; it is hypocritical mirth and good humor, and differs from the real by the sly, rich, satirical tones of voice, look and gesture, that accompany it; the nose is sometimes turned up, to manifest our contempt, disdain. SCORN—is the extreme of contempt; that disdain, which springs from a person's opinions of the meanness of an object, and a consciousness, or belief of his own worth and superiority.

Satan beheld their flight,
And to his mates—thus, in derision call'd:
O friends! why come not on those victors proud?
Ere while, they fierce were coming, and when we,
To entertain them fair, with open front, [ternus
And breast, (what could we more?) propounded
Of composition—strait they changed their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance; yet for a dance, they rais'd
Somewhat extravagant and wild, perhaps for Joy of offer'd peace; but I suppose,
If our proposals once again were heard,
We should compel them to a quick result.

483. You pretend to reason? you don't so much as know the first elements of the art of reasoning: you don't know the difference between a category and a predicament, nor between a major and a minor. Are you a doctor, and don't know that there is a communication between the brain and the legs? 2. SNEER. He has been an author these twenty years, to his bookseller's knowledge, if to no one's else. 3. Chafe not thyself about the rabble's censure: they blame, or praise, but as one leads the other.

O what a rogue and peasant slave am I!
Is it not monstrous, that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit,
That from her working, all his visage warm'd,
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit! and all for nothing:
He! Heuba!

What's Heuba to him, or he to Heuba,
That he should weep for her?

Thou look'st a very statue of surprise,
As if a lightning blast had dried thee up,
And had not left thee moisture for a tear.

How, like a broken instrument, beneath
The skillful touch, my joyless heart lies dead!
Nor answers to the master's hand divine.

What can ennoble sots, or slaves, or cowards?

The Investigation of Thought. While investigating the nature of thought, we forget that we are thinking; we propose to understand that, which, in the very effort to do so, necessarily becomes the more unintelligible; for while we think that we appreciate the desired end, the power that enables us to do so, is a part of the thing sought, which must remain ineplicable. Since it is impossible to understand the nature of thought by thinking, it is manifest, that every modification of thought, must be quite obscure in its nature; and, for the same reason, in judging of what we call ideas, we must use ideas derived from the same original, while every judgment is only a new modification. Therefore, the only true philosophy of mind, must, as to its principles, be revealed. Has there been such a revelation?

Anecdote. Brotherly Love. A little boy, seeing two nestling birds peck at each other, inquired of his elder brother, what they were doing. "They are quarreling," was the reply. "No," replied the other, "that cannot be, for they are brothers."

VARIETIES.

But seven wise men the ancient world did know;
We scarce know sev'n, who think thems'ls not so.

If a better system's thine,

Impart it freely; or make use of mine.

3. He, who knows the world, will not be too bashful; and he, who knows himself, will never be impudent. 4. To speak all that is true, is the part of fools; to speak more than is true, is the folly of too many. 5. Does a candle give as much light in the day time, as at night? 6. I am not worthy of a friend, if I do not advise him when he is going astray. 7. A bad great man, is a great bad man; for the greatness of an evil, makes a man's evil greater. 8. All public vices, are not only crimes, but rules of error; for they are precedents of evil. 9. Toyish airs, please trivial ears; they kiss the fancy, and then betray it. 10. Oh! what bitter pills men swallow, to purchase one false good.

Aside the devil turn'd,
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign,
Ey'd them askance, and to himself thus plain'd:
Sight hateful, sight tormenting! thus these two,
Inparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss: while I to hell am thrust,
Where neither joy nor love, but fierce desire,
Among our other torments, not the least,
Still unfulfilled, with pain of longing pines.

Learning is an addition beyond
Nobility of birth: honor of blood,
Without the ornament of knowledge, is
A glorious ignorance.

Self-love never yet could look on Truth,
But with hear'd beams; sleek Flattery and she
Are twin-born sisters, and so mix their eyes,
As if you sever one, the other dies.

FEAR, CAUTION.

184. FEAR is a powerful emotion, excited by expectation of some evil, or apprehension of impending danger; it expresses less apprehension than dread, and thus less than terror or fright: it excites us to provide for our security on the approach of evil; sometimes settles into deep anxiety, or solicitude:

it may be either filial in the good, or slavish in the wicked. See the engraving for its external appearance, and also Terror or Fright.

Now, all is hush'd—and still, as death!
How reverend is this tall pile,
Whose ancient pillars rear their marble heads,
To bear aloft its arch'd and ponderous roof,
By its own weight made steafast and immovable,
Looking—tranquillity! it strikes an awe,
And terror on my aching sight. [cold,
The tombs, and monumental caves of death, look
And shoot a chillness to my trembling heart.
Give me thy hand, and let me hear thy voice;
Nay, quickly speak to me, and let me hear
Thy voice—my own affrights me with its echoes.
'Tis night! the season when the happy—take Repose, and only wiches are awake;
Now, discontented ghosts begin their rounds,
Haunt ruin'd buildings and unwholesome grounds.
First, Fear—his hand its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewilder'd laid;
And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.

A sudden trembling—seized on all his limbs,
His eyes distorted grew, his visage—pale;
His speech forsook him!
Full fast he flies, and dares not look behind him;
Till, out of breath, he overtakes his fellows,
Who gather round, and wonder at the lots of horrid apparitions.
Come, old sir,—here's the place—stand still;
How fearful 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs, th't wing the midway air,
Show scarce so gross as beetles. Half way down,
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than one's head;
The fishermen th't walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice, and you tall anchoring bark,
Seems lessen'd to a skiff;—her skiff a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring surge,
That on unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. I'll look no more,
Lest my brain turn, and the disorder make me
Tumble down headlong.

Anecdote. A nobleman, traveling in Scotland, was asked for alms, in Edinburgh, by a little ragged boy. He told him he had no change; upon which the boy offered to procure it. His lordship finally gave him a piece of silver, which the boy conceiving was to be changed, went for that purpose; but, on his return, not finding his benefactor, he watched several days; at length the gentleman passed that way; when the boy accosted him, and gave him all the change, counting it with great exactness. The nobleman was so pleased with the boy's honesty, that he placed him at school, with the assurance of providing for him afterwards; which he did, and that boy became an ornament to humanity.

Etiquette of Stairs. In showing a visitor—up or down stairs, always precede him, or her: there is a common error upon this subject, which ought to be corrected. Some persons will suffer you to precede them; even when they hold the light. Gentlemen should always precede ladies, up and down stairs.

Etiquette of Riding. The gentleman should keep the lady on the right hand, that she may the more conveniently converse with him, and he may the more readily assist her, in case of accident.

Varieties. 1. When you have bought one fine thing, you must buy ten more; so that your appearance may all be of a piece. 2. Miraculous evidence, is inefficacious for producing any real, or permanent change in one's confirmed religious sentiments; and this is the reason, that no more of the Scribes and Pharisees of old, embraced the christian religion. 3. The great secret, by which happiness is to be realized, is to be contented with our lot, and yet strive to make it better, by abstaining from everything that is evil. 4. Every one is responsible for his own acts: all must be judged according to their deeds. 5. Is it not much easier to blame, than to avoid blame? 6. What is the difference between good and evil? 7. What makes us so discontented with our condition, is the false and exaggerated estimate, we form of the happiness of others. 8. It is much easier to plunge into extravagance, than to reduce our expenses; this is pre-eminently true of nations, as well as individuals. 9. Be decisive, or mild, according to circumstances. 10. Suit your conduct to the occasion.

As flame ascends,
As bodies to their proper centre move,
As the pois'd ocean to the attracting moon
Obedient swells, and every headlong stream
Devolves its winding waters to the main,
So all things which have life aspire to God,
The sun of being, boundless, unimpair'd,
Centre of souls.

Nature
Never did bring forth a man without a man;
Nor could the first man, being but
The passive subject, not the active mover,
Be the maker of himself; so of necessity,
There must be a power superior to nature.

Spare not, nor spend too much; be this your care—
Spare—but to spend, and only spend to spare.

SIMPLE LAUGHTER.

485. RAILLERY—may signify a bantering, a prompting to the use of jesting language; good humored pleasantry, or slight satire; satirical merriment, wit, irony, burlesque. It is very difficult indeed, to mark the precise boundaries of the different passions, as some of them are so slightly touch'd, and often melt into each other; but because we cannot perfectly delineate every shade of sound and passion, is no reason why we should not attempt approaches to it.

486. RAILLERY, without animosity, puts on the aspect of cheerfulness; the countenance smiling, and the tone of voice sprightly.

Let me play the fool

With mirth and laughter; so let the wrinkles come,
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice,
By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio,
(I love thee, and it is my love that speaks,)
There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond,
And do a willful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit,
As, who should say, I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips, let no dog bark!
I'll tell thee more of this another time;
But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion.
Come, good Lorenzo, fare-ye-well a while,
I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

487. Miscellaneous. 1. It is impossible, to estimate, even an inconsiderable effort to promote right education. 2. It is said, that a stone, thrown into the sea, agitates every drop of water in that vast expanse; so it may be, in regard to the influence we exert on the minds of the young. 3. Who can tell, what may be the effect of a single good principle, deeply fixed in the mind; a single pure and virtuous association strongly riveted, or a single happy turn given to the thoughts and affections of youth? It may spread a salutary and sacred influence over the whole life, and thro' the whole mass of the child's character. Nay more; as the character of others, who are to come after him, may, and probably will depend much on his, the impulse we give cannot cease in him, who first received it, it will go down from one generation to another, widening and deepening, and reaching forth with various modifications, till the track of its agency shall exceed human sight and calculation.

Anecdote. The duke of Orleans, on being appointed regent of France, insisted on the power of pardoning: "I have no objection," said he, "to have my hands tied from doing harm; but I will have them free to do good."

Truth. Truth will ever be unpalatable to those, who are determined not to relinquish error, but can never give offence to the honest and well-meaning: for the plain-dealing remonstrances of a friend—differs as widely from the rancor of an enemy, as the friendly probe of a surgeon—from the dagger of an assassin.

Varieties. 1. Envy is blind to all good; and the ruling passion of the envious is, to detract from the virtues of others. 2. A good person will have no desire to influence others, any further than they can see that his course is right. 3. Good fortune, however long continued, is no pledge of future security. 4. Cases often occur, when a prudent and dignified confession, or acknowledgment of error, gives to the person making it, a decided advantage over his adversary. 5. Agitation is to the moral and mental world, what storms are to the physical world; what winds are to the ocean, what exercise is to the body. 6. Truth can never die; she is immortal, like her Author. 7. There are a great many fools in the world: he who would avoid seeing one, must lock himself up alone, and break his looking glass. 8. What we do ourselves—is generally more satisfactorily done, than what is done by others. 9. Such is the state of the world, at present, that whoever wishes to purchase anything, must beware. 10. The opposite of the heavenly virtues and principles, are the principles of hell.

A fool, a fool, I met a fool i'th'forest,
A motley fool, a miserable varlet;
As I do live by food, I met a fool,
Who laid him down, and bask'd him in the sun,
And rail'd on lady Fortune in good terms;
In good set terms, and yet a motley fool;
Good morrow, fool, quoth I; No, sir, quoth he,
Call me not fool, till heav'n hath sent me fortune;
And then he drew a dial from his pocket,
And looking on it, with lack-lustre eye,
Says, very wisely, It is ten o'clock;
Thus may we see, quoth he, how the world wags:
'Tis but an hour ago since it was nine,
And after one hour more 'twill be eleven,
And so from hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
And then from hour to hour we rot and rot,
And thereby hangs a tale. When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative:
And I did laugh suns intermission
An hour by his dial. O noble fool!
A worthy fool! motley's the only wear

HORROR.

488. HORROR—is an excessive degree of fear, or a painful emotion, which makes a person tremble; it is generally composed of fear and hatred, or disgust; the recital of a bloody deed fills one with horror; there are the horrors of war, and the horrors of famine, horrible places and horrible dreams; the ascension seems to be as follows, the fearful and dreadful, (affecting the mind more than the body,) the frightful, the tremendous, terrible and horrible: the fearful wave; the dreadful day; frightful convulsions; tremendous storms; terrific glare of the eyes; a horrid murder.

Hark!—the death-denouncing trumpet—sounds
The fatal charge, and shouts proclaim the onset.
Destruction—rushes dreadful to the field,
And bathes itself in blood. Hævoe let loose,
Now undistinguished—rages all around;
While ruin, seated on her dreary throne,
Sees the plain strew'd with subjects, truly hers,
Breathless and cold!

489. PLOTTING CRUELTY AND HORROR! Macbeth's soliloquy before murdering Duncan. (Starting.) "Is this a dagger, which I see before me?" (Courage.) "The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:" (Wonder.) "I have thee not; and yet I see thee still." (Horror.) "Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible to feeling—as to sight? or art thou but a dagger of the mind? a false creation, proceeding from the heat-oppress'd brain?" (Eyes staring, and fixed to one point.) "I see thee yet, in form as palpable as that which now I draw." (Here draws his own, and compares them.) "Thou shalt lead me the way that I was going; and such an instrument I was to use. Mine eyes are made the fools of the other senses, or else worth all the rest: I see thee still; and on thy blade and dudgeon, gouts of blood, which was not so before." (Doubting.) "There's no such thing." (Horror.) "It is the bloody business, which informs thus to mine eyes. Now, o'er one-half the world, nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse the curtain'd sleep; now witchcraft—celebrates pale Hecate's offerings; and wither'd murder, alarmed by his sentinel, the wolf, whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace, towards his design—moves like a ghost. Thou sound and firm-set earth, hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear the very stones prate of my whereabouts, and take the present horror from the time, which now suits with it. While I threat, he lives—I go, and it is done; the bell invites me. (A bell rings.) Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell, that summons thee to heaven, or to hell."

Music! oh! how faint, how weak!

LANGUAGE—fades before thy spell;

Why should feeling—ever speak,

When thou canst breathe her soul—so well.

Woman's Love. As the dove will clasp its wings to its side, and cover and conceal the arrow, that is preying on its vitals, so is the nature of woman, to hide from the world the pangs of wounded affection.

Anecdote. Swearing nobly Reproved. Prince Henry, son of James II., had a particular aversion to the vice of swearing, and profanation of the name of God. When at play, he was never known to use bad words; and on being asked the reason, why he did not swear, as well as others, answered, that he knew no game worthy of an oath. The same answer he gave at a hunting match, when the almost spent stag was killed by a butcher's dog, that was passing along the road; the huntsmen tried to irritate the prince against the butcher, but without succeeding. His highness answered coolly, "True, the dog killed the stag, but the butcher could not help it." They replied, that if his father had been served so, he would have sworn so, as no one could have endured it. "Away," said the prince, "all the pleasure in the world is not worth an oath."

Varieties. 1. A selfish person is never contented, unless he have every thing his own way, and have the best place, and be put first in every thing; of course, he is generally unhappy. 2. The mind of man is, of itself, opaque; the Divine mind alone, is luminous. He is the light of both worlds, the natural and spiritual. 3. Is it not better to remain in a state of error, than to understand something of a truth, and then reject it, because we do not understand it fully? 4. Guilt was never a rational thing; it disturbs and perverts the faculties of the mind, and leaves one no longer the use of his reason. 5. All evils, in their very nature, are contagious, like the plague; because of the propensity to evil, into which every one is born; therefore, keep out of the infected sphere as much as possible. 6. Is the eye tired with beautiful objects, or the ear with melodious sounds? Love duty, then, and performance will be delightful. 7. Seek only good; thus, pleasure comes unsought.

When twilight dews are falling fast,

Upon the rosy sea;

I watch that star whose beam so oft

Has lighted me to thee;

And thou, too, on that orb so dear,

Ah! dost thou gaze at ev'n,

And think, tho' lost forever here,

Thou'lt yet be mine in heav'n!

There's not a garden walk I tread,

There's not a flower I see;

But brings to mind some hope that's fled,

Some joy I've lost with thee;

And still I wish that hour was near,

When, friends and foes forgiven,

The pains, the ills we've wept thro' here,

May turn to smiles in heaven!

He help'd to bury, whom he help'd to starve.

WEEPING.

490. WEEPING—is the expression, or manifestation, of sorrow, grief, anguish or joy, by out-cry, or by shedding tears; a lamentation, bewailing, bemoaning; we may weep each other's woe, or weep tears of joy; so may the rich groves weep odorous gum and balm; there is weeping amber, and weeping grounds: crying—is an audible expression, accompanied, or not, with tears; but weeping always indicates the shedding of tears; and, when called forth by the sorrows of others, especially, it is an infirmity of which no man would be destitute.

491. Whither shall I return? Wretch that I am! to what place shall I betake myself? Shall I go to the capital? Alas! it is overflow'd with my brother's blood! or, shall I return to my house? yet there, I behold my mother—plunged in misery, weeping and despairing. 2. I am robbed! I am ruined! O my money! my guineas! my support! my all is gone! Oh! who has robbed me? who has got my money? where is the thief? A thousand guineas of gold! hoo, hoo, hoo, hoo! 3. I cannot speak—and I could wish you would not oblige me,—it is the only service I ever refused you: and tho' I cannot give a reason why I could not speak, yet I hope you will excuse me without reason.

Had it pleased heaven

To try me with affliction; had it rained
All kinds of sores and shames on my bare head;
Steeped me in poverty to the very lips;
Given to captivity, me and my utmost hopes;
I should have found in some part of my soul
A drop of patience; but, alas! to make me
A fixed figure, for the hand of scorn
To point his slow unmoving finger at—
Oh—

I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are; the want of which vain dew,
Perchance shall dry your pities; but I have
That honorable grief lodged here, which burns
Worse than tears down.

Why tell you me of moderation?

The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth in a sense as strong [it?
As that which causeth it: How can I moderate
If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief;
My love admits no qualifying dross:
No more my grief, in such a precious loss.
When our souls shall leave this dwelling,
The glory of one fair and virtuous action
Is above all the scutcheons on our tomb,
Or silken banners over us.

Historians. We find but few historians of all ages, who have been diligent enough in their search for truth; it is their common method, to take on trust, what they distribute to the public; by which means, a falsehood, once received from a famed writer, becomes traditional to posterity.

Anecdote. Washington and his Mother. Young George was about to go to sea, as a midshipman; every thing was arranged, the vessel lay out opposite his father's house, the little boat had come on shore to take him off, and his whole heart was bent on going. After his trunk had been carried down to the boat, he went to bid his mother farewell, and he saw the tear bursting from her eye. However, she said nothing to him; but he saw that his mother would be dressed if he went, and perhaps never be happy again. He just turned round to the servant and said, "Go and tell them to fetch my trunk back; I will not go away, to break my mother's heart." His mother was struck with his decision, and she said to him, "George, God has promised to bless the children, that honor their parents, and I believe he will bless you."

Varieties. 1. Timotheus—an ancient teacher of oratory, always demanded a double fee from those pupils, who had been taught by others; for, in this case, he had not only to plant, but to root out. 2. He, that shortens the road to knowledge, lengthens life. 3. Never buy, or read bad books; for they are the worst of thieves; because they rob you of your money, your time, and your principles. 4. Theocracy—is a government by God himself; as, the government of the Jews; democracy—is a government of the people. 5. Without the intenseness and passion of study, nothing great ever was, or ever will be accomplished. 6. Who can tell where each of the natural families begins, or where it ends? 7. To overcome a bad habit, one must be conscious of it; as well as know how to accomplish the object. 8. The best defenders of liberty do not generally vociferate loudly in its praise. 9. Domestic feuds can be appeased only by mutual kindness and forbearance. 10. Volumes of arguments avail nothing against resolute determination; for convince a man against his will, and he is of the same opinion still.

When William wrote his lady, to declare,
That he was wedded to a fairer fair,
Poor Lucy shrieked, "to lift, to all adieu!"
She tore the letter,—and her raven hair,
She beat her bosom, and the post-boy too;
Then wildly—to the window flew,
And threw herself—into a chair.

All is silent—'twas my fancy!

Still as the breathless interval between
The flash and thunder.

Who never fasts, no banquet e'er enjoys.

Who never toils or atches, never sleeps.

SIMPLE BODILY PAIN.

492. PAIN

may be either bodily, or mental; simple, or acute. Bodily pain, is an uneasy sensation in the body, of any degree from that which is slight, to extreme torture; it may proceed from pressure, tension, separation of parts by violence, or derangement of the functions; mental pain—is uneasiness of mind; inquietude; anxiety; solicitude for the future; grief or sorrow for the past; thus we suffer pain, when we fear, or expect evil; and we feel pain at the loss of friends, or property. Pain, and the like affections, indicate a pressure or straining.

The play of pain
Shoots o'er his features, as the sudden gust
Crisps the reluctant lake, that lay so calm
Beneath the mountain shadow; or the blast
Ruffles the autumn leaves, that, drooping, cling
Faintly, and motionless to their lov'd boughs.

What avails [pain],
Valor or strength, though matchless, quelled with
Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands
Of mightiest? Sense of pleasure we may well
Spare out of life, perhaps, and not repine;
But live content, which is the calmest life;
But pain is perfect misery, the worst
Of evils! and, excessive, overturns
All patience.

And not a virtue in the bosom lives
That gives such ready pay as patience gives;
That pure submission to the ruling mind,
Fixed, but not forced; obedient, but not blind;
The will of heaven to make her own she tries,
Or makes her own to heaven a sacrifice.

The dream of the injured patient mind,
That smiles at the wrongs of men,
Is found in the bruised and wounded hind
Of the cinnamon, sweetest then!

Anecdote. The Philosopher Outdone. A learned philosopher, being in his study, a little girl came for some fire. Says the doctor, "But you have nothing to take it in;" and as he was going to fetch something, the girl, taking some cold ashes in one hand, put the live coals on with the other. The astonished sage threw down his books, saying, "With all my learning, I should never have found out that expedient."

Soon shall thy arm, unconquered steam ' afar
Drag the slow barge, or drive the rapid car;
Or, on wide-waving wings expanded, bear
The flying chariot—through the fields of air.

The brave—do never shun the light;
Just are their thoughts, and open are their tempers;
Truly, without disquiet, they love, or hate;
Still are they found—in the fair face of day;
And heaven—and men—are judges of their actions.

Proverbs. 1. The true economy of everything is—to gather up the fragments of time, as well as of materials. 2. The earlier children are taught to be useful, the better; not only for themselves, but for all others. 3. Consider that day as lost, in which something has not been done for the benefit of others, as well as for yourself. 4. False pride, or foolish ambition, should never induce us to live beyond our income. 5. To associate with influential and gentle people, with an appearance of equality, has its advantages; especially, where there are sons or daughters just entering on the stage of action; but, like all other external advantages, they have their proper price, and may be bought too dearly; "never pay too much for the whistle." 6. Never let the cheapness of an article tempt you to purchase it, if you do not really need it; for nothing is cheap, that we do not want. 7. Vanity and pride must yield to the dictates of honesty and prudence.

Miscellaneous. Great Britain—has dotted over the surface of the globe, with her possessions and military posts; and her morning drum-beat, following the sun, and keeping company with the hours, circle the earth daily, with one unbroken strain of the martial airs of England. The steam-engine is on the rivers, and the boatman may rest upon his oars; it is in the highways, and begins to exert itself along the courses of land-conveyances; it is at the bottom of mines, a thousand feet below the surface of the earth; it is in the mill and in the workshop of the truders; it rows, it pumps, it excavates, it ploughs, it carries, it draws, it lifts, it hammers, it spins, it weaves, it prints; and seems to say to artisans, Leave your manual labor, give over your bodily toil, use your skill and reason to direct my power, and I will bear toil, with no muscle to grow weary, no nerve to relax, no breast to feel faintness.

VARIETIES.

Cease, mourners; cease complaint and weep no
Your friends are not dead, but gone before; [more;
Advanced a stage or two—upon the road,
Which you must travel in the steps they trode.

True valor, friends, on virtue founded strong,
Meets all events alike.

Preach patience to the sea, when jarring winds,
Throw up the swelling billow to the sky;
And if your reason mitigate her fury,
My soul will be as calm.

Contention, like a horse,
Full of high feeding, madly hath broken loose,
And bears down all before him.

The day shall come, that great avenging day,
When Troy's proud glories in the dust shall lay
Send thy arrows forth,
Strike! strike the tyrants, and avenge my tears.

Slander, that worst of poisons, ever finds
An easy entrance to ignoble minds.

Other sins—only speak—murder—shrieks out.
The element of water—moistens the earth;
But blood—flies upward, and bedews the heavens

ACUTE PAIN,

493. Bodily, or mental, signifies a high degree of pain, which may appropriately be called AGONY, or ANGUISH; the agony is a severe and permanent pain; the anguish an overwhelming pain: a pang—is a sharp pain, and generally of short continuance: the pangs of conscience frequently trouble the person who is not hardened in guilt; and the pangs of disappointed love are among the severest to be borne: "What pangs the tender breast of Dido tear!" COMPLAINING—(as when one is under violent pain,) distorts the features, almost closes the eyes; sometimes raises them wistfully; opens the mouth, gnashes the teeth, draws up the upper lip, draws down the head upon the breast, and contracts the whole body: the arms are violently bent at the elbows, and the fists clenched, the voice is uttered in groans, lamentations, and sometimes in violent screams: extreme torture producing fainting and death.

Oh, rid me of this torture, quickly there,
My madam, with thy everlasting voice.
The bells, in time of pestilence, ne'er made
Like noise, or were in that perpetual motion.

All my house, [breath:]
But now, screamed like a bath, with her thick
A lawyer could not have been heard, nor scarce,
Another woman, such hail of words she let fall.

2. What! the rogue who robbed me! do hang him, drown him, burn him, flay him alive. 3. Hold your tongue, we don't want to hear your nonsense about eating; hold your tongue, and answer the questions, which the justice is going put to you, about the money
I lost, and which I suppose you have taken.

Hide not thy tears: weep boldly—and be proud
To give the flowing virtue manly way.
'Tis nature's mark, to know an honest heart by.
Shame on those breasts of stone, that cannot melt,
In soft adoption of another's sorrow!

O, who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By a bare imagination of a feast?
Or wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat
O, no! the apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse:
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more,
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

Anecdote. A rich Campanian lady, fond of pomp and show, being on a visit to Cornelia,
the illustrious mother of the Gracchi, displayed her jewels and diamonds ostentatiously, and requested that Cornelia should show her jewels. Cornelia turned the conversation to another subject, till her sons should return from the public schools; and when they had entered their mother's apartment,

she, pointing to them, said to the lady,
"These are my jewels; the only ornaments
I admire."

Laconics. 1. If we complained less, and tried to encourage and help each other more, we should find all our duties more easily performed.
2. Happiness—consists in the delight of performing uses for the sake of uses: that is, doing good for the sake of good, instead of the love of reward, which is a selfish feeling: all selfish feelings produce unhappiness in the degree they are entertained. 3. If we would be happy, we must put away, as far as we can, those thoughts and feelings, that have reference to self alone, and cultivate the higher ones, that have reference to the good of others, as well as ourselves. 4. To do good, for the sake of delight in doing good, is a selfish motive; but to do good to others, for the sake of making them happy, and, in doing it, forget ourselves, is a heavenly motive. 5. If we would act from right motives, we must endeavor to put away every feeling, that is purely selfish; in doing which, every effort will give us strength, like the repeated efforts of a child, in learning to walk. 6. Parents should keep their children from every association that may tend to their injury, either in precept or practice. 7. Love is omnipotent.

Varieties. 1. That profusion of language, and poverty of thought, which is called being spontaneous, and original, is no proof of simplicity of heart, or freedom of understanding; there is more paper than gold, more words than ideas, in this "careless wealth." 2. Combined with goodness and truth, ORATORY is one of the most glorious distinctions of man; it is a power, that influences all: it elevates the affections and thoughts to enthusiasm; and animates us in joy, and soothes us in sorrow; instructs, guides, and persuades us. 3. To resolve a proposition into its simplest elements, we must reason a posteriori; by observing the relation of sequences, we are enabled to supply antecedents, involving the same relation;
thus, amounting to the simplest state of a proposition.

What nothing earthly gives, or, can destroy,
The soul's calm sunshine. and the heartfelt joy,
Is VIRTUE's prize.

The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul, with hooks of steel.

Mind,—can raise,
From its unseen conceptions, where they lie,
Bright in their mine, forms, hues, that look Eternity.

Is it the language of some other state,
Born of its memory? For what—can wake
The soul's strong instinct—of another world,
Like music?

Without good company, all dainties
Lose their true relish, and like painted grapes,
Are only seen, not tasted.

ADMIRATION.

494. A mixed passion, consisting of wonder, mingled with pleasing emotions; as veneration, love, esteem, takes away the familiar gesture and expression of simple love: it is a compound passion, excited by something novel, rare, great, or excellent, either of persons or their works: thus we view the solar system with admiration. It keeps the respectful look and attitude; the eyes are wide open, and now and then raised towards heaven; the mouth is open; the hands lifted up; the tone of voice rapturous; speaks copiously and in hyperboles. Admiration — is looking at any thing attentively with appreciation; the admirer suspends his thoughts, not from the vacancy, but from the fullness of his mind: he is riveted to an object, which temporarily absorbs his faculties: nothing but what is good and great, excites admiration; and none but cultivated minds are very susceptible of it; an ignorant person cannot admire: because he does not appreciate the value of the thing: the form and use must be seen at any rate.

How beautiful the world is! The green earth, covered with flowers—the trees, laden with rich blossoms—the blue sky and the bright water, and the golden sunshine. The world is, indeed, beautiful; and He, who made it, must be beautiful.

It is a happy world. Hark! how the merry birds sing—and the young lambs—see! how they gambol on the hill-side. Even the trees wave, and the brooks ripple, in gladness. You eagle!—ah! how joyously he soars up to the glorious heavens—the bird of America.

“His throne—is on the mountain-top;
His fields—the boundless air;
And hoary peaks, that proudly prop
The skies—his dwellings are.
He rises, like a thing of light,
Amid the noontide blaze:
The midway sun—is clear and bright;
It cannot dim his gaze.”

It is happy—I see it, and hear it all about me—nay, I feel it here, in the glow, the eloquent glow of my own heart. He who made it, must be happy.

It is a great world! Look off to the mighty ocean, when the storm is upon it; to the huge mountain, when the thunder and the lightnings play over it; to the vast forest, the interminable waste; the sun, the moon, and the myriads of fair stars, countless as the sands upon the sea-shore. It is a great, a magnificent world,—and He, who made it, oh! He is the perfection of all loveliness, all goodness, all greatness, all glory.

How this grace

Speaks his own standing! what a mental power
This eye shoots forth! how big imagination
Moves in this lip! to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.

Old men and beldames, in the streets,
Do prophecy upon it dangerously;
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths;
And when they talk of him they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist;
Whilst he that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkl'd brows, with nods, with rolling eyes
I saw a smith stand with his hammer thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth, swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had safely thrust upon contrary feet,)
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattled and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

Anecdote. It was so natural for Dr. Watts to *spea*k in rhyme, that even at the very time he wished to *avoi*d it, he could not. His father was displeased at this propensity, and threatened to whip him, if he did not leave off making verses. One day, when he was about to put his threat in execution, the child burst into tears, and on his knees, said:

Pray father, do, some pity take,
And I will no more verses make.

Varieties. 1. What is a better security against *calun*nny, and reproach, than a good conscience? 2. What we commence—from the impulse of virtue, we too often continue from the spur of ambition; avarice, herself, is the offspring of independence and virtue. 3. Wealth, suddenly acquired, will rarely abide; nothing but quiet, consistent industry, can render any people prosperous and happy. 4. Did you ever think seriously of the design, and uses of the thumb? 5. Music, in practice, may be called the gymnastics of the affections. 6. The difference between honor, and honesty—seems to be principally in the motive; as the honest man does that from love and duty, which the man of honor does, for the sake of character. 7. If there be any thing, which makes one ridiculous, to beings of superior faculties, it must be pride. 8. As is the mother, so is the daughter; think of this O ye mothers, and *impro*ve.

The rich are wise:

He that upon his back rich garments wears,
Is wise, though on his head grow Midas' ears:
Gold is the strength, the sinews of the world;
The health, the soul, the beauty most divine;
A mask of gold hides all deformities;
Gold is heav'n's physic, life's restorative.

O credulity,

Thou hast as many ears, as fame—has tongues,
Opened—to every sound of truth, as falsehood.

ADMIRATION AND ASTONISHMENT,

495. Implies confusion, arising from surprise, &c. at an extraordinary, or unexpected event: astonishment signifies to strike with the overpowering voice of thunder; we are surprised if that does, or does not happen, which we did, or did not expect; astonishment may be awakened by similar events, which are more unexpected, and more unaccountable: thus, we are astonished to find a friend at our house, when we supposed he was hundreds of miles distant; or to hear that a person has traveled a road, or crossed a stream, that we thought impassable.

These are thy glorious works, Parent of good,
Almighty! thine this universal frame, [then!
Thus wondrous fair! Thyself, how wondrous,
Unspeakable! who sitt'st above these heavens,
To us—invisible, or dimly seen

In these thy lowest works: yet these declare
Thy goodness, beyond thought, and power divine.

See, what a grace was seated on this brow!
Hyperion curls; the front of Jove himself:
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station, like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.
A combination, and a form indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man.

What find I here?

Fair Portia's counterfeit? What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move their eyes?
Or, whether riding on the ball of mine,
Seem they are in motion? Here are sever'd lips,
Parted with sugar breath: so sweet a bar [hairs,
Should sunder such sweet friends: Here, in her
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to entrap the hearts of men,
Faster than gnats in cobwebs.—But her eyes!
How could he see to do them! having made one,
Methinks it should have power to steal both his,
And leave itself unfinished.

Anecdote. While Thucydides was yet a boy, he heard Herodotus recite his histories, at the olympic games, and is said to have wept exceedingly. The “Father of Historians,” observing how much the boy was moved, congratulated his father, on having a child of such promise, and advised him to spare no pains in his education. Thucydides became one of the best historians of Greece.

Wise legislators never yet could draw
A fox within the reach of common law;
For posture, dress, grimace, and affectation,
Though foes to sense, are harmless to the nation;
Our last redress is dint of verse to try,
And satire is our Court of Chancery.

Maxims. 1. Never consider the opinions of others in a matter that does not concern them. 2. It is of but little use to argue a point with one, whose mind is made up on the subject. 3. Beware of objections, founded on wrong ideas. 4. A woman's conclusions are generally proof against the most eloquent reasonings. 5. Look within, instead of without, for the true criterion of action, and be manly and independent. 6. Let the square and rule of life be—Is it right? 7. Be cautious in yielding your better judgment to the wishes of others. 8. We generally err, in undertaking—what we do not understand. 9. They will surely be wise, who profit by experience. 10. A clear head—makes sure work.

Temperance. Happy are they that have made their escape from the drinking custom of the world, and enrolled their names amongst the friends of Temperance; for, by so doing, they have most probably escaped from an early death. Death, not only of the body, but of the soul, for the habit of intoxication is calculated to destroy both.

Varieties. 1. When once you profess yourself a friend, be always such. 2. Blame not, before you have examined: understand, then rebuke. 3. Some people will never learn anything; for this reason, they understand everything too soon. 4. Who can calculate the importance of learning to say, No. 5. By following the order of Providence, and obeying the laws of life and being, we shall not become fatigued. 6. Abstraction, is the power, which the understanding has, of separating the combinations, which are presented to it; it is also called the power of considering qualities, or attributes of one object, apart from the rest. 7. There is a Providence in the least of man's thoughts and actions; yea, in all his common and trifling concerns.

Words are like leaves; and where they most abound
Much fruit of sense beneath, is rarely found. [found
False eloquence—like the prismatic glass,
Its gaudy colors spreads on every place:
The face of Nature—we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay:
But true expression, whate'er it shines upon,
It gilds all objects, but it alters—none.
Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent—as more suitable.

A just man cannot fear;
Not, though the malice of traducing tongues
The open vastness of a tyrant's ear,
The senseless rigor of the wrested laws,
Or the red eyes of strain'd authority,
Should, in a point, meet all to take his life:
His innocence is armor 'gainst all these.

Music so softens and disarms the mind,
That not an arrow does resistance find;
Thus the fair tyrant celebrates the prize,
And acts herself the triumph of her eyes;
So Nero once, with harp in hand, survey'd
His flaming Rome, and as it burn'd, he play'd.

496. THE MINOR, AND SOME OF THE MAJOR PASSIONS. The following common expressions are full of meaning: such judgments are passed every day, concerning different individuals; "You might have seen it in his eyes:" the looks of the man is enough; he has an honest countenance: his manner sets every one at his ease; I will trust him for his honest face; should he deceive me, I will never trust any body again; he cannot look a person in the face; his appearance is against him; he is better (or worse,) than I look him to be."

497. ADMONITION—assumes a grave air bordering on severity; the head is sometimes shaken at the person we admonish, as if we felt for the miseries he was likely to bring upon himself; the hand is directed to the person spoken to, and the fore-finger, projected from the rest, seems to point more particularly to the danger we give warning of; the voice assumes a low pitch, bordering on a monotone, with a mixture of severity and sympathy of pity, and reproach.

MISCELLANEOUS. 1. The habituating children to work for, and serve the poor, particularly poor children, with a good will, may justly be regarded, as tending to promote the reception of the highest order and quality of heavenly virtue. 2. It is not in knowing the will of God, but in doing it, that we shall be blessed. 3. The noblest aspect in which the divine majesty of the Lord can be viewed, is that, in which he presented himself, when he said, that he "came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister;" and how great a privilege ought we to esteem it to be, to follow his example. 4. What a pity it is, that parents and teachers are not more anxious to mend the heart, than furnish the heads of their children and pupils! 5. Charity is something more than a word, or wish; it is the consistent practice of true wisdom.

'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
Another thing—to fall. I not deny—
The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May, on the sworn twelve, have a thief or two,
Guiltier than him they try; what's open made
To justice, that it seizes on. What know I nant,
The laws, that thieves do pass on thieves? 'tis preg-
The ford that we find, we stoop and tak't
Because we see it; but what we do not see,
We tres upon, and never think of it.
You may not so extenuate his offence,
For I have had such faults; but rather tell me
When I, that censure him, do not so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. He must die.

Maxims. 1. If a person feels wrong, he will be very sure to judge wrong, and thence do wrong. 2. Passions strong, judgment wrong, all the world over. 3. Always do the very best you can, and then you'll be a wise man. 4. Children should be encouraged to do, whatever they wonder undertake, in the very best manner. 5. He who aims low, can never hit exalted objects; and he who is accustomed to do the best he can, in lower things, will be best prepared to attain excellence in the highest. 6. Children should never be allowed to fall into habits of disorder in anything; nor permitted to put things out of order, or make work for others. 7. Of goods, prefer the greatest; of evils choose the least. 8. Children are always more attracted and interested by oral instruction, than by book instruction.

Anecdote. A Quaker—was waited on by four of his workmen, to make their compliments to him, and ask for their usual New-year's gifts. The Quaker told them, There are your gifts,—choose fifteen frances, or the Bible. All took the frances, but a lad, about fourteen, who chose the Bible, as the Quaker said it was a good book; and, on opening it he found, between the leaves, a gold piece of forty frances. The others held down their heads, and the giver told them, he was sorry they had not made a better choice.

Varieties. 1. We cannot be truly just, without prudence, or truly prudent, without justice; because prudence leads us to inquire what is just; and justice alone can prevent that perversion of intellect taking place, which often passes for prudence, but is only cunning, the offspring of selfishness. 2. Temperance signifies the right use of the right things, furnished by nature for our enjoyment, so that they may not injure, but benefit us; and instead of unfitting us for our duties, dispose and fit us for their performance. 3. He, who is not temperate, is a slave to his appetites and passions; the slave of drinking, gluttony and lust; of pride, vanity and ambition; because he is not at liberty to be, what he was created to be.

The prophet spoke: when, with a gloomy frown,
The monarch started—from his shining throne;
Black choler filled his breast, that loil'd with tre,
And, from his eyeballs, flashed the living fire.

Of beasts, it is confessed the ape—
Comes nearest us—in human shape;
Like man, he imitates each feature;
And malice—is his ruling passion.

I hate, when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue—has no tongue, to check her pride.

But not to me return
Day, or the sweet approach of even and morn,
But cloud instead, and ever-during dark
Surrounds me.

If sweet content is banished from my soul,
Life grows a burden, and a weight of woe.
Music—moves us, and we know not why;
We feel the tears, but cannot trace their source.

498. AFFIRMING. with a judicial oath, is expressed by lifting up the right hand and eyes towards heaven; if conscience be applied to, by laying the right hand upon the breast exactly upon the heart; the voice low and solemn. The words slow and deliberate; but when the affirmation is mixed with rage or resentment, the voice is more open and loud, the words quicker, and the countenance has all the confidence of a strong and peremptory assertion.

Notes. The Duke had reproached Lord Thurlow with his plebeian extraction and his recent admission to the peerage. He rose from the woolsack and advanced slowly to the place from which the chancellor addresses the house, then fixing his eye on the Duke (in the words of a spectator,) "with the look of Jove when he has grasped the thunder," spoke as follows:

My Lords—I am amazed; yes my Lords. I am amazed at his grace's speech. The noble duke cannot look before him, behind him, or on either side of him, without seeing some noble peer, who owes his seat in this house to his successful exertions, in the profession to which I belong. Does he not feel that it is as honorable, to owe it to these, as to being the accident of an accident? To all these noble lords, the language of the noble duke is as applicable, and as insulting, as it is to myself. But I don't fear to meet it single and alone. No one venerates the peerage more than I do—but my lords, I must say, that the peerage solicited me,—not I the peerage.

Nay more.—I can say, and will say, that as a peer of parliament,—as speaker of this right honorable house, as keeper of the great seal,—as guardian of his majesty's conscience,—as lord high chancellor of England—nay, even in that character alone, in which the noble duke would think it an affront to be considered—but which character none can deny me—as a MAN, I am, at this time, as much respected, as the proudest peer I now look down upon.

*A man of sovereign parts he is esteem'd!
Well fitted in the arts, glorious in arms;
Nothing becomes him ill, that he would well.
The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss,
(If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil.)
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will: [wills
Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will still
It should none spare that come within his power.*

Anecdote. Butler, Bishop of Durham, and author of the Analogy, being applied to for a charitable subscription, asked his steward what money he had in his house; the steward informed him there were five hundred pounds. "Five hundred pounds!" said the bishop; "what a shame for a bishop to have such a sum in his possession!" And he ordered it all to be given to the poor immediately.

*Bold with joy,
Forth from his lonely hiding-place,
(Portentous sight!) the owlet Atheism,
Sailing on obscure wings athwart the noon,
Drops his blue-fringed lids, and holds them close,
And, hooting at the glorious sun in heaven,
Cries out, "Where is it?"*

The world is still deceived by ornament.

Laconics. I have seen the flower—withering on the stalk, and its bright leaves—spread on the ground. I looked again; it sprung forth afresh; its stem was crowned with new buds, and its sweetness filled the air. I have seen the sun set in the west, and the shades of night shut in the wide horizon: there was no color or shape, nor beauty, nor music; gloom and darkness brooded around. I looked! the sun broke forth again upon the east, and gilded the mountain-tops; the lark rose—to meet him from her low nest, and the shades of darkness fled away. I have seen the insect, being come to its full size, languish, and refuse to eat: it spun itself a tomb, and was shrouded in the silken cane: it lay without feet, or shape, or power to move. I looked again: it had burst its tomb; it was full of life, and sailed on colored wings through the soft air; it rejoiced in its new being.

Varieties. 1. Many a young lady can chatter in French or Italian, thrum the piano, and paint a little, and yet be ignorant of housekeeping, and not know how even to make a loaf of bread, roast a piece of meat, or make a palatable soup. 2. It is a false idea to think of elevating woman to her right position of intelligence and influence in society, without making her thoroughly and practically acquainted with the details of domestic life. 3. It is wrong for either men or women, to bury themselves in their everyday avocation, to the neglect of intellectual and moral culture, and the social amenities of life: but it is still worse to give exclusive attention to the latter, and utterly neglect the former; because, in the former are involved our first and most important duties. 4. Neglected duties never bring happiness: even the best of society would fail to delight, if enjoyed at the expense of human duties. 5. That which is our duty should always take precedence: otherwise, no effort to obtain happiness can be successful.

*Still—let my song—a nobler note assume,
And sing the impressive force of SPRING on man:
Then, HEAVEN—and earth, as if contending,—vie
To raise his being,—and serene—his soul.
Can he forbear—to join—the general smile
Of NATURE? Can fierce passions—vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody?*

*The happiness—of human kind,
Consists—in rectitude of mind.—
A will—subdued to reason's sway,
And passions—practiced to obey:
An open—and a generous heart,
Refined from selfishness—and art;
Patience, which mocks—at fortune's power,
And wisdom—neither sad, nor sour.*

*Never forget our loves,—but always cling
To the fixed hope—that there will be a time,—
When we can meet—unfetter'd—and be blest—
With the full happiness—of certain love.*

*A villain, when he most seems kind,
Is most to be suspected.*

499. REVISION.

Having gone thro', briefly, with the major passions, and given illustrations of each, before dismissing these important subjects, it may be useful to present the minor ones; occasionally alluding to the principal ones. The accompanying engraving represents calm fortitude, discretion, benevolence, goodness, and nobility. Admiration may also be combined with amazement: surprise, (which signifies—taken on a sudden.) may, for a moment, startle: astonishment may stupefy, and cause an entire suspension of the faculties; but AMAZEMENT has also a mixture of perturbation; as the word means to be in a maze, so as not to be able to collect one's self: there is no mind that may not, at times, be thrown into amazement at the awful dispensations of Providence.

ADMONITION TO ACT JUSTLY.

Remember March, the ides of MARCH remember!
Did not great Julius—bleed for JUSTICE? sake?
What villain touch'd his body,—that did stab,
And not for justice?
What! shall one of us,
That struck the foremost man—of all this world,
But for supporting robbers, shall we—now—
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?
And sell the mighty space of our large honors,
For so much trash—as may be grasped thus?
I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman.

Anecdote. Ethelcold, bishop of Winchester, in king Edgar's time, sold the gold and silver vessels belonging to the church, to relieve the poor, during a famine, saying: "There is no reason, that the senseless temples of God, should abound in riches, while his living temples were perishing with hunger."

DOMESTIC LOVE AND HAPPINESS.

O happy they! the happiest of their kind!
Whom gentle stars unite, and in one fate
Their hearts, their fortunes, and their beings blend.
Tis not the coarser tie—of human laws,
Unnatural oft, and foreign to the mind,
That binds their peace, but harmony itself,
Attuning all their passions into love;
Where friendship—full, exerts her softest power,
Perfect esteem, enliven'd by desire
Ineffable, and sympathy of soul;
Thought, meeting thought, and will preventing will,
With boundless confidence: for nought but love
Can answer love, and render bliss secure.

Merit—seldom shows

Itself—bedecked in tinsel, or fine clothes;
But, hermit-like, 'tis oft'n'er us'd to fly,
And hide its beauties—in obscurity.

For places in the court, are but like beds—
In the hospital; where this man's head—lies
At that man's foot, and so, lower and lower.

Laconics. 1. The idle—often delay till to-morrow, what ought to be done to-day. 2. Science is the scribe, and theology the interpreter of God's works. 3. Regret is unavailing, when a debt is contracted; tho' a little prudence, might have prevented its being incurred. 4. A loud, or vehement mode of delivery, accompanied by a haughty action, may render an expression highly offensive; but which would be perfectly harmless, if pronounced properly. 5. Dishonesty chooses the most expeditious route; virtue the right one, though it be more circuitous. 6. Is the soul a mere vapor, a something without either essence or form? 7. Impressions, firmly fixed in the mind, and long cherished, are erased with great difficulty; how important, then, they should be good ones.

Dificulty—is a severe instructor, set over us by the supreme ordinance of a parental guardian and legislator, who knows us better than we know ourselves, and he loves us better too. He, that wrestles with us, strengthens our nerves, and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper. This amicable conflict with difficulty obliges us to an intimate acquaintance with our object, and compels us to consider it in all its relations. It will not suffer us to be superficial.

VARIETIES.

Sleep—seldom visits sorrow;
When it does, it is a comforter.

Why, on that brow, dwell sorrow and dismay,
Where loves were wont to sport, and smiles to play?"

With equal mind, what happens, let us hear,
Nor joy, nor grief too much, for things beyond our care.

Thus, my fleeting days, at last,
Unheeded, silently are passed,
Calmly—shall I resign my breath,
In life—unknown,—forgot—in death.

Love—never reasons, but profusely gives;
Gives, like a thoughtless prodigal, its all.
And trembles then, lest it has done too little.

Tho' all seems lost, 'tis impious—to despair;
The tracks of Providence—like rivers—wind.

Why shrinks the soul

Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
'Tis the Divinity—that stirs within us.

Still raise—for good—the supplicating voice,
But leave to HEAVEN the measure, and the choice;
Safe in His power, whose eye discerns afar
The secret ambush of a specious prayer.
Implore His aid; in His decisions rest;
Secure—whate'er He gives, he gives the best.
Yet, when the sense of sacred presence fires,
And strong devotion—to the skies—aspires,
Pour forth thy fervors—for a healthful mind,
Obedient passions, and a will resigned;
For love, which scarce collective man can fill;
For patience, sovereign o'er transmuted ill;
For faith, that, panting for a happier seat,
Counts death—kind nature's signal of retreat:
These goods—for man—the laws of heaven ordain,
These goods He grants, who grants the power to
With these celestial wisdom calms the mind. [gain,
And makes the happiness—she does not find.

Call it diversion. and the pill goes down.

500. Arguing requires a cool, sedate, attentive aspect, and a close, slow, and emphatical accent, with much demonstration by the hand; it assumes somewhat of authority, as if fully convinced of what it pleads for; and sometimes rises to great vehemence and energy of action: the voice clear, distinct, and firm as in confidence.

REASONING WITH DEFERENCE TO OTHERS.

Ay, but yet—

Let us be keen, and rather cut a little, [tleman,
Than full and bruise to death. Alas! this gen-
Whom I would save, had a most noble father!
Let but your honor know, (whom I believe
To be most straight in virtue) whether, in
The working of your own affections, [ing,
Had time cohered with place, or place with wish-
Or, that the resolute acting of your blood, [pose,
Could have attain'd the effect of your own pur-
Whether you had not some time in your life,
Err'd in this point, you censure now in him,
And pull'd the law upon you.

501. AFFECTATION—displays itself in a thousand different gestures, airs, and looks, according to the character which the person affects. Affectation of learning—gives a stiff formality to the whole person: the words come stalking out with the pace of a funeral procession, and every sentence has the solemnity of an oracle. Affectation—of pity—turns up the goggling whites of the eye to heaven, as if the person was in a trance, and fixes them in that posture so long, that the brain of the beholder grows giddy: then comes up deep grumbling, a holy groan from the lower part of the thorax, but so tremendous in sound, and so long protracted, that you expect to see a goblin rise, like an exhalation from the solid earth: thus he begins to rock, from side to side, or backward and forward, like an aged pine on the side of a hill, when a brisk wind blows; the hands are clasped together, and often lifted, and the head shaken with foolish vehemence; the tone of voice is canting, or a sing-song lullaby, not much removed from an Irish howl, and the words godly doggerel. AFFECTATION OF BEAUTY, and killing—puts a fine woman, by turns, into all sorts of forms, appearances and attitudes, but amiable ones: she undoes by art, or rather awkwardness, all that nature has done for her; for nature formed her almost an angel: and she, with infinite pains, makes herself a monkey: this species of affectation is easily imitated, or taken off: in doing which, make as many, and as ugly grimaces, motions and gestures, as can be made; and take care that nature never peeps out; thus you may represent coquettish affectation to the life.

Anecdote. A nobleman advised a bishop to make an addition to his house, of a new wing, in modern style. The prelate answered him, “The difference between your advice and that which the devil gave to our Saviour—is, that Satan advised Jesus to change stones into bread, that the poor might be fed; and you desire me to turn the bread of the poor into stones.”

A wise poor man,
Is like a sacred book that's never read;
To himself he lives, and to all else seems dead:
This age thinks better of a gilded fool,
Than of a threadbare saint in wisdom's school.

*Cheerful looks—make every dish—a feast,
And 'tis that—crowns a welcome.*

Laconics. 1. To know—is one thing, to do, is another. 2. Consider what is said, rather than who said it: and the consequence of the argument, rather than the consequence of him, who delivers it. 3. These proverbs, maxims, and laconics, are founded on the facts, that mankind are the same, and that the passions are the disturbing forces; the greater or less prevalence of which, give individuality to character. 4. If parents give their children an improper education, whose is the misfortune, and whose the crimes? 5. The greater your facilities are for acquiring knowledge, the greater should be your efforts: and genius—is the power—of making efforts. 6. The world's unfavorable views of conduct and character, are as floating clouds, from which the brightest day is not free. 7. Never marry—but for love; and see that thou lovest only what is lovely.

This World. What is the happiness that this world can give? Can it defend us from disasters? Can it preserve our hearts from grief, our eyes from tears, or our feet from falling? Can it prolong our comforts? Can it multiply our days? Can it redeem ourselves, or our friends from death? Can it soothe the king of terrors, or mitigate the agonies of the dying?

VARIETIES.

Three poets, in three distant ages born,
Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
The first in loftiness of thought surpassed;
The next, in majesty; in both, the last.
The force of nature could no further go;
To make a third, she join'd the former two.

Under a portrait of Milton—Dryden.

The poetry of earth is never dead!—

When all the birds are faint with the hot sun,
And hide in cooling trees, a voice will run,
From hedge to hedge about the new-mown mead;
That is the grasshopper's;—he takes the lead

In summer luxury;—he has never done
With his delights; for when tired out with fun
He rests at ease beneath some pleasant weed

The poetry of earth is ceasing never!—

On a lone winter evening, when the frost
Has wr't a silence from the stove, there shrills
The cricket's song, in warmth increasing ever,
And seems to one, in drowsiness half lost,
The grasshopper's among some grassy hills.

Believe me, if all those endearing young charms,

Which I gaze on so fondly to-day, [arms,
Were to change by to-morrow, and fleet in my
Like fairy gifts fading away; [thou art,
Thou wouldest still be ador'd, as this moment
Let thy loveliness fade as it will,
And around the dear ruin each wish of my heart,
Would entwine itself verdantly still.

It is not while beauty and youth are thy own,
And thy cheeks unprofan'd by a tear,
That the fervor and faith of a soul can be known,
To which time will but make thee more dear.
Oh! the heart that has truly lov'd, never forgets,
But as truly loves on to the close;
As the sunflower turns on her god, when he sets,
The same look which she turn'd when he rose!

503. AUTHORITY—opens the countenance, but draws the eye-brows a little, so as to give the look an air of gravity.

AUTHORITY FORBIDDING COMBATANTS TO FIGHT.

Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,
And both return back to their chairs again:—

Withdraw from us,—and let the trumpet sound;
Draw near—

And list what, with our council, we have done.

For that our kingdom's earth—should not be soil'd,

With that dear blood which it hath foster'd;

And for our eyes—doth hate the dire aspect,

Of civil wounds, plough'd up with neighbor's swords:

Therefore, we banish you our territories:

You, cousin Herford, upon pain of death,

Till twice five summers have enriched our fields,

Shall not regret our fair dominions,

But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

504. Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or a little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and, in our opinion, the body natural may be compared to the body politic; and if that be so, how can the Epicurean's opinion be true, that the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms? which we will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the letters of the alphabet could fall by chance into a most ingenious and learned treatise of philosophy.

On pain of death,—no person be so bold

Or daring hardy, as to touch the lists,

Except the marshal, and such officers

Appointed to direct these fair designs.

THE BOOK OF NATURE.

Let fancy—lead,

And be it ours—to follow, and admire,

As well we may, the graces infinite

Of nature. Lay aside the sweet resource

That winter needs, and may at will obtain,

Of authors, chaste and good, and let us read

The living page, whose every character

Delights, and gives us wisdom. Not a tree,

A plant, a leaf, a blossom, but contains

A folio volume. We may read, and read,

And read again, and still find something new,

Something to please, and something to instruct,

E'en in the noisome weed.

Anecdote. Eat Bacon. Dr. Watson, late bishop of Landaff, was enthusiastically attached to the writings of Lord Bacon; and considered, that no one, desirous of acquiring real sound knowledge, could read the works of that great man too often, or with too much care and attention. It was frequently remarked by him—"If a man wishes to become wise, he should eat Bacon."

Making Resolutions. Never form a resolution that is not a good one; and, when once formed, never break it. If you form a resolution, and then break it, you set yourself a bad example, and you are very likely to follow it. A person may get the habit of breaking his resolutions; this is as bad to the character and mind, as an incurable disease to the body. No person can become great, but by keeping his resolutions; no person ever escaped contempt, who could not keep them.

Laconics. 1. Writing and printing serve as clothing to our ideas, by which they become visible in forms, and permanent in duration; thus, painters speak of embodying the fleeting colors of beautiful flowers, by firing them in some earthly substance. 2. When the pupil of our intellectual eyes becomes adjusted to the darkness of error, genuine truth dazzles and blinds us. 3. Habit can only get the better of habit; but beware of changing one bad habit for another. 4. The torch of improvement, is destined to pass from hand to hand; and what, tho' we do not see the order? 5. When nature is excited, she will put forth her efforts; if not in a right, in a wrong way. 6. Consent—is the essence of marriage, the ceremonies—its form, and the duties—its uses.

Physiological Ignorance—is undoubtedly, the most abundant source of our sufferings; every person, accustomed to the sick, must have heard them deplore their ignorance—of the necessary consequences of those practices, by which their health has been destroyed: and when men shall be deeply convinced, that the eternal laws of Nature have connected pain and decrepitude with one mode of life, and health and vigor with another, they will avoid the former, and adhere to the latter. It is strange, however, to observe, that the generality of mankind do not seem to bestow a single thought on the preservation of their health, till it is too late to reap any benefit from their conviction. If knowledge of this kind were generally diffused, people would cease to imagine, that the human constitution was so badly contrived, that a state of general health could be overset by every trifle; for instance, by a little cold; or that the recovery of it lay concealed in a few drops, or a pill. Did they better understand the nature of chronic diseases, and the causes which produce them, they could not be so unreasonable as to think, that they might live as they choose, with impunity: or did they know anything of medicine, they would soon be convinced, that though fits of pain have been relieved, and sickness cured, for a time, the re-establishment of health—depends on very different powers and principles.

'Tis doing wrong—creates such doubts. These Render us jealous, and destroy our peace.

Though wisdom—wake,
Suspicion sleeps at wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Resigns her charge; while goodness thinks no ill.
Where no ill seems.

'Tis god-like magnanimity—to keep,
When most provoked, our reason calm, and clear
Christianity—depends on fact;
Religion—is not theory, but act.

Amid thy bowers—the tyrant's hand is seen,
And desolation—reddens all thy green.

No; there is none,—no ruler of the stars;
Regardful of my miseries,—saith despair.

Calm, and serene, he sees approaching death,
As the safe port, the peaceful, silent shore,
Where he may rest,—life's tedious voyage o'er.

505. BUFFOONERY—assumes a sly, arch, leering gravity; nor must it quit the serious aspect, though all should split their sides: which command of countenance is somewhat difficult, but not so hard to acquire, as to restrain the contrary sympathy—that of weeping when others weep. Examples will suggest themselves. COMMANDING requires a peremptory air, a severe and stern look; the hand is held out, and moved towards the person to whom the order is given, with the palm upwards, and sometimes it is accompanied with a significant nod of the head to the person addressed. If the command be absolute, and to a person unwilling to obey, the right hand is extended and projected forcibly towards him.

We were not born to sue, but to command;
Which, since we cannot do, to make you friends,
Be ready—as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon St. Lambert's day;
There—shall your swords—and lances ARBITRATE
The swelling difference of your settled hate;
Since we cannot stay you, you shall see
Justice—decide the victor's chivalry.
Lord Marshal—command our officers at arms,
Be ready—to direct these home alarms.

Silence, ye winds,
That make outrageous war upon the ocean:
And thou, old ocean! lull thy boisterous waves;
Ye wavering elements, be hushed as death,
While I impose my dread commands on hell;
And thou, profoundest hell! whose dreadful sway
Is given to me by fate and demi-gorgon— [gions;
Hear, hear my powerful voice, thro' all thy re-
And from thy gloomy caverns thunder the reply.
Begone! forever leave this happy sphere:
For perjurd lovers have no mansions here.
Look round the habitable world, how few
Know their own good, or, knowing it, pursue.

Happiness—does not consist so much in outward circumstances and personal gratifications, as in the inward feelings. There can be no true enjoyment of that, which is not honestly obtained; for a sense of guilt infuses into it a bitter ingredient, which makes it nauseous. What pleasure can the drunkard have in his cups, when he knows, that every drop he swallows, is so much dishonestly taken from his wife and children; and, that, to satisfy his brutal propensity, they are deprived of the necessaries of life?

Anecdote. Dr. Franklin. The following epitaph, was written by himself, many years previous to his death: "The body of Benjamin Franklin, Printer, (like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out, and stripp'd of its lettering and gilding,) lies here food for worms; yet the work itself shall not be lost; for it will, (as he believed,) appear once more in a new and more beautiful edition, corrected and amended by the Author." He is a parricide to his mother's name, And with an impious hand murders her fame, That wrongs the praise of women; that dares write Libels on saints, or with foul ink requite The milk they lent us.

None think the great unhappy, but the great.

Laconics. 1. Every act of apparent disorder and destruction, is, when contemplated aright, and taking in an immeasurable lapse of ages, the most perfect order, wisdom, and love. 2. As it respects the history of our race, scarcely the first hour of man has yet passed over our heads; why then do we speak of partiality? 3. In turning our eyes to the regions of darkness, in the history of man, as well as to those of light, we are induced to reflect upon our ignorance, as well as upon our knowledge. 4. The natural history of man, is of more importance than that of all animals, vegetables, and minerals; and, in mastering the former, we receive a key to unlock the mysteries of the latter. 5. Some professors of religion boast of their ignorance of science; and some would-be philosophers, treat with contempt, all truths, that are not mathematical, and derived from facts: which show the greatest folly?

Effects of Success. If you would revenge yourself on those who have slighted you, be successful; it is a bitter satire on their want of judgment, to show that you can do without them,—a galling wound—to the self-love—of proud, inflated people; but you must reckon on their hatred, as they will never forgive you.

VARIETIES.

They—never fail, who die
In a good cause; the block may soak their gore;
Their heads—may sodden in the sun, their limbs,
Be strung to city-gates, and castle-walls;
But still, their spirits—walk abroad. Though years
E lapse, and others—share as dark a doom,
They but augment the deep swelling thought,
Which overpowers all others, and conduct
The world at last—to FREEDOM.

The ocean,—when it rolls aboud,
The tempest—bursting from the cloud,
In one uninterrupted peal!
When darkness—sits around the sky,
And shadowy forms—go trooping by;
And everlasting mountains reel,
All ALL of this—is FREEDOM'S song—

'Tis pealed,—'tis pealed—ETERNALLY.

Joy kneels, at morning's rosy prime,
In worship to the rising sun;
But Sorrow loves the calmer time,
When the day-god his course has run:
When Night is in her shadowy car,
Pale Sorrow wakes while Joy doth sleep,
And, guided by the evening star,
She wanders forth to muse and weep.
Joy loves to cull the summer flower,
And wreath it round his happy brow;
But when the dark autumnal hour
Hath laid the leaf and blossom low;
When the frail bud hath lost its worth,
And Joy hath dash'd it from his crest,
Then Sorrow takes it from the earth,
To wither on her wither'd breast.

Oh, Liberty, thou goddess, heavenly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight!
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign,
And smiling plenty loads thy wanton train.

506. COMMENDATION—is the expression of the approbation we have for any object, in which we find any congruity to our ideas of excellence, natural, or moral, so as to communicate pleasure: as it generally supposes superiority in the person commending, it assumes the aspect of love (but without desire and respect,) and expresses itself in a mild tone of voice, with a small degree of confidence; the arms are gently spread, the hands open, with the palms upwards, directed toward the person approved, and sometimes lifted up and down, as if pronouncing praise.

You have done our pleasures very much grace, fair
Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, [ladies;
Which was not half so beautiful and kind;
You've added worth unto't, and lively lustre,
And entertain'd me with mine own device;-
I am to thank you for it.

O good old man, how well in thee—appears
The constant service of the antique world,
When service sweat for duty, not for meed!
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat—but for promotion;
And having that, do choke their service up,
Even with the having: it is not so with thee.

507. OBSERVATION. Nothing appears easier than to observe, yet few things are more uncommon. By observe—is meant to consider a subject in all its various parts; first, each part separately; then to examine its analogy with contiguous, or other possible subjects; to conceive and retain the various proportions which delineate, define and constitute the essence of the thing under consideration; to have clear ideas of these proportions, individually and collectively, as contributing to form a whole, so as not to confound them with other properties or things, however great the resemblance. The OBSERVER will often see where the unobservant is blind. To observe, is to be attentive, so as to fix the mind on a particular object, which it selects for consideration from a number of surrounding objects. To be attentive—is to consider some one particular object, exclusively of all others, and to analyze and distinguish its peculiarities.

Anecdote. During the mock trial of Louis XVI., he was asked, what he had done with a certain sum of money, a few thousand pounds. His voice failed him, and the tears came into his eyes at the question; at length he replied—"I LOVED TO MAKE THE PEOPLE HAPPY." He had given the money away in charity.

Sweet—was the sound, when oft, at evening's close,
Up yonder hill—the village murmur rose;
There, as I passed, with careless steps—and slow,
The mingling notes, came softened—from below:
The swain—responsive, as the milkmaid sung,
The sober herd, that loved to meet their young;
The noisy goose, that gabbled o'er the pool,
The playful children, just let loose from school, [wind.
The watch-dog's voice, that bay'd the whispering
And the loud laugh, that spoke the vacant mind;
These all—in soft confusion—sought the shade,
And filled each pause, the nightingale had made.

Laconics. 1. To devolve on science the duties of religion, or on religion the duties of science, is to bind together the living and the dead. 2. The prevailing error of our times is, the cultivation of the intellectual faculties, to the neglect of the moral faculties; when the former alone are develop'd, the child has acquired the means of doing good or evil—to himself, to society, to his country, or to the world; but practical goodness alone, can preserve the equilibrium. 3. Many persons have an unfortunate passion for inventing fictions, merely for the purpose of exciting amazement in their hearers. 4. Those who, without having sufficient knowledge of us, form an unfavorable opinion respecting us, do not injure us; they reflect on a phantom of their own imagination.

The heart, like a tendril, accustomed to cling,
Let it go where it will, cannot flourish alone;
But will lean to the nearest, and loveliest thing,
It can twine with itself, and make closely its own.

Honor's a sacred tie, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue, where it meets her,
And imitates her actions, where she is not.

False honor, like a comet—blazes broad,
But blazes for extinction. Real merit—
Shines—like the eternal sun—to shine forever.

She hath no head, and cannot think; she hath
No heart, and cannot feel; where'er she moves,
It is in wrath; or pauses, 'tis in ruin:
Her prayers—are curses; her communion—death;
Eternity her vengeance; in the blood of her victims,
Her red decalogue—is written—(BIGOTRY.)

Of doing Injuries to Others. Propositions conscience, thou equitable and ready judge, be never absent from me! Tell me, constantly, that I cannot do the least injury to another, without receiving the counter-stroke; that I must necessarily wound myself, when I wound another.

NATURE ALWAYS TRUE.

Nature—never did betray
The heart, that loved her! 'Tis her privilege,
Through all the years of this our life, to lead
From joy to joy; for she can so inform
The mind, that is within us, so impress,
With quietness and beauty, and so feed
With lofty thoughts, that neither evil tongues,
Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
Nor greetings, where no kindness is, nor all
The dreary intercourse of common life
Shall e'er prevail against us, or disturb
Our cheerful faith, that all that we behold
Is full of blessings. Therefore, let the moon
Shine on thee in thy solitary walk;
And let the misty mountain winds be free
To blow against thee; and, in after years,
When these wild ecstasies shall be matured
Into a sober pleasure; when thy mind
Shall be a mansion for all lovely forms,
Thy memory be a dwelling-place
For all sweet sounds and harmonies, oh! then,
If solitude, or fear, or pain, or grief,
Should be thy portion, with what healing thoughts
Of tender joy wilt thou remember me,
And these my benedictions.

508. THE PASSIONS. Plato calls the passions, the wings of the soul. According to this metaphor, a bird may be considered as the type of it; and, in applying this figure to the several characters of men, some are eagles, others are bats and owls; a few are swans, and many are geese; no phoenix among them all. In another place, he styles the passions the chariot-horses of the soul; by which is implied, that though strong and fleet, they should be under command.

COMPLAINING OF EXTREME PAIN.

*Search, there; nay, probe me; search my wounded
Pull,—draw it out,— [reins,
Oh! I am shot! A forked burning arrow—
Sticks across my shoulders: the sad venom flies
Like lightning thro' my flesh, my blood, my marrow.
Ha! what a change of torments I endure!
A bolt of ice—runs hissing—thro' my body:
'Tis sure—the arm of death; give me a chair;
Cover me, for I freeze, my teeth chatter,
And my knees knock together.*

*Why turnest thou from me? I'm alone
Already, and to the seas complaining.*

*What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve, or joy; to hope, or fear?
Why should we anticipate our sorrows?
'Tis like those, who die—for fear of death.*

509. CURIOSITY—opens the eyes and mouth, lengthens the neck, bends the body forward and fixes it in one posture, with the hands nearly as in admiration with astonishment: when it speaks, the voice, tone and gesture are nearly as in inquiry, which see; also Desire, Attention, Hope and Perplexity.

CURIOSITY AT FIRST SEEING A FINE OBJECT.

Pros. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance,
And say what thou seest yonder.

Mir. What! is't a spirit?
Lo, how it looks about! believe, sir,
It carries a brave form. But 'tis a spirit.

Pros. No, wench, it eats and sleeps, and hath
As we have, such. [such senses

Mir. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural,
I ever saw so noble.

510. DENYING—what is affirmed, is but an affirmation of the contrary, and is expressed like affirmation, pushing the open right hand from one, and turning the face another way. Denying a favor—see refusing, denying an accusation.

*“If I in act consent, or sin of thought,
Be guilty—of stealing that sweet breath,
Which was embounded in that beauteous clay,
Let hell—want pains enough to torture me!
I left him well.*

Anecdote. The Os-ti-ack Boy. A Russian was traveling from Tobalsk to Reresow; and, on the road, stopped a night at the hut of an Ostiack. In the morning, on continuing his journey, he found he had lost his purse. The son of the Ostiack, about fourteen, had found the purse; but, instead of taking it up, he went and told his father; who was equally unwilling to touch it, and ordered the boy to cover it with some bushes. On the Russian's return, he stopped at the same hut; the Ostiack did not recognize him. He related the story of his loss, and when he had finished, “You are welcome,” said he, “my son here will show you where it is; no hand has touched it, but the one that covered it, that you might receive what you had lost.”

Laconics. 1. Owe nothing—to your advancement, save your own unassisted exertions, if you would retain what you acquire. 2. When passion rules us, it deprives of reason, suspends the faculty of reflection, blinds the judgment, and precipitates us into acts of violence, or excesses; the consequences of which we may forever deplore. 3. With those who are of a gloomy turn of mind, be reserved; with the old, be serious; and with the young, be merry. 4. In forming matrimonial alliances, undue effort is made to reconcile everything relating to fortune, and family; but very little is paid to congeniality of dispositions, or accordance of hearts. 5. Moral knowledge is to be sought from the Word of God; scientific knowledge from the works of God. 6. By union—the most trifling beginnings thrive and increase; by disunion—the most flourishing—fall to the ground. 7. Is not the union of CAPITAL, TALENT and LABOR, the SALVATION of the WORLD, temporally and spiritually?

Varieties. 1. Good neighborhoods supply all wants; which may be thus illustrated. Two neighbors, one—blind and the other—lame, were called to a distant place; but how could they obey? The blind man carried the lame one, who directed the carrier where to go. Is not this a good illustration, of faith and charity? Charity—acts, and faith—guides; i. e. the will—impels, and he understanding—directs. 2. Superficial writers, like the mole, often fancy themselves deep, when they are exceeding near the surface.

*Trifles make the sum of human things,
And half our misery from our foibles springs;
Since life's best joys—consist in peace and ease,
And few can save or serve, but all can please;
Oh! let the ungentle spirit learn from hence,
A small unkindness—is a great offence.*

*How beautiful is night!
A dewy freshness fills the silent air,
No mist obscures, nor cloud, nor speck, nor stain,
Breaks the serene of heaven:
In full-orbed glory yonder moon divine
Rolls through the dark blue depths.
Beneath her steady ray,
The desert circle spreads.
Like the round ocean, girdled with the sky;*

*How beautiful is night!
Who, at this untimely hour,
Wanders o'er the desert sands?
No station is in view,
Nor palm-grove islanded amid the waste.
The mother and her child;
The widowed mother and the fatherless boy,
They, at this untimely hour,
Wander o'er the desert sands.*

Delay—leads to impotent and snail-paced beggary,

511. DISMISSING—with approbation, is done with a kind aspect and tone of voice; the right hand open and palm upward, gently raised towards the person: with displeasure—besides the look and tone of voice that suit displeasure, the hand is hastily thrown out towards the person dismissed, the back part of the hand towards him, and the countenance, at the same time, turned away from him.

Chatillon says to king John:
Then take my king's defiance from my mouth,
The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. J. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:
Be thou as lightning—in the eyes of France;
For, ere thou canst report, I will be there,
The thunder of my cannon shall be heard;
So, hence! Be thou as the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen presage of your own decay.
An honorable conduct let him have;
Pembroke, look to't: farewell, Cha-ti-lon!

512. DIFFERING—in sentiment, may be expressed nearly as Refusing, which see; and Agreeing in opinion, or being convinced, is expressed nearly as granting, which also see.—DISTRACTION—opens the eyes to a frightful wideness, rolls them hastily and wildly from object to object, distorts every feature;

gnashes with the teeth; agitates all parts of the body; rolls in the dust; foams at the mouth; utters hideous bellowings—exclamations—blasphemies, and all that is fierce and outrageous; rushes furiously on all who approach, and, if restrained, tears its own flesh and destroys itself. See the engraving, indicating dread, abhorrence, &c. DOTAGE, or infirm old age, shows itself by talkativeness; boasting of the past; hollowness of the cheeks; dimness of sight; deafness; tremor of voice; the accents, through default of the teeth, scarcely intelligible; knees tottering; hard wheezing; laborious groaning; the body stooping under the insupportable weight of years, which will soon crush it into the dust, whence it had its origin.

What folly can be ranker? like our shadows,
Our wishes lengthen, as our sun declines.
No wish should loiter, then, this side the grave.
Our hearts should leave the world, before the knell
Calls for our carcases to mend the soil.
Enough to live in tempest; die in port.
Age should fly concourse, cover in retreat,
Defects of judgment, and the will subdue;
Walk thoughtful on the silent, solemn shore
Of that vast ocean it must sail so soon!

Where—should'st thou look for kindness?
When we are sick, where can we turn for succor;
When we are wretched, where can we complain;
And when the world—looks cold and surly on us,
Where can we go—to meet a warmer eye,
With such sure confidence—as to a mother?
The world may scowl, acquaintance may forsake,
Friends may neglect, and lovers know a change;
But, when a mother—doth forsake her child,
Men lift their hands, and cry, “A prodigy!”

Ghuttons are never generous.

Varieties. 1. The most disgusting vices—are often concealed under the fairest exterior. 2. A knowledge of the human heart, is, by no means, detrimental to the love of all mankind. 3. One person cannot render another—indispensable; nor can one supply the place of another. 4. The least failing of an individual often incites a great outcry; his character is at once darkened, trampled on, destroyed; but treat that person in the right way, and you will be astonished at what he was able and willing to perform. 5. He who cannot listen, can perform nothing, that deserves the name of wisdom and justice. 6. He had respectable talents and connections; but was formidable to the people, from his want of principle, and his readiness to truckle to men in power. 7. Every vicious act, weakens a right judgment, and defiles the life.

These, and a thousand mixed emotions more,
From ever changing views of good and ill,
Formed infinitely various, vex the mind
With endless storms.

For my past crimes—my forfeit life receive:
No pity for my sufferings—here I crave,
And only hope forgiveness—in the grave.

For soon, the winter of the year,
And age, life's winter, will appear;
At this, thy living bloom—must fade,
As that—will strip the verdant shade.

True love's the gift, that God has given,
To man alone, beneath the heaven;
It is the secret sympathy,
The silver link, the silken tie,
Which, HEART to HEART, and, MIND to MIND,
In BODY, and in SOUL can bind.

Anecdote. Stan-is-laus, king of Poland, was driven from his dominion by Charles XII. of Sweden; he took refuge in Paris, where he was supported at the expense of the court of France. Some person complained to the duke of Orleans, (then regent), of the great expense of the exiled monarch, and wished that he should be desired to leave. The duke nobly replied: “Sir, France has ever been, and I trust ever will be, the refuge of unfortunate princes; and I shall not permit it to be violated, when so excellent a prince as the king of Poland comes to claim it.”

The winds
And rolling waves, the sun's unwearied course,
The elements—and seasons, all declare—
For what—the eternal MAKER—has ordained
The powers of man; we feel, within ourselves,
His energy divine. He tells the heart,
He meant, he made us—to behold, and love,
What HE beholds and loves, the GENERAL orb
Of life—and being; to be great—like him,
Beneficent, and active. Thus, the men,
Whom nature's works can charm, with God himself
Hold converse; grow familiar, day by day,
With his conceptions; act upon his plan,
And form to his—the relish of their souls.

An honest soul—is like a ship at sea,
That sleeps at anchor—upon the ocean's calm;
But, when it rages, and the wind blows high,
She cuts her way with skill—and majesty.

513. EXHORTING, OR ENCOURAGING. is earnest persuasion, attended with confidence of success; the voice has the softness of love, intermixed with the firmness of courage; the arms are sometimes spread, with the hands open, as entreating; occasionally the right hand is lifted up, and struck rapidly down, as enforcing what is said. In a general, at the head his army, it requires a kind, complacent look, unless matters of offence have passed, as neglect of duty, &c.

But wherefore do you droop? Why look you sad?
Be great in act, as you have been in thought:
Let not the world—see fear and sad distrust,
Govern the motive of a kingly eye;
Be stirring with the time; be fire—with fire;
Threaten the threatener, outface the brow
Of bragging horror; so, shall inferior eyes,
That borrow their behavior from the great,
Grow great by your example; and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution;
Show boldness, and aspiring confidence.
What! shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there, and make him tremble there?
Oh, let it not be said! Forage, and run,
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh.

514. FAINTING—produces a sudden relaxation of all that holds the human frame together—every sinew and ligament unstrung; the color flies from the vermilion cheek, the sparkling eye grows dim; down the body drops, as helpless and senseless as a mass of clay, to which it seems hastening to resolve itself.

And lo! sad partner of the genial care,
Weary and faint—I drive my goats afar.

Weariness—

Can snore upon the flint, when rusty sloth,
Finds the downy pillow—hard.

Anecdote. A poor priest came one day, to Louis XI. of France, when this monarch was at his devotions, in the church, and told him, the bailliffs were about to arrest him for a sum, he was unable to pay. The king ordered him the money; saying—"You have chosen your time to address me very luckily. It is but just that I should show some compassion to the distressed, when I have been entreating God to have compassion on myself."

ADDRESSED TO AN OFFICER IN THE ARMY.

O! that the muse might call, without offence,
The gallant soldier back to his good sense,
His temporal field so cautious not to lose;
So careless quite of his eternal foes.
Soldier! so tender of thy prince's fame,
Why so profuse of a superior name?
For the king's sake, the brunt of battles bear,
But—for the King of kings's sake—do not swear.

How many bright [high!

And splendid lamps shine in heaven's temple
Day hath his golden sun, her moon the night.

Her fix'd and wand'ring stars the azure sky;
So fram'd all by their Creator's might, [die.

That still they live and shine, and ne'er shall
There is a lust in man—no power can tame,
Of loudly publishing—his neighbor's shame;
On eagle's wings—immortal scandals fly,
Whilst virtuous actions are but born—to die.

Extremes. The sublime of nature is the sky, sun, moon, stars, &c. The profound of nature, is, gold, pearls, precious stones, and the treasures of the deep, which are inestimable as unknown. But all that lies between these, as corn, flowers, fruits, animals, and things for the mere use of man, are of mean price, and so common, as not to be greatly esteemed by the curious; it being certain, that any thing of which we know the true use cannot be invaluable: which affords a solution, why common sense hath either been totally despised, or held in small repute, by the greatest modern critics and authors.

Varieties. 1. The arts are divided into the useful, and the polite, the fine, and the elegant; some are for use, and others for pleasure; Elocution is of a mixed nature, in which use and beauty are of nearly co-equal influence; manner being as important as matter, or more so. 2. Our government is a government of laws, not of men; but it will lose this character, if the laws furnish no remedy for the violation of vested rights. 3. Nature has given us two eyes and two ears, and but one tongue; that we should see and hear more than we speak. 4. The neariness of study is removed by loving it, and valuing the results for their uses. 5. The three kingdoms of nature, are the Mineral, the Vegetable, and the Animal: minerals are destitute of organization and life; vegetables, or plants, are endowed with organization and life, but are destitute of voluntary motion and sense; while animals—possess them all.

As some lone miser, visiting his store, [it o'er,
Bends o'er his treasures, and counts and recounts
Hoards after hoards—his rising raptures fill,
Yet still—he sighs; for hoards are wanting still:
Thus, to my least, alternate passions rise,
Pleased with each bliss, th't Heaven to us supplies;
Yet oft a sigh prevails, and tears will fall,
To see the hoard of human bliss—so small.

The flighty purpose—is never undertook,
Unless the deed go with it; from this moment,
The firstlings of my heart, shall be
The firstlings of my head; and even now, [done.
To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and
It is jealousy's peculiar nature,
To swell small things to great; nay, out of nought
To conjure much; and then to lose its reason,
Amid the hideous phantoms—it has found.

If any here chance to behold himself,
Let him not dare to challenge me of wrong;
For, if he shame to have his follies known,
First he should shame to act 'em: my strict hand
Was made to seize on vice, and with a gripe,
Squeeze out the humor of such spongy souls,
As lick up every idle vanity.

The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.
How many things by season, season'd are
To their right praise and true perfection!

How vain all outward effort to supply
The soul with joy! the noontide sun is dark,
And music—discord, when the heart is low.

515. FATIGUE—from severe or hard labor, gives a general languor to the body; the countenance is dejected, the arms hang listless; the body, (if not sitting, or lying along,) stoops as in old age; the legs, if walking, drag heavily along, and seem, at every step, to bend under the weight of the body; the voice is weak, and hardly articulate enough to be understood.

I see a man's life is a t tedious one:
I've tired myself, and for two nights, together—
Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick,
But that my resolution helps me. Milford—
When from the mountain-top Pisanio show'd thee,
Thou wast within my ken. Ah me! I think
Foundations—fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be relieved.

516. GRAVITY—seriousness, as when the mind is fixed, or deliberating on some important subject, smooths the countenance, and gives it an air of melancholy; the eye-brows are lowered, the eyes cast downwards, and partially closed, or raised to heaven; the mouth shut, the lips composed, and sometimes a little contracted; the postures of the body and limbs composed, and without much motion; the speech, if any, slow and solemn, and the voice without much variety.

Fathers! we once again are met in council:
Cesar's approach hath summoned us together,
And ROME—attends her fate—from our resolves.
How shall we treat this bold, aspiring man?
Success—still follows him, and backs his crimes:
PHARSALIA—gave him Rome. EGYPT—has since
Received his yoke, and the whole Nile is Cesar's.
Why should I mention Juba's overthrow,
Or Scipio's death? Nonitia's burning sands
Still smoke with blood;—'tis time we should decree
What course to take; our foe advances on us,
And envies us even Lybia's sultry deserts. [fix'd
Fathers, pronounce your thoughts; are they still
To hold it out, and fight it to the last?
Or, are your hearts subdued at length, and wrought,
By time and ill success, to a submission? Sempronious—speak.

Anecdote. How to prize good Fortune.
In the year preceding the French revolution, a servant girl, in Paris, drew a prize of fifteen hundred pounds. She immediately called on the parish priest, and generously put two hundred louisd'ors into his hands, for the relief of the most indigent and industrious poor in the district; accompanying the donation with this admirable and just observation, "Fortune could only have been kind to me, in order that I might be kind to others."

True Eloquence, is good sense, delivered in a natural and unaffected way, without the artificial ornament of tropes and figures. Our common eloquence is usually a cheat upon the understanding; it deceives us with appearances, instead of things, and makes us think we see reason, whilst it is only tickling our sense.

Essential honor must be in a friend,

Not such as every breath fans to and fro;
But born within, is its own judge and end, [know.

And dares not sin, though sure that none should
Where friendship's spoke, honesty's understood;
For none can be a friend that is not good.

Laconics. 1. We too often form hasty opinions, from external appearances, assumed merely for deception, by the wolf in sheep's clothing. 2. While prosperity gilds your days, you may reckon many friends; but, if the clouds of adversity descend upon you, behold, they fly away. 3. Cowards boast of their fancied prudence, and assume an appearance of courage, which they do not possess. 4. The life of the true christian, is not one of melancholy, and gloominess; for he only resigns the pleasure of sin, to enjoy the pleasure of holiness. 5. The blessings of peace cannot be too highly prized, nor the horrors of war too earnestly *deprecat*ed; unless the former is obtained, and the latter—averted, by a sacrifice of principle. 6. The conqueror is regarded with awe, and the learned man commands our esteem; but the good man alone is beloved.

They words—had such a melting flow,
And spoke of truth, so sweetly well,
They dropp'd—like heaven's serenest snow,
And all was brightness—where they fell.

Can gold—gain friendship? Impudence of hope!
As well mere man—an angel might beget;
Love, and love only, is the loan for love.
Lorenzo! pride repress; nor hope to find
A friend, but who has found a friend in thee.
All—like the purchase; few—the price will pay;
And this—makes friends—such miracles below.

Honor and Virtue. Honor is unstable, and seldom the same; for she feeds upon opinion, and is as tickle as her food. She builds a lofty structure on the sandy foundation of the esteem of those who are of all beings the most subject to change. But virtue is uniform and fixed, because she looks for approbation only from Him, who is the same yesterday—to-day—and forever. Honor is the most capricious in her rewards. She feeds us with air, and often pulls down our house, to build our monument. She is contracted in her views, inasmuch as her hopes are rooted in earth, bounded by time, and terminated by death. But virtue is enlarged and infinite in her hopes, inasmuch as they extend beyond present things, even to eternal; this is their proper sphere, and they will cease only in the reality of deathless enjoyment. In the storms, and in the tempests of life, honor is not to be depended on, because she herself partakes of the tumult; she also is buffeted by the wave, and borne along by the whirlwind. But virtue is above the storm, and has an anchor sure and steadfast, because it is cast into heaven. The noble Brutus worshiped honor, and in his zeal mistook her for virtue. In the day of trial he found her a shadow and a name. But no man can purchase his virtue too dear; for it is the only thing whose value must ever increase with the price it has cost us. Our integrity is never worth so much as when we have parted with our all to keep it.

Similitudes—are like songs in love;
They much describe, tho' nothing prove.

517. CONFIDENCE, COURAGE, BOASTING—is hope elated, security of success in obtaining its object; and COURAGE is the contempt of any unavoidable danger in the execution of what is resolved upon: in both, the head and whole body are erected rather gracefully, the breast projected, the countenance clear and open, the accents strong, round, full-mouthed, and not too rapid; the voice firm and even. BOASTING,—exaggerates these appearances by loudness, blustering and railing, what is appropriately called swag-gering; the eye-brows drawn down, the face red and bloated, mouth pouts, arms placed akimbo, foot stamped on the ground, large strides in walking, voice hollow, thundering, swelling into bombast; head often menacingly, right fists clenched, and sometimes brandished at the person threatened.

Base men, that use them, to so base effect:
But truer stars—did govern Proteus' birth:
His words—are bonds; his oaths—are oracles;
His love—sincere; his thoughts—immaculate:
His tears—pure messengers—sent from his heart,
His heart—as far from fraud as heaven from earth.

518. GIVING OR GRANTING,—when done with an unreserved good will, is accompanied with a benevolent aspect, and kind tone of voice: the right hand open, with the palm upward, extending toward the person favored, as if giving what he asks; the head at the same time inclining forward, as indicating a benevolent disposition and entire consent: all indicative of how heartily the favor is granted, and the benefactors joy in conferring it.

GIVING A DAUGHTER IN MARRIAGE.

If I have too severely punished you,
 Your compensation makes amends; for I
 Have given you here a threat of mine own life,
 Or that for which I live, whom once again
 I tender to thy hand; all thy vexations
 Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
 Hast strangely stood the test. Here, afore heav'n,
 I ratify this my rich gift: Ferdinand,
 Do not smile at me, that I boast her off;
 For thou wilt find she will outstrip all praise,
 And make it halt behind her.
 Then—as my gift—and thine own acquisition—
 Worthily purchas'd—take—my DAUGHTER.

Impatience. In those evils which are allotted to us by Providence, such as deformity, privation of the senses, or old age, it is always to be remembered, that impatience can have no present effect, but to deprive us of the consolations which our condition admits, by driving away from us those by whose conversation or advice we might be amused or helped; and that, with regard to futurity, it is yet less to be justified, since, without lessening the pain, it cuts off the hope of that reward, which He, by whom it is inflicted, will confer upon those who bear it well.

Anecdote. Clemency. Alphonsus, king of Naples and Sicily, so celebrated in history for his clemency, was once asked, why he was so favorable to all men; even to those most notoriously wicked? He replied, "Because good men are won by justice; the bad, by clemency." Some of his ministers complained to him, on another occasion, of this clemency; when he exclaimed, "Would you have lions and tigers to rule over you? Know you not that cruelty—is the attribute of wild beasts; clemency—that of man?"

Varieties. 1. There is no person so little, but the greatest may sometimes need his assistance: hence, we should all exercise clemency, when there is an opportunity, towards those in our power. This is illustrated by the fable of the mouse and the lion: when the lion became entangled in the toils of the hunter, he was released by the mouse, which gnawed asunder the cords of the net in consideration of having been spared his own life, by the royal beast, on a former occasion. 2. It is a universal principle—that an essence cannot exist out of its form; nor be perceived out of its form; nor can the quality of a form be perceived, till the form itself is an object of thought: hence, if an essence does not present itself in form, so that its form can be seen in thought, it is totally impossible to know anything about, or be affected with, that essence. 3. The truths of religion, and the truths of science, are of different orders; though sometimes blended, yet never actually confounded: theology—is the sun, and science—the moon—to reflect its light and glory.

My Mother. Alas, how little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living! How heedless, are we, in youth, of all her anxieties and kindness! But when she is dead and gone; when the cares and coldness of the world come withering to our hearts; when we experience how hard it is to find true sympathy, how few love us for ourselves, how few will befriend us in our misfortunes; then it is, that we think of the mother we have lost.

The love of praise, howe'er conceal'd by art,
 Reigns—more or less, and gloves—in every heart:
 The proud—to gain it, toils on toils endure,
 The modest—shun it—but to make it sure.

Think not the good,
 The gentle deeds of mercy—thou hast done,
 Shall die forgotten all; the poor, the prisoner,
 The fatherless, the friendless, and the widow,
 Who daily—own the bounty of thy hand,
 Shall cry to heaven, and pull a blessing on thee.
 Tir'd Nature's sweet restorer, balmy Sleep!
 He, like the world, his ready visits pays
 Where Fortune smiles; the wretched he forsakes;
 Swift on his downy pinions, flies from grief.
 In Nature there's no blemish, but the mind;
 None can be call'd deformed, but the unkind:
 Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous-evil
 Are empty trunks, o'erflourish'd by the devil.
 Can chance of seeing first, thy title prove?
 And know'st thou not, no law is made for love?
 Law is to things, which to free choice relate;
 Love is not in our choice, but in our fate:
 Laws are but positive; love's power, we see,
 Is Nature's sanction, and her first degree.

520. GRATITUDE—puts on an aspect full of complacency; (see Love;) if the object of it be a character greatly superior, it expresses much submission: the right hand is open with the fingers spread, and press'd upon the breast just over the heart, expresses, very appropriately, a sincere and hearty sensibility of obligation. The engraving represents the deep-felt emotions of a noble mind.

O great Solotto! O my more than father!
Let me not live, but at thy very name,
My eager heart springs up, and leaps with joy.
When I forget the vast, vast debt I owe thee,
(Forget—but 'tis impossible;) then let me
Forget the use and privilege of reason—
Be banish'd from the commerce of mankind,
To wander in the desert, among brutes,
To bear the various fury of the seasons.
The midnight cold, and the noontide scorching heat,
To be the scorn—of earth, and curse of heaven.

521. A man is never the less an artist, for not having his tools about him; or a musician, because he wants his fiddle: nor is he the less brave, because his hands are bound, or the worse pilot, for being upon dry ground. If I only have will to be grateful, I am so. As gratitude is a necessary, and a glorious, so also is it an obvious, a cheap, and an easy virtue: so obvious, that wherever there is life, there is place for it: so cheap, that the covetous man may be gratified without expense: and so easy, that the stuggard may be so likewise without labor.

To the generous mind,
The heaviest debt—is that of gratitude,
When 'tis not in our power to repay it.

'Tis the Creator's primary great law,
That links the chain of beings to each other,
Joining the greater to the lesser nature.

When gratitude—o'erflows the swelling heart,
And breathes in free and uncorrupted praise
For benefits received, propitious heaven
Takes such acknowledgments as fragrant incense,
And doubles all its blessings.

Anecdote. The bill of indictment, preferred against John Bunyan, author of Pilgrim's Progress, &c., was as follows: "John Bunyan hath devilishly and perniciously abstained from coming to church, to hear divine service, and is a common upholder of several unlawful meetings and conventicles, to the disturbance and distraction of the good subjects of this kingdom, contrary to the laws of our sovereign lord the king," &c., was convicted, and imprisoned twelve years and six months.

And too fond of the right, to pursue the expedient.

Views of Truth. We see truths through the medium of our own minds, as we see objects around us thro' the atmosphere; and, of course, we see them not as they are in themselves, but as they are modified by the quality of the medium thro' which we view them; and, as the minds of all are different, we must all have different views of any particular truth; which is the reason, that differences of opinion exist, and always will exist: hence, it is no argument against truth, that men have different views of it; and because they must have different views, it is no reason why they should quarrel about their opinions; for good uses, and not matters of opinion, are the touch-stone of fellowship. Thus it is, that the all of religion relates to life, and the life of religion is to do good, from a love of doing good. While we agree, and are united in doing good, we should not fight among ourselves, about mere matters of opinion; still, we must not be indifferent about them; for truth is necessary to give form to goodness; and every good person will naturally desire to know the truth, that he may regulate his conduct by it; and thus, acquire the greatest and highest degree of goodness.

Varieties. 1. The young—are slaves to novelty; the old—to custom. 2. The volume of nature, is the book of knowledge, and he becomes the wisest, who makes the best selections, and uses them properly. The greatest friend of truth—is time; her greatest enemy—prejudice; and her constant companion is humility. 4. The best means of establishing a high reputation is—to speak well, and act better. 5. Be studious, and you will be learned; be industrious and frugal, and you will be rich; be sober and temperate, and you will be healthy; be virtuous, and you will be happy. 6. He, who governs his passions, does more than he, who commands armies. Socrates, being one day offended with his servant, said, "I would beat you, if I were not angry." 7. The best mode of gaining a high reputation, is—to be—what you appear to be. Like birds, whose beauties languish, half conceal'd, Till, mounted on the wing, their glossy plumes, Expanded, shine with azure, green, and gold; How blessings brighten—as they take their flight!

Drop—as the murmurs of the falling floods;
Sweet—as the warbles of the vocal woods:
The lustr'ning passions hear, and sink, and rise,
As the rich harmony, or swells, or dies!
The pulse of avarice—forgets to move;
A purer rapture—fills the breast of love;
Devotion—lifts to heav'n a holier eye,
And bleeding pity—heaves a softer sigh.

I, solitary, court

The inspiring breeze, and meditate upon the book
Of nature, ever open; aiming thence,
Warm from the heart, to learn the moral song.

A dark, cold calm, which nothing now can break,
Or warm, or brighten;—like that Syrian lake,
Upon whose surface, morn and summer sheld
Their smiles in vain; for all beneath is dead!

All is silent—'twas my fancy!

Still—as the breathless interval—between the flash and thunder.

522. To act a Passion properly, we must never attempt it, until the imagination has conceived clearly and distinctly, a strong and vivid idea of it, and we feel its influence in our inmost soul; then, the form, or image of that idea, will be impressed on the appropriate muscles of the face, and communicate, instantly, the same impressions to the muscles of the body; which, whether braced, or relaxed, (the idea being either active or passive,) by impelling, or retarding the flow of the affection, will transmit their own sensation to the voice, and rightly dispose the proper gesture.

COURAGE, DISTRACTION.

A generous few, the vet'ran hardy gleanings
Of many a hapless fight, with Heroic fire, inspired each other,
Resolved on death; disdaining to survive
Their dearest country. "If we fall," I cried,
"Let us not tamely fall, like passive cowards;
No; let us live, or let us die like men;
Come on, my friends, to Alfred we will cut
Our glorious way; or, as we nobly perish,
Will offer, to the genius of our country,
Whole hecatombs of Danes."
As if one soul had moved them all,
Around their heads, they flashed [Danes!
Their flaming falchions—"Lead us to those
Our country! VENGEANCE!" was the gen'ral cry!

523. PASSIONS. 1. The passions and desires, like the two twists of a rope, mutually mix one with the other, and twine inextricably round the heart; producing good, if moderately indulged; but certain destruction, if suffered to become inordinate. 2. Passion—is the great mover and spring of the soul: when men's passions are strongest, they may have great and noble effects; but they are then also, apt to lead to the greatest evils.

Anecdote. Pungent Preaching. An old man being asked his opinion of a certain sermon, replied, "I liked it very well, except that there was no pinch to it. I always like to have a pinch to every sermon."

Want is a bitter and a hateful good,
Because its virtues are not understood.
Yet many things, impossible to thought,
Have been, by need, to full perfection brought.
The daring of the soul proceeds from thence,
Sharpness of wit, and active diligence;
Prudence at once, and fortitude it gives,
And, if in patience taken, mends our lives;
For even that indigence which brings me low,
Makes me myself, and him above, to know;
A good which none would challenge, few would
A fair possession, which mankind refuse. [choose,
If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.
The darts of love, like lightning, wound within,
And, tho' they pierce it, never hurt the skin;
They leave no marks behind them where they fly,
Tho' thro' the tend'rest part of all, the eye.
Darkness—the curtain drops on life's dull scene.

Laconics. 1. When we behold a full grown man, in the perfection of rigor and health, and the splendor of reason and intelligence, and are informed that "God created man in his own image, after his own likeness;" we are attracted with tenfold interest to the examination of the object, that is placed before us, and the structure of his mind and body, and the succinct developments of the parts and proportions of each. 2. A workingman without tools, tho' he has the best designs and most perfect practical skill, can do nothing useful; without skill, his design could do nothing with the best of tools; and without design, his skill and tools would be both inoperative: thus again, three distinct essentials are seen to be necessary in every thing.

Mercy! I know it not,—for I am miserable;
I'll give thee misery, for here she dwells,
This is her home, where the sun never dawns,
The bird of night—sits screaming o'er the roof;
Grim spectres—sweep along the horrid gloom;
And naught is heard, but wailing and lamenting.
Hark! something cracks above! it shakes! it totters!
And the nodding ruin falls to crush us!
'Tis fallen! 'tis here! I felt it on my brain!
A waving flood—of bluish fire swells o'er me!
And now, 'tis out; and I am drowned in blood!
Ha! what art thou? thou horrid, headless trunk!
It is my Hastings:—see! he wafts me on;
Away! I go: I fly: I follow thee!

Varieties. 1. Can actions be really good, unless they proceed from good motives? 2. By doubting, we are led to think; or, consider whether it be so, and to collect reasons, and thereby to bring that truth rationally into our minds. 3. The effects of music—are produced directly upon the affections, without the intervention of thought. 4. What shall we do, to obtain justice, when we are injured? Seek recompense at law, if at all. 5. Suppose a person insults us in such a manner, that the law cannot give us redress? Then forgive him. 6. In the Lord, are infinite love, infinite wisdom, and infinite power or authority,—which three essential attributes—constitute the only God of heaven and earth. 7. The New Testament was divided into verses, in 1551, by Robert Stevens, for the convenience of reference to a Concordance; and the Old Testament is supposed to have been divided into verses, about the same time; those divisions, of course, are of no authority; nor are the punctuations.

All live by seeming.
The beggar begs with it, the gay courtier
Gains land and title, rank and rule, by seeming:
The clergy scorn it not, and the bold soldier
Will eke with it his service. All admit it,
All practice it; and he, who is content
With showing what he is, shall have small credit
In church, or camp, or state. So wags the world.
What is this world? Thy school, O misery!
Our only lesson, is—to learn to suffer;
And he who knows not that, was born for nothing.

524. DESPAIR. Shakspeare has most exquisitely depicted this passion, where he has drawn cardinal Beaufort, after a most ungodly life, dying in despair, and terrified with the murder of duke Humphrey, to which he was accessory. The first example is Despair, the second, Despair and Remorse.

If thou be'st Death, I'll give thee England's treasures,
Enough to purchase such another island,
So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.
Bring me to my trial, when you will;
Died he not in his bed? where should he die?
Can I make men live, whether they will or no?
Oh! torture me no more; I will confess.
Alive again? then show me where he is;
I'll give a thousand pounds to look upon him.
He hath no eyes,—the dust—hath blinded them;
Comb down his hair; look! Look! it stands upright,
Like lime-twigs—to catch my winged soul;
Give me some drink, and bid the apothecary
Bring in the strong poison, that I bought of him.
Henceforth—let no man—trust the first false step
To guilt. It hangs upon a precipice,
Whose deep descent, in fast perdition ends.
How far—am I plunged down, beyond all thought,
Which I this evening framed!
Consume horror! guilt—beyond a name!
Dare not my soul repent. In thee, repentance
Were second guilt, and 'twere blaspheming heaven
To hope for mercy. My pain can only cease
When gods want power to punish. Ha! the dawn!
Rise, never more, O! sun! let night prevail.
Eternal darkness—close the world's wide scene:
And hide me—from myself.

525. GRIEF is disappointment, devoid of hope; but muscles braced instantly, imply hope strongly, and a spirited vivacity in the eye, is the effect of pleasure and elevation. They are inconsistent with a passion that depresses, which grief manifestly does: because depression slackens the nerves, and unbraced nerves deject the looks and air, necessarily; therefore, a relaxed mien, and languid eye, form the truest picture of natural sorrow. The smaller engraving represents vacant grief, and the other deep silent grief.

I'll go, and, in the anguish of my heart,
Weep o'er my child,—if he must die, my life
Is wrapt in his; and shall not long survive;
'Tis for his sake, that I have suffered life,
Groaned in captivity, and outlived Hector,
Yes, my Ax-ty-a-nax! we will go together;
TOGETHER—to the realms—of night—we'll go.

Anecdote. Lesson from a Spider. King Robert Bruce, the restorer of the Scottish monarchy, being out one day reconnoitering the army, lay alone in a barn. In the morn- ing, still reclining on his pillow of straw, he saw a spider climbing up one of the rafters; the insect fell, but immediately made a second attempt to ascend; and the hero saw, with regret, the spider fall the second time; it then made a third unsuccessful attempt. With much interest and concern the monarch saw the spider baffled in its aim twelve times; but the thirteenth essay was successful; when the king, starting up, exclaimed, "This despicable insect has taught me perseverance: I will follow its example. Have I not been twelve times defeated by the enemy's superior force? On one fight more hangs the independence of my country." In a few days, his anticipations were realized, by the glorious victory at the battle of Bannockburn, and the defeat of Edward the Second.

Varieties. 1. The bee—rests on natural flowers, never on painted ones, however imitatively the color may be laid on; apply this to all things. 2. The rapidity with which the body may travel by steam, is indicative of the progress which the mind is about to make; and improvements in machinery—represent those which are developing in the art of teaching. 3. Equal and exact justice to all, of whatever state, or persuasion, religious and political. 4. What is matter? and what are its essential properties, and what its primeval form? 5. How much more do we know of the nature of matter, than we do of the essential properties of spirit? 6. What is the origin of the earth, and in what form did it originally exist,—in a gaseous, or igneous form? 7. Everything that exists, is designed to aid in developing and perfecting both body and mind: the universe is our school-house.

DESPAIR makes a despicable figure, and descends from a mean original. 'Tis the offspring of fear, of laziness, and sympatience; it argues a defect of spirit and resolution, and oftentimes of hon- esty too. I would not despair, unless I saw my misfortune recorded in the book of fate, and signed and sealed by necessity.

I am not mad; this hair I tear is mine;
My name is Constance; I was Goffrey's wife;
Young Arthur—is my son,—and he is lost.
I am not mad; I would to heaven I were;
For then, 'tis like I should forget myself.
Oh, if I could, what grief—I should forget!
Preach some philosophy—to make me mad,
And, cardinal, thou shalt be canonized;
For being not mad, but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason,
That I may be delivered of these woes,
And teaches me to kill, or hang myself;
If I were mad, I should forget my son.
Or madly think a bale of rags were he.
I am, not mad; too well I feel
The diffused plague of each calamity.

Make thy demand on those, who own thy power;
Know, I am still beyond thee; and tho' fortune
Has stripp'd me of this train, this pomp of greatness,
This outside of a king, yet still—my soul
Fixed high, and on herself alone dependent,
Is ever free and royal; and even now,
As at the head of battle, does defy thee.

526. JEALOUSY is doubtful anger, struggling against faith and pity; it is a tenderness resisted by resentment of suspected injury; the nerves braced strong, imply determination of revenge and punishment; while, at the same time, a soft passive hesitation in the eye, confesses a reluctance at the heart, to part with, or efface a gentle and indulged idea. Again, it is rage at a concluded infidelity; and then, the eye receives and flashes out sparklings of inflamed ideas, while the muscles, contracting the will's violence, from a repressive disposition of the heart, grow slack, and lose their spring, and so disarm and modify the enraged indignation. Now from this unsettled wavering in the balance of the purpose, when the heart and judgment weigh each other, and both scales alternately preponderate, is induced a glowing picture of jealousy.

Oh! what dam-ned minutes tells he o'er,
Who doats, yet doubts, suspects, yet strongly loves!
O jealousy! thou bane of social joy!
Oh! she's a monster, made of contradictions!
Let truth, in all her native charms appear,
And with the voice of harmony itself
Plead the just cause of innocence traduc'd;
Deaf as the adder, blind as upstart greatness,
She sees, nor hears. And yet, let slander whisper,
Rumor has fewer tongues than she has ears;
And Argus's hundred eyes are dim and slow,
To piercing jealousy's.

527. THE FRUITS. Men, instead of applying the salutary medicines of philosophy and religion to abate the rage, and recover the temper of their vitiated imaginations, cherish the disease in their bosoms, until their increasing appetites, like the hounds of Actæon, tear into pieces the soul they were intended to enliven and protect.

Jealousy—is like

A polish'd glass, held to the lips, when life's in doubt:
If there be breadth, 'twill catch the damp and show it.

Jealous rage—is but a hasty flame,
That blazes out, when love too fiercely burns.

It is jealousy's peculiar nature,
To swell small things to great; nay, out of nought,
To conjure much, and then to lose its reason
Amid the hideous phantoms it has formed.

Where love reigns, disturbing jealousy
Doth call himself affection's sentinel;
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And, in a peaceful hour, doth cry, kill, kill;
Distemp'ring gentle love with his desire,
As air and water do abate the fire.

How blest am I

In my just censure! in my true opinion!—
Alack for lesser knowledge!—how accurs'd
In being so bless'd! There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink, depart,
And yet partake no venom, for his knowledge
Is not infected; but if one present
The abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides,
With violent hefts.—I have drunk, and seen the spider!

Anecdote. Lord Gadshy, over the entrance of a beautiful grotto, had caused this inscription to be placed,—“Let nothing enter here but what is good.” Dr. Rennel, the master of the temple, who was walking over the ground, with much point asked—“Then where does your lordship enter!”

Everything Useful. The mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms, are designed for the nourishment, clothing, habitation, recreation, delight, protection and preservation of the human race; abuse does not take away use, any more than the falsification of truth destroys the truth; except, with those who do it. Everything which is an object of the senses, is designed to aid in developing the most external faculties of man; and what is of an economical and civil nature, and what is imbibed from parents, teachers, and others, and also from books, and reflections upon them all, is useful for perfecting the rational faculties of the mind; and all divine truths are designed to perfect the human mind, and prepare it for receiving a spiritual principle from the Lord, our Creator and Redeemer.

Varieties. 1. A fit Pair. A Dandy is a thing, in pantaloons, with a body and two arms, head without brains, tight boots, a cane, and white handkerchief, two broaches and a ring on his little finger. A Coquette is a young lady, with more beauty than sense, more accomplishments than learning, more charms of person than graces of mind, more admirers than friends, and more fools than wise men for her attendants. 2. The sunshine of prosperity—has attractions for all, who love to bask in its influence, hoping to share in its pleasures. 3. The verdant lawn, the shady grove, the variegated landscape, the beautiful ocean and the starry firmament are contemplated with pleasure, by every one, who has a soul. 4. A man should not be ashamed to own, that he has been in the wrong; which is only saying, in other words, that he is wiser to-day than he was yesterday. 5. The love of truth and goodness, is the best passion we can indulge. 6. A woman's life, is the history of the affections; the heart is her world; it is there her ambition strives for empire, and there she seeks for untold treasures. 7. The best and noblest conquest, is that of reason over our passions, and follies.

Those you make friends,
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rib in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But where they mean to sink ye.

Oh jealousy!
Love's eclipse! thou art in thy disease
A wild, mad patient, wondrous hard to please.

528. JUDGING—demands a grave, steady look, with deep attention, the countenance altogether clear from any appearance, either of disgust, or favor: the pronunciation slow, distinct, and emphatical, accompanied with little action, and that very grave.

JUDGING ACCORDING TO STRICT LAW.

If you refuse—to wed Demetrius—

Either must you die the death, or abjure,
Forever, the society of men.

Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, not yielding to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;

For aye—to be in a shady cloister mew'd;
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.

Take time to pause, and, by the next new moon,
(The sealing day betwixt my love and me,
For everlasting bond of fellowship.)

Upon that day, either prepare to die,

For disobedience to your father's will,

Or else—to wed Demetrius, as he would,

Or on Diana's altar to protest—

For age—austerity—and single life.

Miscellaneous. 1. In opening a cause, give a general view of the grounds on which the charge is made, and of the extent, magnitude, tendency, and effect of the crime alleged.

2. There is some consolation for dull authors, that the confectioner may put good into their books, if they fail to do it themselves.

3. Uncle Toby's oath: "The accusing spirit, which flew up to heaven's chancery, with the oath, blushed—as he gave it in; and the recording angel—dropped a tear upon it, and blotted it out forever.

4. Would not many persons be very much surprised, if their ideas of heavenly joys, should be exhibited hereafter, to show them their falsity?

5. Beauty is given, to remind us, that the soul should be kept as fair and perfect in its proportions, as the temple in which it dwells; the spirit of beauty flows in, only where these proportions are harmonious.

6. Can any one be a lover of truth, and a searcher after it, and yet turn his back on it, when presented, and call for miracles?

7. The aphorism, "Know thyself," is soon spoken, but one is a long time in obeying it; Gracian—was placed among the seven wise men of Greece, for having been the author of the maxim; but never, replied the sage, was any one placed there for having performed it.

Who painted Justice blind, did not declare
What inagistrates should be, but what they are;
Not so much, 'cause they rich and poor should weigh
In their just scales alike; but, because they,
Now blind with bribes, are grown so weak of sight,
They'll sooner feel a cause, than see it right.

Justice, painted blind,
Infers, his ministers are obliged to hear
The cause; and truth, the judge, determine of it;
And not sway'd or by favor, or affection,
By a false gloss, or corrected comment, alter
The true intent and letter of the law.

Man's rich with little, were his judgment true.

Anecdote. In the early period of the French revolution, when the throne and the altar had been overturned, a Benedictine monastery was entered, by a devastating band, its inmates treated with wanton and unprovoked cruelty, and the work of demolition and plunder going on,—when a large body of the inhabitants rallied, drove the spoilers away, but secured the ringleaders, whom they would have severely punished, had not the abbot, who had received the worst indignities from these very leaders, rushed forward to protect them. "I thank you, my children," said he, "for your seasonable interference; let us, however, show the superiority of religion, by displaying our clemency, and suffering them to depart." The ruffians were overpowered by the abbot's humanity, fell at his feet, entreated his benediction and forgiveness.

But yonder—comes the powerful king of day,
Rejoicing in the east. The less'ning cloud,
The kindling azure, and the mountain's brow,
Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach
Betoken glad. Lo, now, apparent all
Aslant the dew-bright earth, and color'd air,
He looks—in boundless majesty abroad:
And sheds the shining day, that, burnish'd, plays
On rocks, and hills, and tow'rs, and wand'ring
High gleaming from afar. [streams,

Varieties. 1. Should we be governed by our feelings, or by our judgment? 2. Earths, waters, and atmospheres—are the three general elements, of which all natural things are made. 3. The human body is composed of all the essential things which are in the world of nature. 4. The three periods of our development are—infancy, including the first seven years; childhood—the second seven, and youth—the third seven; the close of which,—is the beginning of manhood. 5. Adolescence—is that state, when man begins to think, and act—for himself, and not from the instruction, and direction of others. 6. The cerebellum, and consequently, the voluntary principle of the mind, never sleeps; but the cerebrum, and of course, the reasoning faculty—does. 7. Beware of the erroneous opinion, that you must be remarkably original; and that to speak, and write, unlike anybody else, is a great merit.

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: what the decline is,
He shall as soon read—in the eyes of others,
As feel—in his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy wings, but to the summer.

He stood up
Firm in his better strength, and like a tree
Rooted in Lebanon, his frame bent not.
His thin, white hairs—had yielded to the wind,
And left his brow uncovered; and his face,
Impressed with the stern majesty of grief,
Nerved to a solemn duty, now stood forth
Like a rent rock, submissive, yet sublime.

529. MALICE, or Spite, is a habitual malevolence, long continued, and watching occasion to exert itself on the hated object; this hateful disposition sets the jaws and gnashes the teeth, sends blasting flashes from the eyes, stretches the mouth horizontally, clinches the fists, and bends the elbows in a straining manner to the body; the tone of voice, and expression, are much the same as in anger, but not so loud; which see. These two engravings represent, the smaller one, revengeful hatred, and the other, abhorrence, fear, contempt, without power, or courage.

How like a fawning publican he looks!
I hate him, for he is a christian,
But more, for that, in low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rates of usance, here with us in Venice.
If I can catch him—once upon the hip,
I will feed fat—the ancient grudge I bear him.
He hates our sacred nation, and he rails,
(Even there where merch'nts most do congregate),
On my bargains, and my well-won thrift;
Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe,
If I forgive him.

530. MELANCHOLY, or Fixed Grief, is gloomy, sedentary, and motionless. The lower jaw falls, the lips are pale, the eyes cast down, half shut, the eyelids swollen and red, or livid tears trickling silently and unmixed, with total inattention to anything that passes. Words, if any, are few, and those dragged out rather than spoken; the accents weak and interrupted, sighs breaking into the middle of words and sentences.

There is a stupid weight—upon my senses;
A dismal sullen stillness, that succeeds
The storm of rage and grief, like silent death,
After the tumult, and the noise of life. [like it;
Would—it were death; as sure, 'tis wondrous
For I am sick of living. My soul is peev'd:
She kindles not anger, or revenge,
Love—was the informing, active fire within:
Now that is quenched, the mass forgets to move,
And longs to mingle—with its kindred earth.

The glance
Of melancholy—is a fearful gift;
What is it, but the telescope of truth?
Which strips the distance of its phantasies,
And brings life near—in utter nakedness,
Making the cold reality—too real!

Moody and dull melancholy,
Kinsman to grief and comfortless despair.
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow.

MELANCHOLY—discloses its symptoms according to the sentiments and passions of the minds it affects. An ambitious man fancies himself a lord, statesman, minister, king, emperor, or monarch, and pleases his mind with the vain hopes of even future preferment. The mind of a covetous man sees nothing but his re or spe, and looks at the most valuable objects with an eye of hope, or with the fond conceit, that they are already his own. A love-sick brain adores, in romantic strains, the lovely idol of his heart, or sighs in real misery, at her fancied frowns. And a scholar's mind evaporates in the fumes of imaginary praise and literary distinction.

Anecdote. Routs. "How strange it is," said a lady, "that fashionable parties should be called routs? Why, roul, formerly signified—the defeat of an army; and when soldiers were all put to flight, or to the sword, they were said to be routed!" "This title has some propriety too," said an observer of men and things, "for at these meetings, whole families are frequently routed out of house and home."

Varieties. 1. Agriculture—is the true foundation of all trade and industry; and of course, the foundation of individual and national riches. 2. When the moon, on a clear, autumnal evening, is moving through the heavens in silent glory, the earth—seems like a slumbering babe, smiling in its sleep, because it dreams of heaven. 3. The truths of science are not only useful, in themselves, but their influence is exceedingly beneficial in mental culture. 4. Let your amusements be select and temperate, and such as will fit you for the better performance of your duties; all others are positively injurious. 5. Raise the edifice of your virtue and happiness, on the sure foundation of true religion, or love to God, and love to man. 6. That will be well and speedily done in a family or community, when each one does his part faithfully. 7. Eloquence—is the power of seizing the attention, with irresistible force, and never permitting it to elude the grasp, till the hearer has received the conviction, that the speaker intends.

That I must die, it is my only comfort;
Death—is the privilege of human nature,
And life, without it, were not worth our taking;
Thither—the poor, the prisoner, and the mourner,
Fly for relief, and lay their burthen's down.
Come then, and take me into thy cold arms,
Thou meagre shade; here, let me breathe my last.
Charmed, with my father's pity and forgiveness,
More than if angels tuned their golden viols,
And sung a requiem—to my parting soul.

On the sands of life
Sorrow treads heavily, and leaves a print,
Time cannot wash away; while Joy trips by
With steps so light and soft, that the next wave
Wears his faint foot-falls out.

And coming events—cast their shadows before.

531. PARDONING—differs from acquitting, in this—the latter—means clearing a person, after trial, of guilt; whereas, the former—supposes guilt, and signifies merely delivering the guilty person from punishment; pardoning requires some degree of severity of aspect, and tone of voice, because the pardoned one is not an object of active, unmixed approbation; otherwise, its expression is much the same as granting; which see.

PARDONING A CRUEL PERSECUTION.

We pardon thee; live on, the state hath need of Humility and gratitude for this our gift, [men. May make a man of thee.

Great souls—forgive not injuries, till time Has put their enemies within their power.
That they may show—forgiveness—is their own.
That thou may'st see the difference of our spirits,
I pardon thee thy life, before thou ask it:
For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's;
The other half—comes to the general state;
Which humbleness—may drive into a fine.

532. PERPLEXITY, IRRESOLUTION, ANXIETY, are always attended with some degree of fear; it collects the body together, as if for gathering up the arms upon the breast, rubs the forehead, the eyebrows contracted, the head hanging on the breast, the eyes cast downward, the mouth shut, the lips compressed; suddenly, the whole body is agitated, alters its aspect, as having discovered something; then, falls into contemplation as before; the motions of the body are restless and unequal; sometimes moving quick, and sometimes slow; the pauses, in speaking to another, long, the tone of voice uneven, the sentences broken and unfinished; sometimes talks to himself, or makes grimaces, and keeping half of what arises in the mind.

Yes;—'tis Emilia:—by and by—she's dead.
'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death;
The noise was high:—ha! no more moving?
Still as the grave. Shall she come in? we're good?
I think she stirs again. No. What's the best?
If she come in, she'll speak to my wife.

Anecdote. Peter the Great made a law, in 1723, that if any nobleman beal, or ill-treated his slaves, he should be looked upon as insane, and a guardian be appointed, to take care of his person and estate. The great monarch once struck his gardener, who, being a man of great sensibility, took to his bed, and died in a few days. Peter, on hearing of this, exclaimed, with tears in his eyes: I have civilized my subjects; I have conquered other nations; yet I have not been able to civilize and conquer myself.

There is no remedy for time misspent,
No healing—for the waste of illness,
Whose very languor—is a punishment
Heavier than active souls—can feel or guess.
O hours of indolence—and discontent,
Not now—to be redeemed! ye sting not less
Because I know—this span of life was lent
For lofty duties, not for selfishness;
Not to be whiled away in aimless dreams,
But to improve ourselves—and serve mankind,
Life—and its choicest faculties were given.
Man should be ever better—than he seems:
And shape his acts, and discipline his mind,
To walk adorning earth, with hope of heaven!

Admiration and Love. There is a wide difference between admiration and love. The sublime, which is the cause of the former, always dwells on great objects, and terrible; the latter on small ones, and pleasing; we submit to what we admire, but we love what submits to us; in one case we are forced, in the other we are flattered, into compliance.

Laconics. 1. Every one, who would be an orator, should study Longinus on the sublime. 2. Many of our books, containing pieces for declamation, remind one of a physician's leaving medicine with a patient, without directions how to take it. 3. Would it not be well for some competent person to compile a work, to be called "Songs of the People," for all trades and avocations? 4. Letters and words are like the notes of a tune, representative of sounds and ideas. 5. Descriptive speech and writing, are like landscape painting. 6. The natural world is an allegory, the meaning of which we may find in ourselves. 7. Were a spectator to come from the other world, into many of our congregations, he would regard the singing, and perhaps the worship, as any thing but devotional.

Varieties. 1. He, who will peep into a drawer, will likely be tempted to take something out of it; and he, who steals a cent in his youth, will be very apt to steal a dollar in manhood. 2. A great change in life, is like a cold bath in winter; we all hesitate to make the first plunge. 3. The farther you advance in any art, or science, the more will you be delighted with simplicity of manner, and less attracted by superficial ornament. 4. One of the grand objects of education is—to collect principles and apply them to practice; and when this is generally done, mankind will be brought nearer to equality. 5. It is as impossible for us to understand a thing, without having the image of it on the retina of the mind's eye, as it is to see any thing, without having its image on the retina of the bodily eye. 6. Is not the education of children, for time and eternity, the highest social, civil, moral and religious duty, we are called upon to perform?

PLEASURE OF PIETY.

A Deity—believ'd, is joy begun;
A Deity ador'd, is joy advanc'd;
A Deity belov'd, is joy matu'r'd.
Each branch of piety delight inspires:
Faith—builds a bridge from this world to the next,
O'er death's dark gulf, and all its horror hides;
Praise, the sweet exhalation of our joy,
That joy exalts, and makes it sweeter still;
Pray'r's ardent opens heav'n, lets down a stream
Of glory, on the consecrated hour
Of man—in audience with the Deity.
Some—ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the spreading notions of the town;
They reason and conclude—from precedent,
And own stale notions, which they ne'er invent.
Some judge of authors' names, not works; and then
Nor praise, nor blame the writings, but the men.

533. MODESTY—is a diffidence of ourselves, accompanied with delicacy in our sense of whatever is mean, indirect, or dishonorable, or a fear of doing these things, or of having them imputed to us. Submission is an humble sense of our inferiority, and a quiet surrender of our power to a superior. Modesty bends the body forward; has a placid, downcast countenance, bends the eyes to the breast, if not to the feet, of the superior character: the voice is low, the tone submissive, and the words few. Submission adds to them a lower bending of the head, and a spreading out of the arms and hands, downwards towards the person submitted to.

Now, good my lord,

Let there be some more test of my metal,
Before so noble, and so great a figure,
Be stamped upon it.

O noble sir!

Your ever kindness doth wring tears from me;
I do embrace your offer, and dispose,
From henceforth, of poor Claudia.

As lamps burn silent with unconscious light,
So modest ease in beauty shines more bright;
Unaiming charms, with edge resistless fall,
And she who means no mischief, does it all.

534. PRIDE. When our esteem of ourselves, or opinion of our own rank or merit is so high, as to lessen the regard due to the rank and merit of others, it is called pride: when it supposes others below our regard, it is contempt, scorn, or disdain. Pride assumes a lofty look, bordering on the look and aspect of anger. The eyes full and open, but with the eye-brow considerably drawn down, the mouth pouting out, but mostly shut, and the lips contracted: the words walk out and strut, and are uttered with a slow, stiff, bombastic affectation of importance; the hands sometimes rest on the hips, with the elbows brought forward in the position called a kimbo; the feet at a distance from each other, and the steps long and stately. Obstinacy—adds to the aspect of pride.

Warcester! get thee gone; for I do see

Danger and disobedience in thine eye:

O sir, your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty—might never yet endure

The moody frontier, of a servant's brow;

You have good leave to leave us; when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.

Did'st thou not think, such vengeance must await
The wretch that with his crimes all fresh about
Rushes, irreverent, unprepared, uncalled, [him,
Into his Maker's presence, throwing back,

With insolent disdain, his choicest gifts?

Anecdote. One of the emperors of China met a procession, conducting some malefactors to punishment. On being informed of the facts, he burst into tears; when one of his courtiers endeavored to comfort him, saying, "In a commonwealth, there must be punishment; it cannot be avoided, as mankind now are." His majesty replied, "I weep not, to see those men prisoners, nor to see them chastised; I know the good must be protected from the bad; but I weep, because my time is not so happy as that of old was, when the virtues of the princes were such, that they served as a bridle to the people, and their example was sufficient to restrain a whole kingdom."

To recount Almighty works,

What words, or tongue, or scraph—can suffice?

Punishments. There are dreadful punishments enacted against thieves; but it were much better to make such good provisions, by which every man might be put in a method how to live, and so be preserved from the fatal necessity of stealing, and of being imprisoned, or dying for it.

Varieties. 1. Some politicians consider honesty excellent in theory,—and policy safe in practice; thus admitting the absurd theory, that principles entirely false, and corrupt in the abstract, are more salutary in their practical manifestation, than principles essentially good and true. 2. In public and private life, in the learned and unlearned professions, in scenes of business, and in the domestic circle, the masterpiece of man is decision of character. 3. The moral sense of the people, is the sheet-anchor, which alone can hold the vessel of state, amidst the storms that agitate the world. 4. True religion has nothing to fear, but much to hope, from the progress of scientific truths. 5. A writer or speaker should aim so to please, as to do his hearers and readers the greatest amount of good. 6. It is not the part of a lover of truth, either to cavil or reject, without due examination. 7. Ill manners are evidence of low breeding.

As turns a flock of geese, and, on the green,
Poke out their foolish necks in awkward spleen,
(Ridiculous in rage!) to hiss, not bite,
So war their quills, when sons of Dullness write.

Clear as the glass, his spotless fame.

And lasting diamond writes his name.

All jealousy

Must still be strangled in its birth: or time
Will soon conspire to make it strong enough
To overcome the truth.

When satire flies abroad on falsehood's wing,
Short is her life, and impotent her sting;
But, when to truth allied, the wound she gives
Sinks deep, and to remotest ages lives.

Every man in this age has not a soul
Of crystal, for all men to read their actions [der,
Thro' men's hearts and faces are so far asun-
That they hold no intelligence.

Something heavy on my spirit,
Too dull for wakefulness, too quick for slumber,
Sits on me as a cloud along the sky,
Which will not let the sunbeams through, nor yet
Descend in rain and end, but spreads itself
'Twixt earth and heaven, like envy between
And man, an everlasting mist. [man

SONNET.

Like an enfranchised bird, that wilfully springs,

With a keen sparkle in his glancing eye,

And a strong effort in his quivering wings,

Up to the blue vault of the happy sky,—

So my enamor'd heart, so long thine own,

At length from Love's imprisonment set free,

Goes forth into the open world alone,

Glad and exulting in its liberty:

But like that helpless bird (confid'g so long,

His weary wings have lost all power to soar,)

Who soon forgets to trill his joyous song,

And feebly fluttering, sinks to earth once more—

So, from its former bonds released in vain,

My heart still feels the weight of that remember'd chain.

Whole years of joy glide unperceived away,

While sorrow counts the minutes as they pass.

535. PROMISING is expressed by benevolent looks, a soft but earnest voice, and sometimes by inclining the head, or nod of consent: the hands open with palm upward, toward the person to whom the promise is made: sincerity in promising is expressed by laying the hand gently on the heart.

I'll deliver all.

And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
And sail, so expeditious, it shall catch
Your royal fleet far off.

I will be true to thee, preserve thee ever,
The sad companion of this faithful breast;
While life, and thought remain.

Where'er I go, my soul shall stay with thee;
'Tis but my shadow, that I take away.

536. REFUSING,—when accompanied with displeasure, is done nearly the same way as dismissing with displeasure: without it—it is done with a visible reluctance, that occasions the bringing out the words slowly, with such a shake of the head, and shrug, as is natural on hearing something that gives us a screw of the shoulders, and hesitation in the speech, as implies perplexity between granting and refusing; as in the following example of refusing to lend money:

They answer—in a joint—and corporate voice,
That now—they are at fault—want treasure—cannot
Do—what they would; are sorry, (you are honorable)—
But yet they could have wished—(they know not)— Something hath been amiss—(a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity;
And so intending other serious matter,
After distasteful looks—and other hard fractions—
With certain half eyes, and cold-moving words—
They frown me into silence.

Pride. The disesteem and contempt of others is inseparable from pride. It is hardly possible to overvalue ourselves, but by undervaluing our neighbors; and we commonly most undervalue those, who are, by other men, thought to be wiser than we are; and it is a kind of jealousy in ourselves that they are so, which provokes our pride.

They said, her cheek of youth was beautiful,
Till withering sorrow blanch'd the white rose there;
But grief did lay his icy finger on it,
And chill'd it—to a cold and joyless statue.

Anecdote. Garrick and Hogarth, sitting together one day, mutually lamented the want of a picture of Fielding; "I think," said Garrick, "I could make his face;" which he did accordingly. "For heaven's sake, hold," said Hogarth, "remain as you are a few minutes;" he did so, while the painter sketched the outlines, which were afterwards finished from their mutual recollection: and this drawing was the original of all the portraits we have of the admired Tom Jones.

He that holds fast the golden mean,
And lives, contentedly, between
The little—and the great.—
Feels not the wants—that pinch the poor,
Nor plagues—that haunt the rich man's door,
Inviting—all his state.

The tallest pines—feel most—the power
Of wintry blast; the loftiest tower—
Comes heaviest—to the ground.

The bolts—that span the mountain side,
His cloud-capt eminence—divide;
And spread the ruin round.

Nature—is frugal, and her wants are few.

Laconics. 1. We must be instructed by all things of one thing, if we would know that one thing thoroughly. 2. The evolution of the natural sciences, amounts to the creation of a new sphere, in the human mind. 3. All truths, scientific, philosophical and theological, are in perfect harmony with each other. 4. The use, or effect, which produces the end, must be the first point of analytic inquiry; i. e. first the fact, or result, and then, the reasoning upon it. 5. When it is impossible, to trace effects to visible causes, the mental sight must take up, and complete the operation. 6. There is a universal analogy between all the spheres of creation, natural, mental and spiritual, and between nature, and all things in human society. 7. Nature—is simple and easy, it is man that is difficult and perplexed.

Genius. They say of poets, that they must be born such; so must mathematicians, so must great generals, and so must lawyers, and so, indeed, must men of all denominations, or it is not possible that they should excel; but with whatever faculties we are born, and to whatever studies our genius may direct us, studies they still must be. Nature gives a bias to respective pursuits; and this strong propensity is what we mean by genius. Milton did not write his Paradise Lost; nor Homer his Iliad; nor Newton his Principia, without immense labor.

Light grief is proud of state, and courts compassion;
But there's a dignity—in careless sorrow,
A sullen grandeur, which disdains complaint;
Rage is for little wrongs—despair—is dumb.

Let coward guilt, with pallid fear,
To shelt'ring caverns fly,
And justly—dread the vengeful fate,
That thunders through the sky.
Protected by that hand, whose law,
The threatening storms obey,
Intrepid virtue—smiles secure,
As in the blaze of day.

Varieties. 1. When you can do it, without injury to truth and mercy, always avoid a quarrel and a lawsuit. 2. When the foundation of our hope is assailed, ought we not to contend, earnestly, for the faith once delivered to the saints? 3. When there is a right desire, and an untiring industry, there will, eventually, be the reward of light. 4. They, who understand most of a subject, will be very indulgent to those, who know but little of it. 5. If we are unwilling to do anything for ourselves, how can we expect others will do much for us? 6. Every deceiver, whether by word, or deed, is a liar; and no one, that has been once deceived by him, will fail to shun, if not despise him.

Whether present, or absent, you always appear,
A youth—most bewitchingly pleasant,
For when you are present, you're absent—my dear;
And when you are absent—you're present.
How charming—is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute.
And a perpetual feast—of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns.

Seeming devotion doth but gild the knave,
That's neither faithful, honest, just nor brave;
But where religion doth—with virtue join,
It makes a hero—like an angel shine.

537. REMORSE, or a painful sense of guilt, casts down the countenance, and clouds it with anxiety; hangs down the head; draws down the eye-brows; the right hand beats the breast; the teeth gnashes with anguish, and the whole body is strained, and violently agitated: if strong remorse is succeeded by the more gracious disposition of penitence, or contrition, the eyes are raised, (tho' with great appearance of doubting and fear,) to the throne of mercy, and immediately cast down again to the earth; then floods of tears are seen to flow; the knees are bended, or the body prostrated on the ground; the arms are spread in a suppliant posture, and the voice of deprecation is uttered with sighs and groans, timidity, hesitation, and trembling. The engraving indicates a noble mind in distress.

The heart,
Pierced with a sharp remorse for guilt,
Disdains the costly poverty of hecatombs,
And offers the best sacrifice—itself.
Blest tears—of soul-felt-penitence!
In whose benign, redeeming flow—
Is felt the first—the only sense—
Of guiltless joy—that guilt can know.
Go, maiden, weep—the tears of woe,
By beauty—to repentance given,
Though bitterly—on earth they flow.
Shall turn to fragrant balm—in Heaven!

538. SECURITY—diminishes the passions; the mind, when left to itself, immediately languishes; and, in order to preserve its ardor, must be every moment supported by a new flow of passion. For the same reason, despair, though contrary to security, has a like influence.

539. RAILLERY, in sport, without real animosity, puts on the aspect of cheerfulness, and sometimes a kind of simple laughter.—and the tone of voice is sprightly. With contempt or disgust, it casts a look asquint from time to time, at the object, and quits the cheerful aspect, for one mixed between an affected grin and sourness; the upper lip is drawn up with a smile of disdain: the arms sometimes set a-kimbo on the hips, and the right hand now and then thrown out towards the object, as if they were going to strike one a back-handed blow: voice rather loud, arch, and meaning; sentences short, expressions satirical, with mock-praise occasionally intermixed.

You have done that, which you should be sorry for.
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you,
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me;
For I can raise no money by vile means.
No—Cassius, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring—
From the hard hands of peasants, their vile trash,
By any indirection. I did send
To you for gold—to pay my legions;
Which you denied me; was that done, like Cassius?

Should I—have answered Caius Cassius thus?
When Marcus Brutus—grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal-counters from his friends,
Be ready—gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

Anecdote. A young gentleman, (the son of his Majesty's printer, who had the patent for publishing Gibbon's works,) made his appearance, at an assembly, dressed in green and gold. Being a new face, and extremely elegant, though he was not overstocked with sense, he attracted much attention, and a general murmur prevailed, to know who he was. A lady replied, loud enough to be heard by the stranger, "Oh! don't you know him? It is young Gibbon, bound in calfs, and gilt; but not lettered."

Seeing Right. He, only, sees well, who sees the whole, in the parts, and the parts, in the whole. I know but three classes of men; those who see the whole, those who see but a part, and those who see both together.

Varieties. 1. He, who lives well, and believes aright, will be saved; but he, who does not live well, and believe aright, cannot be saved. 2. Let times be ever so good, if you are stolthful, you will be in want: but let times be ever so bad, if you are diligent in the performance of duty, you will prosper. 3. The reptile, in human form, should be avoided with great care. 4. If the sun is to be seen by its own light, must not the truth be seen in like manner? The soundest argument will produce no more conviction in an empty head, than the most superficial declamation; as a feather and a quiver will fall with equal velocity, in a vacuum. 5. As light—has no color, water—no taste, and air—no odor, so, knowledge should be equally pure, and without admixture. 6. We should have a glorious conflagration, if all, who cannot put fire into their books, would consent to put their books into the fire. 7. The union of truth and goodness—is like that of water and fire, which nothing can resist.

As up the tower of knowledge slow we rise,
How wide and fair the opening prospect lies!
But while the view expands, the path grows steeper,
The steps more slippery, and the chasm 's deeper:
Then why climb on? Not for the prospect's beauty,
Not for the triumph, but because 'tis duty.

What thing is love, which naught can countervail?

Naught save itself, ev'n such a thing is love.

And worldly wealth in worth as far doth fail,

As lowest earth doth yield to heav'n above.

Divine is love, and scorneth worldly pelf,

And can be bought with nothing but with self.

We see but half the causes of our deeds,
Seeking them wholly in the outer life,
And heedless of the encircling spirit-world,
Which, tho' unseen, is felt, and sows in us
All gems of pure, and world-wide purposes.

O fortune! thou canst not divide

Our bodies so, but that our hearts are tied,
And we can love by letters still, and gifts,
And dreams.

It is in rain, that we would coldly gaze—
On such as smile upon us; the heart—must
Leap kindly back—to kindness.

540. REPROVING—puts on a stern aspect; roughens the voice, and is accompanied with gestures, not differing much from that of threatening, but not so lively; it is like reproach, (which see,) but without the sourness and ill-nature.

ILLUSTRATION. What right have you, to waste your time, which is the state's; your health, which makes time worthful; and the life of goodness in you, which makes living all your acts? Answer me—what right have you to wrong yourself, and all the world?

How comes it, Cassio, you are thus forgot;
That you unlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion—for the name,
Of a night brawler? Give me answer to it.

RESIGNATION.

Yet, yet endure, nor murmur, O my soul; [less?
For, are not thy transgressions great and number—
Do they not cover thee—like rising floods?
And press thee—like a weight of waters down?
Does not the hand of righteousness—afflict thee?
And who—shall plead against it? who shall say—
To Power Almighty, thou hast done enough;
Or bid his dreadful rod of vengeance stay?
Wait then, with patience, till the circling hours
Shall bring the time—of thy appointed rest,
And lay thee down—in death.

Duties of Society. Every right produces a corresponding duty; hence, may be inferred the positive duty of society, to give every individual, born in its bosom, an adequate education. For if society has a right to the services of every one of its members,—this right necessarily involves some duties; and what can that duty more directly be, than that society should give to all its children, such an education, as will fit them for the services it intends to exact from them in after life? And if parents are unable to give their children such an education, it is the duty of society to assist them; and if they are unwilling, society ought to take the place of parents, and perform the duty of the parents. No one can violate the laws of God, nor the government of the world, with impunity; and the more sacred the trust, the more terrible will be the effects of a disregard of them.

Each substance of a grief—hath twenty shadows,
Which show like grief itself, but are not so:
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire—to many objects;
Like perspectives, which, rightly gazed upon,
Show nothing but confusion; eyed awry,
Distinguish form.

Too Common. Envy, hatred, malice, and uncharitableness. How melancholy and heart-rending—to reflect upon the vast number of professing christians—of all orders, who show, by their deeds, that they are under the influence of these infernal passions; altho' in their sabbath devotions, they may pray against them with their lips, and entreat their Maker to enable them to keep the law which says, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." Let a man of one branch of the church, leave it, even from the best of motives, and join another, which happens to differ from it in religious belief, and how soon the air is rent with the political cry, "Shoot the deserter." Nothing seems too bad for the disaffected to say about their marked victim; whose departure from them tacitly calls in question the infallibility of their doctrines, and thereby wounds their self-love, which makes them care more for their party, than for the progress of truth. What is the character, business, peace and happiness of the supposed offender, to them, when bent on his destruction? Alas! how unlike the conduct of the true christian! Thus is seen the rottenness of "profession, without principle."

Dead Languages. That man must have a strange value for words, when he can think it worth while to hazard the innocence and virtue of his son for a little Greek and Latin; whilst he should be laying the solid foundations of knowledge in his mind, and furnishing it with just rules to direct his future progress in life.—Locke.

Anecdote. Dandies. As lady Montague was walking through a public garden with a party, she was very much annoyed by an impertinent coxcomb, who was continually making some foolish observation. On approaching one of the temples, over which there was a Latin inscription, she took advantage of it, to expose his ignorance, in the hope of putting him to silence. "Pray sir," said she, "be kind enough to explain that inscription to us." "Madam," said he, with an affected air, "I really do not know what it means, for I see it is dog Latin." "How very extraordinary it is," said lady Mary, "that puppies should not understand their own language."

IMAGINATION.

The lionate, the lover, and the poet,
Are, of imagination, all compact:
One—sees more devils, than vast hell can hold;
That—is the madman: the lover, all as frantic,
Sees Helen's beauty—in a brow of Egypt:
The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling, [heaven;
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to
And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing,
A local habitation, and a name.
Such tricks hath strong imagination;
That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehends some bringer of that joy;
Or, in the night, imagining some fear,
How easy is a bush—supposed a bear?
An honest soul—is like a ship at sea,
That sleeps at anchor—upon the occasion's eahn;
But, when it rages, and the wind blows high,
She cuts her way—with skill and majesty.

Varieties. 1. What is the difference between acute and chronic disease? 2. It is folly for an eminent man to think of escaping censure, and a weakness to be affected by it. 3. If we had it in our power to gratify every wish, we should soon feel a surfeit. 4. When anything below God—is the supreme object of our love, at some time or other, it will be an object of sorrow. 5. Truth—is its own witness, and fears not a free and impartial examination; it seeks to be seen in its own resplendent brightness. 6. By confessing our faults to others, we contribute very much towards putting them away, and confirming ourselves against them. 7. Which is worse—to worship the works of our own hands, or the creations of our own imagination?

541. SCORN. is negligent anger; it insinuates therefore, by a voluntary slackness, or disarming of the nerves, a known, or concluded essence of all power in the united object, even to make the defence seem necessary: and the unbraced muscles are assisted in this show of contemptuous disregard, by an affected smile upon the eye, because slack nerves, if at the same time the looks were also languid, would too much resemble sorrow, or even fear; whereas, the purpose is disdain and insult: and tho' in more provoking serious cases, where scorn admits disturbance, it assumes some sense of anger, it must still retain the slack unguarded languor of the nerves, lest it should seem to have conceived impressions of some estimable and important weightiness, where its design is utter disregard and negligence.

*Age, thou art sham'd;
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods;
When went there by an age, since the sun shone,
But it was fated with more than one man?
When could they say, till now, who talked of Rome,
That her wide walls—encompassed but one man!*

542. LANGUAGE OF FEELING. There is an original element in our natures, a connection between the senses, the mind and the heart, implanted by the Creator, for pure and noble purposes, which cannot be reasoned away. You cannot argue men out of their senses and feelings; and, after having wearied yourself and others, by talking about books and history, set your foot upon the spal, where some great and memorable exploit was achieved, especially, with those whom you claim kindred, and your heart smelts within you. You do not now reason; you feel the inspiration of the place. Your cold philosophy vanishes, and you are ready to put off your shoes from your feet; for the place whereon you stand is holy. A language which letters cannot shape, which sounds cannot convey, speaks, not to the head, but to the heart; not to the understanding, but to the affections.

The player's profession,—
Lies not in trick, or attitude, or start,
Nature's true knowledge is the only art,
The strong-felt passion bolts into his face;
The mind untouch'd, what is it but grimace!
To this one standard, make your just appeal,
Here lies the golden secret, learn to feel:
Of fool, or monarch, happy or distress'd,
No actor phrases that is not possess'd.
A single look more marks the internal woe,
Than all the windings of the lengthening oh!
Up to the face the quick sensation flies,
And darts its meaning from the speaking eyes;
Love, transport, madness, anger, scorn, despair,
And all the passions, all the soul is there.

Thoughts! what are they?
They are my constant friends;
Who, when harsh fate its dull brow bends,
Uncloud me with a smiling ray,
And, in the depth of midnight, force a day.

Anecdote. To a man of exalted mind, the forgiveness of injuries, is productive of more pleasure and satisfaction, than obtaining vengeance. The Roman emperor, Adrian, who was skilled in all the accomplishments of body and mind, one day seeing a person, who had injured him, in his former station, thus addressed him, "You are safe now; I am emperor."

Braying. There are braying men in the world as well as braying asses; for, what's loud and senseless talking, huffing, and swearing, any other then a more fashionable way of braying?

Varieties. 1. Tillers—should leave the industrious to their labor, and visit only those who are as idle as themselves. 2. There are some minds, which, like the buzzard's eye, can pass heedlessly over the beauties of nature, and see nothing but the carcass, rotting in the corner. 3. He, is well constituted, who grieves not for what he has not, and rejoices for that he has. 4. True ease in writing, speaking and singing, comes from art, not chance. 5. When once a man falls, all will tread on him. 6. The action should always keep time with the emphasis and the voice: it should be the result of feeling, not of thought.

His words were fire, both light and heat! At once
With zeal they warm'd us and convinc'd with reason—
I had read and heard of eloquence before, [son.
How 't is despotic—takes the heart by storm,
Where'er the ramparts, prejudice, or use,
Environ it withal; how, 'fore its march,
Stony resolves have given way like flax;
How it can raise, or lay, the mighty surge
Of popular commotion, as the wind,
The wave that frets the sea—but, till to-day,
I never proved its power. When he began,
A thousand hearers prick'd their ears to list,
With each a different heart; when he left off,
Each man could tell his neighbor's by his own.

Rage—is the shortest passion of our souls.
Like narrow brooks, that rise with sudden show'rs,
It swells in haste, and falls again as soon.
Still, as it ebbs, the softer thoughts flow in,
And the deceiver—love—supplies its place.

VIRTUE THE BEST TREASURE.

Virtue, the strength and beauty of the soul,
Is the best gift of Heav'n: a happiness—
That, even above the smiles and frowns of fate,
Exalts great nature's favorites: a wealth
That ne'er encumbers; nor to baser hands
Can be transferr'd. It is the only good—
Man justly boasts of, or can call his own.
Riches—are oft by guilt and baseness earn'd.
But for one end, one much-neglected use,
Are riches worth our care; (for nature's wants
Are few, and without opulence supplied.)
This noble end is—to produce the soul:
'To show the virtues in their fairest light;
And make humanity—the minister
Of bounteous Providence.

I stand—as one upon a rock,
Environ'd—with a wilderness of sea;
Who marks the waxing tide—grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever, when some envious surge
Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him.

543. SHAME—or a sense of appearing to a disadvantage, before one's fellow-creatures, turns away the face from the beholders, covers it with blushes, hangs the head, casts down the eyes, draws down and contracts the eye-brows; either strikes the person dumb, or, if he attempts to say anything, in his own defence, causes his tongue to falter, confounds his utterance, and puts him upon making a thousand gestures and grimaces, to keep himself in countenance: all which only heightens his confusion and embarrassment.

Oh my dread Lord—

I should be guiltier—than my guiltiness,

To think—I can live undiscernible,

When I perceive your grace, like power divine,

Hath looked upon my passes; then, good prince,

No longer session—hold upon my shame,

But let my trial—be my own confession;

Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,

Is all the grace I beg.

Hard Questions. In every step, which reason takes in demonstrative knowledge, must there be intuitive certainty? Does the power of intuition, imply that of reasoning, when combined with the faculty of memory? In examining those processes of thought, which conduct the mind, by a series of consequences, from premises to a conclusion, is there any intellectual act whatever, which the joint operation of memory, and what is called intuition, does not sufficiently explain? What is the distinction between the elements of reasoning, and the principles of reasoning? If the elements of reasoning are employed to connect the concatenations in an argument; and if an argument could not be made without the elements of reasoning; does it follow, that the elements of reasoning imply the principles of reasoning? If, in every step which reason takes in demonstrative knowledge, there must be intuitive certainty, does this necessarily imply anything more, than that, without the intuitive power, we could not know when one link in the chain was completed?

544. SURPRISE AT UNEXPECTED EVENTS.

Gone to be married; gone to swear a peace!

False blood to false blood joined! Gone to be friends!

Shall Levis have Blanch? and Blanch these pro-

It is not so: thou hast mis-spoke, mis-heard? [voices]

Be well advised, tell o'er thy tale again:

It cannot be! thou dost but say 'tis so;

What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?

What means that hand—upon that breast of thine?

Why holds thine eye—that lamentable rheum,

Like a proud river—peering o'er his bounds?

Be there sad sighs—confirmers of thy words?

Then speak again; not all thy former tale,

But this one word—whether thy tale be true?

Anecdote. To Cure Sore Eyes. "Good-morning, landlord," said a man the other day, as he stepped into a tavern to get something to drink. "Good-morning, sir," replied mine host; "how do you do?" "Oh, I don't know," said the man, raising his goggles, and wiping away the rheum; "I'm plagued most to death with these pesky sore eyes. I wish you'd tell me how to cure 'em." "Willingly," said the merry host. "Wear your goggles over your mouth, wash your eyes in brandy, and I'll warrant a cure."

Vice—oft is hid in virtue's fair disguise,

And, in her honor'd form—escapes inquiring eyes.

Modesty in a man is never to be allowed as a good quality, but a weakness, if it suppresses his virtue, and hides it from the world, when he has, at the same time, a mind to exert himself. A modest person seldom fails to gain the good-will of those he converses with, because nobody envies a man, who does not appear to be pleased with himself.

Miscellaneous. 1. It is a striking feature in the present day, that men are more and more inclined to bring old sayings and doings to the test of questions, as these—what do they mean? and what for! and consequently, are beginning to awake from a long mental sleep, and to assert their right to judge and act for themselves. 2. Great hinderance to good is often found in the want of energy in the character, arising from an individual not having accustomed himself to try and do his best, on all occasions. 3. Whoever would become a person of intelligence and prudence, in any of the departments of life, must early accustom himself and herself to look for the meaning of his own and others' sayings; and consider well the end and object of his own, and others' doings.

For often vice—provok'd to shame—

Borrows the color—of a virtuous deed:

Thus, libertines—are chaste, and misers—good,

A coward—valiant.

That holy Shame, which ne'er forgets

What clear renown—it used to wear;

Whose blush remains, when Virtue sets.

To show her sunshine—has been there.

A flush, [cheek,

(As shame, deep shame, had once burnt on her

Then linger'd there forever) look'd like health

Offering hope, vain hope, to the pale lip;

Like the rich crimson—of the evening sky,

Brightest—when night is coming.

Wise men—ne'er sit and wait their loss,

But cheerly seek how to redress their harms,

What tho' the mast—be now blown over-board,

The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,

And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood?

Yet lives our pilot still: Is't meet, that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,

With tearful eyes, add water to the sea,

And give more strength to that which hath too much;

Whiles, in his moan, the ship splits on the rock.

Which industry—and courage—might have sav'd?

Varieties. 1. It is wrong to affront anybody; and he who does it, must expect to be paid in his own coin. 2. Many persons, in easy circumstances, often ruin themselves, by attempting to vie with the rich. 3. Do not the works of God, as well as his Word—teach lessons of wisdom? 4. Everything tends to produce its likeness; the idle make their associates idle; the libertine—corrupts the innocent; the quarrelsome—create broils; gamblers—make gamblers, and thieves—thieves. 5. Are thinking and motion—all the actions of which we can conceive? thinking—being an act of the mind, as motion is of matter? 6. Which invention is more important, that of the mariner's compass, or the art of printing? 7. When we truly love God, we shall also love one another.

The real patriot—bears his private wrongs,
Rather than right them—at the public cost.

545. SUSPICION: JEALOUSY. Fear of another's endeavoring to prevent our attainment of the desired good, raises our SUSPICION; and suspicion of his having obtained, or likely to obtain it, raises, or constitutes JEALOUSY. Jealousy between the sexes—is a ferment of love, hatred, hope, fear, shame, anxiety grief, pity, suspicion, envy, pride, rage, cruelty, vengeance, sadness, and every other tormenting passion, which can agitate the human mind. Therefore, to express it well, one should know how to represent all these passions by turns, and often several of them together: it shows itself by restlessness, peevishness, thoughtfulness, anxiety, and absence of mind. Sometimes it bursts out into piteous complaints and weeping: then a gleam of hope, that all is yet well, lights up the countenance into a momentary smile: immediately the face, clouded with general gloom, shows the mind over-cast again with horrid suspicions, and frightful imaginations; thus the jealous—is a prey to the most tormenting feelings, and is alternately tantalized with hope, and plunged into despair.

Who finds the heifer dead, and bleeding fresh,
And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter?
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak?

546. HANDS, FEET AND ARMS. Observe accurately, the different positions of the feet, hands, arms, &c. of the oratorical and poetical engravings, and that of the passions; and study out the various causes, or subjects, and states of thoughts and feelings, prompting them; and, in imitating them, there will often be suggested to you the appropriate feeling and thought. Each engraving should be made a particular subject of study; and there is more matter on a page of engravings, than on any printed page; but, in speaking, never think about making gestures; let them be the result of unrestrained feeling, and they will be more likely to be right: guard, sedulously against all affectation, and do nothing you do not feel and think. If these hints and suggestions are not of use to you, more would be of but little service; and to illustrate every one, and many more, you will find an abundance of examples in the work; which is designed for those who think.

Would he were fatter; but I fear him not:
Yes, if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man, I should avoid
So soon as this spare Cassius. He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men.
He loves no plays; he hears no music;
Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mocked himself, and scorned his spirit,
That could be moved to smile at anything.
Such men as he, be never at heart's ease,
Whilst they behold a greater than themselves,
And therefore, are they very dangerous.

Anecdote. Queen Caroline, having observed that her daughter, the princess, had made one of the ladies about her, stand a long time, while the princess was talking to her, on some trifling subject, was resolved to give her a suitable reprimand. Therefore, when the princess came, in the evening, to read to her mother, as usual, and was drawing a chair to sit down, the queen said to her,

No, my dear, you must not sit; for I intend to make you stand, this evening, as long as you made lady B— remain in the same position.

Laconic. There is no difference between knowledge and temperance; for he, who knows what is good, and embraces it, who knows what is bad, and avoids it, is learned and temperate. But they, who know very well what ought to be done, and yet do quite otherwise, are ignorant and stupid.

Varieties. 1. What is the difference between possessing the good things of life, and enjoying them? 2. In our intercourse with others, we should ascertain what they wish to hear; not what we wish to say. 3. True politeness may be cherished in the hovel, as well as in the palace; and the most tattered clothing, cannot conceal its charms. 4. Is not true religion—eternally the same, whatever may be the conduct of its professors? 5. Humility—learns the lessons from itself; while it never scorns the instructions of others. 6. Beauty—gains nothing, and homelessness—loses much, by gaudy attire. 7. Music—tends to harmonize and melodize the affections and thoughts, as well as to animate, and lubricate the inventive faculties. 8. Everything that originates in order, is truth, which manifests itself by virtue of its inherent light. 9. The groves and the woods are the musical academies of the singing birds. 10. Time and space are confined to matter.

As Nature and Garrick were talking one day,
It chanced they had words, and fell out;
Dame Reason would fain have prevented a fray,
But could not, for both were so stout.
Says Garrick, I honor you, madam, 'tis true,
And with pride, to your laws, I submit;
But Shakespeare paints stronger and better than you,
All critics of taste will admit.
How! Shakespeare paint better and stronger than I,
(Cries Nature, quite touch'd to the soul:)
Not a word in his volumes I ever could see,
But what from my records he stole.
And thou, wicked thief—may, the story I'll tell,
Whenever I paint, or I draw,
My pencils you filch, and my colors you steal,
For which thou shalt suffer the law;
And when on the stage, in full lustre you shine,
To me all the praise shall be given:
The toil shall be yours, and the honor be mine,
So Nature and Garrick are even.
Foul jealousy, that turnest love divine
To joyless dread, and mak'st the loving heart
With hateful thoughts to languish and to pine,
And feed itself with self-consuming smart,
Of all the passions in the mind, thou vilest art.
O, let him far be banished away,
And in his stead let love forever dwell;
Sweet love, that doth his golden wings embay
In blessed nectar, and pure pleasure's well,
Untroubled of vile fear or bitter fell.

The soul of man—
Createth its own destiny of power;
And, as the trial,—is intense here,
His being—hath a nobler strength in heaven.
O marriage! marriage! what a curse—is thine,
Where hands, alone, consent—and hearts—abhor

247. TEACHING, INSTRUCTING, EXPLAINING. INCUICATING, OR GIVING ORDERS, requires a mild, serene air, sometimes approaching to an authoritative gravity; the features and gestures altering according to the age, or dignity of the pupil, or audience, and importance of the subject discussed. To youth, it should be mild, open, serene, and condescending. To equals and superiors, modest and diffident; but, when the subject is of great dignity and importance, the air and manner of conveying the instruction, ought to be firm and emphatical; the eye steady and open, the eyebrow a little drawn over it, but not so much as to look dogmatical; the voice strong, steady, clear; the articulation distinct; the utterance slow, and the manner approaching to confidence, rather peremptory.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden,
Do you neglect your gilly-flowers and carnations?

Per. I have heard it said.

There is an art, which, in their pinedness, shares
With green creating nature.

Pol. Say there be;
Yet nature is made better by no mean,
But nature makes that mean; so, over that art,
Which you say adds to nature, is an art
Which nature makes; you see, sweet maid, we
A gentler scion to the wildest stock; [marry
And make conceive a bark of baser kind
By bud of nobler race. This is an art
Which does mend nature, change it rather; but
The art itself is nature.

548. LANGUAGE OF THE FEET. The feet advance or retreat, to express desire or aversion, love or hatred, courage or fear, dancing or leaping,—is often the effect of joy and exultation; stamping of the feet expresses earnestness, anger or threatening. Stability of position and facility of change, general ease and grace of action, depend on the right use of the feet; see the whole length engravings, a large part of which is to be imitated, not with any specific recitations in view, but for the purpose of disciplining the limbs and muscles.

PITIFUL.

TERROR.

The bay-trees, in our country, are all wither'd,
And meteors—fright the fixed stars of heaven;
The pale-faced moon—looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-look'd prophets—whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,
The one, in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other, to enjoy—by rage and war.

Go to your bosom;
Knock there; and ask your heart what it doth know
That's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guiltiness, such as his is,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother.

Laconics. 1. It is very easy, when a child asks a silly question, to show that it is so; and, if the question cannot be answered, it is better to say so at once; for a child has too much common perception to expect that his parent knows every thing; but to refuse to answer, without giving a reason, impresses the child, that his parent is unkind and unreasonable. 2. The very sight of a child ought to inspire a parent, or teacher, with the thought, "What can I say to be useful to him? or what can I say to please him?" 3. The habit of talking familiarly and usefully to his children, to each according to his capacity, is an invaluable quality in a parent, and its exercise will be delightful to both. 4. Let it be a rule with us, in all cases, never to charge want of charity, except where we can, from a want of justice.

Anecdote. Sir Isaac Newton—possessed a remarkably mild and even temper. On a particular occasion, he was called out of his study, to an adjoining apartment, when his favorite little dog, named Diamond, threw down a lighted lamp among his papers, and the almost finished labors of many years, were consumed in a few moments. Sir Isaac soon returned, and beheld, with great mortification, his irreparable loss; but he only exclaimed, with his usual self-possession, "O Diamond, Diamond! thou little knowest the mischief thou hast done."

You undergo too strict a paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair;
Your words have took such pains, as if they labor'd
To bring manslaughter into form, set quarreling
Upon the head of valor; which, indeed,
Is valor misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born:
He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst, that man can breathe; and make his wrongs
His outsiders; wear them, like his raiment, carelessly;
And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.
If wrongs be evils, and enforced, as hell,
What folly 'tis, to hazard life for ill?

Varieties. 1. Is toleration a duty for others, and not for ourselves? 2. One blessing of life, my dear friend, is—to give. 3. It is no proof of freedom from error, that we are acute in distinguishing the errors of others; this shows that all reformers, are men of like passions with ourselves. 4. National industry is the principal thing, that can make a nation great; it is the vestal fire, which we must keep alive, and consider that all our prosperity is coupled with its existence. 5. If we are fit for heaven, are we not fit for earth? 6. It is better to live contentedly in our condition, than to affect to look bigger than we are, by a borrowed appearance. 7. Give your children education rather than fine clothes, or rich food. 8. Love—never reckons; the mother does not run up a milk score against her babe.

Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty:
For, in my youth, I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood:
Nor did not, with unbashful forehead, woo
The means of weakness and debility;
Therefore, my age—is as a lusty winter.
Frosty, but kindly.

Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core, ay, my heart of heart.

549. VENERATION. In religious veneration, the body always bends forward, as if ready to prostrate itself before the Lord of Hosts; the arms are spread out, but modestly, as high as the breast, and the hands are open: the tone of voice is submissive, timid, trembling, weak, suppliant; the words are brought out with a visible anxiety, approaching to hesitation; they are few, and slowly pronounced; nothing of vain repetition, haranguing, flowers of rhetoric, or reflected figures of speech; all simplicity, humility, lowliness, such as become a worm of dust, when presuming to address the high and lofty One, who inhabiteth Eternity; yet dwelleth with the meek and contrite spirit, that trembleth at His Word. In intercession for our fellow creatures, and in thanksgiving, we naturally assume a small degree of cheerfulness, beyond what is clothed in confession and deprecation: all affected ornaments in speech or gesture, in devotion, are very censurable. Example:

Hail, Source of Being! Universal Soul
Of Heaven and earth! Essential Presence, hail!
To Thee—I bend the knee; to Thee my thoughts
Continual climb; who, with a master hand,
Hast the great whole into perfection touched."

Almighty God,—'tis right,—'tis just,
That earthly forms should turn to dust;
But oh! the sweet—transporting truth,
The soul—shall bloom—in endless youth.

550. NATURAL LANGUAGE OF THE HANDS. The hand—has a great share in expressing our thoughts and feelings: raising the hands towards heaven, with the palms united, expresses devotion and supplication; wringing them, grief; throwing them towards heaven, admiration; defected hands, despair and amazement; folding them, illness; holding the fingers intertwined, musings and thoughtfulness; holding them forth together, yielding and submission; lifting them and the eyes to heaven, solemn appeal; waving the hand from us, prohibition; extending the right hand to any one, peace, pity, and safety; scratching the head, care and perplexing thought; laying the right hand on the heart, affection and solemn affirmation; holding up the thumb, approbation; placing the right forefinger on the lips perpendicularly, bidding silence, &c. &c. In these, and many other ways, are manifested our sentiments and passions by the action of the body: but they are shown principally in the face, and particularly in the turn of the eye, and the eyebrows, and the infinitely various motions of the lips.

551. WONDER—is inquisitive fear: and as it is inquisitive, it is steadfast, and demands firm muscles: but as it is fear, it cannot be properly expressed without the mark of apprehension and alarm. Were this alarm too much disturbed, full of motion and anxiety, it would then be Fear instead of Wonder, and would carry no consistence, with braced muscles; it is therefore pervaded, because inquisitive, with purpose of defence: and so, this application of alarm, with resolution to examine steadfastly, must constitute a nervous, awful, fixed attentiveness, and give the picture of the passion naturally. The effect of wonder is, to stop, or hold the mind and body in the states and positions in which the idea or object strikes us.

Says the earth to the moon, "You're a pilf'ring jade,
What you steal from the sun, is beyond all be-
Fair Cynthia replies, "Hold your prate, [lief;]"

The partaker—is as bad as the thief."

Anecdote. The benevolent and immortal John Howard, a celebrated English philanthropist, having settled his accounts, at the close of a particular year, and found a balance in his favor, proposed to his wife to employ it, in defraying the expenses of a journey to London; or for any other amusement she might prefer. "What a pretty cottage," she replied, "would this build for a poor family?" The charitable hint met his approbation, and the money was laid out accordingly.

No more thus brooding o'er you heap,
With av'rice painful vigils keep;
Still unenjoy'd the present store,
Still endless sighs are breath'd for more,
Oh! quit the shadow, catch the prize,
Which not all India's treasure buys!
To purchase heav'n, has gold the pow'r?
Can gold remove the mortal hour?
In life, can love be bought with gold?
Are friendship's pleasures to be sold?
No—all that's worth a wish—a thought,
Fair virtue gives, unbrib'd, unbought.
Cease, then, on trash thy hopes to bind;
Let nobler views engage thy mind.

Varieties. 1. When we are polite to others, entirely for our own sakes, we are deceitful; for nothing selfish has truth and goodness in it. But there is such a thing as true politeness, always kind, never deceitful. 2. The outward forms of politeness, are but the expressions of such feelings, as should dwell in every human heart. 3. True politeness is the spontaneous movement of a good heart, and an observing mind. 4. Will the ruling propensities of the parent, be transmitted to the child, and affect, and give bias to his character? 5. Foolish people are sometimes so ambitious of being thought wise, that they often run great hazards in attempting to show themselves such. 6. Guilt may attain temporal splendor, but can never confer real happiness. 7. The principles, which your reason and judgment approve, avow boldly, and adhere to steadfastly; nor let any false notions of honor, or pitiful ambition of shining, ever tempt you to forsake them.

A TALE OF WONDER.

Now the lough shakes the hall, and the ruddy
Who, who is so merry and gay? [wine flows;
Lemona is happy, for little she knows
Of the monster so grim, that lay hush'd in repose,
Expecting his evening prey.

While the music play'd sweet, and, with tripping
Bruno danc'd thro' the maze of the hall; [so light,
Lemona retir'd, and her maidens in white,
Led her up to her chamber, and bid her good night,
Then, went down again to the hall.

The monster of blood—now extend'd his claws,
And from under the bed did he creep; [paws;
With blood all besmear'd, he now stretch'd out his
With blood all besmear'd, he now stretch'd out
To feed—on the angel—asleep. [his jaws,

He seiz'd on a vein, and gave such a bite,
And he gave, with his fangs, such a tug—
She shriek'd! Bruno ran up the stairs in a fright;
The guests follow'd after, when bro't to the light,
"O have mercy!" they cried, "WHAT A BUG!"
You'll ne'er convince a fool, himself is so.

552. VEXATION, occasioned by some real or imaginary misfortune, agitates the whole frame; and, besides expressing itself with looks, tones, gestures and restlessness of perplexity, adds to these complaint, fretting, lamentation, and remorse.

ON NEGLECTING ONE'S DUTY.

O what a rogue and peasant slave am I;
Is it not monstrous, that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own counsel,
That, from her working, all his visage warmed;
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting,
With forms to his conceit; and all for nothing;
For Hec-u-ba! What's Hec-u-ba to him, or he, to
That he should weep for her? [Hecuba,

553. LANGUAGE OF THE HEAD. Every part of the body contributes to express our thoughts and affections; hence the necessity of training the whole man. The head is sometimes erect, denoting courage, or firmness; at others, down, or reeined, expressive of sorrow, grief and shame; again, it is suddenly drawn back, with an air of disdain, or shaken, as in dissent; or brought forward in assent; sometimes it shows, by a significant nod, a particular object, or person; threatens by one set of movements, approves by another, and expresses suspicion by another. Private practice must make all involuntary.

As yet—'tis midnight deep. The weary clouds,
Slow meeting, mingle into solid gloom.
Now, while the drowsy world lies lost in sleep,
Let me associate with the serious night,
And contemplation, her sedate compeer;
Let me shake off th' intrusive cares of day,
And lay the meddling senses all aside.

Where now, ye lying vanities of life!
Ye ever tempting, ever cheating train!
Where are you now? and what is your amount?
Vexation, disappointment, and remorse.
Sad, sick'ning thought! And yet, deluded man,
A scene of crude disjointed visions past,
And broken slumbers, rises still resolute,
With new flush'd hopes, to run the giddy round.

554. LANGUAGE OF THE FACE. The face, being furnished with a great variety of muscles, does more in manifesting our thoughts and feelings, than the whole body besides; so far as silent language is concerned. The change of color—shows anger by redness, fear—by palleness, and shame—by blushes; every feature contributes its portion. The mouth open, shows one state of mind; closed, another, and gnashing the teeth—another. The forehead smooth, and eye-brows easily arched, exhibit joy, or tranquillity; mirth opens the mouth towards the ears, crimps the nose, half shuts the eyes, and sometimes suffuses them with tears; the front, wrinkled into frowns, and the eye-brows overhanging the eyes, like clouds fraught with tempests, show a mind agitated with pity.

There is a history—in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased:
The which observed, a man may prophecy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life; which, in their seeds,
And weak beginnings, lie intresured.

Luxury—gives the mind a childish cast.

Moderation in Disputes. When we are in a condition to overthrow falsehood and error, we ought not to do it with vehemence, nor insultingly and with an air of contempt; but to lay open the truth, and with answers, full of mildness, to refute the falsehood.

Anecdote. An amiable youth, lamented deeply, the recent death of a most affectionate parent. His companion made an effort to console him, by the reflection, that he had always behaved towards the deceased with duty, tenderness and respect. "So I thought," replied the son, "while my parent was living; but now I recollect, with pain and sorrow, many instances of disobedience, and neglect, for which, alas! it is too late to make atonement."

Happy the school-boy! did he prize his bliss,
"Twere ill exchange'd—for all the dazzling gems.
That gaily sparkle in ambition's eye;
His are the joys of nature, his the smile,
The cherub smile of innocence and health,
Sorrow unknown, or, if a tear be shed,
He wipes it soon: for hark! the cheerful voice
Of comrades calls him to the top, or ball;
Away he hies, and clamors as he goes,
With glee, which causes him to tread on air

Reason. Without reason, as on a tempestuous sea, we are the sport of every wind and wave, and know not, till the event hath determined it, how the next billow will dispose of us; whether it will dash us against a rock, or drive us into a quiet harbor.

What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted?
Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just;
And he, but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience—with injustice is corrupted.

Varieties. 1. The dullest creatures are sometimes as dangerous as the fairest. 2. He, who puts a man off from time to time, is never right at heart. 3. What can reason perform, unassisted by the imagination? While reason traces and compares effects, does not imagination suggest causes? 4. Whenever we are more inclined to persecute than persuade, we may be certain, that our zeal has more of self-love in it, than charity; that we are seeking victory, more than truth, and are beginning to feel more for ourselves, than for others, and the cause of righteousness. 5. Is it possible, without divine aid, to obey the commandments? 6. As soon think of sending a man into the field, without good tools, as a child to school, without proper books. 7. What is more low and vile, than lying? and when do we lie more notoriously, than in disparaging, and finding fault with a thing, for no other reason, than because it is out of our power to accomplish it?

Rise with the lark, and with the lark to bed.
The breath of night's destructive to the hue
Of every flower that blows. Go to the field,
And ask the humble daisy, why it sleeps
Soon as the sun departs. Why close the eyes
Of blossoms infinite, ere the still moon
Her oriental rail puts off? Think why,
Nor let the sweetest blossom be exposed,
That nature boasts, to night's untimely damp.
There is no merit, when there is no trial;
And, till experience—stamps the mark of strength,
Cowards—may pass for heroes, faith, for falsehood,

555. The eyes, considered only as tangible objects, are, by their very forms, the windows of the soul—the fountains of life and light. Mere feeling would discover, that their size and globular shape are not unmeaning. The eye-brow, whether gradually sunken, or boldly prominent, is equally worthy of attention : as likewise are the temples, whether hollow, or smooth. That region of the face, which includes the eye-brows, eyes and nose, also includes the chief region of the will and understanding.

Nature hath framed strange fellows in her time :
Some, that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots, at a bag-piper;
And other of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

556. The images of our secret agitations are particularly painted in the eyes, which appertain more to the soul, than any other organ ; which seem affected by, and to participate in all its emotions ; express sensations the most lively, passions the most tumultuous, feelings the most delightful, and sentiments the most delicate. The eye—explains them in all their force and purity, as they take birth, and transmits them by traits so rapid, as to infuse into other minds the fire, the activity, the very image, with which themselves are inspired. It receives and reflects the intelligence of thought and warmth of the understanding.

One world sufficed not Alexander's mind :
Coop'd up he seem'd, in earth and seas confin'd ;
And struggling, stretch'd his restless limbs about
The narrow globe, to find a passage out :
Yet, enter'd in the brick-built town, he try'd
The tomb, and found the straight dimensions wide.
Death only, this mysterious truth unfolds,
The mighty soul—how small a body holds.

557. LANGUAGE OF THE EYES. The eye is the chief seat of the soul's expression ; it shows the very spirit in a visible form. In every different state of mind, it appears differently : joy—brightens and opens it ; grief, half closes, and drowns it in fears ; hatred, and anger, flash from it, like lightning ; love—darts from it in glances, like the orient beam ; jealousy—and squinting envy, dart their contagious blasts through the eyes ; and devotion—raises them, or throws them back on the mind, as if the soul were about to take its flight to heaven.

From women's eyes—this doctrine I derive :
They sparkle still—the right Promethean fire ;
They are the books, the arts, the academies,
That show, contain, and nourish—all the world ;
Else none at all—in ought—proves excellent.
Old age—is honorable : the spirit—seems Ready—for its flight—to brighter worlds,—
And that strange change, which men miscall decay,
Is renovated life. The feeble voice,
With which the soul attempts to speak its meaning,
Is like the sky-lark's note, heard faintest, when
Its wing soars highest ; and whose hoary signs,
Those white and reverend locks, which move the
Of thoughtless ribalds, seem to me like snow, [scorn
Upon the Alpine summit,—only proving—
How near it is—to heaven.

Anecdote. Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee. About the year 1720, there were two musical parties in England ; one in favor of two Italians, Buo-non-ci-ni and At-ti-to, and the other admirers of Handel : and the contention running high, Dean Swift, with his usual acrimony in such cases, wrote the following epigram :

Some say, that signior Buononcini,
Compared to Handel's a mere ninny :
Others do swear, that to him—Handel
Is hardly fit to hold a candle.
Strange—that such high contests should be
'Twi'x't tweedle-dum—and tweedle-dee.

True Phenology—treats of the manifestations of man's feelings and intellect ; his heart and his head ; his will and understanding ; and their related objects, physical and moral ; principles, giving a knowledge of one's original character ; of his excellencies and talents, and how to make the most of them ; of his defects, and how to remedy them ; of reasoning and persuading—of education and self-government : a system of mental and moral philosophy, challenging investigation.

Varieties. 1. All are modest, when they feel that they are estimated, at what they consider their just value ; and incline to presume, in the proportion they feel they are slighted. 2. It signifies but little—to wish well, without doing well ; as to do well, without willing it. 3. None is so great, but that he may one day need the help, or feel the unkindness—of the meanest of mortals. 4. The more business a man has, the more he is able to accomplish : for he learns to economize his time. 5. A ready recollection of our knowledge, at the moment we have use for it, is a rare and important acquisition. 6. The passions are pleaders, and their violence sometimes goes directly to the heart. 7. As a vessel is known by the sound, whether it is whole or not, so, men are known by speeches and actions, whether they are wise or foolish.

All the souls that were, were forfeit once,
And He, that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If He, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are ? O, think on that,
And mercy then, will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.

If pow'r's divine
Behold our human actions, (as they do,)
I doubt not then, but innocence shall make False accusation—blush, and tyranny—
Tremble at patience.

That happy minglement of hearts,
Where, changed as chemic compounds are,
Each—with its own existence parts,
To find a new one, happier far.

We—ignorant of ourselves,
Beg after our own harm, which the wise powers
Deny us—for our good ; so find we profit,
By losing our prayers.

So very still that echo seems to listen ;
We almost hear the music of the spheres,
And fancy that we catch the notes of angels.

High stations tumult, but not bliss create.

557. THE MOUTH. Who does not know how much the upper lip betokens the sensations of taste, desire, appetite, and the endearments of love? how much it is curled by pride or anger, drawn thin by cunning, smoothed by benevolence, and made placid by effeminacy? how love and desire, sighs and kisses, cling to it by indescribable traits. The under lip is little more than its supporter, the easy cushion on which the crown of majesty reposes. The chaste and delicate mouth, is one of the first recommendations we meet with in common life. Words are the pictures of the mind; we often judge of the heart by the portal; it holds the flaggon of truth, of love, and enduring friendship.

If there's on earth a cure

For the sunk heart, 'tis this—day after day
To be the blest companion of thy way!—
To hear thy angel eloquence—to see
Those virtuous eyes forever turn'd on me;
And, in their light, re-chasten'd silently,
Like the stain'd web, that whitens in the sun,
Grow pure—by being purely shone upon!

558. LANGUAGE OF THE ARMS AND HANDS. The arms are sometimes both thrown out; at others the right alone; they are lifted up as high as the face, to express wonder, or held out before the breast to show fear; when spread forth with open hands, they express desire and affection; or clasped in surprise on occasions of sudden grief and joy; the right hand clenched, and the arms brandished—threaten; the arms set a-kimbo, (one hand on each hip), makes one look big, or expresses contempt, or courage.

As a beam—o'er the face of the waters—may glow,
While the tide—runs in darkness and coolness below,
So, the check may be tinged—with a warm sunny smile,
Though the cold heart—to ruin—runs darkly the while.

One fatal reminiscence, one sorrow, that throws
Its bleak shade—like, o'er our joys, and our woes;
To which life—nothing darker, or brighter, can bring,
For which joy—has no balm, and affliction—no sting!
Oh! this thought, in the midst of enjoyment will stay,
Like a dead leafless branch—in the summer's bright ray;
The beams of the warm sun—play round it in pain,
It may smile—in his light—but it blooms not again!

559. QUINTILLIAN says, that with the hands, we solicit, refuse, promise, threaten, dismiss, invite, entreat, and express aversion, fear, doubting, denial, asking, affirmation, negation, joy, grief, confession and penitence. With the hands we describe, and point all circumstances of time, place and manner of what we relate; with them we also excite the passions of others and soothe them, approve or disapprove, permit, prohibit, admire and despise; thus, they serve us instead of many sorts of words; and, where the language of the tongue is unknown, or the person is deaf, the language of the hands is understood, and is common to all nations.

Between two worlds—life hovers like a star,
'Twixt night and morn, upon the horizon's verge:
How little—to we know that which we are!

How less—what we may be! The eternal surge
Of time and tide—rolls on, and bears afar
Our bubbles; as the old—burst, new—emerge,
Lash'd—from the foam of ages; while the graves
Of empires—heave, but like some passing waves.

Your very goodness, and your company,
O'erpay all th't I can do.

Laconics. 1. There is no great necessity for us to be anxious about what good works we shall do, in order to salvation; because the business of religion is—to shun all evils as sins. 2. Never be so sinfully inconsistent, as to tell a child, that such and such things are naughty, and then, because his self-will is unyielding, leave him to persist in doing it; better, far better would it be, to let the poor child do wrong, in ignorance. 3. Every one should receive a scientific, civil, and religious education, and then he will be fitted for the life that now is, and that which is to come. 4. Teach children what is good and true, and lead them to goodness, by precept and example. 5. Gratitude is the sure base of an amiable mind.

Anecdote. Right of Discovery. A gentleman, praising the personal charms of a very homely woman, before Mr. Foot, the comedian, who whispered to him, "And why don't you lay claims to such an accomplished beauty?" "What right have I to her!" said the other. "Every right—by the law of nations, as the first discoverer."

Meanwhile, we'll sacrifice to liberty.

Remember, O my friends, the laws, the rights,
The generous plan of power delivered down,
From age to age, by your renowned forefathers,
(So dearly bought, the price of so much blood;)
O let it never perish in your hands,
But piously transmit it to your children.
Do thou, great liberty, inspire our souls,
And make our lives, in thy possession, happy,
Or our deaths glorious—in thy just defence.

Varieties. 1. Will the time ever arrive, when the air will be as full of balloons, as the ocean now is with ships? 2. Reading history and traveling, give a severe trial to our virtues. 3. It is not right to feel contempt for any thing, to which God has given life and being. 4. Four things belong to a judge: to hear cautiously, to answer wisely, to consider soberly, and to give judgment without partiality. 5. Regard talents and genius, as solemn mandates to go forth, and labor in your sphere of usefulness, and to keep alive the sacred fire among your fellow men; and turn not these precious gifts, into servants of evil; neither offer them on the altar of vanity, nor sell them for a mess of potage, nor a piece of money. 6. The last war between the United States and England, commenced on the 18th of June, 1812, and continued two years, eight months and eighteen days; when did it end? 7. Let us manage our time as well as we can, there will yet some of it remain unemployed.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
When wealth accumulates, and men decay!
Princes, and lords, may flourish, or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made:
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

The kindest, and the happiest pair,
Will find occasion—to forbear;
And every day, in which they live,
To pity, and, perhaps, forgive.

Full many a shaft—at random sent,
Finds mark—the archer never meant;
And many a word—at random spoken,
May soothe, or wound—a heart that's broken.

560. POLYGLOTT OF BODY AND MIND. Thus, we see that the body, in connection with the mind, speaks many languages; and he is a learned elocutionist, who understands and can speak them. In view of which, well might Hamlet exclaim, "WHAT A PIECE OF WORK IS MAN!" Observe well this strange being, as embodied in the works of the painter, and statuary: in what kingly wondrous manner, appear his force of altitude and looks! Who, but would covet the glorious art of making the flat canvas and rocky marble, utter every passion of the human mind, and touch the soul of the spectator, as if the picture, or statue, spoke the pathetic language of a Shakspeare! Is it any wonder that masterly action, joined with powerful elocution, should be irresistible? If poetry, music, and statuary, is good, is not oratory more excellent! for in that we have them all. Woe for those, who trample o'er a mind! A deathless thing. They know not what they do, Or what they deal with! Man, perchance, may The flow'r his step hath bruise'd or light anew [bind The torch he quenches; or to music—wind Again the lyre-string from his touch that flew; But, for the soul!—oh! tremble, and beware.— To lay rude hands—upon God's mysteries there!

561. THE WRITTEN PAGE can but ill express the nicer shades of sentiment, passion, and emotion which the poet has painted. There are depths of thought, which the eye cannot penetrate—and sublimities of flight, which it cannot reach. The loveliest and sublimest of written poetry—even that contained in sacred scripture—cannot speak to the eye with that vivid power and intensity of expression, drawn from it by the human voice, when trained to the capacity given to it, by the Creator. Hence, the ordained efficiency of preaching; hence, the trembling of Felix, as the great Apostle reasoned—"of righteousness, temperance, and judgement to come." So, with the production of the most consummate human genius:

For ill—can poetry express,
Full many a tone—of thought sublime;
And sculpture, mute and motionless,
Steals but one glance from time.
But, by the mighty actor's power,
Their redoubt triumphs come:
Verses—ceases—to be airy thought
And sculpture—to be dumb.

562. The following—is an example of the sublime, falling far short of a hyperbole; for, as St. John observes, "even the world itself—could not contain the books, that should be written" on the subject of INFINITE LOVE and INFINITE WISDOM—displayed in man's REDEMPTION and SALVATION.

Could we, with ink, the ocean fill,
Were the whole earth—a PARCHMENT—made,
Were every single stick—a QUILL,
And every man—a SCRIBE by trade;
To write the LOVE of God—to man,
Would drain the ocean dry;
Nor would the scroll—contain the plan,
Tho' stretch'd—from SKY to SKY.

The mind—untaught,
Is a dark waste, where fiends and tempests howl;
As Phabus—to the world, is science—to the soul.

Anecdote. No hero was more distinguished in ancient times, than Alexander the Great, king of Macedonia. His courage was undaunted, his ambition boundless, his friendship ardent, his taste refined; and what was very extraordinary, he seems to have conversed with the same fire and spirit, with which he fought. Philip, his father, knowing him to be very swift, wished him to run for the prize, at the Olympic games. "I would comply with your request," said Alexander, "if KINGS were to be my competitors."

The ocean—when it rolls aloud—

The tempest—bursting from her cloud,
In one uninterrupted peal!

When darkness sits amid the sky;

And shadowy forms go trooping by;

And everlasting mountains reel—

All—all of this is Freedom's song—

'Tis pealed—'tis pealed eternally!

And all, that winds and waves prolong,

Are anthems rolled to Liberty!

Varieties. 1. Although the truth can never come to condemn, but to save, the world has ever pronounced its condemnation. 2. Garbled extracts from any work, are no more a correct representation of the work, than stone, mortar, boards, glass, and nails, are a fair specimen of a splendid palace. 3. Never let private interest, poverty, disgrace, danger, or death, deter you—from asserting the liberty of your country, or from transmitting to posterity, the sacred rights to which you were born. 4. What are the pleasures of the bodily senses, without the pleasures of the soul? 5. Themistocles, when asked to play the lute, replied, I cannot play the fiddle, but I can make a little village a great city. 6. The skin—co-operates with the lungs in purifying the blood. 7. How shall we know that the American government, is founded on the true principles of human nature? By learning what the true principles of human nature are and an extensive induction of facts, derived from the study of history, and our own observation.

Yet, though my dust—in earth be laid,

My life—on earth—withdrawn;

'Twill be—but as a fleeting shade

Of night—before the dawn!

For I shall spring—beyond the tomb,

To new—immortal prime,

Where all is light, and life, and bloom;

And no more winter-time.

I had a friend, that lov'd me:

I was his soul: he liv'd not, but in me:

We were so close within each other's breast,

The rivets were not found, that join'd us first,

That does not reach us yet: we were so mix'd,

As meeting streams; both to ourselves were lost,

We were one mass; we could not give, or take,

But from the same: for he was I; I, he:

Return, my better half, and give me all myself,

For thou art all!

If I have any joy when thou art absent,

I grudge it to myself: methinks I rob

Thee—of thy part.

Stillest streams

Of t'war fairest meadows; and the bird,

That flutters least, is longest on the wing.

563. GESTURE, or a just and elegant adaptation of every part of the body to the subject, is an essential part of oratory; and its power is much greater than that of words: for it is the language of nature, and makes its way to the heart, without the utterance of a single word: it affects the eye, (which is the quickest of all our senses,) and of course, conveys impressions more speedily to the mind, than that of the voice, which affects the ear only. Nature, having given to every sensation and feeling its proper outward expression, what we often mean, does not depend so much on our words, as on our manner of speaking them. Art—only adds ease and gracefulness, to what nature and reason dictate. Study the Gesture Engravings thoroughly.

All natural objects have
An echo in the heart. This flesh doth thrill,
And has connection, by some unseen chain,
With its original source and kindred substance:
The mighty forest, the proud tides of ocean,
Sky-cleaving hills, and in the vast air,
The starry constellations; and the sun,
Parent of life exhaustless—these maintain
With the mysterious mind and breathing mould,
A coexistence and community.

MADNESS AND TERROR.

Stretch of Thought. A fellow-student, in consequence of too close application to study, and neglect of proper diet and exercise, became partially deranged; but being very harmless, it was thought best that he should go and come when, and where he pleased; in hope of facilitating his restoration. One Saturday afternoon, he went out through the gardens and fields, and gathered every variety of flowers, from the modest viola to the gaudy sunflower,—with which he adorned himself from head to foot, in the most fantastical manner; in which condition he was displaying his imaginary kingly power, on a hillock in the college green, just as the president and one of the professors were going up to attend chapel prayers; when the former observed to the latter—what a great pity that such a noble mind should be thus in ruins! the maniac hearing what he said, rose majestically upon his throne, and with a most piercing look and voice, exclaimed; “What is that you say, old president! you presume to talk thus about me? Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed as I am. You old simmer, come here; and I will tear you limb from limb,—and scatter you through infinite space; where Omniscience cannot find you, nor Omnipotence put you together again.

A Great Mistake. The sons of the rich so often die poor—and the sons of the poor so often die rich, that it has grown into a proverb; and yet, how many parents are laboring and toiling to accumulate wealth for their children, and, at the same time, raising them up in habits of indolence and extravagance. Their sons will scatter their property much sooner than they can gather it together. Let them have their heads well stored with useful knowledge, and their hearts with sound and virtuous principles, and they will ordinarily take care of themselves. However affluent may be his circumstances, yet every parent inflicts upon his son a lasting injury, who does not train him up to habits of virtue, industry and economy.

Anecdote. Francis I., king of France, (opponent and rival of Charles V., of Germany,) consulting with his generals, how to lead his army over the Alps into Italy, his fool, Amarel, sprung from a corner, and advised him to consult how to bring them back again.

A child is born. Now take the germ, and make it

A bud of moral beauty. Let the dews

Of knowledge, and the light of virtue, wake it

In richest fragrance, and in purest hues;

When passion's gust, and sorrow's tempest shake it,

The shelter of affection—ne'er refuse,

For soon, the gathering hand of death will break it

From its weak stem of life,—and it shall lose

All power to charm; but, if that lonely flower

Hath swell'd one pleasure, or subdued one pain,

O, who shall say, that it has lived in vain,

However fugitive—its breathing hour?

For virtue—leaves its sweets wherever tasted,

And scatter'd truth is never, never wasted.

Varieties. 1. All those, who have presented themselves at the door of the world, with a great truth, have been received with stones, or hisses. 2. Who has not observed the changed, and changing condition of the human race? 3. We are indebted to the monastic institutions for the preservation of ancient libraries. 4. No good can bring pleasure, unless it be that, for the loss of which we are prepared. 5. They, who sacrifice at the altar of Apollo, are like those, who drink of the waters of Claros; they receive the gift of divination, they imbibe the seeds of death. 6. The same misconduct which we pardon in ourselves, we condemn in others; because we associate a partiality with the one, which we cannot perceive in the other. 7. What constitutes true marriage?

Sheba—was never

More cautious of wisdom, and fair virtue,

Than this pure soul shall be;

Truth—shall muse her,

Holy and heavenly thoughts—still counsel her.

Can you raise the dead!

Pursue, and overtake—the waves of time?

Bring back again—the hours, the days,

The months, the years, that made me happy?

The heart has tendrils—like the vine,

Which round another's bosom twine,

Outspringing from the living tree—

Of deeply-planted sympathy;

Where flowers— are hope, its fruits—are bliss,

Benevolence—its harvest is.

564. VEHEMENCE OF ACTION. Cicero—very judiciously observes, that a speaker must remit, occasionally, the vehemence of his actions, and not utter every passage with all the force, of which he is capable; so as to set off, more strongly, the emphatical parts; as painters make their figures stand out bold-er, by means of light and shades: there are always strong points, as they may be called, in every well written piece, which must always be attended to,—thus hill and dale, mountain and precipice, cataract and gulph: always keep some resources, and never utter the weaker with all your energy; for if you do, there will be a failing in the strong points—the most pathetic parts.

In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness, and humility:
But, when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then, imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favor'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath and bend up every spirit
To his full height!—On, on! you noblest English.

465. THE FOREHEAD. To what spectator can the forehead appear uninteresting? Here, appear LIGHT and GLOOM; JOY and ANXIETY, STUPIDITY, IGNORANCE, and VICE. On this brazen tablet are engraven MANY combinations of SENSE and of SOUL. Here, all the GRACES revel, and all the CYCLOPS thunder. Nature has left it bare, that by it, the countenance may be ENLIGHTENED and DARKENED. At its lowest extremities, THOUGHTS—appear changed into ACTS; the mind HERE collects the powers of RESISTANCE; and HERE headlong OBSTINACY, or wise PERSISTENCE take up their fixed abode.

That brow, which was, to me,
A blooming heaven (it was a heaven, for there
Shone forth twin stars of excellence, so brightly,
As though the winds of paradise had fann'd
Their orb'd lustre, till they beam'd with love;) That brow—was as the sleep-imprison'd lake,
Treasuring the beauty—of the deep blue skies,
Whose charm'd slumber, one small breath will ruffle.

Anecdote. A commonwealth's man, in England, on his way to the scaffold, for truth's sake, saw his wife, looking at him from the tower window, and standing up in the cart he waved his hat, and cried, "TO HEAVEN, my love, to HEAVEN, and I leave you in the storm awhile."

Well might Lord Herbert write his love—
Were not our souls—immortal made,
Our equal love—would make them such.

'Tis sweet to know,—there is an eye—will mark,
Our coming, and look brighter,—when we come.

O, colder—than the wind, that freezes
Founts, that but now—in sunshine played,
Is that congealing pang, which seizes
The bursting bosom, when betrayed.

Three Modes of Forming Theories.

One—to imagine them, and then search for facts to sustain, prove and confirm them; one—to collect facts, which are only effects, and out of them to form theories; and one—to observe all these facts, and look through them to their causes; which causes constitute the only true theories: then, all known or probable effects, will not only confirm such theories, but they can be explained by these theories. Hence, the true theories of all things, will explain and demonstrate all things, so far as they can be seen and understood; i. e. rationality perceived, according to the state and capacity of the human mind. That which enables one to explain a thing, analytically and synthetically, is the true cause or theory of that thing; thus, true theories are the causes of things, and facts are the legitimate effects of those things. THE ENDS OF THINGS. There is one step higher, which must be taken, and then we shall have all, that the human mind can conceive of, or think about; which is the end of things: thus we have ends, causes, and effects; beyond which sphere, man cannot go; for every thing, object or subject, concerning which we can feel, think or act, is either an end, a cause, or an effect; the latter only, are accessible to our senses: the other must be seen intellectually: i. e. in a region of mind above our senses.

Varieties. 1. Can what is incomprehensible, be an object of thought? 2. Humanity, justice, and patriotism—are qualities—of universal benefit to mankind. 3. The only way to expel what is false from the mind, is to receive the opposite truth. 4. Faith—is saving, when we learn truths from the Bible, and live according to them. 5. A man is said to be square, when he does not, from injustice, incline to this or that party. 6. The power of the muscles, is derived through the nerves, as the power of good is from truth. 7. Nothing remains with us, that is not received in freedom.

Look nature through; 'tis revolution all: [night
All change; no death. Day—follows night, and
The dying day; stars rise, and set, and rise;
Earth—takes the example. See, the Summer, gay
With her green chaplet—and ambrosial flowers,
Droops into pallid Autumn: Winter, gray,
Horrid with frost, and turbulent with storm,
Blows Autumn, and his golden fruits, away;—
Then, melts into the Spring. Soft Spring, with Favonian, from warm chambers of the south, [breath
Recalls the first. All, to re-flourish, fades;
As in a wheel, all sinks to re-ascend—
Emblems of man, who passes, not expires.
Say, dear, will you not have me?
Then take the kiss—you gave me;
You elsewhere would, perhaps, bestow it,
And I would be as loath—to owe it;
Or, if you will not take the thing—once given,
Let me—kiss you, and then, we shall be even.

And then, alone, would I mourn;
And count the hours, till his return,
For when—did woman's love expire,
If fondly fann'd—the holy fire?
He, that doth public good—for multitudes,
Finds few—are truly grateful.

566. DEMOSTHENES, the most eminent of Grecian orators, was born 35 years before the christian era, and died by poison, self-administered, to escape the vengeance of Antipater, 322 B.C. He was celebrated on account of the fire, strength, and vehemence of his eloquence, which was excited in rousing the Athenians to war with the Macedonians, and in defeating his riders, who were bribed by the latter. The characteristics of his oratory were, strength, sublimity, piercing energy and force, aided by an emphatic, and vehement eloquence; he sometimes, however, degenerated into severity. In reading his orations, we do not meet with any sentiments that are very exalted; they are generally bounded by self-love and a love of the world. His father died when he was seven years old; and his guardians having wasted his property, at the age of seventeen, he appeared against them at the court, and plead his own cause successfully; which encouraged him to speak before the assembly of the people; but he made a perfect failure: after which, he retired, studied, and practiced in secrecy, until he was twenty-five, when he came forward again, and commenced his brilliant career.

An honest statesman—to a prince—is like
A cedar, planted by a spring, which bathes its Roots: the grateful tree—rewards it—with the shadow.
By tedious toil,—no passion is expressed:
His hand, who feels the strongest, paints the best.

567. MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO, the most distinguished of the Roman orators, was born 106 years before the birth of Christ; and died at the age of 63. He made the Greeks his model; and, as an orator, he possessed the strength of Demosthenes, the copiousness of Plato, and the severity of Isocrates. His first teacher was the poet Archias; and in eloquence he was taught by Apollo-nius of Moto of Rhodes; after which he visited Athens. and on his return was made quaestor, and then consul; when he rendered the greatest service to the state, by the suppression of the conspiracy of Catiline; he was afterwards banished, and voluntarily retired to Greece, but was soon honorably recalled; after which, he undertook the praetorship of Cilicia. In the civil wars of Cæsar and Pompey, he adhered to the party of the latter; and after the battle of Pharsalia, was reconciled to Cæsar, but was soon slain by Pompey, at the instigation of Marc Antony.

568. EVE. Are not good sense, and good humor of more advantage than beauty? When Adam is introduced by Milton, describing Eve, in paradise, and relating to the angel, the impressions he felt on seeing her, at her first creation, he does not represent her—like a Grecian Venus, by her shape, or features, but by the lustre of her mind, which shone in them; and gave them their power of charming:

Grace—was in all her steps, heaven—in her eye,
In every gesture—dignity, and love.

Anecdote. A Humane Driver Rewarded. A Macedonian soldier, was one day leading before Alexander a mule laden with gold for the king's use; and the beast being so tired, that he could not go, or sustain the load, his driver took it off, and, with great difficulty, carried it himself a considerable way. Alexander, seeing him just sinking under the burden, and about to throw it on the ground, cried out, "Do not be weary yet; try and carry it through to the tent, for it is all thy own."

Faint not, heart of man! though years wave slow!
There have been those, that, from the deepest caves,
And cells of night, and fastnesses, below
The stormy dashing of the ocean-waves,—
Down, farther down—than gold lies hid, have nurs'd
A quenchless hope, and watch'd their time, and burst
On the bright day, like vanquishers from the graves!

Varieties. 1. When we go out, let us consider what we have to do; and when we return, what we have done. 2. There are many subjects, that are not easily understood; but it is easy to misrepresent them; and when arguments cannot be controverted, it is not difficult for the uncharitable—to calumniate motives. 3. A man's true character is a greater secret to himself, than to others; if he judge himself, he is apt to be partial; if he asks the opinions of others, he is liable to be deceived. 4. Really learned persons never think of having finished their education, for they are students during life. 5. The insults of others can never make us wretched, or resentful, if our hearts are right; the riper, that stings us, is within. 6. Beware of drawing too broad and strong conclusions—from feeble and ill-defined premises. 7. When human policy wraps one end of the chain round the ankle of a man, divine justice rivets the other end round the neck of the tyrant. 8. All who have been great, without religion, would undoubtedly have been much greater, and better—with it.

QUALITIES—SURPASSING LOVELINESS.

She had read

Her father's well-filled library—with profit,—
And could talk charmingly. Then she would sing,
And play, too, passably,—and dance with spirit;
She sketch'd from nature well, and studied flowers,
Which was enough, alone, to love her for;
Yet she was knowing—in all needle-work,—
And shone—in dairy,—and in kitchen, too,—
As in the PARLOR.

The wise man, said the Bible, walks with God,
Surveys far on—the endless line of life;
Values his soul; thinks of eternity;
Both worlds considers, and provides for both;
With reason's eye—his passions guards; abstaining
From evil; lives on hope—on hope, the fruit
Of faith; looks upward; purifies his soul;
Expands his wings, and mounts into the sky;
Passes the sun, and gains his Father's house;
And drinks—with angels—from the fount of bliss.

569. RHETORICAL ACTION—respects the attitude, gesture, and expression of the countenance. Words cannot represent certain peculiarities; they depend on the actor. Simplicity, or a strict adherence to the modesty of nature—correctness—or adaption to the word—and beauty, as opposed to awkwardness—are the principal marks of good action. Beauty belongs to objects of sight. Action should be easy, natural, varied, and directed by passion. Avoid affectation and display; for they disgust. The best artists are famous for simplicity, which has an enchanting effect. Profuse decorations indicate a wish to supply the want of genius by multiplying inferior beauties. There is in every one an indescribable something, which we call nature, that perceives and recognizes the inspirations of nature; therefore, after bringing your voice under your control, if you enter fully into the spirit of the composition, and let your feelings prompt and govern your action, you cannot greatly err. The victory is half won when you fully feel and realize what you read or speak. Resolve to acquire the power, the witchery, the soul of elocution—that lightning of ancient times which poured a blaze of light on the darkest understanding, and that thunder which awakens the dead.

They never fail—who die

In a great cause: the block—may soak their gore:
Their heads—may sodden in the sun; their limbs
Be strung to city gates—and castle walls—
But still—their spirit walks abroad. Tho' years
Elapse, and others—share as dark a doom,
They but augment the deep and swelling thoughts
Which overpower all others, and conduct
The world, at last, to FREEDOM.

570. This system teaches you to harmonize matter and manner, to imbibe the author's feelings, to bring before you all the circumstances, and plunge amid the living scenes, and feel that what you describe is present, and actually passing before you. Speak of truths as truths, not as fictions. Give the strongest, freest, truest expression of the natural blendings of thought and emotion; break thro' all arbitrary restraint, and submit, after proper trainings, to the suggestions of reason and nature. Let your manner be earnest, collected, vigorous, self-balanced. In the introduction, be respectful, modest, conciliatory, winning, rather mild and slow; in the discussion, clear, energetic; in the application, animated, pathetic, persuasive.

All—some force obey!

Gold—will dissolve, and diamonds—melt away;
Marble—obeys the chisel, and the saw;
And solar—beams—a rock of ice will thaw;
The flaming forge o'ercomes well-temper'd steel;
And flinty glass—is fashioned at the wheel:
But man's rebellious heart—no power can bend,
No flames can soften, no concussion—rend;
Till the pure spirit soften, pi-ree and melt,
And the warm blood—is in the conscience felt.

571. Look your hearers in the face—give yourself, body and soul, to the subject—let not the attention be divided between the manner and matter. Practice in private to establish correct habits of voice and gesture, and become so familiar with all rules as not to think of them when exercising. The head, face, eyes, hands, and upper part of the body are principally employed in oratorical action. The soul speaks most intelligibly in the muscles of the face, and through the eye, which is the chief seat of expression; let the internal man, and the external correspond. An erect attitude, and a firmness of position, denote majesty, activity, strength; the leaning—affection, respect, earnestness of entreaty, dignity of composure, indifference, dis-ease. The air of a person expresses a language easily understood. The husbandman, dandy, gentleman and military chief bespeak the habits and qualities of each. The head gently reclined, denotes grief, shame; erect—courage, firmness; thrown back or shaken—dissent: forward—assent. The hand raised and inverted—repels, more elevated and extended—surprise, astonishment; placed on the mouth—silence; on the head, pain; on the breast—affection, or appeal to conscience: elevated—defiance; both raised and palms united—supplication; gently clasped—thankfulness; wrung—agony.

Anecdote. Tyrolese Songs. In the mountains of Tyrol, hundreds of women and children—come out, at bed-time, and sing their national songs, until they hear their husbands, fathers, and brothers, answer them from the hills on their return home. Upon the shore of the Adriatic, the wives of the fishermen come down, about sunset, and sing one of their melodies. They sing the first verse, and then listen—for sometime: then they sing a second; and so on, till they hear the answer from the fishermen, who are thus guided to their homes.

Hail memory, hail! in thy exhaustless mine,
From age—to age, unnumbered treasures shine!
Thought, and her shadowy brood, thy call obey,
And place, and time, are subject to thy sway!
Thy pleasures most we feel, when most alone,
The only pleasures we can call our own.
Lighter than air, Hope's summer visions fly,
If but a floating cloud obscure the sky;
If but a beam of sober Reason play,
Lo! Fancy's fairy frost—work melts away:
But, can the wiles of art, the grasp of power,
Snatch the rich relics of a well-spent hour?
These, when the trembling spirit takes her flight,
Pour round her path a stream of living light,
And gild those pure and perfect realms of rest,
Where VIRTUE—triumphs, and her sons are blest.

Varieties. 1. Costume, when once regulated by true science, and art, remains in unchangeable good taste; comfortable, convenient, as well as picturesque and becoming. 2. In 1756, a white headed old woman—died in London, whose hair sold for 244 dollars to a ladies' periwig maker. 3. In some countries, intellect has sway; in some—wealth; and in others—beauty and rank; but the most powerful influence in the best societies, is goodness combined with truth in practice. 4. Merit—in the interior, alone makes valid an inheritance of glory in ancestry. 5. Why does new sweet milk become sour—during a thunder storm? 6. Why can no other nation make a Chinese song? 7. Is not the American government founded upon the true principles of human nature? 8. How prone many are, to worship the creature more than the Creator! 9. When apparent truths are taken, and confirmed for real ones, they become fallacies. 10. Actions—show best the nature of the law of life; and deeds—show the man.

In all thy humors, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a toughy, testy, pleasant fellow; [thee,
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about
That there's no living with thee, or without thee.

572. The emphatic strokes of the hand accompany emphasis; its elevated termination suits high passion; horizontal—division; downward movement—disapprobation. Avoid excess, violence and constancy of action; gentleness, tranquillity and dignity prevail more. What is the appropriate gesture in this? "Light are the outward signs of evil thought; within, within—'twas there the spirit wrought." Middle finger of the right hand points to the body—its fore-finger gently laid in the palm of the left, in deliberation, proof or argumentation—sometimes it is pressed hard on the palm. The left hand often acts with great significance with the right; rarely used alone in the principal gestures, except when something on the left hand is spoken of, as contradistinguished from something on the right, and when two things are contrasted. Motion of the hands should correspond with those of the eyes. Rules say, "Do not raise the hands above the head?" but if natural passion prompts them—it will be well done; for passion knows more than art.

Our thoughts are boundless, tho' our frames are frail,
Our souls immortal, though our limbs decay:
Though darken'd—in this poor life, by a veil
Of suffering, dying matter, we shall play
In Truth's eternal sunbeams; on the way
To Heaven's high capitol—our car shall roll;
The temple—of the power, whom all obey;
That is the mark—we tend to, for the soul
Can take no lower flight, and seek no meaner goal.

573. Keep the hands out of your pockets—don't finger your watch-key or chain—let your business influence you. Feel your subject thoroughly and speak without fear; have a style and manner of your own, for an index to yourself. Expression is the looking out of the soul, through the eyes, which are its windows, into the natural world. The body should generally be erect: not constantly changing, nor always motionless—declining in humiliation—rising in praise and thanksgiving; should accompany motion of the hands, head, and eyes; never turn your back on the audience. Do not appear haughty, nor the reverse; nor recline the head to one shoulder—nor stand like a post; avoid tossings of the body from side to side, rising on tip-toe, writhing of the shoulders. Study well the engravings; their position, gracefulness and awkwardness: some are designated for both—discriminate, which to imitate, which to avoid—refer within, to your own nature, for dictation—and never adopt any gesture that you do not make your own by appropriation. All gestures must originate within. Let everything you do and say correspond.

The Muse of inspiration—plays
O'er every scene; she walks the forest-maze,
And climbs the mountain; every blooming spot
Burns with her step, yet man—regards it not!
She whispers round; her words are in the air,
But lost, unheard, they linger—freezing there,
Without one breath of soul, divinely strong,
One ray of heart—to thaw them into song.

574. Some of the sources of faults in action, are unmanly diffidence, which makes one appalled at his audience, or makes him fear to stir, lest he make a mistake; and servile imitation—whence is a want of action, excess or awkwardness, or undue regard to improper models. Do not become an artificial, made-up character, a compound of affectation and imitation, a poor creature of borrowed shreds and patches: preserve your own identity.

Of those few fools who with ill stars are curst,
Sure scribbling fools, call'd poets, fare the worst:
For they're a set of fools which Fortune makes,
And after she has made them fools, forsakes.

In man or woman, but far most in man,
And most of all—in man that ministers
And serves the altar, in my soul—I loathe
All affectation. 'Tis my perfect scorn;
Object—of my implacable disgust.
What!—will a man play tricks, will he indulge
A silly—fond conceit—of his fair form
And just proportion, fashionable mien,
And pretty face, in presence of his God?
Or, will he seek to dazzle me with tropes,
As with the diamond on his lily hand,
And play his brilliant parts before my eyes
When I am hungry for the BREAD of LIFE?
He mocks his Maker, prostitutes and shames
His noble office, and, instead of truth,
Displaying his own beauty, starves his flock.
Therefore, avaunt all attitude and stare,
And start theatric, practis'd at the glass!
I seek divine simplicity—in him,
Who handles things divine; and all—besides,
Tho' learn'd with labor, and tho' much admir'd
By curious eyes, and judgments ill-inform'd,
To me is odious—as the nasal twang
Heard at conventicle, where worthy men,
Misled by custom, strain celestial themes
Through the press'd nostril, spectacle-bedstrid.

Anecdote. Indian Virtue. A married woman, of the Shawnee Indians, made this beautiful reply—to a man whom she met in the woods, and who implored her to love and look on him. "Oulnan, my husband," said she, "who is forever before my eyes, hinders me from seeing you, or any other person."

So dear to Heaven—is saintly chastity,
That when a soul—is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels—lackey her,
Driving far off—each thing of sin, and guilt;
And, in clear dream, and solemn vision,
Tell her of things, that no gross ear can hear,
Till oft converse—with heavenly inhabitants
Begins to cast a beam—on the outward shape,
The unpolluted temple of the mind,
And turns it, by degrees, to the soul's essence,
Till all—be made immortal!

Varieties. 1. Children learn but little from what they read, while the attention is divided between the sense and making out the words. 2. Few parents and teachers are aware of the pre-eminent importance of oral over book instruction. 3. Truths, inculcated without any sense of delight, are like seeds, whose living germ has been destroyed; and which, therefore, when sown, can never come to anything. 4. The idea of the Lord, coming into the world, to instruct us, and make us good, is an idea particularly delightful to young children, as well as to those of riper years. 5. We were not created—to live on the earth, one moment in vain; every moment has a commission, connected with eternity; and each minute, improved, gives power to the next minute, to proceed with an accelerated ratio and impulse.

Let talkers talk; stick thou to what is best,
To think of pleasing all, is all a jest.

Let conquerors—boast
Their fields of fame: he, who in virtue, arms
A young, warm spirit—against beauty's charms,
Who feels her brightness, yet defies her thrall,
Is the best, bravest conqueror of them all.

575. Stability of position, facility of change, and general grace of action, depend on the right use of the feet; [see the engravings of them,] the motions of children are graceful, because prompted by nature: see how the different passions affect their countenances; what a pity they are not kept on in this way, without being led by their teachers into captivity to bad habits. Keep your mind collected and composed; guard against bashfulness, which will wear off by opposition. One generally has confidence in doing anything with whose manner he is familiar. Assurance is attained by—1, entirely mastering your subject, and a consciousness that what you have to deliver is worth hearing—2, by wholly engaging in it, mind intent on it, and heart warmed with it: never be influenced by approbation or disapprobation; master yourself; but how can you unless you know yourself?

Think'st thou—there are no serpents in the world,
But those, which slide along the grassy sod,
And sting the luckless foot, that presses them?
There are, who, in the path of social life,
Do bask their spotted skins—in Fortune's sun,
And sting the soul—ay, till its healthful frame
Is chang'd to secret, festering, sore disease—
So deadly—is the wound.

576. Look at the limbs of a willow tree, gently and variously waving before the breeze, cutting curved lines, which are lines of beauty; and cultivate a graceful, easy, flowing and forcible gesticulation. Adapt your action, as well as vocal powers, to the occasion and circumstances—the action to the word, and the word to the action. A young speaker may be more various than an old one. Do not act words instead of ideas; i. e. not make gestures to correspond, when you speak of anything small, low, up, large, &c. Let the voice, countenance, mien, and gesture, conspire to drive home to the judgment and heart, your impassioned appeals, cogent arguments, strong conclusions, and deep convictions. Let Nature, guided by science, be your oracle, and the voice of unsophisticated feeling your monitor. Fill your soul with the mighty purpose of becoming an orator, and turn aside from no labor, shrink from no effort, that are essential to the enterprise. Self-made men are the glory of the world.

Man—is a harp, whose chords chide the sight;
Each yielding harmony, disposed aright:
The screws reversed,
Ten thousand thousand strings at once go loose,—
Lost, till he tune them, all their power and use.

I have read the instructed volume,
Of human nature; there, long since, have learned,
The way—to conquer men—is by their passions:
Catch—but the ruling foible of their hearts,
And all their boasted virtues—shrink—before you.

577. EDUCATION is a companion, which no misfortune can suppress, no elime destroy—no calamy alienate—no despotism enslave. At home—a friend, abroad—an introduction; in solitude a soldier, in society, an ornament. It lessens vice, it guards virtue; it gives, at once, a grace and government to genius. Without it, what is man? a splendid slave! a reasoning savage! vacillating, between the dignity of an intelligence derived from God, and the degradation of brutal passion.

It is a note
Of upstart greatness—to observe and watch
For those poor trifles, which the noble mind—
Neglects, and scorns.

Anecdote. Somewhere. One gentleman riding in a stage-coach, with another, observed to him,—“Sir, I think, I have seen you somewhere.” “I presume you have, Sir,” replied the other; “for I have been there very often.”

Brute force—may crush the heart, but cannot kill;

The mind, that thinks, no terrors can compel;

But it will speak at length, and boldly tell

The world its weakness, and its rights; the night

Our race so long has grop'd through, since man fell

From his imagin'd Eden of delight,

Must, will, ere long, retire from Truth's fast dawning light.

Varieties. 1. Mind may act on mind, though bodies be far divided. 2. A bold man, or a fool must be he, who would change his lot with another. 3. A wise man,—scorneth nothing, be it ever so small or homely. 4. Mind—is a perpetual motion; for it is a running stream, from an unfathomable source, the depth of the DIVINE INTELLIGENCE. 5. Nature—is the chart of God, mapping out all his attributes; Art—the shadow of his wisdom, and copeth his resources. 6. In a dream, thou mayest live a lifetime, and all be forgotten in the morning. 7. A letter timely writ, is a rivet to the chain of affection. 8. As frost to the bud, and blight to the blossom, even such is self-interest to friendship. 9. Confidence—cannot dwell where selfishness is porter at the gate. 10. Those hours are not lost, that are spent in cementing affection. 11. Character—is mainly modeled, by the cast of the minds that surround it. 12. The company a man chooseth, is a visible index of his heart.

A drainless shower

Of light—is poetry; 'tis the supreme of power;

'Tis night—slumbering on its own right arm.

A generous mind, though sway'd awhile by passion,

Is like the steely vigor of the bow,

Still holds its native rectitude, and bends

But to recoil more forcible.

Great minds, like Heaven, are pleased in doing

Though th' ungrateful subjects of their favors [good,

Are barren in return.

Cowards—are scar'd with threat'nings; boys are

Into confessions; but a steady mind [whippedd

Acts of itself;—ne'er asks the body counsel.

The mind—is full

Of curious changes, that perplex itself,

Just like the visible world; and the heart—ebbs

Like the great sea; first flows, and then retires,

And on the passions doth the spirit ride,

Through sunshine—and in rain, from good—to ill,

Then to deep vice, and so on—back to virtue;

Till, in the grave, that universal calm,

We sleep—the sleep of death.

Virtue, while 't is free from blame,

Is modest, lowly, meek, and unassuming;

Not apt, like fearful vice, to shield its weakness

Beneath the studied pomp of boastful phrase,

Which swells, to hide the poverty it shelters;

But, when this virtue—feels itself suspected,

Insulted, set at nought, its whiteness stain'd,

It then grows proud, forgets its humble worth,

And rates itself—above its real value.

A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead.

578. SUGGESTIONS. The author is aware, from experience, that there are many things tending to discourage a new beginner in declamation; one is, a consciousness of his own awkwardness; which teaches us the importance of knowing how to do a thing, before attempting it in the presence of others. Let him select a short, and ordinary piece, first, and commit it perfectly to memory, and be sure that he understands every word of the author. Never appear in an improper dress; let your clothing be clean and neat, and properly adjusted to the body; neither too loose, nor too tight. Never be influenced, one way or another, by what your companions may say, or do; be your own master, and feel determined to succeed; at the same time, you may be as modest and unassuming as you please, the more so the better: let your subject and object be to you ALL IN ALL.

Applause—

Waits on success: the fickle multitude,
Like the light straw, that floats along the stream,
Glide with the current still, and follow fortune.
Men judge actions—always by events:
But, when we manage, by a just forsight,
Success—is prudence, and possession—right.

579. OUR BOOK. In this abridged outline of the Principles of Elocution, the author has endeavored to appreciate the age and state of those, who will be likely to read, or study the work; for it is designed for both purposes; and if the reader, or student, shall experience a tithe of the pleasure in rightly using it, as the author has in writing it, his aspirations will be fully realized. The more these subjects are examined, and their principles applied to practice, the more will it be seen and felt, that no one can become a GOOD ELOCUTIONIST, unless he studies BODY and MIND, MATTER and SPIRIT; and makes the results his own, by actual appropriation; science and art, theory and practice, must go hand in hand, to develop and perfect us for EARTH or HEAVEN.

If you did know—to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know—for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly—I left the ring,
When nought would be accepted—but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

As travelers—oft look back, at eve,
When eastward—darkly going,
To gaze—upon that light—they leave,
Still faint behind them—glowing.—
So, when the close of pleasure's day—
To gloom hath near consign'd us,
We turn—to catch one fading ray
Of joy, that's left behind us.

Miscellaneous. 1. A wise man—is willing to profit by the errors of others; because he does not, under the impulse of pride, condemn and despise them; but, while his judgment—disapproves, his heart—pities them. 2. It is the constant tendency of man, when in a perverted state of the will, and according to the state of such perversion, to make the reason, or understanding, everything, and to pay little or no attention to the state of the affections; and also to regulate his actions more by external, than internal considerations; this state and tendency is the cause of the prevalence of the pride of science in the literary world. 3. The true christian has no confidence in mere feelings, or in that sort of good, which, being without truth, its appointed guide and protector, is transient and inoperative.

Anecdote. A Wise Decisor. Eliza Anbert, a young Parisian lady, resolutely discarded a gentleman, to whom she was to have been married, because he ridiculed religion. Having given him a gentle reproof, he replied, "that a man of the world could not be so old-fashioned, as to regard God and religion." Eliza started; but, on recovering herself, said, "From this moment, sir, when I discover that you do not regard religion, I cease to be yours. He, who does not love and honor God, can never love his wife, constantly and sincerely."

Yes, love indeed is light from Heaven;

A spark of that immortal fire

With angels shared, by Alla given,

To lift from earth our low desire

Devotion waits the mind above;

But Heaven itself descends in love;

A feeling from the Godhead caught,

To wean from self each sordid thought;

A ray of him who form'd the whole;

A glory circling round the soul!

Varieties. 1. Neglect not time present; despair not of time past; never despair. 2. Infamy—is where it is received. If thou art a mud wall, it will stick,—if marble, it will rebound. If thou storm at it, it is thine; if thou contemn it,—it is gone. 3. Ridicule seems to dishonor, worse than dishonor itself. 4. It is heaven, on earth, to have the mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn on the truth. 5. A long life may be passed without finding a friend, in whose understanding and virtue, we can equally confide, and whose opinion we can value at once for its justice and sincerity. 6. A weak man, however honest, is not qualified to judge. 7. A man of the world, however penetrating, is not fit to counsel. 8. What is the great, essential evil of intemperance? The voluntary extinction of reason. 9. What breaks the heart of the drunkard's wife? It is not, that he is poor; but, that he is a drunkard. 10. How shall we arrest, how suppress this great evil! To rescue men, we must act on them inwardly, and outwardly; by giving strength within, to withstand the temptation, and remove the temptation without.

Thou sun, (said I.) fair light!

And thou enlightened earth, so fresh, and gay;

Ye hills, and dales, ye rivers, woods and plains,

And ye, that live and move, fair creatures, tell.

Tell—if you know, how came I thus; how here?

Flowers—are the alphabet of angels, whereby

They write on hills, and fields, mysterious truths.

Riches, like insects, when concealed, they lie.

Wait but for their wings, and in their season, fly.

N. B. The latter part of the work is much abridged, and portions of the original matter omitted, to make more room for the Readings and Recitations, and still keep the book, within what are deemed proper limits: this will rationally account for its incoherency, as well as brevity.—One more last word to the pupil. FEEL RIGHT—THINK RIGHT, AND ACT RIGHT, AND YOU SHALL BECOME ALL THAT YOU ARE CAPABLE OF, AND ALL THAT YOU CAN DESIRE.

Notes. In these exercises, there is a continual recurrence of the preceding principles, and all designed for thinkers and workers. As there are no such things as TIME and SPACE belonging to the mind, the nearer we approach to their annihilation, the more readily can we memorize: for which reason small type are used; and also variety, for the purpose of assisting in the preservation of the sight, and maintaining our independence of spectacles: in consideration of which, it should be observed, that books must be read, by varying their distances from the eyes; sometimes quite near, at others farther off: also practice the sight in looking at surrounding objects, in their proper positions from nearest to farthest.

580. IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL. Among various excellent arguments—for the immortality of the soul, there is one drawn from the perpetual progress of the soul to its perfection, without a possibility of ever arriving at it.

How can it enter into the thoughts of man, that the soul, which is capable of such immense perfections, and of receiving new improvements to all eternity, shall fall away into nothing, almost as soon as it is created? Are such abilities made for no purpose? A brute arrives at a point of perfection that he can never pass: in a few years, he has all the endowments he is capable of; and, were he to live ten thousand more, would be the same thing he is at present.

Man does not seem born to enjoy life, but to deliver it down to others. This is not surprising to consider in animals, which are formed for our use, and can finish their business in a short life. The silk-worm, after having spun her task, lays her eggs, and dies. But a man—can never have taken in his full measure of knowledge, has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage.

Would an infinitely wise Being—make such glorious creatures for so mean a purpose? Can he delight in the production of such abortive intelligences, such short-lived reasonable beings? Would he give us talents, that are not to be exerted? capacities that are never to be gratified?

How can we find that wisdom, which shines through all his works, in the formation of man, without looking on this world as only a nursery for the next, and believing, that the several generations of rational creatures, which rise up and disappear, in such quick successions, are only to receive their first rudiments of existence here, and afterwards, to be transplanted into a more friendly climate, where they may spread, and flourish—to all eternity!—Addison.

VIRTUOUS FRIENDSHIP.

Is aught so fair,

In all the dewy landscapes of the spring,
In the bright eye of Hesper, or the morn;
In nature's fairest forms,—is aught so fair
As virtuous friendship? as the candid blush
Of him who strives with fortune to be just?
The graceful tear, that streams for others' woes?
Or the mild majesty of private life,
Where peace, with ever-blooming olive, crowns
The gate? for honor's liberal hands effuse
Unenvied treasures, and the snowy wings
Of innocence and love, protect the scene?

That—I spent,—that—I had;

That—I gave,—that—I have;

That—I left,—that—I lost.

581. FANCIED INFALLIBILITY. When man has looked about him, as far as he can, he concludes there is no more to be seen; when he is at the end of his line, he is at the bottom of the ocean; when he has shot his best, he is sure none ever did, nor ever can shoot better, or beyond it; his own reason is the certain measure of truth; his own knowledge, of what is possible in nature; though his mind and his thoughts, change every seven years, as well as his strength and his features: nay, though his opinions change every week or every day, yet he is sure, or at least confident, that his present thoughts and conclusions are just and true, and cannot be deceived.

OUR TOILS AND THEIR REWARD.

He, who ascends to mountain-tops, shall find
The loftiest peaks, most wrapt in clouds, and
He, who surpasses, or subdues mankind, [snow;
Must look down on the hate, of those below.
Though high above, the sun of glory glow,
And far beneath, the earth and ocean spread;
Round him, are icy rocks, and loudly blow
Contending tempests, on his naked head, [led.
And thus, reward the toils, which to those summits

582. PARTS OF THE WHOLE. This sun, with all its attendant planets, is but a very little part of the grand machine of the universe; every star, though no bigger in appearance than the diamond, that glitters on a lady's ring, is really, a vast globe, like the sun in size, and in glory; no less spacious, no less luminous, than the radiant source of the day: so that every star is not barely a world, but the centre of a magnificent system; has a retinue of worlds irradiated by its beams, and revolving round its attractive influence,—all which are lost to our sight, in unmeasurable wilds of ether.

SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY.

She walks in beauty, like the night
Of cloudless climes, and starry skies;
And all that's best, of dark and bright,
Meet in her aspect, and her eyes:
Thus mellowed to that tender light,
Which heaven, to gaudy day denies.
One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half impaired the nameless grace,
Which waves in every raven tress,
Or softly lightens o'er her face;
Where thoughts, serenely sweet, express
How pure, how dear, their dwelling place.
And on that cheek, and o'er that brow,
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow,
But tell of days, in goodness spent,
A mind at peace, with all below,
A heart, whose love, is innocent!

Men—are made to bend
Before the mighty, and to follow on Submissive, where the great may lead—the great,
Whose might—is not in crowns and palaces,
In parchment-rolls, or blazon'd heraldry,
But in the power of thought, the energy
Of unsupported mind, whose steady will
No force can daunt, no tangled path divert
From its right onward purpose.

Will he be idle, who has much to enjoy?

553. CHANGING AND UNCHANGING. When we have looked on the pleasures of life, and they have vanished away; when we have looked on the works of nature, and perceived that they were changing; on the monuments of art, and seen that they would not stand; on our friends, and they have fled while we were gazing; on ourselves, and felt that we were as fleeting as they; when we have looked on every object to which we could turn our anxious eyes, and they have all told us that they could give us no hope nor support, because they were so feeble themselves; we can look to the throne of God: change and decay have never reached that; the revolution of ages has never moved it; the waves of an eternity have been rushing past it, but it has remained unshaken: the waves of another eternity are rushing toward it, but it is fixed, and can never be disturbed.

INFANT SLEEPING IN A GARDEN.

Sleep on, sweet babe! the flowers, that wake

Around thee, are not half so fair;

Thy dimpling smiles, unconscious break,

Like sunlight, on the vernal air.

Sleep on! no dreams of care are thine,

No anxious thoughts, that may not rest;

For angel arms around thee twine,

To make thy infant slumbers bless'd.

Perchance her spirit hovers near,

Whose name, thy infant beauty bears,

To guard thine eyelids, from the tear

That every child of sorrow shares.

Oh! may thy life, like hers endure,

Unsullied to its spotless close;

And bend to earth, as calm and pure

As ever bowed the summer rose.—Daves.

554. The estimate and valor of a man, consist in the heart, and in the will; there, his true honor lives; valor is stability, not of legs and arms, but of courage, and the soul; it does not lie in the valor of our horse, nor of our arms, but in ourselves. He, that falls obstinate in his courage, Si succiderit de genu pugnabit; if his legs fail him, fights upon his knees.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

Hast thou sounded the depths—of yonder sea,

And counted the sands, that under it be?

Hast thou measured the height—of heaven above?

Then—mayest thou mete out—the mother's love.

Hast thou talked with the blessed, of leading on,

To the throne of God—some wandering son?

Hast thou witnessed the angels' bright employ?

Then—mayest thou speak of a mother's joy.

Evening and morn—hast thou watched the bee

Go forth, on her errands of industry?

The bee, for herself, hath gather'd and toil'd,

But the mother's cares—are all for her child.

Hast thou gone with the traveler, Thought, afar,

From pole to pole, and from star to star!

Thou hast—but on ocean, earth, or sea,

The heart of a mother—has gone with thee.

There is not a grand, inspiring thought,

There is not a truth—by wisdom taught,

There is not a feeling, pure and high,

That may not be read—in a mother's eye.

There are teachings on earth, and sky, and air,

The heavens—the glory of God declare;

But louder—than voice beneath, above,

He is heard to speak—through a mother's love.

555. BALANCE OF HAPPINESS EQUAL. An extensive contemplation of human affairs, will lead us to the conclusion,—that among the different conditions, and ranks of men, the balance of happiness—is preserved, in a great measure, equal; and that the high and the low, the rich and the poor, approach, in point of real enjoyment, much nearer to each other, than is commonly imagined. In the lot of man, mutual compensations, both of pleasure, and of pain, universally take place. Providence never intended, that any state here, should be either completely happy, or entirely miserable. If the feelings of pleasure are more numerous, and more lively, in the higher departments of life, such, also, are those of pain. If greatness flatters our vanity, it multiplies our dangers. If opulence increases our gratifications, it increases, in the same proportion, our desires and demands. If the poor—are confined to a more narrow circle, yet, within that circle, lie most of those natural satisfactions, which, after all the refinements of art, are found to be the most genuine and true. In a state, therefore, where there is neither so much to be coveted, on the one hand, nor to be dreaded, on the other, as at first appears, how submissive ought we to be—to the disposal of Providence! how temperate—in our desires, and pursuits! how much more attentive—to preserve our virtue, and to improve our minds, than to gain the doubtful, and equivocal advantages of worldly prosperity.—Blair.

A RAINY DAY.

It rains. What lady—loves a rainy day?

Not she, who puts prunello on her foot,

Zephyrs around her neck, and silken socks

Upon a graceful ankle,—nor yet she,

Who sports her tasseled parasol along

The walks, beau-crowded, on some sunny noon,

Or trips in muslin, in a winter's night,

On a cold sleigh-ride—to a distant ball.

She loves a rainy day, who sweeps the hearth,

And threads the busy needle, or applies

The scissors to the torn, or thread-bare sleeve;

Who blesses God, that she has friends at home;

Who, in the pelting of the storm, will think

Of some poor neighbor, that she can befriend;

Who trims the lamp at night, and reads aloud,

To a young brother, tales he loves to hear;

Or ventures cheerfully abroad, to watch

The bedside of some sick, and suffering friend,

Administering that best of medicines,

Kindness, and tender care, and cheering hope;

Such—are not sad, e'en on a rainy day.

Mankind are all hunters in various degree;

The priest hunts a living—the lawyer a fee,

The doctor a patient—the courtier a place,

Though often, like us, he's flung out in the chace.

The cit hunts a plum—while the soldier hunts

The poet a dinner—the patriot a name; [fame,

And the practis'd coquette, tho' she seems to re-lapse in spite of her airs, still her lover pursues. [false,

He's on his guard, who knows his enemy;

And innocence—may softly trust her shield

Against an open foe; but who's so mailed,

That slander shall not reach him? Coward

Stabs in the dark. [calumny

Heaven's great view is one, and that—the whole.

587. OUR COUNTRY. And let the sacred obligations which have devolved on this generation, and on us, sink deep into our hearts. Those are daily dropping from among us, who established our liberty and our government. The great trust now descends to new hands. Let us apply ourselves to that which is presented to us, as our appropriate object. We can win no laurels in a war for independence. Earlier and worthier hands have gathered them all. Nor are there places for us by the side of Solon, and Alfred, and other founders of states. Our fathers have filled them. But there remains to us a great duty of defence and preservation; and there is opened to us, also, a noble pursuit, to which the spirit of the times strongly invites us. Our proper business is improvement. Let our age be the age of improvement. In a day of peace, let us advance the arts of peace, and the works of peace; let us develop the resources of our land; call forth its powers, build up its institutions, promote all its great interests, and see whether we also, in our day and generation, may not perform something worthy to be remembered. Let us cultivate a true spirit of union and harmony. In pursuing the great objects which our condition points out to us, let us act under a settled conviction, and an habitual feeling, that these twenty-six states are one country. Let our conceptions be enlarged to the circle of our duties. Let us extend our ideas over the whole of the vast field in which we are called to act. Let our object be, our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country. And, by the blessing of God, may that country itself become a vast and splendid monument, not of oppression and terror, but of wisdom, of peace, and of liberty, upon which the world may gaze with admiration forever.—Webster.

DISAPPOINTED AMBITION.

In full-blown dignity—see Wolsey stand,
Law—in his voice, and fortune—in his hand; [sign;
To him, the church, the realm, their powers con-
Through him, the rays of regal bounty shine;
Turn'd by his nod, the stream of honor flows;
His smile alone, security bestows.
Still, to new heights, his restless wishes tower;
Claim leads to claim, and power advances power;
Till conquest, unresisted, ceased to please,
And rights submitted—left him none to seize.
At length, his sovereign frowns; the train of state
Mark the keen glance, and watch the sign to hate.
Where'er he turns, he meets a stranger's eye;
His suppliants scorn him, and his followers fly.
How drops, at once, the pride of awful state,
The golden canopy, the glittering plate,
The regal palace, the luxurious board,
The liveried army, and the menial lord!
With age, with cares, with maladies oppressed,
He seeks the refuge of monastic rest.
Grief aids disease, remembered folly stings,
And his last sighs—reproach the faith of kings.

Expectation. It is proper for all to remember, that they ought not to raise expectation, which it is not in their power to satisfy, and that it is more pleasing to see smoke brightening into flame, than flame—sinking into smoke.

Frailty—thy name is Man; the earth—waits her king.

Frailty—thy name is Woman; the earth—waits her queen.

588. MORAL EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE. The sufferings of animal nature, occasioned by intemperance, are not to be compared with the moral agonies, which convulse the soul. It is an immortal being, who sins, and suffers; and, as his earthly house dissolves, he is approaching the judgment-seat, in anticipation of a miserable eternity. He feels his captivity, and, in anguish of spirit, clanks his chain, and cries for help. Conscience thunders, remorse goads, and, as the gulph opens before him, he recoils, and trembles, and weeps, and prays, and resolves, and promises, and reforms, and "seeks it yet again;" again resolves, and weeps, and prays, and "seeks it yet again!" Wretched man! he has placed himself in the hands of a giant, who never pities, and never relaxes his iron gripe. He may struggle, but he is in chains. He may cry for release, but it comes not; and lost! lost! may be inscribed on the doorposts of his dwelling. In the meantime, these paroxysms of his dying nature decline, and a fearful apathy, the harbinger of spiritual death, comes on. His resolution fails, and his mental energy, and his vigorous enterprise; and nervous irritation and depression ensue. The social affections lose their fullness and tenderness, and conscience loses its power, and the heart its sensibility, until all that was once lovely, and of good report, retires and leaves the wretch, abandoned to the appetites of a ruined animal. In this deplorable condition, reputation expires, business falters, and becomes perplexed, and temptations to drink multiply, as inclination to do so increases, and the power of resistance declines. And now the vortex roars, and the struggling victim bullets the fiery wave, with feebler stroke, and warning supplication, until despair flashes upon his soul, and, with an outcry, that pierces the heavens, he ceases to strive, and disappears.—Beecher.

THE DESTRUCTION OF SENACHERIB.

The Assyrian came down, like a wolf—on the fold,
And his cohorts—were gleaming—in purple, and gold;
And the sheen of his spears—was like stars—on the sea,
When the blue wave—rolls nightly, on deep Galilee.
Like the leaves of the forest—when summer is green,
That host, with their banners, at sunset were seen:
Like the leaves of the forest—when autumn hath blown,
That host, on the morrow—lay withered and strown.
For the angel of death—spread his wings on the blast,
And breathed in the face of the foe, as he passed;
And the eyes of the sleepers—waxed deadly, and chill,
And their hearts, but once heaved, and forever, were still!
And there—lay the steed, with his nostrils all wide,
But through them—there rolled not the breath of his pride;
And the foam of his gasping—lay white on the turf,
And cold—as the spray of the rock-beating surf.
And there—lay the rider, distorted, and pale,
With the dew on his brow, and the rust on his mail;
And the tents were all silent, the banners alone,
The lances—unlifted, the trumpets—unblown.
And the widows of Ashur—are lone in their wail,
And the idols are broke—in the temple of Baal;
And the might of the Gentile, unsmote by the sword,
Nath melted, like snow, in the glance of the Lord!—Byron.

Justice—is as strictly due between neighbor nations, as between neighbor citizens. A highwayman is as much a robber, when he plunders in a gang, as when single, and a nation, that makes an unjust war, is only a great gang.

True happiness—is to no place confined:

But still is found—in a contented mind

597. NATIONAL GLORY.

We are asked, what have we gained by the war? I have shown, that we have lost nothing, either in rights, territory, or honor; nothing, for which we ought to have contended, according to the principles of the gentlemen on the other side, or according to our own. Have we gained nothing—by the war? Let any man—look at the degraded condition of this country—before the war, the scorn of the universe, the contempt of ourselves, and tell me if we have gained nothing by the war. What is our present situation? Respectability, and character, abroad, security, and confidence, at home. If we have not obtained, in the opinion of some, the full measure of retribution, our character, and constitution, are placed on a solid basis, never to be shaken.

The glory acquired by our gallant tars, by our Jacksons, and our Browns on the land—is that—nothing? True we had our vicissitudes: there are humiliating events, which the patriot cannot review, without deep regret—but the great account, when it comes to be balanced, will be found vastly in our favor. Is there a man, who would obliterate, from the proud pages of our history, the brilliant achievements of Jackson, Brown, and Scott, and the host of heroes on land, and sea, whom I cannot enumerate? Is there a man, who could not desire a participation—in the national glory, acquired by the war? Yes, national glory, which, however the expression may be condemned by some, must be cherished by every genuine patriot.

What do I mean by national glory? Glory such as Hull, Jackson, and Perry have acquired. And are gentlemen insensible to their deeds—to the value of them in animating the country in the hour of peril hereafter? Did the battle of Thermopylæ—preserve Greece but once? Whilst the Mississippi—continues to bear the tributes of the Iron Mountains, and the Alleghenies—to her Delta, and to the Gulf of Mexico, the eighth of January shall be remembered, and the glory of that day shall stimulate future patriots, and nerve the arms of unborn freemen, in driving the presumptuous invader from our country's soil.

Gentlemen may boast of their insensibility to feelings inspired by the contemplation of such events. But I would ask, does the recollection of Bunker's Hill, Saratoga, and Yorktown, afford no pleasure? Every act of noble sacrifice of the country, every instance of patriotic devotion to her cause, has its beneficial influence. A nation's character—is the sum of its splendid deeds; they constitute one common patrimony, the nation's inheritance. They awe foreign powers; they arouse and animate our own people. I love true glory. It is this sentiment which ought to be cherished; and, in spite of cavils, and sneers, and attempts to put it down, it will rise triumphant, and finally conduct this nation to that height—to which nature, and nature's God—have destined it.—Clay.

598. THE FLIGHT OF XERES.

I saw him—on the battle-eve,

When, like a king, he bore him,—

Proud hosts, in glittering helm, and greave,

And prouder chiefs—before him:

The warrior, and the warrior's deeds—

31

X

The morrow, and the morrow's meeds,—

No daunting thoughts—came o'er him;

He looked around him, and his eye—

Defiance flashed—to earth, and sky.

He looked on ocean,—its broad breast

Was covered—with his fleet;

On earth; and saw, from east—to west,

Itis bannered millions meet:

While rocky, and glen, and cave, and coast,

Shook—with the war-cry of that host,

The thunder—of their feet!

He heard—the imperial echoes ring,—

He heard,—and felt himself—a king.

I saw him, next, alone; nor camp,

Nor chief, his steps attended;

Nor banner blazed, nor courser's tramp,

With war-cries, proudly blended,

He, stood alone, whom fortune high,

So lately, seemed to deify;

He, who with heaven contended,

Fled, like a fugitive, and slave!

Behind—the foe; before—the wave.

He stood; fleet, army, treasure,—gone,—

Alone, and in despair!

But wave, and wind—swept ruthless on,

For they were monarchs there;

And Xerxes, in a single bark,

Where late—his thousand ships were dark,

Must all their fury dare:

What a revenge—a trophy, this—

For thee, immortal Salamis!—Jewsbury.

599. OSSIAN'S ADDRESS TO THE MOON.

Daughter of heaven, fair art thou! the splendence of thy face is pleasant! Thou comest forth in loveliness. The stars attend thy blue course in the east. The clouds rejoice in thy presence, O moon. They brighten their dark-brown sides. Who is like thee, in heaven, light of the silent night! The stars, in thy presence, turn away their sparkling eyes.

Whither dost thou retire from thy course, when the darkness of thy countenance grows! Hast thou thy hall, like Ossian? Dwellst thou in the shadow of grief! Have thy sisters fallen from heaven? Are they, who rejoice with thee at night, no more! Yes! they have fallen, fair light! and thou dost often retire to mourn. But thou thyself shalt rail, one night, and leave thy blue path in heaven.

The stars will then lift up their heads, and rejoice. Thou art now clothed with thy brightness. Look from thy gates in the sky. Burst the cloud, O wind, that the daughter of night may look forth: that the slaggy mountains may brighten, and the ocean roll its white waves in light.

SHIP.

Her sails were set, but the dying wind

Scarcely wooed them, as they trembled on the yard

With an uncertain motion. She arose,

As a swan rises on her gilded wings.

When on a lake, at sunset, she uprears

Her form from out the waveless stream, and steers

Into the far blue ether—so, that ship

Seem'd lifted from the waters, and suspended,

Wing'd with her bright sails, in the silent air.

For age, and want, serve—while you may;

No morning sun—lasts a whole day.

592. A BATTLE-FIELD. We cannot see an individual expire, though a stranger, or an enemy, without being sensibly moved, and prompted by compassion, to lend him every assistance in our power. Every trace of resentment—vanishes in a moment; every other emotion—gives way to pity and terror. In these last extremities, we remember nothing, but the respect and tenderness, due to our common nature. What a scene, then, must a field of battle present, where thousands are left, without assistance, and without pity, with their wounds exposed to the piercing air, while their blood, freezing as it flows, binds them to the earth, amid the trampling of horses, and the insults of an enraged foe! Far from their native home, no tender assiduities of friendship, no well-known voice, no wife, or mother, or sister, is near, to soothe their sorrows, relieve their thirst, or close their eyes in death. Unhappy man! and must you be swept into the grave, unnoticed, and unnumbered, and no friendly tear be shed for your sufferings, or mingled with your dust?

593. BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE.

Not a drum | was heard | nor a funeral | note,
As his corse | to the ramparts | we hurried,
Not a soldier | discharged | his farewell shot,
O'er the grave | where our hero | we buried.
We buried him | darkly | at dead of night,
The turf | with our bay'nets | turning.
By the struggling moonbeam's | misty light,
And our lanterns | dimly burning.
Few and short | were the prayers | we said,
And we spoke | not a word | of sorrow, [dead,
But we steadfastly gazed | on the face | of the
And we bitterly thought | on the morrow.
No useless coffin | confined his breast,
Nor in sheet | nor in shroud | we bound him,
But he lay | like a warrior | taking his rest,
With his martial cloak | around him.
We thought | as we heaped | the narrow bed,
And smoothed down | his lonely pillow,
That the foe | and the stranger | would tread o'er
And we | far away | on the billow. [his head,
Lightly they'll talk | of the spirit | that's gone,
And o'er his cold ashes | upbraid him,
But nothing he'll reck | if they let him sleep on,
In the grave | where a Briton has laid him.
But half | our heavy task | was done,
When the clock | told the hour for retiring,
And we heard the distant | and random gun,
That the foe | was suddenly firing.
Slowly | and sadly | we laid him down,
From the field of his fame, fresh, and gory,
We carved not a line, we raised not a stone,
But we left him | alone in his glory.

594. CASSIUS AGAINST CÆSAR.

Honor—is the subject of my story ;—
I cannot tell what you, and other men—
Think of this life ; but for my single self,
I had as lief not be, as live to be
In awe—of such a thing—as myself.
I was born free as Cæsar ; so were you ;
We have both fed as well ; and we can both
Endure the winter's cold as well as he.
For, once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tiber, chafing with its shores,

Cæsar says to me,—“Darest thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me, into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point ?”—Upon the word,
Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow ; so, indeed, he did.
The torrent roared, and we did buffet it ;
With lusty sinews, throwing it aside,
And stemming it, with hearts of controversy.
But ere we could arrive the point proposed,
Cæsar cried,—“Help me, Cassius, or I sink.”

I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy, upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so, from the waves of Did I—the tired Cæsar ; and this man— [Tiber,
Is now—become a god ; and Cassius—is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body,
If Cæsar—carelessly but nod on him.

He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake : 'tis true, this god did shake ;
His coward lips did from their color fly ;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the
Did lose its lustre ; I did hear him groan, [world,
Aye, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
“Alas !” it cried—“Give me some drink, Titinius.”
As a sick girl.

Ye gods ! it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper—should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone.
Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world,
Like a Colossus, and we, petty men,
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about,
To find ourselves dishonorable graves.
Men, at some time, are masters of their fates :
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings. [Cæsar?
Brutus—and Cæsar ! What should be in that Why should that name be sounded more than yours ?

Write them together : yours is as fair a name ;
Sounded them : it doth become the mouth as well ;
Weigh them : it is as heavy ; conjure with 'em :
Brutus—will start a spirit, as soon as Cæsar.

Now, in the name of all the gods at once,
Upon what meats—doth this our Cæsar feed,
That he hath grown so great ? Age, thou art ashamed ;

Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods.
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was famed with more than with one man ?
When could they say, till now, that talked of Rome,

That her wide walls encompassed but one man ?
Oh ! you, and I—have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once, th't would have brooked
The infernal devil, to keep his state in Rome,
As easily as a king.

A warm heart—in this cold world—is like
A beacon-light—wasting feeble flame
Upon the wintry deep, that feels it not,
And, trembling with each pitiless gust th't blows,
Till its faint fire—is spent.

Nature, in her productions slow, aspires,
By just degrees, to reach perfection's height.

604. AGAINST THE AMERICAN WAR.

I cannot, my lords, I will not, join in congratulation on misfortune, and disgrace. This, my lords, is a perilous, and tremendous moment. It is not a time for adulation: the smoothness of flattery—cannot save us, in this rugged, and awful crisis. It is now necessary, to instruct the throne, in the language of truth. We must, if possible, dispel the delusion, and darkness, which envelop it; and display, in its full danger, and genuine colors, the ruin, which is brought to our doors. Can ministers, still presume to expect support, in their infatuation! Can parliament, be so dead to its dignity, and duty, as to give their support to measures, thus obtruded, and forced upon them! Measures, my lords, which have reduced this late flourishing empire—to scorn, and contempt! “But yesterday, and Britain might have stood against the world; now, none so poor, as to do her reverence.” The people, whom we at first despised as rebels, but whom we now acknowledge as enemies, are abetted against us, supplied with every military store, have their interest consulted, and their ambassadors entertained by our inveterate enemy—and ministers do not, and dare not, interpose, with dignity, or effect. The desperate state of our army abroad, is in part known. No man more highly esteems, and honors the British troops, than I do; I know their virtues, and their valor; I know they can achieve anything, but impossibilities; and I know that the conquest of British America is an impossibility. You cannot, my lords, you cannot conquer America. What is your present situation there? We do not know the worst; but we know, that in three campaigns, we have done nothing, and suffered much. You may swell every expense, and accumulate every assistance, and extend your traffic to the shambles of every German despot: your attempts will be forever vain, and impotent—doubly so, indeed, from this mercenary aid, on which you rely; for it irritates, to an incurable resentment, the minds of your adversaries, to overrun them with the mercenary sons of rapine, and plunder, devoting them, and their possessions, to the rapacity of hireling cruelty. If I were an American, as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop was landed in my country, I never would lay down my arms; No—Never, never, never.—Chatham.

605. THE WHISKERS.

The kings, who rule mankind with haughty sway,
The prouder pope, whom even kings obey— [fall,
Love, at whose shrine both popes, and monarchs
And e'en self-interest, that controls them all—
Possess a petty power, when all combined,
Compared with fashion's influence on mankind;
For love itself will off to fashion bow;
The following story will convince you how:

A petit maitre wooed a fair,
Of virtue, wealth, and graces rare;
But vainly had preferr'd his claim.
The maiden own'd no answering flame;
At length, by doubt and anguish torn,
Suspense, too painful to be borne,
Low at her feet he humbly kneel'd,
And thus his ardent flame reveal'd:

“Pity my grief, angelic fair,
Behold my anguish, and despair;
For you, this heart must ever burn—
O bless me, with a kind return;
My love, no language can express,
Reward it then, with happiness;

Nothing on earth, but you I prize,
All else is trifling in my eyes;
And cheerfully, would I resign
The wealth of worlds, to call you mine.
But, if another gain your hand,
Far distant from my native land,
Far hence, from you, and hope, I'll fly,
And in some foreign region die.”

The virgin heard, and thus replied:
“If my consent to be your bride,
Will make you happy, then be blest;
But grant me, first, one small request;
A sacrifice I must demand,
And, in return, will give my hand.”

“A sacrifice! O speak its name,
For you I'd forfeit wealth, and fame;
Take my whole fortune—every cent—”

“’Twas something more than wealth I meant.”

“Must I the realms of Neptune trace?
O speak the word—where'er the place,
For you, the idol of my soul,
I'd e'en explore the frozen pole;
Arabia's sandy desert tread,
Or trace the Tigris to its head.”

“O no, dear sir, I do not ask,
So long a voyage, so hard a task:
You must—but ah! the boon I want,
I have no hope that you will grant.”

“Shall I, like Bonaparte, aspire
To be the world's imperial sire?
Express the wish, and here I vow,
To place a crown upon your brow.”

“Sir, these are trifles”—she replied—
“But, if you wish me for your bride,
You must—but still I fear to speak—
You'll never grant the boon I seek.”

“O say!” he cried—“dear angel say—
What must I do, and I obey:
No longer rack me with suspense,
Speak your commands, and send me hence.”

“Well, then, dear generous youth!” she cries,
“If with my heart you really prize,
And wish to link your fate with mine,
On one condition I am thine;
’Twill then become my pleasing duty,
To contemplate a husband's beauty;
And, gazing on his manly face,
His feelings, and his wishes trace;
To banish thence each mark of care,
And light a smile of pleasure there.
O let me then, ’tis all I ask,
Commence at once the pleasing task;
O let me, as becomes my place,
Cut those huge whiskers from your face.”

She said—but O, what strange surprise—
Was pictured in her lover's eyes!
Like lightning, from the ground he sprang,
While wild amazement tied his tongue;
A statue, motionless, he gazed,
Astonish'd, horror-struck, amazed
So, look'd the gallant Perseus, when Medusa's visage met his ken;
So, look'd Macbeth, whose guilty eye
Discern'd an “air-drawn dagger” nigh;
And so, the prince of Denmark stared,
When first his father's ghost appeared.

At length, our hero, silence broke,
And thus, in wildest accents spoke:
“Cut off my whiskers! O ye gods!
I'd sooner lose my ears, by odds;
Madam, I'd not be so disgraced,
So lost to fashion, and to taste,
To win an empress to my arms;
Though blest with more than mortal charms.
My whiskers! Zounds!” He said no more,
But quick retreated through the door,
And sought a less obdurate fair,
To take the beau, with all his hair.—Woodworth.

This path, you say, is hid in endless night;
’Tis self conceal'd, alone, obstructs your sight.

597. OSSIAN'S ADDRESS TO THE SUN. O thou, that rollest above, round as the shield of my fathers! whence are thy beams, O sun! thy everlasting light! Thou comest forth in thy awful beauty; the stars—hide themselves in the sky; the moon, cold and pale, sinks in the western wave. But thou, thyself, movest alone: who can be a companion of thy course! The oaks of the mountains fall; the mountains themselves decay with years: the ocean shrinks, and grows again; the moon, herself, is lost in the heavens; but thou—art forever the same, rejoicing in the brightness of thy course. When the world is dark with tempests, when thunders roll, and lightnings fly, thou lookest in thy beauty from the clouds, and laughest at the storm. But to Ossian—thou lookest in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more; whether thy yellow hair—flows on the eastern clouds, or thou tremblest at the gates of the west. But thou art, perhaps, like me, for a season: thy years will have an end. Thou wilt sleep in thy clouds, careless of the voice of the morning.

598. DOUGLAS'S ACCOUNT OF HIMSELF.

My name is Norval: on the Grampian hills
My father feeds his flocks; a frugal swain,
Whose constant cares, were to increase his store,
And keep his only son, myself, at home.
For I had heard of battles, and I longed
To follow to the field—some warlike lord;
And Heaven soon granted—what my sire denied.
This moon which rose last night, round as my shield,
Had not yet filled her horn, when, by her light,
A band of fierce barbarians, from the hills,
Rushed like a torrent—down upon the vale,
Sweeping our flocks and herds. The shepherds fled
For safety, and for succor. I, alone,
With bended bow, and quiver full of arrows,
Hovered about the enemy, and marked
The road he took; then hastened to my friends,
Whom, with a troop of fifty chosen men,
I met advancing. The pursuit I led,
Till we o'ertook the spoil-cumbered foe. [drawn,
We fought, and conquered. Ere a sword was
An arrow from my bow—had pierced their chief,
Who wore, that day, the arms which now I wear.
Returning home in triumph, I disdained
The shepherd's slothful life; and having heard
That our good king—had summoned his bold peers
To lead their warriors to the Carron side,
I left my father's house, and took with me
A chosen servant to conduct my steps,—
Yon trembling coward, who forsook his master.
Journeying with this intent, I passed these towers,
And, heaven-directed, came this day to do
The happy deed, that gilds my humble name.

MORAL TRUTH INTELLIGIBLE TO ALL.

The shepherd lad, who, in the sunshine, carves
On the green turf a dial, to divide
The silent hours; and who, to that report,
Can portion out his pleasures, and adapt
His round of pastoral duties, is not left
With less intelligence, for moral things,
Of gravest import. Early, he perceives,
Within himself, a measure, and a rule,
Which, to the sun of truth, he can apply,
That shines for him, and shines for all mankind.

599. OF ELOCUTION. Elocution—is the art, or the act, of so delivering our own tho'ts and feelings, or the thoughts and feelings of others, as not only to convey to those around us, with precision, force, and harmony, the full purport, and meaning of the words and sentences, in which these thoughts are clothed; but also, to excite and to impress upon their minds the feelings, imaginations, and passions, by which those thoughts are dictated, or by which they should naturally be accompanied. Elocution, therefore, in its more ample and liberal signification, is not confined to the mere exercise of the organs of speech. It embraces the whole theory and practice of the exterior demonstration of the inward workings of the mind. To concentrate what has been said by an allegorical recapitulation: Eloquence—may be considered as the soul, or animated principle of discourse; and is dependent on intellectual energy and intellectual attainments. Elocution—is the embodying form, or representative power; dependent on exterior accomplishments, and on the cultivation of the organs. Oratory—is the complicated and vital existence, resulting from the perfect harmony and combination of eloquence and elocution. The vital existence, however, in its full perfection, is one of the choicest rarities of nature. The high and splendid accomplishments of oratory, even in the most favored age and the most favored countries, have been attained by few; and many are the ages, and many are the countries, in which these accomplishments have never once appeared. Generations have succeeded to generations, and centuries have rolled after centuries, during which, the intellectual desert has not exhibited even one solitary specimen of the stately growth and flourishing expansion of oratorical genius. The rarity of this occurrence is, undoubtedly, in part, to be accounted for, from the difficulty of the attainment. The palm of oratorical perfection is only to be grasped—it is, in reality, only to be desired, by aspiring souls, and intellects of unusual energy. It requires a persevering toil which few would be contented to encounter; a decisive intrepidity of character, and an untamableness of mental ambition, which very, very few can be expected to possess. It requires, also, conspicuous opportunities for cultivation and display, to which few can have the fortune to be born, and which fewer still will have the hardihood to endeavor to create.

VIRTUE THE GUARDIAN OF YOUTH.

Down the smooth stream of life the stripling darts,
Gay as the morn; bright glows the vernal sky,
Hope swells his sails, and Passion steers his course.
So glides his little bark along the shore,
Where virtue takes her stand: but if too far
He launches forth beyond discretion's mark,
Sudden the tempest scowls, the surges roar,
Blot his fair day, and plunge him in the deep.
"—My boy, the unwelcome hour is come,
When thou, transplanted from thy genial home,
Must find a colder soil, and bleaker air,
And trust for safety—to a stranger's care."
Deceit—is the false road to happiness;
And all the joys we travel to, through vice,
Like fairy banquets, vanish when we touch them.
See all, but man, with unearn'd pleasure gay.

600. SUPPOSED SPEECH OF JOHN ADAMS ON ADOPTING THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE. It is true, indeed, that in the beginning, we aimed not at independence. But there's a Divinity, which shapes our ends. The injustice of England has driven us to arms; and, blinded to her own interest, for our good, she has obstinately persisted, till independence is now within our grasp. We have but to reach forth to it, and it is ours. Why, then, should we defer the declaration? Is any man so weak, as now to hope for a reconciliation with England, which shall leave either safety to the country, and its liberties, or safety to his own life, and his own honor?

Are not you, sir, who sit in that chair; is not he, our venerable colleague near you; are you not both, already, the proscribed, and predestined objects of punishment, and of vengeance? Cut off from all hope of royal clemency, what are you, what can you be, while the power of England remains, but outlaws? If we postpone independence, do we mean to carry on, or to give up the war? Do we mean to submit to the measures of parliament, Boston port-bill and all? Do we mean to submit, and consent that we ourselves shall be ground to powder, and our country and its rights trodden down in the dust?

I know we do not mean to submit. We never shall submit. Do we intend to violate that most solemn obligation, ever entered into by men, that plighting, before God, of our sacred honor to Washington, when, putting him forth to incur the dangers of war, as well as the political hazards of the times, we promised to adhere to him, in every extremity, with our fortunes, and our lives?

I know there is not a man here, who would not rather see a general conflagration sweep over the land, or an earthquake sink it, than one jot or tittle of that plighted faith to fall to the ground. For myself, having, twelve months ago, in this place, moved you, that George Washington be appointed commander of the forces, raised, or to be raised, for defence of American liberty, may my right hand forget her cunning, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I hesitate, or waver in the support I give him.

The war, then, must go on. We must fight it through. And, if the war must go on, why put off longer, the declaration of independence? That measure will strengthen us. It will give us character abroad. The nations will then treat with us; which they never can do, while we acknowledge ourselves subjects, in arms against our sovereign. Nay, I maintain, that England herself will sooner treat for peace with us, on the footing of independence, than consent, by repealing her acts, to acknowledge that her whole conduct toward us, has been a course of injustice and oppression.

Her pride will be less wounded, by submitting to that course of things, which now predestinates our independence, than by yielding the points in controversy to her rebellious subjects. The former she would regard as the result of fortune; the latter she would feel as her own deep disgrace. Why then, sir, do we not, as soon as possible, change this from a civil to a national war? And, since we must fight it through, why not put ourselves in a state to enjoy all the benefits of victory, if we gain the victory?

If we fail, it can be no worse for us.—But we shall not fail. The cause will raise up armies; the cause will create navies. The people, if we are true to them, will carry us, and will carry themselves, gloriously through this struggle. I care not how fierce other people have been found. I know the people of these colonies; and I know, that resistance to British aggression is deep and settled in their hearts, and cannot be eradicated. Every colony, indeed, has expressed its willingness to follow, if we but take the lead.

Sir, the declaration will inspire the people with increased courage. Instead of a long and bloody war for restoration of privileges, for redress of grievances, for chartered immunities, held under a British king, set before them the glorious object of entire independence, and it will breathe into them anew the breath of life. Read this declaration at the head of the army; every sword will be drawn from its scabbard, and the solemn vow uttered, to maintain it or to perish on the bed of honor. Publish it from the pulpit; religion will approve it, and the love of religious liberty will eling around it, resolved to stand with it, or fall with it. Send it to the public halls; proclaim it there; let them hear it, who heard the first roar of the enemy's cannon; let them see it, who saw their brothers and their sons fall on the field of Bunker-Hill, and in the streets of Lexington and Concord,—and the very walls will cry out in its support.

Sir, I know the uncertainty of human affairs; but I see clearly, through this day's business. You and I, indeed, may rue it. We may not live to the time, when this declaration shall be made good. We may die; die, colonists; die, slaves; die, it may be, ignominiously, and on the scaffold. Be it so. If it be the pleasure of Heaven, that my country shall require the poor offering of my life, the victim shall be ready, at the appointed hour of sacrifice, come when that hour may.

But, whatever may be our fate, be assured that this declaration will stand. It may cost treasure, and it may cost blood; but it will stand, and it will richly compensate for both. Through the thick gloom of the present, I see the brightness of the future as the sun in heaven. We shall make this a glorious, an immortal day. When we are in our graves, our children will honor it. They will celebrate it with thanksgiving, with festivity, with bonfires, and illuminations. On its annual return, they will shed tears, copious, gushing tears, not of subjection and slavery, not of agony and distress, but of exultation, of gratitude, and of joy. Sir, before God I believe the hour is come. My judgment approves this measure, and my whole heart is in it. All that I am, all that I have, and all that I hope for, in this life, I am now ready here to stake upon it: and I leave off, as I began; sink or swim; live or die; survive, or perish, I am for the declaration: it is my living sentiment; and, by the blessing of God, it shall be my dying sentiment.—Independence now! and independence—FOREVER!—Webster.

Be not dismayed—fear—nurses up a danger;
And resolution—kills it,—in the birth.

601. THE EFFECTS OF GENTLENESS. Gentleness—is the great avenue to mutual enjoyment. Amidst the strife of interfering interests, it tempers the violence of contention, and keeps alive the seeds of harmony. It softens animosities, renews endearments, and renders the countenance of man, a refreshment to man. Banish gentleness from the earth; suppose the world to be filled, with none but harsh and contentious spirits, and what sort of society would remain? the solitude of the desert were preferable to it. The conflict of jarring elements in chaos, the cave where subterraneous winds contend and rear, the den where serpents hiss and beasts of the forest howl, would be the only proper representation of such assemblies of men. Strange! that, where men have all one common interest, they should so often concur in defeating it. Has not nature already provided a sufficient quantity of evils for the state of man? As if we did not suffer enough from the storm which beats upon us without, must we conspire also, in those societies where we assemble, in order to find a retreat from that storm, to harass one another!

A NIGHT SCENE IN TURKEY.

'Twas midnight: on the mountains brown
The cold round moon—shone brightly down;
Blue rolled the ocean, blue the sky
Spread, like an ocean, hung on high,
Bespangled with those isles of light,
So wildly, spiritually bright;
Who ever gazed upon them, shining,
And turned to earth, without repining,
Nor wished for wings to fly away,
And mix—with their eternal ray?
The waves, on either shore, lay there,
Calm, clear, and azure as the air,
And scarce their foam—the pebbles shook,
But murmured meekly, as the brook.
The winds—were pillowed on the waves,
The banners drooped—along their staves,
And as they fell around them, furling,
Above them—shone the crescent curling;
And that deep silence was unbroke,
Save when the watch—his signal spoke,
Save when the steed—neighed oft and shrill,
And echo answered—from the hill,
And the wide hum—of that wild host
Rustled, like leaves, from coast to coast,
As rose the Muezzin's voice in air,
In midnight call—to wonted prayer.
It rose, that chaunted, mournful strain,
Like some lone spirit's—o'er the plain;
'Twas musical, but sadly sweet,
Such as, when winds, and harp-strings meet;
And take a long, unmeasured tone,
To mortal minstrelsy, unknown:
It seemed to those, within the wall,
A cry—prophetic of their fall;
It struck—even the besieger's ear,
With something ominous, and drear,—
An undefined, and sudden thrill,
Which makes the heart—a moment still;
Then beat, with quicker pulse, ashamed
Of that strange sense—its silence framed;
Such as a sudden passing bell
Wakes, though but for a stranger's knell.

Know thyself.

602. PRESS ON. This is a speech, brief, but full of inspiration, and opening the way to all victory. The mystery of Napoleon's career was this,—under all difficulties and discouragements, “PRESS ON!” It solves the problem of all heroes; it is the rule, by which to weigh rightly, all wonderful successes, and triumphal marches—to fortune and genius. It should be the motto of all, old—and young, high—and low, fortunate—and unfortunate, so called.

“PRESS ON!” Never despair; never be discouraged, however stormy the heavens, however dark the way; however great the difficulties, and repeated the failures,—“PRESS ON!” If fortune—has played false with thee to-day, do thou play true for thyself to-morrow. If thy riches have taken wings, and left thee, do not weep thy life away; but be up and doing, and retrieve the loss, by new energies and action. If an unfortunate bargain—has deranged thy business, do not fold thy arms, and give up all as lost; but stir thyself, and work the more vigorously.

If those whom thou hast trusted, have betrayed thee, do not be discouraged, do not idly weep, but “PRESS ON!” find others; or, what is better, learn to live within thyself. Let the foolishness of yesterday—make thee wise to-day. If thy affections—have been poured out like water in the desert, do not sit down and perish of thirst,—but press on; a beautiful oasis is before thee, and thou mayst reach it, if thou wilt. If another—has been false to thee, do not thou increase the evil—by being false to thyself. Do not say—the world hath lost its poetry and beauty; 'tis not so; and even if it be so, make thine own poetry and beauty, by a brave, a true, and, above all, a religious life.

ASPIRATIONS OF YOUTH.

Higher, higher, will we climb,
Up—the mount of glory,
That our names—may live through time,
In our country's story;
Happy, when her welfare calls,
He, who conquers,—he, who falls.
Deeper, deeper—let us toil,
In the mines of knowledge;
Nature's wealth—and Learning's spoil;
Win from school!—and college;
Delve we there—for richer gems,
Than the stars of diadems.
Onward, onward—may we pass,
Through the path of duty;
Virtue—is true happiness,
Excellence, true beauty;
Minds—are of celestial birth:
Make we, then, a heaven of earth.
Closer, closer—let us knit
Hearts, and hands together,
Where our fireside comforts sit,
In the wildest weather;
O, they wander wide, who roam
For the joys of life, from home.
Nearer, dearer bands of love,
Draw our souls in union,
To our Father's house above,
To the saints' communion:
Thither—ev'ry hope ascend,
There—may all our labors end.

603. HANNIBAL TO HIS SOLDIERS. On what side soever I turn my eyes, I behold all full of courage and strength; a veteran infantry, a most gallant cavalry; you, my allies, most faithful and valiant; you, Carthaginians, whom not only your country's cause, but the justest anger, impels to battle. The hope, the courage of assailants, is always greater than of those, who act upon the defensive. With hostile banners displayed, you are come down upon Italy; you bring the war. Grief, injuries, indignities, fire your minds, and spur you forward to revenge.

First, they demand me—that I, your general, should be delivered up to them; next, all of you, who had fought at the siege of Saguntum; and we were to be put to death—by the extremest tortures. Proud, and cruel nation! every thing must be yours, and at your disposal! You are to prescribe to us, with whom we shall make war, with whom we shall make peace! You are to set us bounds; to shut us up within hills and rivers; but you—you are not to observe the limits, which yourselves have fixed.

Pass not the Iberus! What next! Touch not the Saguntines; is Saguntum upon the Iberus! move not a step towards that city. Is it a small matter, then, that you have deprived us of our ancient possessions, Sicily and Sardinia? you would have Spain, too! Well, we shall yield Spain; and then—you will pass into Africa! Will pass, did I say! this very year, they ordered one of their consuls into Africa, the other into Spain.

No, soldiers, there is nothing left for us, but what we can vindicate with our swords. Come on, then—be men. The Romans—may with more safety be cowards; they have their own country behind them; have places of refuge to flee to, and are secure from danger in the roads thither; but for you, there is no middle fortune between death, and victory. Let this be well fixed in your minds, and once again, I say, you are conquerors.—Livy.

604. VULTURE AND CAPTIVE INFANT.

I've been among the mighty Alps, and wandered thro' their vales,
And heard the honest mountainers—relate their dismal tale,
As round the cotters' blazing hearth, when their daily work was o'er,
They spoke of those, who disappeared, and ne'er were heard of more.

And there, I, from a shepherd, heard a narrative of fear,
A tale—to rend a mortal heart, which mothers—might not hear:
The tears—were standing in his eyes, his voice—was tremulous;
But, wiping all those tears away, he told his story thus:

"It is among these barren cliffs—the ravenous vulture dwells,
Who never fattens on the prey, which from afar he smells;
But, patient, watching hour on hour, upon a lofty rock,
He singles out some truant lamb, a victim, from the flock.

One cloudless Sabbath summer morn, the sun was rising high,
When, from my children on the green, I heard a fearful cry,
As if some awful deed were done, a shriek of grief, and pain,
I hurried, I humbly trust in God, I ne'er may hear again.

A cry out to learn the cause; but, overwhelmed with fright,
The children never ceased to shriek; and, from my frozen sight,
I missed the youngest of my bates, the darling of my care;
But something caught my searching eyes, slow sailing thro' the air.

Oh! what an awful spectacle—to meet a father's eye,—
His infant—made a vulture's prey, with terror to desecr;
And know, with agonizing heart, and with a maniac rave,
That earthly power—could not avail—that innocent to save!

My infant—stretched his little hands—implovingly to me,
And struggled with the ravenous bird, all vainly to get free:
At intervals, I heard his cries, as loud he shrieked, and screamed!
Until, upon the azure sky, a lessening spot he seemed.

The vulture—flapped his sail-like wings, though heavily he flew;
A mote, upon the star's broad face, he seemed out; my view;
But once, I thought I saw him stop, as if he would alight,—
'Twas only a delusive thought, for all had vanished quite.

All search was vain, and years had passed; that child was ne'er
When once a daring hunter climbed unto a lofty spot, [forgot,
From thence, upon a rugged crag—the chamois never reached,
He saw—an infant's fleshless bones—the elements had bleached!

I clambered up that rugged cliff—I could not stay away,—
I knew they were my infant's bones—thus lastening to decay:
A tattered garment—yet remained, though torn to many a shred:
The crimson cap—he wore that morn—was still upon his head."

That dreary spot—is pointed out to travelers, passing by,
Who often stand, and musing, gaze, nor go without a sigh;
And as I journeyed, the next morn, along my sunny way,
The precipice was shown to me, whereon the infant lay.—Anon.

605. THE HERMIT.

At the close of the day, when the hamlet is still,
And mortals the sweets of forgetfulness prove;
When nought, but the torrent, is heard on the hill,
And nought, but the nightingale's song, in the grove,
'Twas thus, by the cave of the mountain afar,
While his harp rung symphonious, a hermit began;
No more with himself, or with nature at war,
He thought as a sage, tho' he felt as a man.

"Ah! why, all abandon'd to darkness and woe;
Why, lone Philomela, that languishing fall?
For spring shall return, and a lover bestow,
And sorrow no longer thy bosom intrude.
But, if pity inspire thee, renew the sad lay,
Mourn, sweetest complainer, man calls thee to mourn;
O soothe him, whose pleasures, like thine, pass away:
Full quickly they pass—but they never return.

"Now gliding remote, on the verge of the sky,
The moon, half extinguish'd, her crescent displays:
But lately I mark'd, when, majestic on high,
She shone, and the planets were lost, in her blaze.
Roll on, thou fair orb, and, with gladness, pursue
The path, that conducts thee to splendor again:
But man's faded glory, what change shall renew!
Ah fool! to exult in a glory so vain!

"Tis night, and the landscape is lovely no more:
I mourn; but, ye woodlands, I mourn not for you;
For morn is approaching, your charms to restore,
Perfumd with fresh fragrance, and glitt'ring with dew:
Nor yet for the ravage of winter I mourn;
Kind nature the embryo blossom will save:
But when shall spring visit the mould'ring urn!
O, when shall day dawn, on the night of the grave!

"Twas thus, by the glare of false science betray'd,
That leads, to bewilder; and dazzles, to blind;
My thoughts' wont to roam, from shade onward to shade,
Destruction before me, and sorrow behind.
O pity, great Father of light, then I cried,
Thy creature, who fain would not wander from thee!

Lo, humbled in dust, I relinquish my pride:
From doubt, and from darkness thou only, canst free.

"And darkness and doubt are now flying away:
No longer I roam in conjecture forlorn:
So breaks on the traveler, faint and astray,

The truth, and the balmy effulgence of morn.
See truth, love, and mercy, in triumph descending,
And nature all glowing in Eden's first bloom!
On the cold cheek of death smiles, and roses are blending,
And beauty immortal awakes from the tomb.—Battie.

O what a vision—were the stars,
When first I saw them burn on high,
Rolling along, like living cars
Of light,—for gods to journey by.

The world—is full of poetry—the air
Is living with its spirit; the waves—
Dance—to the music of its melodies,
And sparkle—in its brightness.

In struggling with misfortunes,
Lies the true proof—of virtue.

606. THE CHARACTER OF WOMAN. The influence of the female character—is now felt, and acknowledged, in all the relations of life. I speak not now, of those distinguished women, who instruct their age through the public press. Nor of those, whose devout strains we take upon our lips, when we worship. But of a much larger class; of those, whose influence is felt in the relations of neighbor, friend, daughter, wife, mother.

Who waits at the couch of the sick, to administer tender charities, while life lingers, or to perform the last acts of kindness, when death comes? Where shall we look for those examples of friendship, that most adorn our nature; those abiding friendships, which trust, even when betrayed, and survive all chances of fortune? Where shall we find the brightest illustration of filial piety? Have you ever seen a daughter, herself, perhaps, timid and helpless, watching the decline of an aged parent, and holding out, with heroic fortitude, to anticipate his wishes, to administer to his wants, and to sustain his tottering steps to the very borders of the grave?

But in no relation—does woman exercise so deep an influence, both immediately, and prospectively, as in that of mother. To her is committed the immortal treasure of the infant mind. Upon her—devolves the care of the first stages—of that course of discipline, which is to form a being, perhaps the most frail and helpless in the world, the fearless ruler of animated creation, and the devout adorer of his great Creator.

Her smiles call into exercise the first affections, that spring up in our hearts. She cherishes, and expands—the earliest germs of our intellects. She breathes over us her deepest devotions. She lifts our little hands, and teaches our little tongues to lisp in prayer. She watches over us, like a guardian angel, and protects us through all our helpless years, when we know not of her cares, and her anxieties, on our account. She follows us into the world of men, and lives in us, and blesses us, when she lives not otherwise upon the earth.

What constitutes the centre of every home? Whither do our thoughts turn, when our feet are weary with wandering, and our hearts sick with disappointments? Where shall the truant and forgetful husband go—for sympathy, unalloyed, and without design, but to the bosom of her who is ever ready, and waiting to share in his adversity, or prosperity? And if there be a tribunal, where the sins and the follies of a froward child—may hope for pardon and forgiveness, this side heaven, that tribunal!—is the heart of a fond, and devoted mother.

Finally, her influence is felt, deeply, in religion. "If christianity, should be compelled to flee from the mansions of the great, the academies of philosophers, the halls of legislators, or the throng of busy men, we should find her last, and purest retreat—with woman at the fireside; her last altar—would be the female heart; her last audience—would be the children gathered round the knees of the mother; her last sacrifice, the secret prayer, escaping in silence from her lips, and heard, perhaps, only at the throne of God."

How empty, learnings, and how vain is art;
Save where it guides the life, and mends the heart.
Fancy and pride reach things at vast expense.

INDIAN NAMES.

"How can the red men be forgotten, while so many of our states and territories, bays, lakes, and rivers, are indelibly stamped by names of their giving?"

Ye say—they all have pass'd away,

That noble race—and brave;

That their light canoes—have vanish'd

From off the crested wave;

That, 'mid the forests—where they roam'd,

There rings no hunter's shout;

But their name—is on your waters,

Ye may not wash it out.

'Tis where Ontario's billow—

Like ocean's surge—is curl'd;

Where strong Niagara's thunders—wake

The echo—of the world;

Where red Missouri—bringeth

Rich tribute—from the west;

And Rappahannock—sweetly sleeps

On green Virginia's breast.

Ye say—their conelike cabins,

That cluster'd o'er the lake,

Have disappear'd, as wither'd leaves—

Before the autumn's gale;

But their memory—liveth on your hills,

Their baptism—on your shore;

Your everlasting rivers—speak

Their dialect of yore.

Old Massachusetts—wears it—

Within her lordly crown;

And broad Ohio—bears it—

Amid his young renown:

Connecticut—hath wreath'd it—

Where her quiet foliage waves,

And bold Kentucky—breathes it hoarse—

Through all her ancient caves.

Wachusett—hides its lingering voice—

Within his rocky heart,

And Alleghany—graves its tone—

Throughout his lofty chart.

Monadnock, on his forehead hoar,

Doth seal the sacred trust;

Your mountains—build their monument,

Though ye destroy their dust.

IMPROVEMENT OF MIND WITHOUT DISPLAY. Well-informed persons will easily be discovered, to have read the best books, tho' they are not always detailing lists of authors: for a muster-roll of names—may be learned from the catalogue, as well as from the library. The honey—owes its exquisite taste—to the fragrance of the sweetest flowers; yet the skill of the little artificer, appears in this, that the delicious stores are so admirably worked up, and there is such a due proportion observed in mixing them, that the perfection of the whole—consists in its not tasting, individually, of the rose, the jessamine, the carnation, or any of those sweets, of the very essence of all which it is compounded. But true judgment will discover the infusion, which true modesty will not display; and even common subjects, passing through a cultivated understanding, borrow a flavor of its richness.

What stronger breastplate than a heart untaint'd?

Thrice is he armed, who hath his quarrel just;

And he, but naked, tho' locked in steel,

Whose conscience, with injustice is corrupted.

607. ODE ON THE PASSIONS.

When Music, heavenly maid, was young,
While yet, in early Greece, she sung,
The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
Throng'd—around her magic cell;
Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting,
Possess'd beyond the Muse's painting.
By turns, they felt the glowing mind
Disturb'd, delighted, rais'd, refin'd:
Till once, 'tis said, when all were fired,
Fill'd with fury, rapt, inspired,
From the supporting myrtles round,
They snatch'd her instruments of sound;
And, as they oft had heard apart,
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
Each—for Madness ruled the hour—
Would prove his own expressive power.

First, Fear, his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords, bewilder'd laid;
And back recoill'd, he knew not why,
Even at the sound himself had made.

Next, Anger rush'd, his eyes on fire,
In lightnings, own'd his secret stings:
In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
And swept, with hurried hands, the strings.

With woful measures, wan Despair—
Low, sullen sounds! his grief beguiled;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air;
'Twas sad, by fits—by starts, 'twas wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
What was thy delighted measure!
Still it whisper'd—promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail.
Still would her touch the strain prolong;
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She call'd on Echo still, through all her song.
And, where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft, responsive voice was heard at every close;
And Hope, enchanted, smiled and wav'd her golden hair.

And longer had she sung—but, with a frown,
Revenge—impatient rose, [down;
He threw his blood-stained sword in thunder
And, with a withering look,
The war-denouncing trumpet took,
And blew a blast, so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe;
And, ever and anon, he beat
The doubling drum with furious heat. [tween,
And though, sometimes, each dreary pause bedejected Pity, at his side,
Her soul-subduing voice applied,
Yet still, he kept his wild unalter'd mien;
While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fix'd;
Sad proof of thy distressful state!
Of differing themes the veering song was mix'd:
And, now, it courted Love; now, raving, call'd on Hate.

With eyes uprais'd, as one inspir'd,
Pale Melancholy sat, retir'd;
And, from her wild sequester'd seat,
In notes, by distance, made more sweet,
Pour'd thro' the mellow horn her pensive soul:
And, dashing soft, from rocks around,
Bubbling runnels joined the sound. [stole;
Thro' glades and glooms, the mingled measure
Or o'er some haunted streams, with fond delay,
Round—a holy calm diffusing,
Love of peace, and lonely musing—
In hollow murmurs—died away.

But, oh, how alter'd was its sprightlier tone!
When Cherfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
Her bow across her shoulders flung,
Her baskins gemm'd with morning dew, [rung;
Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket
The hunter's call, to Faun and Dryad known!

The oak-crown'd sisters, and their chaste eyed
Satyrs, and sylvan boys, were seen, [queen,
Peeping from forth their alleys green;
Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear;
And Sport leap'd up, and seiz'd his beechen spear.

Last, came Joy's ecstatic trial.
He, with viny crown advancing,
First to the lively pipe his hand address'd;
But soon, he saw the brisk awakening viol,
Whose sweet, enrancing voice he lov'd the best.
They would have thought, who heard the strain,
They saw, in Tempe's vale, her native maids,
Amid the festal-sounding shades,
To some unwearied minstrel dancing;
While, as his flying fingers kiss'd the strings,
Love, fram'd with Mirth, a gay fantastic round—
Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound;
And he, amid his frolic play,
As if he would the charming air repay,
Shook thousand odors—from his dewy wings.

608. THE CHESTNUT HORSE.

An Eaton stripling, training for the law,
A dunce at syntax, but a dab at law,
One happy Christmas, hid upon the shelf
His cap and gown, and stores of learned pelf,
With all the deathless bards of Greece and Rome,
To spend a fortnight at his uncle's home.
Return'd, and past the usual how-lye-does,
Inquiries of old friends, and college news:
"Well, Tom, the road; what saw you worth discerning?
How's all at college, Tom?—what is't you're learning?"
"Learning!—O, logic, logic!—not the shallow rules
Of Locke and Bacon—antiquate! fools!
But wit's and wranglers' logic; for if ye are,
I'll prove as clear,—as clear as A. B. C.,
That an eel pie's a pigeon; to deny it,
Is to say 'tack's not black."—

"Come, let's try it!"
"Well, sir; an eel pie is a pie of fish." "Agreed."
"Fish pie may be a jack pie."—"Well, proceed."
"A jack pie is a John pie—and, 'tis done!
For every John pie must be a pie-John."—(pigeon.)
"Bravo! bravo!" Sir Peter cries; "logic forever!
That beats my grandmother, and she was clever;
But now I think on't, 't would be mighty hard
If merit such as thine met no reward;
To show how much I logic love in course,
I'll make thee master of a chestnut horse."
"A horse!" quoth Tom, "Hood, pedigree, and paces!
O, what a dash I'll cut at Epsom races!"
Tom dreamt all night of boots and leather breeches,
Of hunting-caps, and leaping rails and ditches;
Rose the next morn an hour before the lark,
And dragg'd his uncle, fasting, to the park;
Bridle in hand, each vale he scours of course,
To find out something like a chestnut horse;
But no such animal the meadows crop,
Till under a large tree Sir Peter stop,
Caught at a branch, and shook it, when down fell
A fine horse chestnut, in its prickly shell.

"There, Tom, take that."—"Well, sir, and what beside?"
"Why, since you're boot'd, saddle it and ride."
"Ride! what, a chestnut, sir?"—"Of course,
For I can prove that chestnut is a horse;
Not from the doubtful, fusty, musty rules
Of Locke and Bacon, antiquated fools,
Nor old Malebranch, blind pilot into knowledge,
But by the laws of wit and Eton college;
As you have prov'd, and which I don't deny,
That a pie John's the same as a John pie,
The matter follows, as a thing of course,
That a horse-chestnut is a chestnut horse."

Know, Nature's children all divide her care;
The fur, that warms a monarch, warm'd a bear.
While man exclaims, "See all things for my use!"
"See man for mine!" replies the pamper'd goose:
And just as short of reason—he must fall,
Who thinks all made for one, not one—for all.

609. NATIONAL UNION. Do not, gentlemen, suffer the rage of passion to drive reason from her seat. If this law be indeed bad, let us join to remedy its defects. Has it been passed in a manner which wounded your pride, or roused your resentment? Have, I conjure you, the magnanimity to pardon that offence. I entreat, I implore you, to sacrifice those angry passions to the interests of our country. Pour out this pride of opinion on the altar of patriotism. Let it be an expiatory libation for the weal of America. Do not suffer that pride to plunge us all into the abyss of ruin. Indeed, indeed, it will be but of little, very little avail, whether one opinion or the other be right or wrong; it will heal no wounds, it will pay no debts, it will rebuild no ravaged towns. Do not rely on that popular will, which has brought us frail beings into political existence. That opinion is but a changeable thing. It will soon change. This very measure will change it. You will be deceived. Do not, I beseech you, in reliance on a foundation so frail, commit the dignity, the harmony, the existence of our nation to the wild wind. Trust not your treasure to the waves. Throw not your compass and your charts into the ocean. Do not believe that its billows will waft you into port. Indeed, indeed, you will be deceived. Cast not away this only anchor of our safety. I have seen its progress. I know the difficulties through which it was obtained. I stand in the presence of Almighty God and of the world. I declare to you, that if you lose this charter, never, no never, will you get another. We are now perhaps arrived at the parting point. Here, even here, we stand on the brink of fate. Pause, then—pause. For Heaven's sake, pause.—Morris.

ATHEIST AND ACORN.

"Methinks the world—seems oddly made,
And every thing—amiss;"
A dull, complaining atheist said,
As stretched he lay—beneath the shade,
And instanced it—in this:
"Behold," quoth he, "that mighty thing,
A pumpkin, large, and round,
Is held—but by a little string,
Which upwards cannot make it spring,
Nor bear it from the ground.
While on this oak—an acorn small,
So disproportioned grows,
That whoso'er surveys this all,
This universal casual ball,
Its ill contrivance knows.
My better judgment—would have hung
The pumpkin—on the tree,
And left the acorn—slightly strung,
'Mongst things—that on the surface sprung,
And weak and feeble be."
No more—the cavalier could say,
No further faults descry;
For, upwards gazing, as he lay,
An acorn, loosened from its spray,
Fell down upon his eye.
The wounded part—with tears ran o'er,
As punished for that sin;
Fool! had that bough—a pumpkin bore,
Thy whimsys—have had worked no more,
Nor skull—have kept them in.

MY COUNTRY.

I love my country's pine-clad hills,
Her thousand bright, and gushing rills,
Her sunshine, and her storms;
Her rough and rugged rocks, that rear
Their hoary heads, high in the air
In wild fantastic forms.
I love her rivers, deep and wide,
Those mighty streams, that seaward glide,
To seek the ocean's breast;
Her smiling fields, her pleasant vales,
Her shady dells, her flow'ry dales,
The haunts of peaceful rest.
I love her forests, dark and lone,
For there—the wild birds' merry tone,
I heard from morn—till night;
And there—are lovelier flowers I ween,
Than e'er in eastern lands were seen,
In varied colors bright.
Her forests—and her valleys fair,
Her flowers, that scent the morning air,
Have all their charms for me;
But more—I love my country's name,
Those words, that echo deathless fame,
"The land of LIBERTY."—Anon.

610. SUBILITY OF MOUNTAIN SCENERY. Of all the sights, that nature offers to the eye, and mind of man, mountains—have always stirred my strongest feelings. I have seen the ocean, when it was turned up from the bottom by tempest, and noon—was like night, with the conflict of the billows, and the storm, that tore, and scattered them, in mist and foam, across the sky. I have seen the desert rise around me, and calmly, in the midst of thousands, uttering cries of horror, and paralysed by fear, have contemplated the sandy pillars, coming like the advance of some gigantic city of conflagration—flying across the wilderness, every column glowing with intense fire, and every blast—death; the sky—vaulted with gloom, the earth—a furnace. But with me, the mountain, in tempest, or in calm, the throne of the thunder, or with the evening sun, painting its dells and declivities in colors dipped in heaven—has been the source of the most absorbing sensations. There stands magnitude, giving the instant impression of a power above man—grandeur, that defies decay—antiquity, that tells of ages unnumbered—beauty, that the touch of time makes only more beautiful—use, exhaustless for the service of man—strength imperishable as the globe; the monument of eternity,—the truest earthly emblem of that ever-living, unchangeable, irresistible Majesty, by whom and for whom, all things were made!—Croly.

The time shall come, the fated hour is nigh,
When guiltless blood—shall penetrate the sky
Amid these horrors, and involving night,
Prophetic visions flash before my sight;
Eternal justice wakes, and, in their turn,
The vanquished—triumph, and the victors mourn!

A hungry lean-faced villain,

A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller;
A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch,
A living-dead man.

False pleasure—from abroad her joys imparts.

611. THE MURDERER: KNAPP'S TRIAL.
Though I could well have wished to shun this occasion, I have not felt at liberty, to withhold my professional assistance, when it is supposed, that I might be, in some degree, useful—in investigating, and discovering the truth, respecting this most extraordinary murder. It has seemed to be a duty, incumbent on me, as on every other citizen, to do my best, and my utmost, to bring to light the perpetrators of this crime.

Against the prisoner at the bar, as an individual, I cannot have the slightest prejudice. I would not do him the smallest injury or injustice. But I do not affect to be indifferent to the discovery, and the punishment, of this deep guilt. I cheerfully share in the opprobrium, how much soever it may be, which is cast on those, who feel, and manifest, an anxious concern, that all who had a part in planning, or a hand in executing, this deed of midnight assassination, may be brought to answer for their enormous crime, at the bar of public justice.

Gentlemen, it is a most extraordinary case. In some respects, it has hardly a precedent anywhere; certainly none in our New England history. This bloody drama exhibited no suddenly excited, ungovernable rage. The actors in it were not surprised by any lion-like temptation, springing upon their virtue, and overcoming it, before resistance could begin. Nor did they do the deed to glut savage vengeance, or satiate long-settled, and deadly hate.

It was a cool, calculating, money-making murder. It was all "hire and salary, not revenge." It was the weighing of money against life: the counting out of so many pieces of silver, against so many ounces of blood. An aged man, without an enemy in the world, in his own house, and in his own bed, is made the victim of a butcherly murder, for mere pay. Truly, here is a new lesson for painters and poets.

Whosoever shall hereafter draw the portrait of Murder, if he will show it as it has been exhibited in one example, where such example was last to have been looked for, in the very bosom of our New England society, let him not give the grim visage of Moloch, the brow, knitted by revenge, the face, black with settled hate, and the blood-shot eye, emitting livid fires of malice.

Let him draw, rather, a decorous, smooth-faced, bloodless demon; a picture in repose, rather than in action; not so much an example of human nature, in its depravity, and in its paroxysms of crime, as an infernal nature, a fiend, in the ordinary display, and development of his character.

The deed was executed with a degree of self-possession and steadiness, equal to the wickedness with which it was planned. The circumstances, now clearly in evidence, spread out the whole scene before us. Deep sleep had fallen on the destined victim, and on all beneath his roof,—a healthful old man to whom sleep was sweet;—the first sound slumbers of the night held him in their soft but strong embrace.

The assassin enters, through the window already prepared, into an unoccupied apartment. With noiseless foot he paces the lonely hall, half-lighted by the moon; he winds up the ascent of the stairs, and reaches the door of the chamber. Of this he moves the lock, by soft and continued pressure, till it turns on its hinges without noise; and he enters, and beholds his victim before him.

The room was uncommonly open to the admission of light. The face of the innocent sleeper was turned from the murderer, and the beams of the moon, resting on the gray locks of his aged temple, showed him where to strike. The fatal blow is given! and the victim passes, without a struggle, or a motion, from the repose of sleep to the repose of death!

It is the assassin's purpose to make sure work; and he yet plies the dagger, though it was obvious that life had been destroyed by the blow of the bludgeon. He even raises the aged arm, that he may not fail in his aim at the heart, and replaces it again over the wounds of the pointard! To finish the picture, he explores the wrist for the pulse! He feels for it, and ascertains that it beats no longer! It is accomplished. The deed is done! He retreats, retraces his steps to the window, passes out through it, as he came in, and escapes. He has done the murder,—no eye has seen him, no ear has heard him. The secret is his own, and it is safe!

Ah! gentlemen, that was a dreadful mistake. Such a secret can be safe nowhere. The whole creation of God has neither nook, nor corner, where the guilty can bestow it, and say it is safe. Not to speak of that eye, which glances through all disguises, and beholds everything, as in the splendor of noon, such secrets of guilt are never safe from detection even by men.

True it is, generally speaking, that "murder will out." True it is, that Providence hath so ordained, and doth so govern things, that those, who break the great law of Heaven, by shedding man's blood, seldom succeed in avoiding discovery. Especially, in a case exciting so much attention as this, discovery must come, and will come, sooner or later. A thousand eyes turn at once to explore every man, everything, every circumstance, connected with the time and place; a thousand ears catch every whisper; a thousand excited minds intensely dwell on the scene, shedding all their light, and ready to kindle the slightest circumstance into a blaze of discovery.

Meantime, the guilty soul cannot keep its own secret. It is false to itself; or rather, it feels an irresistible impulse of conscience to be true to itself. It labors under its guilty possession, and knows not what to do with it. The human heart was not made for the residence of such an inhabitant. It finds itself preyed on by a torment, which it dares not acknowledge to God or man.

A culture is devouring it, and it can ask no assistance, or sympathy, either from heaven, or earth. The secret, which the murderer possesses, soon comes to possess him; and, like the evil spirits, of which we read, it overcomes him, and leads him whithersoever it will. He feels it beating at his heart, rising to his throat, and demanding disclosure. He thinks the whole world sees it in his face, reads it in his eyes, and almost hears its workings in the very silence of his thoughts. It has become his master.

It betrays his discretion, it breaks down his courage, it conquers his prudence. When suspicious from without begin to embarrass him, and the net of circumstance to entangle him, the fatal secret struggles, with still greater violence, to burst forth. It must be confessed, it will be confessed, there is no refuge from confession, but suicide, and suicide is confession.

612. ANTONY'S ORATION OVER CESAR.

Friends, Romans, Countrymen! Lend me your
 I come to bury Cesar, not to praise him. [ears,
 The evil, that men do, lives after them;
 The good—is oft interred with their bones:
 So, let it be with Cesar! Noble Brutus
 Hath told you, Cesar was ambitious:
 If it were so, it was a grievous fault;
 And grievously—hath Cesar answered it.
 Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
 (For Brutus—is an honorable man,
 So are they all, all honorable men)
 Come I to speak—in Cesar's funeral—
 He was my friend, faithful, and just to me:
 But Brutus says—he was ambitious;
 And Brutus—is an honorable man.
 He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
 Whose ransoms—did the general coffers fill:
 Did this, in Cesar, seem ambitious?
 When that the poor have cried, Cesar hath wept;
 Ambition, should be made of sterner stuff;
 Yet Brutus says—he was ambitious;
 And Brutus—is an honorable man.
 You all did see, that, on the Lupercal,
 I thrice presented him—a kingly crown,
 Which he did thrice—refuse; Was this ambition?
 Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;
 And sure, he is an honorable man.
 I speak not to disprove—what Brutus spoke,
 But here I am, to speak what I do know.
 You all did love him once; not without cause:
 What cause witholds you, then, to mourn for him?
 O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
 And men have lost their reason! Bear with me:
 My heart is in the coffin there—with Cesar;
 And I must pause, till it come back to me.
 But yesterday, the word of Cesar—might
 Have stood against the world! now, lies he there,
 And none so poor—to do him reverence.
 O masters! if I were disposed to stir
 Your hearts and minds—to mutiny and rage,
 I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong;
 Who, you all know, are honorable men.
 I will not do them wrong—I rather choose
 To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,
 Than I will wrong such honorable men.
 But here's a parchment, with the seal of Cesar;
 I found it in his closet; 'tis his will:
 Let but the commons—hear this testament,
 (Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,)
 And they would go, and kiss dead Cesar's wounds,
 And dip their napkins—in his sacred blood—
 Yea, beg a hair of him, for memory,
 And, dying, mention it within their wills;
 Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,
 Unto their issue.
 If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.
 You all do know this mantle: I remember
 The first time ever Cesar put it on;
 'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent;
 That day—he overcome the Nervii—
 Look! in this place—ran Cassius' dagger through,
 See, what a rent—the envious Caesca made:
 Through this, the well beloved Brutus stabbed,
 And, as he plucked his cursed steel away,
 Mark how the blood of Cesar followed it!
 This, was the most unkindest cut of all!

For when the noble Cesar—saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
 Quite vanquished him: then, burst—his mighty
 And, in his mantle, muffling up his face, [heart;
 Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
 (Which all the while ran blood) great Cesar—fell.
 O what fall was there, my countrymen!
 Then I, and you, and all of us—fell down,
 Whilst bloody treason—flourished over us.
 O, now you weep: and, I perceive, you feel
 The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.
 Kind souls! what, weep you, when you but behold
 Our Cesar's vesture wounded? Look you here!
 Here—is himself—murred, as you see, by traitors.
 Good friends! sweet friends! let me not stir you up
 To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
 They, that have done this deed, are honorable;
 What pricate griefs they have, alas! I know not,
 That made them do it; they are wise, and honora-
 And will, no doubt, with reason answer you. [ble,
 I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;
 I am no orator, as Brutus is;
 But, as you know me all, a plain—blunt man,
 That love my friend—and that they know full well,
 That gave me public leave, to speak of him.
 For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
 Action, nor utterance, nor power of speech,
 To stir men's blood—I only speak right on:
 I tell you that—which you yourselves do know—
 Show you sweet Cesar's wounds, poor, poor dumb
 And bid them speak for me. [mouths,
 But were I—Brutus,
 And Brutus—Antony, there were an Antony—
 Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
 In every wound of Cesar, that should move
 The stones of Rome—to rise and mutiny.

613. THE INVALID ABROAD. It is a sad thing, to feel that we must die, away from our own home. Tell not the invalid, who is yearning after his distant country, that the atmosphere around him is soft, that the gales are filled with balm, and that the flowers are springing from the green earth; he knows, that the softest air to his heart, would be the air, which hangs over his native land; that, more gratefully than all the gales of the south, would breathe low whispers of anxious affection;
 that the very icicles, clinging to his own eaves,
 and snow, beating against his own windows, would be far more pleasant to his eyes, than the bloom and verdure, which only more forcibly remind him, how far he is from that one spot, which is dearer to him, than all the world beside. He may, indeed, find estimable friends, who will do all in their power to promote his comfort, and assuage his pains; but they cannot supply the place of the long known and long loved; they cannot read, as in a book, the mute language of his face; they have not learned to wait upon his habits, and anticipate his wants, and he has not learned to communicate, without hesitation, all his wishes, impressions, and thoughts to them.
 He feels that he is a stranger; and a more desolate feeling than that, could not visit his soul. How much is expressed, by that form of oriental benediction, "May you die among your kindred."—Greenwood.

All, who joy would win,
 Must share it,—happiness—was born a twin
 He is unhappy, who is never satisfied.

614. THE LIFE OF A DRUNKARD. If you would mark the misery, which drunkenness infuses into the cup of domestic happiness, go with me to one of those nurseries of crime, a common tipping shop, and there behold, collected till midnight, the fathers, the husbands, the sons, and the brothers of a neighborhood. Bear witness to the stench, and the filthiness around them. Harken to the oaths, the obscenity, and the ferocity of their conversation. Observe their idiot laugh; record the vulgar jest, with which they are delighted, and tell me, what potent sorcery has so transformed these men, that, for this loathsome den, they should forego all the delights of an innocent, and lovely fireside.

But let us follow some of them home, from the scene of their debauch. There is a young man, whose accent, and gait, and dress, bespeak the communion, which he once has held, with something better than all this. He is an only son. On him, the hopes of parents, and of sisters have centred. Every nerve of that family has been strained, to give to that intellect, of which they all were proud, every means of choicest cultivation. They have denied themselves, that nothing should be wanting, to enable him to enter his profession, under every advantage. They gloried in his talents, they exulted in the first buddings of his youthful promise, and they were looking forward to the time when every labor should be repaid, and every self-denial rewarded, by the joys of that hour, when he should stand forth in all the blaze of well-earned, and indisputable professional pre-eminence. Alas, these visions are less bright than once they were!

Enter that family circle. Behold those aged parents, surrounded by children, lovely and beloved. Within that circle reign peace, virtue, intelligence, and refinement. The evening has been spent, in animated discussion, in innocent pleasantry, in the sweet interchange of affectionate endearment. There is one, who used to share all this, who was the centre of this circle. Why is he not here! Do professional engagements, of late, so estrange him from home! The hour of devotion has arrived. They kneel before their Father and their God. A voice, that used to mingle in their praises, is absent. An hour rolls away. Where now has all that cheerfulness fled! Why does every effort to rally, sink them deeper in despondency! Why do those parents look so wistfully around, and why do they start at the sound of every footstep! Another hour has gone. That lengthened meal is too much for a mother's endurance. She can conceal the well known cause no longer. The unanswered question is wrong from her lips. Where, oh where, is my son!

The step of that son and brother is heard. The door is opened. He staggers in before them, and is stretched out at their feet, in all the loathsomeness of beastly intoxication.

615. SERPENT OF THE STILL.

They tell me—of the Egyptian asp,
The bite of which—is death;
The victim, yielding with a gasp,
His hot, and hurried breath.
The Egyptian queen, says history,
The reptile vile applied;
And in the arms of agony,
Victoriously died.

They tell me, that, in Italy,
There is a reptile dread,
The sting of which—is agony,
And dooms the victim dead.
But, it is said, that music's sound,
May soothe the poisoned part,
Yea, heal the galling, ghastly wound,
And save the sinking heart.

They tell me, too, of serpents vast,
That crawl on Afric's shore,
And swallow men—historians past
Tell us of one of yore:—
But there is yet, one, of a kind,
More fatal—than the whole,
That stings the body, and the mind;
Yea, it devours the soul.

'Tis found almost o'er all the earth,
Save Turkey's wide domains;
And there, if e'er it had a birth,
'Tis kept in mercy's chains.

'Tis found in our own gardens gay,
In our own flowery fields;
Devouring, every passing day,
Its thousands—at its meals.

The poisonous venom withers youth,
Blasts character, and health;
All sink before it—hope, and truth,
And comfort, joy, and wealth.
It is the author, too, of shame;
And never fails to kill.

Reader, dost thou desire the name?
The SERPENT OF THE STILL.

THE WORLD AT A DISTANCE.

'Tis pleasant—through the loopholes of retreat,
To peep at such a world; to see the stir
Of the great Babel, and not feel the crowd;
To hear the roar she sends, through all her gates,
At a safe distance, where the dying sound,
Falls a soft murmur—on the uninjured ear.
Thus sitting, and surveying, thus at ease,
The globe, and its concerns, I seem advanced
To some secure, and more than mortal height,
That liberates, and exempts me, from them all.
It turns submitted to my view, turns round
With all its generations; I behold
The tumult, and am still. The sound of war—
Has lost its terrors, ere it reaches me;
Grieves, but alarms me not. I mourn the pride
And avarice, that make man—a wolf to man;
Hear the faint echo—of those brazen throats,
By which he speaks the language of his heart,
And sigh, but never tremble, at the sound.

He travels, and expatiates; as the bee,
From flower to flower, so he—from land to land;
The manners, customs, policy of all,
Pay contribution—to the store he gleans;
He sucks intelligence—in every clime,
And spreads the honey—of his deep research,
At his return—a rich repast for me.
He travels, and I too. I tread his deck.
Ascend his topmast, through his peering eyes
Discover countries, with a kindred heart
Suffer his woes, and share in his escapes;
While fancy, like the finger of a clock,
Runs the great circuit, and is still at home.

Red battle stamps his foot, and nations feel the shock.

616. EULOGIUM ON THE SOUTH. If there be one state in the union, Mr. President, (and I say it not in a boastful spirit) that may challenge comparison with any other, for a uniform, zealous, ardent, and uncalculating devotion to the union, that state—is South Carolina. Sir, from the very commencement of the revolution, up to this hour, there is no sacrifice, however great, she has not cheerfully made; no service, she has ever hesitated to perform. She has adhered to you in your prosperity; but, in your adversity, she has clung to you, with more than filial affection. No matter what was the condition of her domestic affairs, though deprived of her resources, divided by parties, or surrounded by difficulties, the call of the country, has been to her, as the voice of God. Domestic discord ceased at the sound, every man became at once reconciled to his brethren, and the sons of Carolina were all seen, crowding together to the temple, bringing their gifts to the altar of their common country.

What, sir, was the conduct of the south during the revolution? Sir, I honor New England for her conduct in that glorious struggle. But, great as is the praise, which belongs to her, I think at least, equal honor is due to the south. They espoused the quarrel of their brethren, with a generous zeal which did not suffer them to stop to calculate their interest in the dispute. Favorites of the mother country, possessed of neither ships, nor seamen, to create commercial rivalry, they might have found, in their situation, a guarantee, that their trade would be forever fostered, and protected by Great Britain. But, trampling on all considerations, either of interest, or safety, they rushed into the conflict, and, fighting for principle, perilled all in the sacred cause of freedom.

Never—were there exhibited, in the history of the world, higher examples of noble daring, dreadful suffering, and heroic endurance, than by the whigs of Carolina, during the revolution. The whole state, from the mountains to the sea, was overrun by an overwhelming force of the enemy. The fruits of industry—perished on the spot where they were produced, or were consumed by the foe. “The plains of Carolina” drank up the most precious blood of her citizens! Black, and smoking ruins—marked the places which had been the habitations of her children! Driven from their homes, into the gloomy, and almost impenetrable swamps, even there—the spirit of liberty survived; and South Carolina, sustained by the example of her Sumpters, and Marions, proved, by her conduct, that though her soil might be overrun, the spirit of her people was invincible.—Hayne.

617. EULOGIUM ON THE NORTH. The eulogium pronounced on the character of the state of South Carolina, by the honorable gentleman, for her revolutionary, and other merits, meets my hearty concurrence. I shall not acknowledge, that the honorable member is before me, in regard for whatever of distinguished talent, or distinguished character, South Carolina has produced. I claim part of the honor: I partake in the pride of her great names. I claim them for countrymen, one and all—the Laurens, the Rutledges, the Pinckneys, the Sumpters, the Marions—Americans all—whose fame is no more to be hemmed in by state lines, than their talents and patriotism, were capable of being circumscribed, within the same narrow limits.

In their day, and generation, they served, and honored the country, and the whole country, and their renown is of the treasures of the whole country. Him, whose honored name the gentleman himself bears—does he suppose me less capable of gratitude for his patriotism, or sympathy for his sufferings, than if his eyes had first opened upon the light in Massachusetts, instead of South Carolina? Sir, does he suppose it in his power, to exhibit a Carolina name so bright, as to produce envy in my bosom? No, sir, increased gratification, and delight, rather. Sir, I thank God, that, if I am gifted with little of the spirit, which is said to be able to raise mortals to the skies, I have yet none, as I trust, of that other spirit, which would drag angels down.

But sir, let me recur to pleasing recollections—let me indulge in refreshing remembrances of the past—let me remind you, that in early times, no states cherished greater harmony, both of principle, and of feeling, than Massachusetts and South Carolina. Would to God, that harmony might again return. Shoulder to shoulder they went through the revolution—hand in hand, they stood round the administration of Washington, and felt his own great arm lean on them for support. Unkind feeling, if it exist, alienation and distrust, are the growth, unnatural to such soils, of false principles since sown. They are weeds, the seeds of which that same great arm never scattered.

Mr. President, I shall enter on no encomium upon Massachusetts—she needs none. There she is—behold her, and judge for yourselves. There is Boston, and Concord, and Lexington, and Bunker Hill; and there they will remain, forever. The bones of her sons, fallen in the great struggle for independence, now lie mingled with the soil of every state, from New England to Georgia; and there they will lie—forever.

And, sir, where American liberty raised its first voice, and where its youth was nurtured and sustained, there it still lives, in the strength of its manhood, and full of its original spirit. If discord, and disunion shall wound it—if party strife, and blind ambition shall hawk at, and tear it; if folly and madness, if uneasiness under salutary and necessary restraint, shall succeed to separate it from that union by which alone, its existence is made sure, it will stand, in the end, by the side of that cradle in which its infancy was rocked; it will stretch forth its arm, with whatever of vigor it may still retain, over the friends who gather around it; and it will fall at last, if fall it must, amidst the proudest monuments of its own glory, and on the very spot of its origin.—Webster.

The sweetest cordial—we receive at last,
Is conscience—of our virtuous actions past.

Inform yourself, and instruct others.

618. LIBERTY AND UNION. I profess, sir, in my career hitherto, to have kept steadily in view, the prosperity, and honor of the whole country, and the preservation of our federal union. It is to that union, we owe our safety at home, and our consideration and dignity abroad. It is to that union, that we are chiefly indebted, for whatever makes us most proud of our country. That union we reached, only by the discipline of our virtues, in the severe school of adversity. It had its origin, in the necessities of disordered finance, prostrate commerce, and ruined credit. Under its benign influences, these great interests immediately awoke, as from the dead, and sprang forth with newness of life. Every year of its duration—has teemed with fresh proofs of its utility, and its blessings; and although our territory has stretched out, wider and wider, and our population spread farther and farther, they have not outrun its protection, or its benefits. It has been to us all, a copious fountain of national, social, and personal happiness.

I have not allowed myself, sir, to look beyond the union, to see what might lie hidden in the dark recess behind. I have not coolly weighed the chances of preserving liberty, when the bonds, that unite us together, shall be broken asunder. I have not accustomed myself—to hang over the precipice of disunion, to see whether, with my short sight, I can fathom—the depth—of the abyss—below; nor could I regard him, as a safe counsellor in the affairs of this government, whose thoughts should be mainly bent on considering, not how the union should be preserved, but, how tolerable might be the condition of the people, when it shall be broken up, and destroyed.

While the union lasts, we have high, exciting, gratifying prospects spread out before us, for us, and our children. Beyond that, I seek not to penetrate the veil. God grant, that, in my day, at least, that curtain may not rise. God grant, that on my vision, never may be opened what lies behind. When my eyes shall be turned to behold, for the last time, the sun in heaven, may I not see him shining on the broken, and dishonoured fragments of a once glorious union; on states dissevered, discordant, belligerent; on a land, rent with civil feuds, or drenched, it may be, in fraternal blood! Let their last feeble and lingering glance, rather, behold the gorgeous ensign of the republic, now known, and honored, throughout the earth, still full high advanced, its arms and trophies—streaming in their original lustre, not a stripe erased, or polluted, nor a single star obscured—bearing for its motto, no such miserable interrogatory as—What is all this worth? Nor those other words of delusion and folly—Liberty—first, and union—afterwards—but everywhere, spread all over in characters of living light, blazing on all its ample folds, as they float over the sea, and over the land, and in every wind under the whole heavens, that other sentiment, dear to every—true—American heart—Liberty and union, now, and forever, one—and inseparable!—Webster.

619. MOONLIGHT, AND A BATTLE-FIELD.

How beautiful this night! the balmiest sigh,
Which vernal zephyrs breathe, in Evening's ear,
Were discord, to the speaking quietude, [vault,
That wraps this moveless scene. Heaven's ebon
Studded with stars unutterably bright,
Thro' which the moon's unclouded grandeur rolls,

Seems like a canopy, which Love hath spread,
To curtain her sleeping world. Yon gentle hills,
Robed in a garment of untrodden snow;
Yon darksome rocks, whence ietels depend,
So stainless, that their white and glittering spires
Tinge not the moon's pure beam; yon east'd steep,
Whose banner hangeth o'er the time-worn tower,
So idly, that rapt fancy, deemeth it
A metaphor of peace;—all form a scene,
Where musing Solitude might love to lift
Her soul, above this sphere of earthliness!
Where Silence, undisturbed, might watch alone,
So cold, so bright, so still!

The orb of day,

In southern climes, o'er ocean's waveless field,
Sinks, sweetly smiling: not the faintest breath
Steals o'er the unruddled deep; the clouds of eve
Reflect, unmoved, the lingering beam of day;
And Vesper's image, on the western main,
Is beautifully still. To-morrow comes:
Cloud upon cloud, in dark and deepening mass,
Roll o'er the blackened waters; the deep roar
Of distant thunder mutters awfully;
Tempest unfolds its pinions, o'er the gloom,
That shrouds the boiling surge; the pitiless fiend,
With all his winds, and lightnings, tracks his prey;
The torn deep yawns—the vessel finds a grave
Beneath its jagged gulf.

Ah! whence yon glare

That fires the arch of heaven? that dark red smoke,
Blotting the silver moon? The stars are quenched
In darkness, and the pure spangling snow
Gleams, faintly, thro' the gloom, that gathers round!
Hark to that roar, whose swift and deafening peals,
In countless echoes through the mountains ring,
Startling pale Midnight, on her starry throne!
Now swells the intermingling din; the jar,
Frequent, and frightful, of the bursting bomb;
The falling beam, the shriek, the groan, the shout,
The ceaseless clangor, and the rush of men
Inebriate with rage!—loud and more loud,
The discord grows; till pale Death shuts the scene,
And, o'er the conqueror, and the conquered, draws
His cold, and bloody shroud. Of all the men,
Whom day's departing beam saw blooming there,
In proud, and vigorous health—of all the hearts,
That beat with anxious life, at sunset there—
How few survive, how few are beating now!
All is deep silence, like the fearful calm.
That slumbers in the storm's portentous pause;
Save when the frantie wail of widowed love
Comes, shuddering, on the blast, or the faint moan,
With which some soul bursts from the frame of clay
Wrapped round its struggling powers.

The gray morn [smoke,

Dawns on the mournful scene; the sulphurous
Before the icy wind, slow rolls away,
And the bright beams of frosty morning dance
Along the spangling snow. There, tracks of blood,
Even to the forest's depth, and scattered arms,
And lifeless warriors, whose hard lineaments
Death's self could change not, mark the dreadful
Of the out-sallying victors: far behind, [path
Black ashes note, where their proud city stood.
Within you forest, is a gloomy glen—
Each tree, which guards its darkness from the day,
Waves o'er a warrior's tomb.—Shelley.

620. GOODNESS OF GOD. The light of nature, the works of creation, the general consent of nations, in harmony with divine revelation, attest the being, the perfections, and the providence of God. Whatever cause we have, to lament the frequent inconsistency of human conduct, with this belief, yet an avowed atheist is a monster, that rarely makes his appearance. God's government of the affairs of the universe, an acknowledgment of his active, superintending providence, over that portion of it, which constitutes the globe we inhabit, is rejected, at least theoretically, by very few.

That a superior, invisible power, is continually employed in managing and controlling by secret, imperceptible, irresistible means, all the transactions of the world, is so often manifested in the disappointment, as well as in the success of our plans, that blind and depraved must our minds be, to deny, what every day's transactions so fully prove. The excellence of the divine character, especially in the exercise of that goodness towards his creatures, which is seen in the dispensation of their daily benefits, and in overruling occurring events, to the increase of their happiness, is equally obvious.

Do we desire evidence of these things? Who is without them, in the experience of his own life? Who has not reason, to thank God for the success, which has attended his exertions in the world? Who has not reason to thank him, for defeating plans, the accomplishment of which, it has been afterwards seen, would have resulted in injury, or ruin? Who has not cause, to present him the unaffected homage of a grateful heart, for the consequences of events, apparently the most unpropitious, and for his unquestionable kindness, in the daily supply of needful mercies?

PROGRESS OF LIBERTY.

Why muse
Upon the past, with sorrow? Though the year
Has gone, to blend with the mysterious tide
Of old Eternity, and borne along,
Upon its heaving breast, a thousand wrecks
Of glory, and of beauty,—yet why mourn,
That such is destiny? Another year
Succeedeth to the past,—in their bright round,
The seasons come, and go,—the same blue arch,
That hath hung o'er us, will hang o'er us yet,—
The same pure stars, that we have loved to watch,
Will blossom still, at twilight's gentle hour,
Like lilies, on the tomb of Day,—and still,
Man will remain, to dream, as he hath dreamed,
And mark the earth with passion. Love will spring
From the tomb of old Affections,—Hope,
And Joy, and great Ambition—will rise up,
As they have risen,—and their deeds will be Brighter, than those engraven on the scroll—
Of paried centuries. Even now, the sea
Of coming years, beneath whose mighty waves,
Life's great events are heaving into birth,
Is tossing to and fro, as if the winds
Of heaven were prisoned in its soundless depths,
And struggling to be free.

As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Tho' round its breast, the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine—settles on its head.

What is fame? A fancy'd life in others' breath.

THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET.

How dear to this heart—are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollection—presents them to view!
The orchard, the meadow, the deep-tangled wild-wood,
And every loved spot, which my infancy knew;
The wide-spreading pond, and the will which stood by it,
The bridge, and the rock, where the cataract fell;
The cot of my father, the dairy house—high it,
And e'en the rude bucket, which hung in the well!
The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket, which hung in the well,
That moss-covered vessel—I hail as a treasure;
For often at noon, when returned from the field,
I found it—the source of an exquisite pleasure,
The purest, and sweetest, that nature can yield.
How ardent I seized it, with hands that were glowing!
And quick—to the white-pebbled bottom it fell;
Then soon, with the emblem of truth overflowing,
And dripping with coolness, it rose from the well;
The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket—arose from the well.
How sweet—from the green—mossy brim—to receive it,
As poised on the curb—it inclined to my lips!
Not a full blushing goblet—could tempt me to leave it,
Though filled with the nectar, that Jupiter sips.
And now, far removed—from the lov'd situation,
The tear of regret will intrusively swell,
As fancy—reverts to my father's plantation,
And sighs for the bucket, which hangs in the well;
The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket, which hangs in the well.

621. RIGHT OF FREE DISCUSSION. Important, as I deem it, to discuss, on all proper occasions, the policy of the measures, at present pursued, it is still more important to maintain the right of such discussion, in its full, and just extent. Sentiments, lately sprung up, and now growing fashionable, make it necessary to be explicit on this point. The more I perceive a disposition—to check the freedom of inquiry, by extravagant, and unconstitutional pretences, the firmer shall be the tone, in which I shall assert, and the freer the manner, in which I shall exercise it.

It is the ancient and undoubted prerogative of this people—to canvass public measures, and the merits of public men. It is a "home bred right," a fireside privilege. It hath ever been enjoyed in every house, cottage, and cabin, in the nation. It is not to be drawn into controversy. It is as undoubted, as the right of breathing the air, or walking on the earth. Belonging to private life, as a right, it belongs to public life, as a duty; and it is the last duty which those, whose representative I am, shall find me to abandon. Aiming, at all times, to be courteous, and temperate in its use, except, when the right itself shall be questioned, I shall then carry it to its extent. I shall place myself on the extreme boundary of my right, and bid defiance to any arm, that would move me from my ground.

This high, constitutional privilege, I shall defend, and exercise, within this house, and without this house, and in all places; in time of peace, and in all times. Living, I shall assert it; and, should I leave no other inheritance to my children, by the blessing of God, I will leave them the inheritance of free principles, and the example of a manly, independent, and constitutional defence of them.

Grasp the whole world of reason, life, and sense,
In one close system of benevolence;
Happier, as kindlier, in what'er degree,
A height of bliss—is height of charity.

622. PEACE AND WAR CONTRASTED.
The morality of peaceful times—is directly opposite to the maxims of war. The fundamental rule of the first is—to do good; of the latter, to inflict injuries. The former—commands us to succor the oppressed; the latter to overwhelm the defenceless. The former teaches men to love their enemies; the latter, to make themselves terrible to strangers.

The rules of morality—will not suffer us to promote the dearest interest, by falsehood; the maxims of war applaud it, when employed in the destruction of others. That a familiarity with such maxims, must tend to harden the heart, as well as to pervert the moral sentiments, is too obvious to need illustration.

The natural consequence of their prevalence is—an unfeeling, and unprincipled ambition, with an idolatry of talents, and a contempt of virtue; whence the esteem of mankind is turned from the humble, the beneficent, and the good, to men who are qualified, by a genius, fertile in expedients, a courage, that is never appalled, and a heart, that never pities, to become the destroyers of the earth.

While the philanthropist is devising means to mitigate the evils, and augment the happiness of the world, a fellow-worker together with God, in exploring, and giving effect to the benevolent tendencies of nature; the warrior—is revolving, in the gloomy recesses of his capacious mind, plans of future devastation and ruin.

Prisons, crowded with captives; cities, emptied of their inhabitants; fields, desolate and waste, are among his proudest trophies. The fabric of his fame is cemented with tears and blood; and if his name is wafted to the ends of the earth, it is in the shrill cry of suffering humanity; in the curses and imprecations of those whom his sword has reduced to despair.

623. IMMORTAL MIND.

When coldness—wraps this suffering clay,
Ah, whither—strays the immortal mind?

It cannot die, it cannot stay;

But leaves its darkened dust behind.

Then, unembodied, doth it trace,

By steps, each planet's heavenly way?

Or fill, at once, the realms of space,

A thing of eyes, that all survey?

Eternal, boundless, undecayed,

A thought unseen, but seeing all,

All, all in earth, or skies displayed,

Shall it survey, shall it recall;

Each fainter trace, that memory holds,

So darkly—of departed years,

In one broad glance—the soul beholds,

And all, that was, at once appears.

Before creation peopled earth,

Its eye shall roll—through chaos back;

And where the farthest heaven had birth,

The spirit trace its rising track.

And where the future morn, or makes,

Its glance, dilate o'er all to be,

While sun is quenched, or system breaks;

Fixed—in its own eternity.

Above all love, hope, hate, or fear,

It lives all passionless, and pure;

An age shall fleet, like earthly year;

Its years, as moments, shall endure.

Away, away, without a wing,
O'er all, through all, its thoughts shall fly;
A nameless, and eternal thing,
Forgetting—what it was to die.—Byron.

GENUINE TASTE. To the eye of taste, each season of the year has its peculiar beauties; nor does the venerable oak, when fringed with the hoary ornaments of winter, afford a prospect, less various, or delightful, than, when decked in the most luxuriant foliage. Is, then, the winter of life—connected with no associations, but those of horror! This can never be the case, until ideas of contempt—are associated with ideas of wisdom, and experience; associations, which the cultivation of true taste—would effectually prevent. Suppose the person, who wishes to improve on nature's plan, should apply to the artificial florist to deck the bare boughs of his spreading oak with ever-blooming roses; would it not be soon discovered, that, in deserting nature, he had deserted taste! It should be remembered, that the coloring of nature, whether in the animate, or inanimate creation, never fails to harmonize with the object; that her most beautiful hues are often transient, and excite a more lively emotion from that very circumstance.

624. GAMBLER'S WIFE.

Dark is the night! How dark! No light! No fire!

Cold, on the hearth, the last faint sparks expire!

Shivering, she watches, by the cradle side,

For him, who pledged her love—last year a bride!

"Hark! 'Tis his footstep! No!—'Tis past!—'Tis gone!"

Tick!—Tick!—"How wearily the time crawls on!

Why should he leave me thus?—He once was kind!

And I believed 't would last!—How mad!—How blind!

"Rest thee, my babe!—Rest on!—'Tis hunger's cry!

Sleep!—For there is no food!—The font is dry!

Famine, and cold their wearying work have done,

My heart must break! And thou!" The clock strikes one.

"Hush! 'Tis the dice-box! Yes! he's there! he's there!

For this!—for this he leaves me to despair!

Leaves love! leaves truth! his wife! his child! for what?

The wanton's smile—the villain—and the sot!

"Yet I'll not curse him, No! 'tis all in vain!

'Tis long to wait, but sure he'll come again!

And I could starve, and bless him, but for you,

My child!—his child! Oh, fiend!" The clock strikes two.

"Hark! How the sign-board creaks! The blast howls by,

Moan! moan! A dirge swells through the cloudy sky!

Ha! 'Tis his knock! he comes!—He comes once more!"

'Tis but the lattice flaps! Thy hope is o'er!

"Can he desert us thus! He knows I stay,

Night after night, in loneliness, to pray

For his return—and yet he sees no tear!

No! no! It cannot be! He will be here!

"Nestle more closely, dear one, to my heart!

Thou'rt cold! Thou'rt freezing! But we will not part!

Husband!—I die!—Father!—It is not he!

Oh, God! protect my child!" The clock strikes three.

They're gone, they're gone! the glimmering spark hath fled!—

The wife, and child, are number'd with the dead.

On the cold earth, outstretched in solemn rest,

The babe lay, frozen on its mother's breast:

The gambler came at last—but all was o'er—

Dread silence reign'd around!—the clock struck four!—Coates.

Goodness—is only greatness in itself.

It rests not on externals, nor its worth

Derives—from gorgeous pomp, or glittering pelf,

Or chance of arms, or accident of birth;

It lays its foundations in the soul,

And piles a tower of virtue to the skies,

Around whose pinnacle—majestic—roll

The clouds of GLORY, starr'd with angel eyes.

625. DARKNESS.

I had a dream, which was not all a dream.
The bright sun was extinguished, and the stars
Did wander, darkling, in the eternal space,
Rayless, and pathless, and the icy earth
Swung blind, and blackening, in the moonless air;
Morn came, and went—and came, and bro't no
And men forgot their passions, in the dread [day];
Of this their desolation; and all hearts
Were chilled—into a selfish prayer for light:
And they did live by watch-fires; and the thrones,
The palaces of crowned kings, the huts,
The habitations of all things, which dwell,—
Were burnt for beacons; cities were consumed,
And men were gather'd round their blazing homes,
To look once more into each other's face:
Happy were those who dwell within the eye
Of the volcanoes, and their mountain torch.

A fearful hope—was all—the world contained:
Forests were set on fire; but, hour by hour,
They fell, and faded, and the crackling trunks
Extinguished with a crash, and all was black.
The brows of men, by the despairing light,
Wore an unearthly aspect, as, by fits,
The flashes fell upon them. Some lay down,
And hid their eyes, and wept; and some did rest
Their chins upon their clenched hands, and smil'd;
And others hurried to and fro, and fed
Their funeral piles with fuel, and looked up,
With mad disquietude, on the dull sky,
The pall of a past world; and then again,
With curses, cast them down upon the dust,
And gnashed their teeth, and howled. The wild birds shrieked,

And, terrified, did flutter on the ground,
And flap their useless wings: the wildest brutes
Came tame, and tremulous; and vipers crawled
And twined themselves among the multitude,
Hissing, but stingless—they were slain for food.

And War, which for a moment was no more,
Did glut himself again—a meal was bought
With blood, and each sat sullenly apart,
Gorging himself in gloom: no love was left;
All earth was but one thought—and that was Immediate and inglorious; and men [death,
Died, and their bones mere as tombless as their
The meagre by the meagre were devoured; [flesh:
Even dogs assailed their masters—all save one,
And he was faithful to a corse, and kept
The birds, and beasts, and famished men, at bay,
Till hunger clung them, or the dropping dead
Lured their lank jaws; himself, sought out no
But, with a piteous, and perpetual moan, [food,
And a quick, desolate cry, licking the hand
Which answered not with a caress—he died.

The crowd was famished by degress; but two
Of an enormous city did survive,
And they were enemies; they met beside
The dying embers—of an altar-place,
Where had been heaped a mass of holy things,
For an unholy usage; they raked up, [hands,
And, shivering, scraped, with their cold, skeleton
The feeble ashes, and their feeble breath
Blew for a little life, and made a flame,
Which was a mockery; then they lifted
Their eyes as it grew lighter, and beheld
Each other's aspects; saw, and shriek'd, and died,

Even of their mutual hideousness they died,
Unknowing who he was, upon whose brow—
Famine had written fend. The world was void;
The populous, and the powerful was a lump—
Seasonless, herbless, treeless, manless, lifeless;
A lump of death—a chaos of hard clay.
The rivers, lakes, and ocean, all stood still,
And nothing stirred, within their silent depths;
Ships, sailorless, lay rotting on the sea, [dropped,
And their masts fell down piecemeal; as they
They slept, on the abyss, without a surge:
The waves were dead; the tides were in their grave;

The moon, their mistress, had expired before;
The winds were withered in the stagnant air,
And the clouds perished; Darkness had no need
Of aid from them; she—was the universe.—By'n.

626. TRUE PLEASURE DEFINED. We are affected with delightful sensations, when we see the inanimate parts of the creation, the meadows, flowers, and trees, in a flourishing state. There must be some rooted melancholy at the heart, when all nature appears smiling about us, to hinder us from corresponding with the rest of the creation, and joining in the universal chorus of joy.
But if meadows and trees, in their cheerful verdure, if flowers, in their bloom, and all the vegetable parts of the creation, in their most advantageous dress, can inspire gladness into the heart, and drive away all sadness but despair; to see the rational creation happy, and flourishing, ought to give us a pleasure as much superior, as the latter is to the former, in the scale of being. But the pleasure is still heightened, if we ourselves have been instrumental, in contributing to the happiness of our fellow-creatures, if we have helped to raise a heart, drooping beneath the weight of grief, and revived that barren and dry land, where no water was, with refreshing showers of love and kindness.

THE WILDERNESS OF MIND.

There is a wilderness, more dark
Than groves of fir—on Iloron's shore;
And in that cheerless region, hark!
How serpents hiss! how monsters roar!

'Tis not among the untrodden isles,
Of vast Superior's stormy lake,
Where social comfort never smiles,
Nor sunbeams—pierce the tangled brake;
Nor, is it in the deepest shade,
Of India's tiger-haunted wood;
Nor western forests, unsurvey'd,
Where crouching panthers—lurk for blood;

'Tis in the dark, uncultur'd soul,
By EDUCATION unrefin'd—
Where hissing Malice, Vices foul,
And all the hateful Passions prowl—
The frightful WILDERNESS OF MIND.

Were man

But constant, he were perfect; that one error—
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all sins;

Inconstancy—falls off—ere it begins.

Vice is a monster of such hateful mien,
That, to be hated—needs but to be seen;
Yet, seen too oft—familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

627. GENIUS. The favorite idea of a genius among us, is of one, who never studies, or who studies nobody can tell when; at midnight, or at odd times, and intervals, and now and then strikes out, "at a heat," as the phrase is, some wonderful production. This is a character that has figured largely in the history of our literature, in the person of our Fieldings, our Savages, and our Steeles; "loose fellows about town, or loungers in the country," who slept in ale-houses, and wrote in bar-rooms; who took up the pen as a magician's wand, to supply their wants, and, when the pressure of necessity was relieved, resorted again to their carousals. Your real genius is an idle, irregular, vagabond sort of personage; who muses in the fields, or dreams by the fireside: whose strong impulses—that is the cant of it—must needs hurry him into wild irregularities, or foolish eccentricity; who abhors order, and can bear no restraint, and eschews all labor; such a one as Newton or Milton! What! they must have been irregular, else they were no geniuses. "The young man," it is often said, "has genius enough, if he would only study." Now, the truth is, as I shall take the liberty to state it, that the genius will study; it is that in the mind which does study: that is the very nature of it. I care not to say, that it will always use books. All study is not reading, any more than all reading is study.

Attention it is, though other qualities belong to this transcendent power,—attention it is, that is the very soul of genius; not the fixed eye, not the poring over a book, but the fixed thought. It is, in fact, an action of the mind, which is steadily concentrated upon one idea, or one series of ideas, which collects, in one point, the rays of the soul, till they search, penetrate, and fire the whole train of its thoughts. And while the fire burns within, the outside may be indeed cold, indifferent, negligent, absent in appearance; he may be an idler, or a wanderer, apparently without aim, or intent; but still the fire burns within. And what though "it bursts forth," at length, as has been said, "like volcanic fires, with spontaneous, original, native force!" It only shows the intense action of the elements beneath. What though it breaks forth—like lightning from the cloud? The electric fire had been collecting in the firmament, through many a silent, clear, and calm day. What though the might of genius appears in one decisive blow, struck in some moment of high debate, or at the crisis of a nation's peril! That mighty energy, though it may have heaved in the breast of Demosthenes, was once a feeble infant thought. A mother's eye watched over its dawning. A father's care guarded its early youth. It soon trod, with youthful steps, the halls of learning, and found other fathers to wake, and to watch for it, even as it finds them here. It went on; but silence was upon its path, and the deep strugglings of the inward soul silently ministered to it. The elements around breathed upon it, and "touched it to finer issues." The golden ray of heaven fell upon it, and ripened its expanding faculties. The slow revolutions of years slowly added to its collected energies and treasures; till, in its hour of glory, it stood forth imbedded in the form of living, commanding, irresistible eloquence. The world wonders at the manifestation, and says, "Strange, strange, that it should come thus unsought, unpremeditated, unprepared!" But the truth is, there is no more a miracle in it, than there is in the towering of the pre-eminent forest-tree, or in the flowing of the mighty, and irresistible river, or in the wealth, and waving of the boundless harvest.—Devery.

628. THE THREE BLACK CROWS.

Two honest tradesmen—meeting in the Strand,
One, took the other, briskly by the hand;
"Hark ye," said he, "'tis an odd story this.
About the crows!"—"I don't know what it is."
Replied his friend,—"No! I'm surprised at that;
Where I come from it is the common chat:
But you shall hear: an odd affair indeed!
And that it happened, they are all agreed:
Not to detain you from a thing so strange,
A gentleman, that lives not far from 'Change,
This week, in short, as all the alley knows,
'Taking a puke, has thrown up three black crows."
"Impossible!"—"Nay, but it's really true.
I had it from good hands, and so may you."
"From whose, I pray?" So, having named the man,
Straight to inquire—his curious comrade ran.
"Sir, did you tell"—relating the affair—
"Yes, sir, I did; and if its worth you care,
Ask Mr. Such-a-one, he told it me;
But, by the by, 'twas two black crows, not three."
Resolved to trace so wondrous an event,
Whip to the third, the virtuoso went. [fact,
"Sir,"—and so forth—"Why, yes; the thing's a
Though, in regard to number, not exact;
It was not two black crows, 'twas only one;
The truth of that, you may depend upon,
The gentleman himself told me the case. [place."
"Where may I find him?" "Why,—in such a Away he goes, and, having found him out,—
"Sir, be so good as to resolve a doubt."
Then, to his last informant, he referred.
And begged to know if true, what he had heard.
"Did you, sir, throw up a black crow?" "Not I!"
"Bless me! how people propagate a lie! [one,
Black crows have been thrown up, three, two, and
And here I find, at last, all comes to none!
Did you say nothing of a crow at all?"
"Crow—crow—perhaps I might, now I recall
The matter over." "And pray, sir, what was't?"
"Why, I was horrid sick, and, at the last,
I did throw up, and told my neighbor so,
Something that was as black, sir, as a crow."
THE HIGHEST OCCUPATION OF GENIUS. To diffuse useful information, to farther intellectual refinement, sure forerunners of moral improvement, to hasten the coming of that bright day, when the dawn of general knowledge shall chase away the lazy, lingering mists, even from the base of the great social pyramid; this, indeed, is a high calling, in which the most splendid talents and consummate virtue may well press onward, eager to bear a part.
How soon—time—flies away! yet, as I watch it,
Methinks, by the slow progress of this hand,
I should have liv'd an age—since yesterday,
And have an age to live. Still, on it creeps,
Each little moment at another's heels,
Of such small parts as these, and men look back,
Worn and bewilder'd, wondering—how it is.
Thou travel'st—like a ship, in the wide ocean,
Which hath no bounding shore to mark its progress.
O TIME! ere long, I shall have done with thee.

629. PERRY'S VICTORY. Were anything wanting, to perpetuate the fame of this victory, it would be sufficiently memorable, from the scene where it was fought. This war has been distinguished, by new and peculiar characteristics. Naval warfare has been carried into the exterior of a continent, and navies, as if by magic, launched from among the depths of the forest! The bosom of peaceful lakes, which, but a short time since, were scarcely navigated by man, except to be skimmed by the light canoe of the savage, have all at once been ploughed by hostile ships. The vast silence, that had reigned, for ages, on these mighty waters, was broken by the thunder of artillery, and the affrighted savage—stared, with amazement, from his covert, at the sudden apparition of a sea-fight, amid the solitudes of the wilderness.

The peal of war has once sounded on that lake, but probably, will never sound again. The last roar of cannon, that died along her shores, was the expiring note of British domination. Those vast, eternal seas will, perhaps, never again be the separating space, between contending nations; but will be embosomed—within a mighty empire; and this victory, which decided their fate, will stand unrivalled, and alone, deriving lustre, and perpetuity, from its singleness.

In future times, when the shores of Erie shall hum with a busy population; when towns, and cities, shall brighten, where now, extend the dark tangled forest; when ports shall spread their arms, and lofty barks shall ride, where now the canoe is fastened to the stake; when the present age shall have grown into venerable antiquity, and the mists of fable begin to gather round its history, then, will the inhabitants of Canada look back to this battle we record, as one of the romantic achievements of the days of yore. It will stand first on the page of their local legends, and in the marvellous tales of the borders. The fisherman, as he loiters along the beach, will point to some half-buried cannon, corroded with the rust of time, and will speak of ocean warriors, that came from the shores of the Atlantic; while the boatman, as he trims his sail to the breeze, will chant, in rude ditties, the name of Perry, the early hero of Lake Erie.—Irving.

THE SLANDERER.

'Twas Slander, filled her mouth, with lying words,
Slander, the foulest whelp of Sin. The man,
In whom this spirit entered, was undone.
His tongue—was set on fire of hell, his heart—
Was black as death, his legs were faint with haste
To propagate the lie, his soul had framed.
His pillow—was the peace of families
Destroyed, the sigh of innocence reproached,
Broken friendships, and the strife of brotherhoods;
Yet did he spare his sleep, and hear the clock
Number the midnight watches, on his bed,
Devising mischief more; and early rose,
And made most hellish meals of good men's names.
From door to door, you might have seen him speed,
Or, placed amidst a group of gaping fools,
And whispering in their ears, with his foul lips;
Peace fled the neighborhood, in which he made
His haunts; and, like a moral pestilence,
Before his breath—the healthy shoots and blooms
Of social joy and happiness, decayed.
Fools only, in his company were seen,

And those, forsaken of God, and to themselves giving—
The prudent shunned him, and his house, [en up.
As one, who had a deadly moral plague;
And fain all would have shunned him, at the day
Of judgment; but in vain. All, who gave ear,
With greediness, or, wittingly, their tongues
Made herald to his lies, around him wailed;
While on his face, thrown back by injured men
In characters of ever-blushing shame,
Appeared ten thousand slanders, all his own.

630. TRUE FRIENDSHIP. Damon and Pythias, of the Pythagorean sect in philosophy, lived in the time of Dionysius, the tyrant of Sicily. Their mutual friendship was so strong, that they were ready to die for one another. One of the two, (for it is not known which,) being condemned to death, by the tyrant, obtained leave to go into his own country, to settle his affairs, on condition, that the other should consent to be imprisoned in his stead, and put to death for him, if he did not return, before the day of execution. The attention of every one, and especially of the tyrant himself, was excited to the highest pitch, as every body was curious, to see what would be the event of so strange an affair. When the time was almost elapsed, and he who was gone did not appear; the rashness of the other, whose sanguine friendship had put him upon running so seemingly desperate a hazard, was universally blamed. But he still declared, that he had not the least shadow of doubt in his mind, of his friend's fidelity. The event showed how well he knew him. He came in due time, and surrendered himself to that fate, which he had no reason to think he should escape; and which he did not desire to escape, by leaving his friend to suffer in his place. Such fidelity softened, even the savage heart of Dionysius himself. He pardoned the condemned; he gave the two friends to one another, and begged that they would take himself in for a third.

THE CORAL GROVE.

Deep—in the wave, is a coral grove,
Where the purple mullet, and gold-fish rove,
Where the sea-flower—spreads its leaves of blue,
That never are wet, with fallen dew,
But in bright and changeful beauty shine,
Far down in the green, and glassy brine.

The floor is of sand, like the mountain drift,
And the pearl-shells spangle the flinty snow;
From coral rocks the sea-plants lift

Their bows, where the tides and billows flow;
The water is calm and still below,

For the winds and the waves are absent there,
And the sands—are bright as the stars, that glow
In the motionless fields of upper air:

There, with its waving blade of green,
The sea-flag streams through the silent water,
And the crimson leaf of the pulse is seen

To blush, like a banner, bathed in slaughter:
There, with a light and easy motion,

The fan-coral sweeps through the clear deep sea;
And the yellow and scarlet tufts of ocean,
Are bending like corn, on the upland lea:

And life, in rare and beautiful forms,
Is sporting amid those bowers of stone,
And is safe, when the wrathful Spirit of storms,
Has made the top of the waves his own.

Pride goeth before destruction.

631. BRUTUS' HARANGUE ON CESAR'S DEATH. Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me—for my cause; and be silent, that you may hear. Believe me—for mine honor; and have respect to mine honor, that you may believe. Censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any, in this assembly, any dear friend of Cesar's, to him I say that Brutus' love to Cesar—was no less than his. If, then, that friend demand, why Brutus—rose against Cesar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cesar—less, but, that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Cesar were living, and die all slaves; than that Cesar were dead, to live all freemen? As Cesar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honor him; but, as he was ambitious, I slew him. There are tears for his love, joy—for his fortune, honor—for his valor, and death—for his ambition. Who's here so base, that would be a bondman? if any, speak; for him—have I offended. Who's here so rude, that would not be a Roman? if any, speak! for him—have I offended. Who's here so vile, that will not love his country? if any, speak; for him—have I offended.—I pause for a reply.

None! then none—have I offended. I have done no more to Cesar, than you should do to Brutus. The question of his death—is enrolled in the capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony; who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as, which of you shall not!—With this I depart—that as I slew my best lover—for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

632. ACCOMPLISHED YOUNG LADY.

She shone, at every concert; where are bought
Tickets, by all who wish them, for a dollar;
She patronised the theatre, and thought,
That Wallack looked extremely well in Rolla;
She fell in love, as all the ladies do,
With Mr. Simpson—talked as loudly, too,

As any beauty of the highest grade,
To the gay circle in the box beside her;
And when the pit—half vexed, and half afraid,
With looks of smothered indignation eyed her;
She calmly met their gaze, and stood before 'em,
Smiling at vulgar taste, and mock decorum.

And though by no means a "Bas bleu," she had
For literature, a most becoming passion;
Had skimmed the latest novels, good, and bad,
And read the Croakers, when they were in fashion;

And Dr. Chalmers' sermons, of a Sunday; [gundi.
And Woodworth's Cabinet, and the new Salma-
She was among the first, and warmest patrons
Of G's conversaziones, where, [matrons,
In rainbow groups, our bright eyed maids, and
On science bent, assemble; to prepare Themselves for acting well, in life, their part,
As wives and mothers. There she learn'd by heart
Words, to the witches in Macbeth unknown,
Hydraulics, hydrostatics, and pneumatics,

Dioptries, optics, katoptries, carbon,
Chlorine, and iodine, and aerostatics;
Also,—why frogs, for want of air, expire;
And how to set the Tappan sea on fire!

In all the modern languages, she was Exceedingly well versed; and had devoted,
To their attainment, far more time than has,

By the best teachers lately, been allotted;
For she had taken lessons, twice a week,
For a full month in each; and she could speak
French and Italian, equally as well
As Chinese, Portuguese, or German; and
What is still more surprising, she could spell
Most of our longest English words, off hand;
Was quite familiar in Low Dutch and Spanish,
And tho't of studying modern Greek and Danish.

She sang divinely; and in "Love's young dream,"
And "Fanny dearest," and "The soldier's bride;"
And every song whose dear delightful theme,
Is "Love, still love," had oft till midnight tried
Her finest, loftiest pigeon-wings of sound,
Waking the very watchmen far around.—Halleck.

633. CHARITY. Though I speak—with the tongues of men, and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. Charity—suffereth long, and is kind; charity—envieth not; charity—vaunteth not itself; it is not puffed up; doth not behave itself unseemly; seeketh not her own; is not easily provoked; thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;
beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth
all things, endureth all things.

Charity—never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know, in part, and we prophecy, in part. But, when that which is perfect, is come, then that,
which is in part, shall be done away.

When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child;
but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now, we see through a glass, darkly; but then, face to face: now, I know in part; but then, shall I know, even as also
I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.—St Paul.

EARLY RISING AND PRAYER.

When first thy eyes unvail, give thy soul leave
To do the like; our bodies—but foreverun

The spirit's duty; true hearts—spread and heave
Unto their God, as flowers do—to the sun;
Give him thy first tho'ts then, so—shalt thou keep Him company—all day, and in him—sleep.

Yet never sleep the sun up; prayer—should
Dawn with the day; there are set—awful hours—
Twixt heaven and us; the manna—was not good
After sun rising; for day—sullies flowers:
Rise—to prevent the sun; sleep—doth sins glut,
And heaven's gate opens, when the world's is shut.

Converse with nature's charms, and see her stores unroll'd.

631. SAILOR BOY'S DREAM.

In slumbers of midnight, the sailor boy lay ;
 His hammock swung loose, at the sport of the wind ;
 But watch-worn, and weary, his cares flew away,
 And visions of happiness danced o'er his mind.
 He dreamt of his home, of his dear native bowers,
 And pleasure that waited on life's merry morn ;
 While memory—stood sideways, half covered with flowers,
 And restored every rose, but secreted its thorn.
 Then fancy, her magical pinions spread wide,
 And taid the young dreamer in ecstasy rise—
 Now far, far behind him, the green waters glide,
 And the cot of his forefathers blesses his eyes.
 The jessamine clammers in flower o'er the thatch,
 And the swallow sings sweet, from her nest in the wall ;
 All trembling with transport, he raises the latch,
 And the voices of loved ones reply to his call.
 A father bends o'er him, with looks of delight,
 His cheek is imperaled, with a mother's warm tear,
 And the lips of the boy, in a love-kiss unite,
 With the lips of the maid, whom his bosom holds dear.
 The heart of the sleeper beats high in his breast,
 Joy quickens his pulse—all his hardships seem o'er,
 And a murmur of happiness steals through his rest—
 "O God, thou hast blessed me—I ask for no more."
 Ah, what is that flame which now bursts on his eye !
 Ah, what is that sound, which now laments his ear !
 'Tis the lightning's red glare, painting hell on the sky !
 'Tis the crash of the thunder, the groan of the sphere !
 He springs from his hammock—he flies to the deck,
 Amusement confronts him with images dire—
 Wild winds, and waves drive the vessel a wreck—
 The masts fly in splinters—the shrouds are on fire !
 Like mountains, the billows tremendously swell—
 In vain the lost wretch calls on Mary to save ;
 Unseen hands of spirits are wringing his knell,
 And the death-angel flaps his broad wing o'er the wave !
 Oh ! sailor boy, woe to thy dream of delight !
 In darkness dissolves the gay frost-work of bliss—
 Where now is the picture that fancy touched bright,
 Thy parents' fond pressure, and love's honeyed kiss !
 Oh ! sailor boy ! sailor boy ! never again
 Shall home, love, or kindred, thy wishes repay ;
 Unblessed, and unhonored, down deep in the main,
 Full many a score fathom, thy frame shall decay.
 No tomb shall e'er plead to remembrance for thee,
 Or redeem form, or frame, from the merciless surge ;
 But the white foam of waves shall thy winding-sheet be,
 And winds, in the midnight of winter, thy dirge.
 On beds of green sea-dawer, thy limbs shall be laid ;
 Around thy white bones, the red coral shall grow ;
 Of thy fair yellow locks, threads of amber be made,
 And every part suit to thy mansion below.
 Days, months, years, and ages, shall circle away,
 And the vast waters over thy body shall roll—
 Earth loses thy pattern forever, and aye—
 Oh ! sailor boy ! sailor boy ! peace to thy soul.—Diamond.

TIME AND ITS CHANGES. Reformation is a work of time. A national taste, however wrong it may be, cannot be totally changed at once ; we must yield a little to the prepossession, which has taken hold on the mind, and we may then bring people to adopt what would offend them, if endeavored to be introduced by violence.

What's fame ? a fancied life in other's breath,
 A thing beyond us, e'en before our death.
 All fame is foreign, but of true desert,
 Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart ;
 One self-approving hour, while years outweighs
 Of stupid starers, and of loud hussas :
 And more true joy, Marcellus—exil'd, feels,
 Than Cesar, with a senate at his heels.

Mind, not money—makes the man,

635. CHILD HAROLD.—CANTO IV.

Oh ! that the desert—were my dwelling place,
 With one fair spirit—for my minister,
 That I might all forget the human race,
 And hating no one, love but only her !
 Ye elements!—in whose ennobling stir,
 I feel myself exalted—Can ye not Accord me such a being ? Do I err
 In deeming such—inhabit many a spot !
 Though with them to converse, can rarely be our lot.
 There is a pleasure—in the pathless woods,
 There is a rapture—on the lonely shore,
 There is a society where none intrudes,
 By the deep sea, and music in its roar :
 I love not man the less, but nature more,
 From these our interviews, in which I steal
 From all I may be, or have been before,
 To mingle—with the Universe, and feel
 What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all conceal.
 Roll on, thou deep, and dark blue ocean—roll !
 Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain ;
 Man marks the earth with ruin—his control
 Stops with the shore ;—upon the watery plain
 The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
 A shadow of man's ravage, save his own ;
 When for a moment, like a drop of rain,
 He sinks into thy depths, with bubbling groan,
 Without a grave, unknelt, uncoffined, and unknown.
 The armaments which thunderstrike the walls
 Of rock-built cities, bidding nations quake,
 And monarchs tremble, in their capitals,
 The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs make
 Their clay creator, the vain title take—
 Of lord of thee, and arbiter of war !
 These are thy toys, and, as the snowy flake,
 They melt into thy yeast of waves, which mar
 Alike, the Armada's pride, or spoils of Trafalgar.
 Thy shores are empires, changed in all save thee—
 Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, what are they ?
 Thy waters wasted them, while they were free,
 And many a tyrant since ; their shores obey
 The stranger, slave, or savage ; their decay
 Has dried up realms to deserts :—not so thou—
 Unchangeable, save to thy wild waves' play—
 Time writes no wrinkle on thine azure brow—
 Such as creation's dawn beheld, thou rollest now.
 Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form
 Glasses itself in tempests ; in all time,
 (Calm, or convulsed, in breeze, or gale, or storm,
 Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime,
 Dark-heaving,—boundless, endless, and sublime—
 The image of Eternity—the throne
 Of the Invisible ; even from out thy slime
 The monsters of the deep are made ! each zone
 Obeys thee ; thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.
 And I have loved thee, Ocean ! and my joy
 Of youthful sports was on thy breast to be Borne like the bubbles, onward ; from a boy,
 I wanted with thy breakers—they to me
 Were a delight ; and if the freshening sea
 Made them a terror—'twas a pleasing fear,
 For I was, as it were, a child of thee,
 And trusted to thy billows far and near,
 And laid my hand upon thy mane—as I do here.
 In the dreams of delight, which with ardor we Oft the phantom of sorrow appears ; [seek,
 And the roses of pleasure, which bloom on your
 Must be steeped in the dew of your tears. [cheek,
 The aged man, that coffers up his gold, [fits,
 Is plagu'd with cramps, and gouts, and painful
 And scarce hath eyes, his treasure to behold,
 But still, like pining Tantalus, he sits,
 And useless bans the harvest of his wits,
 Having no other pleasure of his gain,
 But torment, that it cannot cure his pain.
 To err—is human ; to forgive—divine.

636. PATRIOTIC TRIUMPH. The citizens of America—celebrate that day, which gave birth to their liberties. The recollection of this event, replete with consequences so beneficial to mankind, swells every heart with joy, and fills every tongue with praise. We celebrate, not the sanguinary exploits of a tyrant, to subjugate, and enslave—millions of his fellow-creatures; we celebrate, neither the birth, nor the coronation, of that phantom, styled a king; but, the resurrection of liberty, the emancipation of mankind, the regeneration of the world. These are the sources of our joy, these the causes of our triumph. We pay no homage at the tomb of kings, to subsume our feelings—we trace no line of illustrious ancestors, to support our dignity—we recur to no usages sanctioned by the authority of the great, to protect our rejoicing; no, we love liberty, we glory in the rights of men, we glory in independence. On whatever part of God's creation a human form pines under chains, there, Americans drop their tears.

A dark cloud once shaded this beautiful quarter of the globe. Consternation, for awhile, agitated the hearts of the inhabitants. War desolated our fields, and buried our vales in blood. But the dayspring from on high soon opened upon us its glittering portals. The angel of liberty descending, dropped on Washington's brow, the wreath of victory, and stamped on American freedom, the seal of omnipotence. The darkness is past, and the true light now shines—to enliven, and rejoice mankind. We tread a new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness; and view a new heaven, flaming with inextinguishable stars. Our feet will no more descend into the vale of oppressions; our shoulders will no more bend—under the weight of a foreign domination, as cruel, as it was unjust. Well may we rejoice—at the return of this glorious anniversary; a day dear to every American; a day—to be had in everlasting remembrance; a day, whose light circulates joy—through the hearts of all republicans, and terror through the hearts of all tyrants.—Mazy.

637. TIT FOR TAT: COQUETRY PUNISHED.

Ellen was fair, and knew it too,
As other village beauties do,
Whose mirrors—never lie;
Secure of any swain she chose,
She smiled on half a dozen beaux,
And, reckless of a lover's woes,
She cheated these, and taunted those;
“For how could any one suppose
A clown could take her eye?”

But whispers through the village ran,
That Edgar was the happy man,
The maid design'd to bless;
For, wheresoever moved the fair,
The youth was, like her shadow, there,
And rumor—boldly match'd the pair,
For village folks will guess.

Edgar did love, but still delay'd
To make confession to the maid,
So bashful was the youth;
But let the flame in secret burn,
Certain of meeting a return,
When, from his lips, the fair should learn,
Officially, the truth.

At length, one morn, to taste the air,
The youth and maid, in one horse chair,
A long excursion took.

Edgar had nerved his bashful heart,
The sweet confession to impart.
For ah! suspense had caused a smart,
He could no longer brook.

He drove, nor slackened once his reins,
Till Hempstead's wide extended plains
Seem'd join'd to skies above:
Nor house, nor tree, nor shrub was near,
The rude and dreary scene to cheer,
Nor soul within ten miles to hear—
And still, poor Edgar's silly fear,
Forbade to speak of love.

At last, one desperate effort broke
The bashful spell, and Edgar spoke,
With most persuasive tone;
Recounted past attendance o'er,
And then, by all that's lovely, swore,
That he would love, for evermore,
If she'd become his own.

The maid, in silence, heard his prayer,
Then, with a most provoking air,
She, tittered in his face;
And said, “’Tis time for you to know,
A lively girl must have a beau,
Just like a reticule—for show;
And at her nod to come, and go—
But he should know his place.

Your penetration must be dull,
To let a hope within your skull
Of matrimony spring.
Your wife! ha, ha! upon my word,
The thought is laughably absurd,
As anything I ever heard—

I never dream'd of such a thing.”
The lover sudden dropp'd his rein,
Now on the centre of the plain—

“The lynch-pin's out!” he cried;
Be pleased, one moment, to alight,
Till I can set the matter right,
That we may safely ride.”

He said, and handed out the fair—
Then laughing, crack'd his whip in air,
And wheeling round his horse and chair,
Exclaim'd, “Adieu, I leave you there
In solitude to roam.”

“What mean you, sir!” the maiden cried,
“Did you invite me out to ride,
To leave me here, without a guide?
Nay, stop, and take me home.”

“What! take you home!” exclaim'd the beau,
“Indeed, my dear, I'd like to know
How such a hopeless wish could grow,
Or in your bosom spring. [word,
What! take Ellen home? ha! ha! upon my
The thought is laughably absurd.
As anything I ever heard;
I never dream'd of such a thing!”

Man, always prosperous, would be giddy and insolent: always afflicted—would be sullen, or despondent. Hopes and fears, joy and sorrow, are, therefore, so blended in his life, as both to give room for worldly pursuits, and to recall the admonitions of conscience.

638. RECITATIONS INSTEAD OF THEATRES. In its present state, the theatre—deserves no encouragement. It has nourished intemperance, and all vice. In saying this, I do not say that the amusement is radically, essentially evil. I can conceive of a theatre, which would be the noblest of all amusements, and would take a high rank, among the means of refining the taste, and elevating the character of a people. The deep woes, the mighty, and terrible passions, and the sublime emotions—of genuine tragedy, are fitted to thrill us with human sympathies, with profound interest in our nature, with a consciousness of what man can do, and dare, and suffer, with an awed feeling of the fearful mysteries of life. The soul of the spectator is stirred from its depths; and the lethargy, in which so many live, is roused, at least for a time, to some intenseness of thought, and sensibility. The drama answers a high purpose, when it places us in the presence of the most solemn, and striking event of human history, and lays bare to us the human heart, in its most powerful, appalling, glorious workings. But how little does the theatre accomplish its end! How often is it disgraced, by monstrous distortions of human nature, and still more disgraced by profaneness, coarseness, indelicacy, low wit, such as no woman, worthy of the name, can bear without a blush, and no man can take pleasure in—without self-degradation. Is it possible, that a christian, and a refined people, can resort to theatres, where exhibitions of dancing are given, fit only for brothels, and where the most licentious class in the community throng, un concealed, to tempt, and destroy! That the theatre should be suffered to exist, in its present degradation, is a reproach to the community. Were it to fall, a better drama might spring up in its place. In the meantime, is there not an amusement, having an affinity with the drama, which might be usefully introduced among us? I mean, Recitations. A work of genius, recited by a man of fine taste, enthusiasm, and powers of elocution, is a very pure, and high gratification. Were this art cultivated, and encouraged, great numbers, now insensible to the most beautiful compositions, might be waked up to their excellence, and power. It is not easy to conceive of a more effectual way, of spreading a refined taste through a community. The drama, undoubtedly, appeals more strongly to the passions than recitation; but the latter brings out the meaning of the author more. Shakspeare, worthily recited, would be better understood than on the stage. Then, in recitation, we escape the weariness of listening to poor performers; who, after all, fill up most of the time at the theatre. Recitations, sufficiently varied, so as to include pieces of chaste wit, as well of pathos, beauty and sublimity, is adapted to our present intellectual progress, as much as the drama falls below it. Should this exhibition be introduced among us successfully, the result would be, that the power of recitation would be extensively called forth, and this would be added to our social, and domestic pleasures.

Thou knowest but little,
If thou dost think true virtue—is confined
To climes, or systems; no, it flows spontaneous,
Like life's warm stream, throughout the whole cre—
And beats the pulse of every healthful heart. [ation,

639. WATERLOO; THE BALL AND BATTLE.

There was a sound of revelry—by night,
And Belgium's capital—had gathered then
Her beauty, and her chivalry; and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women, and brave men
A thousand hearts beat happily; and when
Music arose, with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes looked love, to eyes, which spake again,
And all went merry as a marriage-bell; [knell!
But hush! hark! a deep sound strikes like a rising
Did ye not hear it?—No; 'twas but the wind,
Or the car, rattling o'er the stony street:
On with the dance! let joy be unconfined;
No sleep till morn, when youth and pleasure meet,
To chase the glowing hours, with flying feet—
But hark! That heavy sound breaks in once more,
As if the clouds—its echo would repeat;
And nearer, clearer, deadlier than before! [roar!
Arm! arm! it is—it is—the cannon's opening
Ah! then and there was hurrying to and fro,
And gathering tears, and tremblings of distress,
And cheeks all pale, which but an hour ago
Blushed—at the praise of their own loveliness:
And there were sudden partings, such as press
The life from out young hearts, and choking sighs,
Which ne'er might be repeated; for who could
If ever more should meet, those mutual eyes, [guess,
Since upon night, so sweet, such awful morn could rise?

And there was mounting in hot haste; the steed,
The mustering squadron, and the clattering car,
Went pouring forward with impetuous speed,
And swiftly forming in the ranks of war;
And the deep thunder, peal on peal, afar;
And near, the beat of the alarming drum,
Roused up the soldier, ere the morning star;
While thronged the citizens, with terror dumb,
Or whispering with white lips—"The foe! they come! they come!"

And Ardennes waves above them her green leaves,
Dewy with nature's tear-drops, as they pass,
Grieving, if aught inanimate er grieves,
Over the unreturning brave,—alas!
Ere evening, to be trodden like the grass,
Which now beneath them, but above shall grow;
In its next verdure, when this fiery mass
Of living valor, rolling on the foe, [and low.
And burning with high hope, shall moulder cold,
Last noon—beheld them, full of lusty life,
Last eve—in beauty's circle, proudly gay,
The midnight—brought the signal-sound of strife,
The morn—the marshaling in arms,—the day,
Battle's magnificently-stern array! [rent,
The thunder-clouds close o'er it, which, when,
The earth is covered thick with other clay,
Which her own clay shall cover, heaped, and pent,
Rider and horse,—friend, foe,—in one red burial blent!

— What's in the air?

Some subtle spirit—runs through all my veins;
Hope—seems to ride, this morning, on the wind,
And outlines the sun. —
When things go wrong, each fool presumes t' ad—
And if more happy, thinks himself more wise: [vise,
All wretchedly deplore the present state;
And that advice seems best, which comes too late,

640. FEVER DREAM.

A fever—scorched my body, fired my brain!
Like lava, in Vesuvius, boiled my blood,
Within the glowing caverns of my heart.
I raged with thirst, and begged a cold, clear draught
Of fountain water.—’Twas with tears, denied.
I drank a nauseous felfridge, and slept;
But rested not—harassed with horrid dreams,
Of burning deserts, and of dusty plains,
Mountains, disgorging flumes—forests on fire,
Steam, sunshine, smoke, and boiling lakes—
Hills of hot sand, and glowing stones, that seemed Embers, and ashes, of a burnt up world!
Thirst raged within me.—I sought the deepest vale,
And called on all the rocks, and caves for water;—
I climbed a mountain, and from cliff to cliff,
Pursued a flying cloud, howling for water:—
I crushed the withered herbs, and gnawed dry roots,
Still crying, Water! water!—While the cliffs and caves,
In horrid mockery, re-echoed “Water!”
Below the mountain, gleamed a city, red
With solar flame, upon the sandy bank
Of a broad river.—“Soon, oh soon!” I cried,
“I’ll cool my burning body in that flood,
And quaff my fill.”—I ran—I reached the shore.—
The river was dried up. Its oozy bed
Was dust: and on its arid rocks, I saw
The scaly myriads—fry beneath the sun!
Where sunk the channel deepest, I beheld
A stirring multitude of human forms,
And heard a faint, wild, lamentable wail.
Thither I sped, and joined the general cry
Of—“water!” They had delved a spacious pit,
In search of hidden fountains—sad, sad sight!
I saw them rend the rocks up in their rage
With mad impatience, calling on the earth
To open, and yield up her cooling fountains.
Meanwhile the skies, on which they dared not gaze,
Stood o’er them like a canopy of brass—
Undimmed by moisture. The red dog-star raged,
And Phobus, from the house of Virgo, shot
His scorching shafts. The thirsty multitude
Grew still more frantic. Those, who dug the earth,
Fell lifeless on the rocks, they strained to upheave,
And filled again, with their own carcasses,
The pits they made—undoing their own work!
Despair, at length, drove out the laborers,
At sight of whom, a general groan—announced
The death of hope. Ah! now, no more was heard
The cry of “water!” To the city next,
Howling, we ran—all hurrying without aim:—
Thence to the woods. The baked plain gaped for moisture,
And from its arid breast heaved smoke, that seemed
The breath of furnace—fierce, volcanic fire,
Or hot monsoon, that raises Syrian sands
To clouds. And the forests, we espied
A faint, and bleating herd. Sudden, a strill,
And horrid shout arose of—“Blood! blood! blood!”
We fell upon them with the tiger’s thirst,
And drank up all the blood, that was not human!
We were dyed in blood! Despair returned;
The cry of blood was hushed, and dumb confusion reigned.
Even then, when hope was dead!—past hope—
I heard a laugh! and saw a wretched man
Rip his own veins, and, bleeding, drink
With eager joy. The example seized on all:—
Each fell upon himself, tearing his veins,
Fiercely, in search of blood! And some there were,
Who, having emptied their own veins, did seize Upon their neighbor’s arms, and slew them for their blood—
Oh! happy then, were mothers, who gave suck.
They dashed their little infants from their breasts,
And their shrunk bosoms tortured, to extract
The balmy juice, oh! exquisitely sweet
To their parched tongues! ’Tis done!—now all is gone!
Blood, water, and the bosom’s nectar,—all!
“Remd, oh! ye lightnings! the scaled firmament,
And flood a burning world.—Rain! rain! pour! pour!
Open—ye windows of high heaven! and pour
The mighty deluge! Let us drown, and drink

Luxurious death! Ye earthquakes, split the globe,
The solid, rock-ribbed globe!—and lay all bare
Its subterranean rivers, and fresh seas!”
Thus raged the multitude. And many fell
In fierce convulsions;—many slew themselves.
And now, I saw the city all in flames—
The forest burning—and the very earth on fire!
I saw the mountains open with a roar,
Loud as the seven apocalyptic thunders,
And seas of lava rolling headlong down,
Through crackling forests fierce, and hot as hell,
Down to the plain—I turned to fly,—and waked!—Harney.

641. NOSE AND THE MAN.

Kind friends, at your call, I’m come here to sing;
Or rather to talk of my woes;
Though small’s the delight to you I can bring
The subject’s concerning my nose.
Some noses are large, and others are small,
For nature’s vagaries are such,
To some folks, I’m told, she gives no nose at all,
But to me she has given too much.
Oh, dear! lauks-a-daisy me!
My cause of complaint, and the worst of my woes,
Is, because I have got such a shocking long nose.
Some insult or other, each day I do meet,
And by joking, my friends are all foes;
And the boys every day, as I go thro’ the street,
All bellow out—“There goes a nose!”
A woman, with matches one day, I came near,
Who, just as I tried to get by her,
Shoved me rudely aside, and ask’d, with a leer,
If I wanted to set her o’ fire?
Oh, dear! lauks-a-daisy me!
Each rascal, each day, some innendo throws,
As, my nose is not mine, I belongs to my nose.
I once went a courting a wealthy old maid,
To be married we were, the next day;
But an accident happened, the marriage delay’d,
My nose got too much in the way.
For the night before marriage, entrane’d with my
In love, e’er some torment occurs— [bliss,
I screw’d up my lips, just to give her a kiss,
My nose slip’d, and rubb’d against her’s!
Oh, dear! lauks-a-daisy me!
The ring that I gave, at my head soon she throws,
And another tipp’d me, ’twas a w-ring on the nose.
Like a porter all day, with fatigue fit to crack,
I’m seeking for rest, at each place,
Or, like pilgrim of old, with his load at his back,
Only my load I bear on my face.
I can’t get a wife, though each hour hard I try,
The girls they all blush, like a rose;
“I’m afraid to have you!” when I ask ’em for why?
Because, you have got such a nose.
Oh, dear! lauks-a-daisy me!
Their cause of refusal I cannot suppose,
They all like the man, but they say—blow his nose!
Like a large joint of meat, before a small fire,
They say that my proboscis hangs—
Or, to a brass knocker, nought there can be nigher,
And in length, it a pump-handle bangs.
A wag, you must know, just by way of a wipe,
Said, with a grin on his face, to’other night,
As he, from his pocket, was pulling a pipe,
“At your nose will you give me a light?”
Oh, dear! lauks-a-daisy me!
If I ask any one my way to disclose,
If I lose it—they answer, why, follow your nose.

612. NOBILITY OF LABOR. Why, in the great scale of things, is labor ordained for us? Easily, had it so pleased the great Ordainer, might it have been dispensed with. The world itself, might have been a mighty machinery, for producing all that man wants. Houses might have risen like an exhalation,

"With the sound

Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet,
Built like a temple."

Gorgeous furniture might have been placed in them, and soft couches and luxurious banquets spread, by hands unseen; and man, clothed with fabrics of nature's weaving, rather than with imperial purple, might have been sent to disport himself in those Elysian palaces.

"Fair scene!" I imagine you are saying: "fortunate for us had it been the scene ordained for human life!" But where, then, had been human energy, perseverance, patience, virtue, heroism? Cut off labor with one blow, from the world, and mankind had sunk to a crowd of Asiatic voluptuaries.

No—it had not been fortunate! Better, that the earth be given to man as a dark mass, whereupon to labor. Better, that rude, and unsightly materials be provided in the ore-bed, and in the forest, for him to fashion in splendor and beauty. Better I say, not because of that splendor, and beauty, but, because the act of creating them, is better than the things themselves; because exertion is nobler than enjoyment; because the laborer is greater and more worthy of honor, than the idler.

I call upon those whom I address, to stand up for the nobility of labor. It is heaven's great ordinance for human improvement. Let not the great ordinance be broken down. What do I say? It is broken down; and it has been broken down for ages. Let it then be built again; here, if any where, on the shores of a new world—of a new civilization.

But how, it may be asked, is it broken down? Do not men toil? it may be said. They do indeed toil, but they too generally do, because they must. Many submit to it, as in some sort, a degrading necessity; and they desire nothing so much on earth, as an escape from it. They fulfil the great law of labor in the letter, but break it in the spirit. To some field of labor, mental or manual, every idler should hasten, as a chosen, coveted field of improvement.

But so he is not compelled to do, under the teachings of our imperfect civilization. On the contrary, he sits down, folds his hands, and blesses himself in idleness. This way of thinking, is the heritage of the absurd and unjust feudal system, under which serfs labored, and gentlemen spent their lives in fighting and feasting. It is time that this opprobrium of toil were done away.

Ashamed to toil? Ashamed of thy dingy work-shop, and dusty labor-field; of thy hard hand, scarred with service more honorable than that of war; of thy soiled and weather-stained garments, on which mother nature has embroidered mist, sun and rain, fire and steam, her own heraldic honors? Ashamed of those tokens, and titles, and envious of the flaunting robes of imbecile idleness, and vanity? It is treason to nature, it is impiety to heaven; it is breaking heaven's great ordinance. Toil, I repeat—toil, either of the brain, of the heart, or of the hand, is the only true manhood,—the only true nobility!—Dewey.

613. DAVID'S LAMENT OVER ABSALOM.

The king—stood still,

Till the last echo—died: then, throwing off
The sack-cloth—from his brow, and laying back
The pall—from the still features of his child,
He bowed his head upon him, and broke forth
In the resistless eloquence of woe:—

"Alas! my noble boy! that thou shouldst die!

Thou, who wert made so beautifully fair!

That death—should settle—in thy glorious eye,
And leave his stillness in this clustering hair!
How could he mark thee—for the silent tomb,
My proud boy, Absalom!

Cold is thy brow, my son! and I am chill,

As to my bosom—I have tried to press thee.

How was I wont—to feel my pulses thrill,
Like a rich harp-string, yearning to caress thee,
And hear thy sweet—"my father," from these
And cold lips, Absalom! [dumb,

The grave hath won thee. I shall hear the gush
Of music, and the voices of the young;

And life will pass me—in the mantling blush,

And the dark tresses—to the soft winds flung;
But thou—no more, with thy sweet voice, shall
To meet me, Absalom! [come

But, oh! when I am stricken, and my heart,

Like a bruised reed, is waiting to be broken,

How will its love for thee, as I depart, [token!

Yearn for thine ear—to drink its last—deep

It were so sweet, amid death's gathering gloom,
So see thee, Absalom!

And now—farewell! 'Tis hard—to give thee up,

With death—so like a gentle slumber on thee:

And thy dark sin!—oh! I could drink the cup,

If, from this wo, its bitterness had won thee.

May God have called thee, like a wanderer,

My erring Absalom?" [home,

He covered up his face, and bowed himself,

A moment, on his child; then, giving him

A look of melting tenderness, he clasped

His hands, convulsively, as if in prayer:

And, as a strength were given him of God,

He rose up, calmly, and composed the pall,

Firmly, and decently, and left him there,—

As if his rest—had been a breathing sleep. Willis.

The theatre was from the very first,

The favorite haunt of sin; though honest men,

Some very honest, wise and worthy men,

Maintained it might be turned to good account:

And so perhaps it might, but never was.

From first—to last—it was an evil place:

And now—such things were acted there, as made

The devils blush: and, from the neighborhood,

Angels, and holy men, trembling, retired:

And what with dreadful aggravation—crowned

This dreary time, was—sin against the light.

All men knew God, and, knowing, disobeyed;

And gloried to insult him—to his face.

Look round—the habitable world, how few—

Know their own good, or, knowing it, pursue!

'Tis all men's office—to speak patience—

To those that toil—under a load of sorrow.

'Tis the first sanction—nature—gave to man,

Each other to assist, in what they can

644. MARCO BOZZARRIS.

He fell in an attack upon the Turkish camp at Laspi, the site of the ancient Platea, August 20, 1823, and expired in the moment of victory. His last words were—"To die for liberty, is a pleasure, and not a pain."

At midnight,—in his guarded tent,
The Turk—was dreaming of the hour,
When Greece,—her knee in supplication bent,
Should tremble—at his power.
In dreams, through camp—and court, he bore
The trophies of a conqueror;
In dreams, his song of triumph heard;
Then, wore his monarch's signet ring:
Then, pressed that monarch's throne,—a king;
As wild his thoughts, and gay of wing,
As Eden's garden bird.

At midnight,—in the forest shades,
Bozzarris—ranged his Sultane band,
True—as the steel—of their tried blades,
Heroes—in heart—and hand.
There, laid the Persian's thousands stood,
There, laid the glad earth—drunk their blood,
On old Platea's day;
And now, there breathed that haunted air,
The sons—of sires, who conquered there,
With arm—to strike, and soul—to dare,
As quick, as far as they.

An hour passed on—the Turk—awoke—
That bright dream—was his last;
He woke—to hear his sentries shriek,
"To arms! they come! the Greek! the Greek!"
He woke—to die, 'midst flame, and smoke,
And shout, and groan, and sabre stroke,
And death-shots—falling thick and fast
As lightnings, from the mountain cloud;
And heard, with voice, as trumpet loud,
Bozzarris—cheer his band:
"Strike! till the last armed foe expires;
Strike! for your altars, and your fires;
Strike! for the grave of your sires;
God—and your native land!"

They fought, like brave men, long and well;
They piled that ground—with Moslem slain;
They conquered—but, Bozzarris fell,
Bleeding—at every vein.
His few surviving comrades saw
His smile, when rang the proud—hurrah!
And the red field was won;
Then saw, in death, his eyelids close
Calmly, as to a night's repose,
Like flowers—at set of sun.

Come to the bridal chamber,—Death!
Come to the mother—when she feels.
For the first time, her first-born's breath;
Come—when the blessed seals,
That close the pestilence, are broke,
And crowded cities—wait its stroke;
Come—in consumption's ghastly form,
The earthquake shock, the ocean storm;
Come, when the heart beats high, and warm,
With banquet-song, and dance, and wine—
And thou art terrible! the tear,
The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier,
And all we know,—or dream, or fear,
Of agony,—are thine.

But, to the hero, when his sword
Has won the battle for the free,
Thy voice—sounds like a prophet's word,
And, in its hollow tones, are heard—
The thanks of millions—yet to be.
Bozzarris! with the storied brave,
Greece nurtured, in her glory's time,
Rest thee—there is no prouder grave,
Even in her own proud clime.
We tell thy doom—without a sigh:
For thou art Freedom's now, and Fame's—
One of the few, the immortal names,
That were not born—to die.—Halteck.

645. MAID OF MALAHIDE.

In the church of Malahide, in Ireland, are the tomb and effigy of the Lady Mair Plunkett, sister of the first Lord Dunsany, of whom it is recorded that "she was maid, wife, and widow in one day." Her first husband, Hussey, Baron of Galtrim, was called from the altar to head "a hosting of the English against the Irish," and was brought back to the bridal banquet a corpse, upon the shields of his followers.

The dark-eyed Maid—of Malahide,
Her silken bodice laced,
And on her brow,—with virgin pride,
The bridal chaplet—placed.
Her heart—is beating high, her cheek
Is flushed—with rosy shame,
As laughing bridesmaids—silly speak,
The gallant bridegroom's name.
The dark-eyed Maid—of Malahide—
Before the altar—stands,
And Galtrim—claims his blushing bride,
From pure—and holy hands:—
But hark! what fearful sounds are those?
"To arms! to arms!" they cry;
The bride's sweet cheek—no longer glows,
Fear—sits in that young eye.

The gallants—all are mustering now—
The bridegroom's helm—is on:
One look,—upon that wretched brow:
One kiss,—and he is gone;—
The feast is spread,—but many a knight,
Who should have graced that hall—
Will sleep—anon, in cold moonlight,
Beneath—a gory pall.

The garlands—bright with rainbow dyes,
In gay festoons—are hung;
The starry lamps—out-shine the skies,
The golden harps are strung:
But she—the moving spring of all,
Hath sympathy—with none
That meet in that old festive hall;—
And now—the feast's begun.
Hark! to the clang of arms! is't he,
The bridegroom chief,—returned,—
Crowned—with the wreath of victory
By his good weapon—earned?
Victorious bands—indeed—return.—
But, on their shields—they bear—
The laurelled chief,—and melt—those stern—
At that young bride's despair.

"Take—take—the roses from my brow,
The jewels—from my waist;
I have no need—of such things now:"
And then—her cheek—she placed—
Close—to his dead—cold cheek, and wept,—
As one may wildly weep,
When the last hope,—the heart had kept,
Lies buried—in the deep.

Long years have passed.—since that young
Bewailed—her widowed doom: [bride
The holy walls—of Malahide—
Still—shrine her marble tomb:—
And sculpture there—has sought to prove,
With rude essay—of art,
That form—she wore in life.—whose love—
Did grace—her woman's heart.—Crawford.
The influence of example—is a terrible responsibility—on the shoulders of every individual.

646. AARON BURR AND BLENNERHASSETT. Who, then, is Aaron Burr, and what the part which he has borne in this transaction? He is its author; its projector; its active executor. Bold, ardent, restless, and aspiring, his brain conceived it; his hand brought it into action. Beginning his operations in New York, he associates with him, men, whose wealth is to supply the necessary funds. Possessed of the mainspring, his personal labor contrives all the machinery. Pervading the continent from New-York to New-Orleans, he draws into his plan, by every allurements which he can contrive, men of all ranks, and all descriptions. To youthful ardor he presents danger and glory; to ambition, rank, and titles, and honors; to avarice, the mines of Mexico. To each person whom he addresses, he presents the object adapted to his taste: his recruiting officers are appointed; men are engaged throughout the continent: civil life is indeed quiet upon the surface; but in its bosom this man has contrived to deposit the materials, which, with the slightest touch of his match, produces an explosion, to shake the continent. All this his restless ambition has contrived; and, in the autumn of 1806, he goes forth, for the last time, to apply this match. On this excursion he meets with Blennerhassett.

Who is Blennerhassett? A native of Ireland, a man of letters, who fled from the storms of his own country to find quiet in ours. His history shews, that war is not the natural element of his mind; if it had been, he would never have exchanged Ireland for America. So far is an army from furnishing the society, natural and proper to Mr. Blennerhassett's character, that on his arrival in America, he retired, even from the population of the Atlantic states, and sought quiet, and solitude, in the bosom of our western forests. But he carried with him taste, and science, and wealth; and "lo, the desert smiled." Possessing himself of a beautiful island in the Ohio, he rears upon it a palace, and decorates it with every romantic embellishment of fancy. A shrubbery, that Shennstone might have envied, blooms around him; music that might have charmed Calypso and her nymphs, is his; an extensive library spreads its treasures before him; a philosophical apparatus offers to him all the secrets, and mysteries of nature; peace, tranquillity, and innocence shed their mingled delights around him; and, to crown the enchantment of the scene, a wife, who is said to be lovely even beyond her sex, and graced with every accomplishment, that can render it irresistible, had blessed him with her love, and made him the father of her children. The evidence would convince you, that this is but a faint picture of the real life.

In the midst of all this peace, this innocence, and this tranquillity, this feast of the mind, this pure banquet of the heart—the destroyer comes—he comes—to turn this paradise—into a hell—yet the flowers do not wither at his approach, and no monitory shuddering, through the bosom of their unfortunate possessor, warns him of the ruin, that is coming upon him. A stranger presents himself. Introduced to their civilities, by the high rank which he had lately held in his country, he soon finds his way to their hearts, by the dignity, and elegance of his demeanour, the light and beauty of his conversation, and the seductive, and fascinating power of his address. The conquest was not a difficult one. Innocence is ever simple, and credulous; conscious of no design itself, it suspects none in others; it wears no guards before its breast: every door, and portal, and avenue of the heart is thrown open, and all, who choose it, enter. Such, was the state of Eden, when the serpent entered its bowers. The prisoner, in a more engaging form, winding himself into the open and unpracticed heart of the unfortunate Blennerhassett, found but little difficulty, in changing the native character of that heart, and the objects of its affection. By degrees, he infuses into it the poison of his own ambition; he breathes into it the fire of his own courage; a daring and desperate thirst for glory; an ardor, panting for all the storm, and bustle, and hurricane of life. In a short time, the whole man is changed, and every object of his former delight relinquished. No more he enjoys the tranquil scene; it has become flat, and insipid to his taste; his books are abandoned; his retort, and crucible, are thrown aside; his shrubbery in vain blooms, and breathes its fragrance upon the air—he likes it not; his ear no longer drinks the rich melody of music; it longs for the trumpet's clangor, and the cannon's roar; even the prattle of his babes, once so sweet, no longer affects him; and the angel smile of his wife, which hitherto touched his bosom with ecstacy so unspeakable, is now unfelt and unseen. Greater objects have taken possession of his soul—his imagination has been dazzled by visions of diadems, and stars, and garters, and titles of nobility: he has been taught to burn with restless emulation at the names of Cromwell, Cesar, and Bonaparte. His enchanted island is destined soon to relapse into a desert; and, in a few months, we find the tender, and beautiful partner of his bosom, whom he lately "permitted not the winds of" summer "to visit too roughly," we find her shivering, at midnight, on the winter banks of the Ohio, and mingling her tears with the torrents, that froze as they fell. Yet, this unfortunate man, thus deluded from his interest, and his happiness—thus seduced from the paths of innocence, and peace—thus confounded in the toils, which were deliberately spread for him, and overwhelmed by the mastering spirit, and genius of another—this man, thus ruined, and undone, and made to play a subordinate part in this grand drama of guilt and treason—this man is to be called the principal offender; while he, by whom he was thus plunged, and steeped in misery, is comparatively innocent—a mere accessory. Sir, neither the human heart, nor the human understanding will bear a perversion so monstrous, and absurd; so shocking to the soul; so revolting to reason. O! no sir. There is no man who knows anything of this affair, who does not know that to every body concerned in it, Aaron Burr was as the sun to the planets, which surround him; he bound them in their respective orbits, and gave them their light, their heat, and their motion. Let him not then shrink—from the high destination, which he has courted; and having already ruined Blennerhassett in fortune, character, and happiness, forever, attempt to finish the tragedy, by thrusting that ill-fated man between himself and punishment.

The royal bee, queen—of the rosy bower,
Collects her precious sweets—from every flower.

617. TALENTS ALWAYS ASCENDANT. Talents, whenever they have had a suitable theatre, have never failed to emerge from obscurity, and assume their proper rank in the estimation of the world. The jealous pride of power may attempt to repress, and crush them; the base, and malignant rancor of impotent spleen, and envy—may strive to embarrass and retard their flight; but these efforts, so far from achieving their ignoble purpose, so far from producing a discernible obliquity, in the ascent of genuine, and vigorous talents, will serve only to increase their momentum, and mark their transit, with an additional stream of glory.

When the great earl of Chatham—first made his appearance in the house of commons, and began to astonish, and transport the British parliament, and the British nation, by the boldness, the force, and range of his thoughts, and the celestial fire, and pathos of his eloquence, it is well known, that the minister, Walpole, and his brother Horace, from motives very easily understood, exerted all their wit, all their oratory, all their acquirements of every description, sustained and enforced by the unfeeling “insolence of office,” to heave a mountain on his gigantic genius, and hide it from the world. Poor and powerless attempt! The tables were turned. He rose upon them, in the night, and irresistible energy of his genius, and, in spite of all their convulsions, frantic agonies, and spasms, he strangled them, and their whole faction, with as much ease as Hercules did the serpent Python.

Who can turn over the debates of the day, and read the account of this conflict between youthful ardor, and hoary-headed cunning, and power, without kindling in the cause of the tyro, and shouting at his victory! That they should have attempted to pass off the grand, yet solid and judicious operations of a mind like his, as being mere theatrical start and emotion; the giddy, hair-brained eccentricities of a romantic boy! That they should have had the presumption to suppose themselves capable of chaining down, to the floor of the parliament, a genius so ethereal, towering and sublime, seems unaccountable! Why did they not, in the next breath, by way of crowning the climax of vanity, bid the magnificent fire-ball to descend from its exalted, and appropriate region, and perform its splendid tour along the surface of the earth?

Talents, which are before the public, have nothing to dread, either from the jealous pride of power, or from the transient misrepresentations of party, spleen, or envy. In spite of opposition from any cause, their buoyant spirit will lift them to their proper grade. The man who comes fairly before the world, and who possesses the great, and vigorous stamina, which entitle him to a niche in the temple of glory, has no reason to dread the ultimate result; however slow his progress may be, he will, in the end, most indubitably receive that distinction. While the rest, “the swallows of science,” the butterflies of genius, may flutter for their spring; but they will soon pass away, and be remembered no more. No enterprising man, therefore, and least of all, the truly great man, has reason to droop, or repine, at any efforts, which he may suppose to be made, with the view to depress him. Let, then, the tempest of envy, or of malice howl around him. His genius will consecrate him; and any attempt to extinguish that, will be as unavailing, as would a human effort “to quench the stars.”—Wirt.

618. RICH AND POOR MAN.

So goes the world;—if wealthy, you may call This, friend, that, brother; friends and brothers all; Tho’ you are worthless—witless—never mind it: You may have been a stable-boy—what then? ’Tis wealth, good sir, makes honorable men. You seek respect, no doubt, and you will find it. But, if you are poor, heaven help you! tho’ your Had royal blood within him, and tho’ you [sire Possess the intellect of angels, too, ’Tis all in vain;—the world will ne’er inquire On such a score:—Why should it take the pains? ’Tis easier to weigh purses, sure, than brains. I once saw a poor fellow, keen, and clever, Witty, and wise;—he paid a man a visit, And no one noticed him, and no one ever [is it?” Gave him a welcome. “Strange,” cried I, “whence He walked on this side, then on that, He tried to introduce a social chat; Now here, now there, in vain he tried; Some formally and freezingly replied, and some Said, by their silence—“Better stay at home.”

A rich man burst the door,
As Croesus rich; I’m sure
He could not pride himself upon his wit,
And as for wisdom, he had none of it;
He had what’s better;—he had wealth.

What a confusion!—all stand up crect—
These—crowd around to ask him of his health;
These—low in honest duty, and respect;
And these—arrange a sofa or a chair,
And these—conduct him there.
“Allow me, sir, the honor?”—Then a bow—
Down to the earth—Is’t possible to show
Meet gratitude—for such kind condescension?—

The poor man—hung his head,
And, to himself, he said,
“This is indeed, beyond my comprehension:”
Then looking round,
One friendly face he found,
And said, “Pray tell me why is wealth preferred,
To wisdom?”—“That’s a silly question, friend.”
Replied the other—“have you never heard,
A man may lend his store
Of gold, or silver ore,
But wisdom—none can borrow, none can lend?”

THE ABUSE OF AUTHORITY.

O, it is excellent
To have a giant’s strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.
Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne’er be quiet:
For every pelting, petty officer, [thunder.
Would use his heaven for thunder; nothing but Merciful heaven!
Thou rather, with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt,
Split the unweaveable and gnarled oak.
Than the soft myrtle.—O, but man, proud man,
Drest in a little brief authority;
Most ignorant of what he’s most assur’d,
His glassy essence,—like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep; who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.—Shakspeare.

649. THE MANIAC; MAD-HOUSE.

Stay, jailor, stay—and hear my woe!
 She is not mad—who kneels to thee;
 For what I'm now—too well I know,
 For what I was—and what should be.
 I'll rave no more—in proud despair;
 My anguish shall be mild—though sad:
 But yet I'll firmly—truly swear,
 I am not mad—I am not mad.

My tyrant husband—forced the tale,
 Which chains me—in this dismal cell;
 My fate unknown—my friends bewail;
 Oh! jailor, haste—that fate to tell:
 Oh! haste—my father's heart to cheer:
 His heart, at once—'twill grieve, and glad,
 To know, though kept a captive here,
 I am not mad;—I am not mad.

He smiles—in scorn, and turns—the key;
 He quits the grate; I knelt in vain;
 His glimmering lamp, still, still I see—
 'Tis gone, and all is gloom again.

Cold—bitter cold!—No warmth! no light!
 Life,—all thy comforts once I had;
 Yet here I'm chained,—this freezing night,
 Although not mad; no, no, not mad.

'Tis sure some dream,—some vision vain:
 What! I,—the child of rank—and wealth,
 Am I the wretch—who clanks this chain,
 Bereft of freedom,—friends and health?
 Ah! while I dwell on blessings fled,
 Which never more—my heart must glad,
 How aches my heart,—how burns my head;
 But 'tis not mad;—no, 'tis not mad.

Hast thou, my child—forgot ere this,
 A mother's face,—a mother's tongue?
 She'll ne'er forget your parting kiss,
 Nor round her neck—how fast you clung;
 Nor how with me—you sued to stay;
 Nor how that suit—your sire forbade;
 Nor how—I'll drive such thoughts away;
 They'll make me mad: they'll make me mad.

His rosy lips,—how sweet they smiled!
 His mild blue eyes,—how bright they shone!
 None—ever bore a lovelier child:
 And art thou now forever—gone?
 And must I never see thee more,
 My pretty, pretty, pretty lad?
 I will be free! unbar the door!
 I am not mad;—I am not mad.

Oh! hark! what mean those yells, and cries?
 His chain—some furious madman breaks;
 He comes,—I see his glaring eyes;
 Now, now—my dungeon-grate he shakes.
 Help! help!—He's gone! Oh! fearful woe,
 Such screams to hear, such sights to see!
 My brain, my brain,—I know, I know,
 I am not mad, but soon shall be.

Yes, soon;—for, lo you!—while I speak—
 Mark how yon Demon's eye-balls glare!
 He sees me; now, with dreadful shriek,
 He whirls a serpent—high in air.
Horror!—the reptile—strikes his tooth—
 Deep in my heart, so crushed and sad;
 Ay, laugh, ye fiends; I feel the truth,
 Your task is done!—I'm mad! I'm mad!

Here didst thou dwell, in the enchanted cover,
 Egeria! thy all heavenly bosom beating,
 For the far footsteps of thy mortal lover; [ing,
 The purple moonlight vail'd that mystic meet—
 With her most starry canopy, and, seating
 Thyself by thine adorer, what befell? [ing
 This cave was surely shaped out for the greet—
 Of an enamor'd goddess, and the cell
 Haunted by holy love—the earliest oracle!

Children, like tender scions, take the bow,
 And, as they first are fashioned—always grow.

650. THE ALPS.

Proud monuments of God! sublime ye stand
 Among the wonders of his mighty hand:
 With summits soaring in the upper sky, [eye;
 Where the broad day looks down with burning
 Where gorgeous clouds in solemn pomp repose,
 Flinging rich shadows on eternal snows:
 Piles of triumphant dust, ye stand alone,
 And hold in kingly state, a peerless throne!

Like olden conquerors, on high ye rear
 The regal ensign, and the glittering spear:
 Round icy spires, the mists, in wreaths unrolled,
 Float ever near, in purple or in gold:
 And voiceful torrents, sternly rolling there,
 Fill with wild music, the unpillared air:
 What garden, or what hall on earth beneath,
 Thrills to such tones, as o'er the mountains
 breathe? [shone,

There, through long ages past, those summits
 Where morning radiance on their state was thrown;

There, when the summer day's career was done,
 Played the last glory of the sinking sun;
 There, sprinkling lustre o'er the cataract's shade,
 The chastened moon, her glittering rainbow made;

And, blent with pictured stars, her lustre lay,
 Where to still vales, the free streams leaped away.

Where are the thronging hosts of other days,
 Whose banners floated o'er the Alpine ways;
 Who, through their high defiles, to battle, wound,
 While deadly ordnance stirr'd the heights around?
 Gone; like the dream, that melts at early morn,
 When the lark's anthem through the sky is borne:
 Gone; like the wrecks, that sink in ocean's spray,
 And chill oblivion murmurs; Where are they?

Yet, "Alps on Alps" still rise; the lofty home
 Of storms, and eagles, where their pinions roam;
 Still, round their peaks, the magic colors lie,
 Of morn, and eve, imprinted on the sky;
 And still, while kings and thrones, shall fade,
 and fall,

And empty crowns lie dim upon the pall; [roar;
 Still, shall their glaciers flash; their torrents
 Till kingdoms fail, and nations rise no more.

ADHERENCE TO TRUTH. Petrarch, a celebrated Italian poet, who flourished about four hundred years ago, recommended himself to the confidence and affection of Cardinal Colonna, in whose family he resided, by his candor, and strict adherence to truth. A violent quarrel occurred in the household of this nobleman; which was carried so far, that recourse was had to arms. The Cardinal wished to know the foundation of this affair: and that he might be able to decide with justice, he assembled all his people, and obliged them to bind themselves, by a most solemn oath on the gospels, to declare the whole truth. Every one, without exception, submitted to this determination; even the Bishop of Luna, brother to the Cardinal was not excused. Petrarch, in his turn, presenting himself to take the oath; the Cardinal closed the book, and said, "As to you, Petrarch, your word is sufficient."

'Tis done, and since 'tis done, 'tis past recall;
 And since 'tis past recall, must be forgotten.

Never purchase friendship by gifts.

651. MODERN REPUBLICS. Where are the republics of modern times, which cluster'd round immortal Italy! Venice, and Genoa exist, but in name. The Alps, indeed, look down upon the brave and peaceful Swiss, in their native fastnesses; but the guaranty of their freedom is in their weakness, and not in their strength. The mountains are not easily crossed, and the valleys are not easily retained. When the invader comes, he moves like an avalanche, carrying destruction in his path. The peasantry sink before him. The country is too poor for plunder; and too rough for valuable conquest. Nature presents her eternal barriers, on every side, to check the wantonness of ambition; and Switzerland remains, with her simple institutions, a military road to fiercer climates, scarcely worth a permanent possession.

We stand the latest, and, if we fail, probably the last experiment of self-government by the people. We have begun it, under circumstances of the most auspicious nature. We are in the vigor of youth. Our growth has never been checked, by the oppressions of tyranny. Our constitutions have never been enfeebled by the vices, or luxuries of the old world. Such as we are, we have been from the beginning; simple, hardy, intelligent, accustomed to self-government, and self-respect. The Atlantic rolls between us, and any formidable foe. Within our own territory, stretching through many degrees of latitude and longitude, we have the choice of many products, and many means of independence. The government is mild. The press is free. Knowledge reaches, or may reach, every home. What fairer prospect of success could be presented! What means more adequate to accomplish the sublime end! What more is necessary, than for the people to preserve, what they themselves have created!

Already has the age caught the spirit of our institutions. It has already ascended the Andes, and snuffed the breezes of both oceans. It has infused itself into the life-blood of Europe, and warmed the sunny plains of France, and the lowlands of Holland. It has touched the philosophy of Germany, and the North, and, moving onward to the South, has opened to Greece the lessons of her better days.

Can it be, that America, under such circumstances, can betray herself? that she is to be added to the catalogue of republics, the inscription upon whose ruins is—"They were, but they are not." Forbid it, my countrymen; forbid it, Heaven!—Story.

652. RAZOR SELLER.

A fellow, in a market-town,
Most musical, cried razors, up and down,
And offered twelve—for eighteen-pence;
Wh. I: certainly, seem'd wondrous cheap,
And, for the money, quite a heap,
That every man would buy, with cash and sense.

A country bumpkin the great offer heard;
Poor Hodge, who suffer'd by a broad black beard,
That seem'd a shoe-brush, stuck beneath his nose.
With cheerfulness, the eighteen-pence he paid,
And, proudly, to himself, in whispers said—
"This rascal stole the razors, I suppose.

"No matter, if the fellow be a knave,
Provided that the razors shave;
It certainly will be a monstrous prize."

So home the clown, with his good fortune went,
Smiling,—in heart and soul content,
And quickly soaped himself to ears and eyes.

Being well lathered, from a dish or tub,
Hodge now began, with grinning pain, to grub—
Just like a hedger, cutting furze:

'Twas a vile razor!—then the rest he tried;—
All were impostors. "Ah!" Hodge sighed,
"I wish my eighteen-pence was in my purse."

In vain, to chase his beard, and bring the graeces,
He cut and dug, and whined, and stamp'd, and swore;

Bro't blood, and danc'd, blasphem'd and made wry
And curs'd each razor's body, o'er and o'er.[faeces,
His muzzle, form'd of opposition stuff,
Firm as a Foxite, would not lose its ruff;
So kept it—laughing at the steel, and suds.

Hodge, in a passion, stretched his angry jaws,
Vowing the direst veng'nee, with clench'd claws,
On the vile cheat that sold the goods.
"Razors! a vile, confounded dog!—
Not fit to scrape a hog!"

Hodge sought the fellow—found him—and begun,
"Perhaps, Master Razor-rogue! to you, 'tis fun,
That people flay themselves out of their lives.
You rascal! for an hour, have I been grubbing,
Giving my crying whiskers here a scrubbing,
With razors, just like oyster-knives.
Sirrah! I tell you, you're a knave,
To cry up razors that can't shave."

"Friend," quoth the razor man, "I'm not a knave;
As for the razors you have bought,—
Upon my soul, I never thought
That they would shave."

"Not think they'd shave?" quoth Hodge, with wond'ring eyes,

And voice, not much unlike an Indian yell,
"What were they made for then, you dog?" he cries.
"Made!" quoth the fellow, with a smile, "to sell."

653. UNIVERSAL EMANCIPATION. I speak—in the spirit—of the British law, which makes liberty—commensurate with, and inseparable from, the British soil,—which proclaims, even to the stranger and the sojourner, the moment he sets his foot upon British earth, that the ground on which he treads—is holy, and consecrated—by the genius of UNIVERSAL EMANCIPATION. No matter in what language—his doom may have been pronounced; no matter what complexion—incompatible with freedom, an Indian, or an African sun may have burnt upon him; no matter in what disastrous battle—his liberty may have been cloven down; no matter with what solemnities—he may have been devoted—upon the altar of slavery; the first moment—he touches the sacred soil of Britain, the altar, and the god, sink together in the dust; his soul walks abroad in her own majesty; his body swells beyond the measure of his chains, that burst from around him, and he stands redeemed, regenerated, and disenthralled, by the irresistible genius of UNIVERSAL EMANCIPATION.—Grattan.

When breezes are soft, and skies are fair,
I steal an hour from study and care,
And hie me away—to the woodland scene,
Where wanders the stream with waters of green;
As if the bright fringe—of herbs on its brink
Had given their stain, to the wave they drink.

654. GINEVRA; OR LOST BRIDE.

If ever you should come to Modena,
 Stop at a palace, near the Reggio-gate,
 Dwelt in, of old, by one of the Donati.
 Its noble gardens, terrace, above terrace,
 And rich in fountains, statues, cypresses,
 Will long detain you—but before you go.
 Enter the house—forget it not, I pray you—
 And look awhile upon a picture there
 'Tis of a lady, in her earliest youth,
 The last, of that illustrious family;
 Done by Zampieri—but by whom I care not.
 He, who observes it—ere he passes on,
 Gazes his fill, and comes, and comes again,
 That he may call it up, when far away.
 She sits, inclining forward, as to speak,
 Her lips half open, and her finger up,
 As though she said, "Beware!" her vest of gold,
 Brodered with flowers, and clasp'd from head to
 An emerald stone, in every golden clasp; [foot,
 And on her brow, fairer than alabaster,
 A coronet of pearls.

But then her face,
 So lovely, yet so arch, so full of mirth,
 The overflowing—of an innocent heart—
 It haunts me still, though many a year has fled,
 Like some wild melody!

Alone it hangs,
 Over a mouldering heir-loom; its companion,
 An oaken chest, half-eaten by the worm,
 But richly carved, by Antony of Trent,
 With scripture-stories, from the life of Christ;
 A chest, that came from Venice, and had held
 The ducal robes—of some old ancestors—
 That, by the way—it may be true, or false—
 But don't forget the picture; and you will not,
 When you have heard the tale, they told me there.
 She was an only child—her name—Ginevra,
 The joy, the pride—of an indulgent father;
 And, in her fifteenth year, became a bride,
 Marrying an only son, Francesco Doria.
 Her playmate, from her birth, and her first love.
 Just as she looks there, in her bridal dress,
 She was; all gentleness, all gayety;
 Her pranks, the favorite theme of every tongue.
 But now, the day was come, the day, the hour;
 Now, frowning, smiling, for the hundredth time,
 The nurse, that ancient lady, preached decorum;
 And, in the lustre of her youth, she gave
 Her hand, with her heart in it, to Francesco.
 Great was the joy; but, at the nuptial feast, [ing.
 When all sat down, the bride herself—was want-
 Nor was she to be found! Her father cried,
 "'Tis but to make a trial of our love!"
 And filled his glass to all; but his hand shook,
 And soon from guest to guest—the panic spread.
 'Twas but that instant—she had left Francesco,
 Laughing, and looking back, and flying still,
 Her ivory tooth—imprinted on his finger.
 But now, alas! she was not to be found;
 Nor, from that hour, could anything be guessed,
 But, that she was not!

Weary of his life,
 Francesco—flew to Venice, and, embarking,
 Flung it away, in battle with the Turk.
 Donati lived—and long might you have seen
 An old man, wandering—as in quest of something,

Something he could not find—he knew not what.
 When he was gone, the house remained awhile,
 Silent, and tenantless—then, went to strangers.
 Full fifty years were past, and all forgotten,
 When, on an idle day, a day of search,
 Mid the old lumber, in the gallery, [said,
 That mouldering chest was noticed; and, 'twas
 By one as young, as thoughtless as Ginevra,
 "Why not remove it from its lurking-place?"
 'Twas done, as soon as said; but, on the way,
 It burst, it fell; and lo! a skeleton!
 With here and there a pearl, and emerald-stone,
 A golden clasp, clasping a shred of gold.
 All else—had perished—save a wedding-ring,
 And a small seal, her mother's legacy,
 Engraven with a name, the name of both—
 "Ginevra."
 There, then, had she found a grave!
 Within that chest, had she concealed herself,
 Fluttering with joy, the happiest of the happy;
 When a spring-lock, that lay in ambush there,
 Fastened her down forever!—Rogers.

THE NEEDLE.

The gay belles of fashion, may boast of excelling,
 In waltz, or cotillon, at whisk or quadrille;
 And seek admiration, by vauntingly telling—
 Of drawing, and painting, and musical skill;
 But give me the fair one, in country or city,
 Whose home, and its duties, are dear to her heart;
 Who cheerfully warbles some rustical ditty,
 While plying the needle, with exquisite art;
 The bright little needle, the swift flying needle,
 The needle—directed by beauty, and art.
 If LOVE has a potent, a magical token,
 A talisman, ever resistless, and true,
 A charm, that is never evaded or broken,
 A witchery, certain the heart to subdue,
 'Tis THIS, and his armory—never has furnished,
 So keen, and unerring, or polish'd a dart,
 (Let beauty direct it.) so pointed, and burnish'd,
 And, oh! it is certain—of touching the heart,
 The bright little needle, the swift flying needle,
 The needle—directed by beauty, and art.
 Be wise, then, ye maidens, nor seek admiration,
 By dressing—for conquest, and flirting—with all;
 You never, whate'er be your fortune, or station,
 Appear half so lovely, at roué, or at ball,
 As—gaily conven'd at the work—covered table,
 Each—cheerfully active, and playing her part,
 Beguiling the task, with a song, or a fable,
 And plying the needle—with exquisite art;
 The bright little needle,—the long darning needle,
 The swift knitting needle, the needle. directed by BEAUTY AND ART.—Woodworth.

In parts superior, what advantage lies?
 Tell, (for you can) what is it to be wise?
 'Tis but to know how little can be known;
 To see all others' faults, and feel our own;
 Condemn'd in business, or in arts to drudge,
 Without a second, or without a judge.
 Truths would you teach, to save a sinking land;
 All fear, none aid you, and few—understand.

Even from the body's purity, the mind
 Receives a secret sympathetic aid.
 Not rural sight alone, but rural sounds,
 Exhilarate the spirits.

655. ADAMS AND JEFFERSON. They have gone to the companions of their cares, of their toils. It is well with them. The treasures of America are now in Heaven. How long the list of our good, and wise, and brave, assembled there! how few remain with us! There is our Washington; and those who followed him in their country's confidence, are now met together with him, and all that illustrious company.

The faithful marble may preserve their image; the engraven brass may proclaim their worth; but the humblest sod of independent America, with nothing but the dew-drops of the morning to gild it, is a prouder mausoleum than kings or conquerors can boast. The country is their monument. Its independence is their epitaph.

But not to their country is their praise limited. The whole earth is the monument of illustrious men. Wherever an agonizing people shall perish, in a generous convulsion, for want of a valiant arm and a fearless heart, they will cry, in the last accents of despair, Oh, for a Washington, an Adams, a Jefferson! Wherever a regenerated nation, starting up in its night, shall burst the links of steel that enchain it, the praise of our fathers shall be the prelude of their triumphal song.

The contemporary and successive generations of men will disappear. In the long lapse of ages, the tribes of America, like those of Greece and Rome, may pass away. The fabric of American freedom, like all things human, however firm and fair, may crumble into dust. But the cause in which these our fathers shone is immortal. They did that, to which no age, no people of reasoning men, can be indifferent.

Their eulogy will be uttered in other languages, when those we speak, like us who speak them, shall all be forgotten. And when the great account of humanity shall be closed at the throne of God, in the bright list of his children, who best adorned and served it, shall be found the names of our Adams and our Jefferson.—Everett.

656. EXILE OF ERIN.

There came to the beach—a poor exile of Erin.

The dew on his thin robe, hung heavy and chill:
For his country he sigh'd, when, at twilight repair—

To wander alone, by the wind-beaten hill: [sing,
But the day-star—attracted his eyes' sad devotion,
For it rose—on his own native Isle of the Ocean,
Where once, in the glow of his youthful emotion,
He sung the bold anthem—of ERIN GO BRAGH!

O, sad is my fate! said the heart-broken stranger.

The wild deer and wolf, to a covert can flee;

But I—have no refuge—from famine, or danger,
A home, and a country—remain not for me;

Ah! never, again, in the green sunny bow'rs, [hours,
Where my forefathers liv'd, shall I spend the sweet
Or cover my harp, with the wild woven flowers,
And strike to the numbers—of ERIN GO BRAGH!

O, where is my cottage, that stood by the wild wood?

Sisters and sires, did ye weep for its fall? [hood,

O, where is the mother, that watch'd o'er my child—

And where is the bosom-friend, dearer than all?

Ah! my sad soul, long abandoned by pleasure,

O, why did it doat—on a fast fading treasure—

Tears, like the rain-drops, may fall, without mea-

But rapture, and beauty, they cannot recall! [sure,

Erin, my country, though sad and forsaken,

In dreams, I revisit thy sea-beaten shore!

But alas! in a far distant land I awaken. [more!

And sigh for the friends, who can meet me no

O, hard, cruel fate, wilt thou never replace me,

In a mansion of peace, where no perils can chase me?

Ah! never, again, shall my brothers embrace me,

'They died to defend me, or live—to avenge me!

But yet, all its fond recollections suppressing,

One dying wish—my lone bosom shall draw:

Erin, an exile bequeaths thee his blessing!

Land of my forefathers, ERIN GO BRAGH!

Buried and cold, when my heart stills its motion,

Green be thy fields, sweetest isle of the ocean,

And thy harp—striking chords sing aloud with devo-

O, ERIN MA VORNEEN, ERIN GO BRAGH! [tion,

657. THE HYPOCRITE.

He was a man.

Who stole the livery—of the court of heaven,

To serve the devil in; in virtue's guise,

Devoured the widow's house, and orphan's bread;

In holy phrase, transacted villainies;

That common sinners—durst not meddle with.

At sacred feast, he sat among the saints.

And with his guilty hands—touched holiest things.

And none of sin lamented more, or sighed

More deeply, or with graver countenance,

Or longer prayer, wept o'er the dying man,

Whose infant children, at the moment, he Planned how to rob. In sermon-style he bought,

And sold, and lied; and salutation made,

In scripture terms. He prayed, by quantity,

And with his repetitions, long and loud,

All knees were weary. With one hand, he put

A penny—in the urn of poverty,

And with the other—took a shilling out.

On charitable lists,—those trumps, which told

The public ear, who had, in secret, done

The poor a benefit, and half the alms [sing,

They told of, took themselves to keep them sound—

He blazed his name, more pleased to have it there,

Than in the book of life. Seest thou the man!

A serpent with an angel's voice! a grave, [ceiv'd.

With flowers bestrewed! and yet, few were de-

His virtues, being over-done, his face.

Too grave, his prayers too long, his charities,

Too pompously attended, and his speech,

Larded too frequently, and out of time,

With serious phraseology,—were rents.

That in his garments opened, in spite of him,

Thro' which, the well accustomed eye, could see

The rottenness of his heart. None deeper blush'd,

As in the all-piercing light he stood, exposed,

No longer herding—with the holy ones.

Yet still he tried to bring his countenance—

To sanctimonious seeming; but, meanwhile,

The shame within, now visible to all.

His purpose balk'd. The righteous smil'd, and even

Despair itself, some signs of laughter gave,

As, ineffectually, he strove to wipe

His brow, that inward guiltiness defiled.

Detected wretch! of all the reprobate.

None seem'd more mature—for the flames of hell,

Where still his face, from ancient custom, wears

A holy air, which says to all that pass

Hün by, "I was a hypocrite on earth."—Pollock.

658. PARRHASIUS AND CAPTIVE.

"Parrhasius, a painter of Athens, amongst those Olynthian captives Philip of Macedon brought home to sell, bought one very old man; and when he had him at his house, put him to death with extreme torture and torment, the better, by his example, to express the pains and passions of his Prometheus, whom he was then about to paint."
—Veron's Anat. of Mel.

There stood a gray-haired and majestic old man,
A gray-haired and majestic old man,
Chained to a pillar. It was almost night,
And the last seller from his place had gone,
And not a sound was heard but of a dog
Crunching beneath the stall a refuse bone,
Or the dull echo from the pavement rung.
As the faint captive changed his weary feet.
'Twas evening, and the half-descended sun
Tipped with a golden fire the many domes
Of Athens, and a yellow atmosphere
Lay rich and dusky in the shaded street
Through which the captive gazed.

The golden light into the painter's room
Streamed richly, and the hidden colors stole
From the dark pictures radiantly forth,
And in the soft and dewy atmosphere,
Like forms and landscapes, magical they lay.
Parrhasius stood, gazing, forgetfully,
Upon his canvas. There Prometheus lay
Chained to the cold rocks of Mount Caucasus—
The vulture at his vitals, and the links
Of the laue Lemnian festering in his flesh;
And, as the painter's mind felt through the dim,
Rapt mystery, and plucked the shadows forth
With its far-reaching fancy, and with form
And color clad them, his fine, earnest eye,
Flashed with a passionate fire, and the quick curl
Of his thin nostril, and his quivering lip—[flight.
Were like the winged Gods, breathing from his

"Bring me the captive now!"

My hands feel skillful, and the shadows lift
From my waked spirit airily and swift,
And I could paint the bow
Upon the bended heavens—around me play
Colors of such divinity to-day.

Ha! bind him on his back!
Look!—as Prometheus in my picture here!
Quick—or he faints! stand with the cordial near!
Now—bind him to the rack!

Press down the poison'd links into his flesh!
And tear asgape that healing wound afresh!

So—let him writhe! How long
Will he live thus? Quick, my good pencil, now!
What a fine agony works upon his brow!

Ha! gray-haired, and so strong!
How fearfully he stifles that short moan!
Gods! if I could but paint a dying groan!

"Pity" thee! So I do!
I pity the dumb victim at the altar—
But does the rob'd priest for his pity falter?

I'd rack thee though I knew
A thousand lives were perishing in thine—
What were ten thousand to a fame like mine?

Yet there's a deathless name!
A spirit that the smothering vault shall spurn,
And like a steadfast planet mount and burn—
And though its crown of flame
Consumed my brain to ashes as it shone,
By all the fiery stars! I'd bind it on!

Ay—though it bid me rifle
My heart's last fount for its insatiate thirst—
Though every life-strung nerve be maddened first;
Though it should bid me stifle

The yearning in my throat for my sweet child,
And taunt its mother till my brain went wild—

All—I would do it all—
Sooner than die, like a dull worm, to rot—
Thrust foully into earth to be forgot!

O heavens—but I appal
Your heart, old man! forgive—ha! on your lives
Let him not faint!—rack him till he revives!

Vain—vain—give o'er! His eye

Glazes apace. He does not feel you now—
Stand back! I'll paint the death-dew on his brow!

Gods! if he do not die
But for one moment—one—till I eclipse
Conception with the scorn of those calm lips!

Shivering! Hark! he mutters
Brokenly now—that was a difficult breath—
Another? Wilt thou never come, oh, Death!

Look! how his temples flutter!
Is his heart still? Ah! lift up his head!
He shudders, gasps, Jove help him! so, he's dead.

How like a mounting devil in the heart
Rules the unregained ambition! Let it once
But play the monarch, and its haughty brow
Glow with a beauty that bewilders thought,
And unthrones peace forever. Putting on
The very pomp of Lucifer, it turns
The heart to ashes, and with not a spring
Left in the bosom for the spirit's lip,
We look upon our splendor and forget
The thirst of which we perish!
O, if earth be all, and Heaven nothing,
What thrice mocked fools we are!—Willis.

NATURAL HISTORY OF LOVE,
Addressed to Dr. Moyce by the Ladies.

Dear doctor, let it not transpire,
How much your lectures we admire;
How, at your eloquence we wonder,
When you explain the cause of thunder,
Of lightning, and electricity,
With so much plainness, and simplicity;
The origin of rocks, and mountains,
Of seas, and rivers, lakes, and fountains;
Of rain, and hail, and frost, and snow,
And all the storms, and winds that blow;
Besides a hundred wonders more,
Of which we never heard before.
But now, dear doctor, not to flatter,
There is a most important matter,
A matter which our thoughts run much on,
A matter which you never touch on,
A subject, if we right conjecture,
That well deserves a long, long lecture,
Which all the ladies would approve,—
The natural history of love!
Deny us not, dear doctor Moyce!
Oh, list to our entreating voice!
Tell us why our poor, tender hearts,
So easily admit love's darts.
Teach us the marks—of love's beginning,
What makes us think a beau so winning;
What makes us think a coxcomb, witty,
A black coat, wise, a red coat—pretty!
Why we believe such horrid lies,
That we are angels, from the skies,
Our teeth like pearl, our cheeks like roses.
Our eyes like stars—such charming noses!
Explain our dreams, awake, and sleeping,
Explain our blushing, laughing, weeping.
Teach us, dear doctor, if you can,
To humble that proud creature, man;
To turn the wise ones into fools,
The proud and insolent to tools;
To make them all run, helter-skelter,
Their necks—into the marriage-halter:
Then leave us to ourselves with these;
We'll turn and rule them as we please.
Dear doctor, if you grant our wishes,
We promise you—five-hundred kisses;
And, rather than the affair be blundered,
We'll give you—six-score to the hundred.

659. SPEECH OF BELIAL, DISSUADING WAR.

I should be much for open war, oh peers,
As not behind in hate, if what were urged,
Main reason to persuade immediate war,
Did not dissuade me more, and seem to cast
Ominous conjecture on the whole success;
When he, who most excels in tact of arms,
In what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair,
And utter dissolution as the scope
Of all his aim, after some dire revenge. [filled
First, what revenge!—The towers of heaven are
With armed watch, that render all access
Impregnable: oft, on the bordering deep,
Encamp their legions: or with obscure wing,
Scout far and wide, into the realms of night,
Scorning surprise. Or could we break our way
By force, and at our heels, all hell should rise,
With blackest insurrection, to confound
Heaven's purest light; yet our great enemy,
All incorruptible, would, on his throne,
Sit, unpolluted: and the ethereal mold,
Incapable of stain, would soon expel
Her mischief, and purge off the baser fire,
Victorious. Thus repulsed, our final hope—
Is flat despair; we must exasperate
The almighty victor—to spend all his rage,
And that must end us; that—must be our cure,—
To be no more.—Sad cure!—for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts, that wander through eternity,—
To perish rather, swallowed up, and lost,
In the wide tomb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense, and motion?—And who knows
(Let this be good) whether our angry foe
Can give it, or will ever? How he can,
Is doubtful; that he never will, is sure.
Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
Belike through impotence, or unawares,
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
To punish endless?—"Wherefore cease ye then?"
Say they, who counsel war; "we are decreed,
Reserved, and destined—to eternal wo:
Whatever doing,—what can we suffer more,
What can we suffer worse?" Is this then worst,
Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms?
What, when we fled amain, pursued and struck
With heaven's afflicting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us? this hell, then, seemed
A refuge—from those wounds! or, when we lay,
Chained on the burning lake? that sure was worse.
What if the breath, that kindled those grim fires,
Awaked, should blow them into seven-fold rage,
And plunge us in the flames? or, from above,
Should intermitted vengeance—arm again
His red right hand to plague us? what if all
Her stores were opened, and this firmament
Of hell—should spout her cataracts of fire,
Impending horrors, threatening hideous fall,
One day upon our heads; while we, perhaps,
Desisting, or exhorting glorious war,
Caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurled,
Each on his rock transfixed, the sport and prey
Of racking whirlwinds; or, for ever sunk
Under you boiling ocean, wrapped in chains;
There to converse—with everlasting groans,

Unrespired, unpitied, unreprieved.

Ages—of hopeless end!—this would be worse.

War, therefore, open and concealed, alike

My voice dissuades.—Milton.

POMPEII. How serenely slept the star-light on that lovely city! how breathlessly its pillared streets reposed in their security! how softly rippled the dark, green waves beyond!
how cloudless spread aloft and blue the dreaming Campanian skies! Yet this was the last night for the gay Pompeii! the colony of the hoar Chaldean! the fabled city of Hercules!
the delight of the voluptuous Roman! Age after age had rolled indestructive, unheeded, over its head; and now the last ray quivered on the dial plate of its doom!

660. THE BEGGAR'S PETITION.

Pity the sorrows | of a poor old man, [door;
Whose trembling limbs | have borne him to your
Whose days are dwindled | to the shortest span;
Oh! give relief, and Heaven will bless your store.
These tatter'd clothes | my poverty bespeak,
These hoary locks proclaim my lengthen'd years;
And many a furrow | in my grief-worn cheek,
Has been the channel | to a flood of tears.
Yon house, erected | on the rising ground,
With tempting aspect | drew me from my road;
For plenty there | a residence has found,
And grandeur | a magnificent abode.
Hard is the fate | of the infirm, and poor!
Here, as I crav'd | a morsel of their bread,
A pamper'd menial | drove me from the door,
To seek a shelter | in an humbler shed,
Oh! take me | to your hospitable dome;
Keen blows the wind, | and piercing is the cold!
Short is my passage | to the friendly tomb;
For I am poor, and miserably old.
Should I reveal the sources | of my grief,
If soft humanity | e'er touch'd your breast,
Your hands would not | withhold the kind relief,
And tears of pity | would not be repress.
Heav'n sends misfortunes: why should we repine?
'Tis Heaven has bro't me | to the state you see;
And your condition | may be soon like mine,
'The child of sorrow | and of misery.
A little farm | was my paternal lot;
Then, like the lark, I sprightly hail'd the morn;
But ah! oppression | forc'd me from my cot,
My cattle died, and blighted was my corn.
My daughter, once the comfort of my age,
Lur'd by a villain | from her native home,
Is cast, abandon'd, on the world's wide stage,
And doom'd | in scanty poverty to roam.
My tender wife, sweet soother of my care!
Struck with sad anguish | at the stern decree,
Fell, ling'ring fell, a victim to despair;
And left the world | to wretchedness and me.
Pity the sorrows | of a poor old man, [door;
Whose trembling limbs | have borne him to your
Whose days are dwindled | to the shortest span;
Oh! give relief, and Heaven will bless your store.
Canst thou administer—to a mind diseased?
Pluck—from the memory—a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles—of the brain:
And with some sweet—oblivious antidote—
Cleanse—the stuff'd bosom—of that perilous stuff,
Which weighs—upon the heart?

661. CATO'S SENATE.

Cato. Fathers, we once again are met in council—
Cesar's approach has summon'd us together, [cil.
And Rome attends her fate from our resolves.
How shall we treat this bold aspiring man?
Success still follows him, and backs his crimes.
Pharsalia—gave him Rome: Egypt—has since
Received his yoke, and the whole Nile is Cesar's.
Why should I mention Juba's overthrow,
And Scipio's death? Numidia's burning sands, Still smoke with blood. 'Tis time we should decree

What course to take. Our foe advances on us,
And envies us, even Libya's sultry deserts.
Fathers, pronounce your thoughts: are they still
To hold it out, and fight it to the last? [fixed
Or, are your hearts subdued at length, and wro't,
By time and ill success, to a submission?
Sempronius, speak.—

Sempronius. My voice is still for war.
Gods! can a Roman senate long debate,
Which of the two to choose, slavery, or death?
No; let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe, break through the thick array
Of his thronged legions, and charge home upon
Perhaps some arm, more lucky than the rest, [him.
May reach his heart, and free the world—from bondage.

Rise, fathers, rise! 'tis Rome demands your help;
Rise, and revenge her slaughtered citizens,
Or share their fate! The corpse of half her senate Manure the fields of Thessaly, while we Sit here, deliberating in cold debates,
If we should sacrifice our lives to honor,
Or wear them out in servitude, and chains.
Rouse up, for shame! our brothers of Pharsalia
Point at their wounds, and cry aloud—To battle!
Great Pompey's shade—complains that we are slow. [us!

And Scipio's ghost—walks unrevenged, amongst

Cato. Let not a torrent of impetuous zeal—
Transport thee thus, beyond the bounds of rea-
True fortitude is seen, in great exploits, [son:
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides:
All else is towering frenzy and distraction.
Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword,
In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care?
Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not the impartial world, with reason, say,
We lavished at our deaths, the blood of thousands,
To grace our fall, and make our ruin glorious;
Lucius, we next would know what's your opinion, Lucius. My thoughts, I must confess, are turned on peace.

Already, have our quarrels filled the world—
With widows and with orphans: Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions—
Lie half-unpeopled, by the feuds of Rome: [kind.
'Tis time to sheathe the sword, and spare man-
It is not Cesar, but the gods, my fathers,
The gods declare against us, and repel
Our vain attempts. To urge the foe to battle,
(Prompted by blind revenge, and wild despair,)
Were to refuse the awards of Providence,
And not to rest in Heaven's determination.
Already have we shown our love to Rome;
Now, let us show submission to the gods.
We took up arms, not to revenge ourselves,
But free the commonwealth; when this end fails,
Arms have no further use: our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our
And bids us not delight in Roman blood, [hands,
Unprofitably shed: what men could do—
Is done already: heaven and earth—will witness,
If—Rome—must—fall, that we are innocent.

Semp. This smooth discourse, and mild behav-
Conceal a traitor—something whispers me [or oft
All is not right—Cato beware of Lucius.

Cato. Let us appear—nor rash, nor diffident:
Immoderate valor—swells into a fault;
And fear, admitted into public councils,

Betrays—like treason. Let us shun 'em both.
Fathers, I cannot see that our affairs [round us;
Are grown thus desperate: we have bulwarks
Within our walls, are troops—inured to toil,
In Afric's heats, and seasoned to the sun;
Numidia's spacious kingdom lies behind us,
Ready to rise, at its young prince's call.
While there is hope, do not distrust the gods;
But wait, at least, till Cesar's near approach
Force us to yield. 'Twill never be too late
To sue for chains, and own a conqueror.
Why should Rome fall a moment, ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out,
In its full length, and spin it to the last.
So, shall we gain still one day's liberty;
And let me perish; but, in Cato's judgment,
A day, an hour, of virtuous liberty,
Is worth a whole eternity—in bondage.—Addison.

662. GOD IN NATURE.—There is religion in every thing around us—a calm and holy religion, in the unbreathing things of nature, which man would do well to imitate. It is a meek and blessed influence, stealing in as it were, unawares upon the heart. It comes quietly, and without excitement. It has no terror, no gloom in its approaches. It does not rouse up the passions; it is untrammelled by the creeds, and unshadowed by the superstitions of man. It is fresh from the hands of its author, glowing from the immediate presence of the Great Spirit, which pervades and quickens it.

It is written on the arched sky. It looks out from every star. It is on the sailing cloud, and in the invisible wind. It is among the hills and valleys of the earth—where the shrubless mountain-top—pierces the thin atmosphere of eternal winter—or where the mighty forest fluctuates, before the strong wind, with its dark waves of green foliage. It is spread out like a legible language, upon the broad face of the unsleeping ocean. It is the poetry of nature. It is this which uplifts the spirit within us, until it is strong enough to overlook the shadows of our place of probation; which breaks, link after link, the chain that binds us to materiality; and which opens to our imagination a world of spiritual beauty and holiness.

PLAY-PLACE OF EARLY DAYS.

Be it a weakness, it deserves some praise,
We love the play-place of our early days;
The scene is touching, and the heart is stone,
That feels not at that sight, and feels at none.
The wall on which we tried our graving skill,
The very name we carv'd subsisting still;
The bench on which we sat while deep employ'd,
Though mangled, hacked, and hewed, not yet destroyed;

The little ones, unbutton'd, glowing hot,
Playing our games, and on the very spot;
As happy as we once, to kneel and draw
The chalky ring, and knuckle down at taw;
To pitch the ball into the grounded hat,
Or drive it devious with a dextrous pat;
The pleasing spectacle at once excites
Such recollection of our own delights,
That, viewing it, we seem almost t' obtain
Our innocent, sweet, simple years again. Cowper.

Come sleep, O sleep, the certain knot of peace,
The baiting-place of wit, the balm of woe;
The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
Th' indifferent judge between the high and low.

663. PATRICK HENRY'S SPEECH, 1775.

No man—thinks more highly, than I do, of the patriotism, as well as the abilities, of the very worthy gentlemen, who have just addressed the house. But, different men—often see the same subject in different lights; and therefore, I hope it will not be thought disrespectful to those gentlemen, if, entertaining, as I do, opinions of a character very opposite to theirs, I should speak forth my sentiments—freely, and without reserve. This, sir, is no time for ceremony. The question before the house is one of awful moment to this country. For my part, I consider it as nothing less than a question of freedom, or slavery; and in proportion to the magnitude of the subject, ought to be the freedom of debate. It is only in this way we can hope to arrive at truth, and fulfill the great responsibility which we hold to God, and to our country. Were I to withhold my sentiments, at such a time as this, through fear of giving offence, I should consider myself as guilty of treason toward my country, and of an act of disloyalty toward the Majesty of Heaven; whom I revere above all earthly kings. It is natural for man to indulge in the illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth; and listen—to the song of that siren, till she transforms us—into beasts. Is this—the part of wise men, engaged in a great and arduous struggle for LIBERTY? Are we disposed to be of the number of those, who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not, the things, which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst, and to provide for it.

I have but one lamp, by which my feet are guided; and that—is the lamp—of EXPERIENCE. I know of no way of judging of the future, but by the past. And, judging by the past, I wish to know what there has been, in the conduct of the British ministry, for the last ten years, to justify those hopes, with which gentlemen have been pleased to solace themselves, and the house? Is it that insidious smile, with which our petition has been lately received? Trust it not, sir; it will prove a snare—to your feet. Suffer not yourselves to be betrayed with a kiss. Ask yourselves—how this gracious reception of our petition—comports with those warlike preparations, which cover our waters, and darken our land. Are fleets, and armies, necessary to a work of love, and reconciliation? Have we shown ourselves so unwilling to be reconciled, that force must be called in to win back our love? Let us not deceive ourselves, sir. These are the implements of war, and subjugation—the best arguments—to which kings resort. I ask, gentlemen, sir, what means this martial array, if its purpose be not to force us to submission? Can gentlemen assign any other, possible motive for it? Has Great Britain any enemy, in this quarter of the world, to call for all this accumulation of navies, and armies? No sir, she has none. They are meant for us: they can be meant for no other. They are sent over—to bind, and rivet upon us, those chains, which the British ministry have been so long forging. And what have we to oppose to them? Shall we try argument? Sir, we have been trying that for the last ten years. Have we anything new to offer upon the subject? Nothing. We have held the subject up in every light of which it is capable; but it has been all in vain. Shall we resort to entreaty, and humble supplication? What terms shall we find, which have not been already exhausted? Let us not, I beseech you, sir, deceive ourselves longer. Sir, we have done everything that could be done, to avert the storm, which is now coming on. We have petitioned; we have remonstrated; we have supplicated; we have prostrated ourselves before the throne, and have implored its interposition—to arrest the tyrannical hands of the ministry, and parliament. Our petitions—have been slighted; our remonstrances—have produced additional violence and insult; our supplications have been disregarded, and we have been spurned, with contempt, from the foot of the throne. In vain, after these things, may we indulge the fond hope of peace, and reconciliation. There is no longer any room for hope. If we wish to be free; if we mean to preserve, inviolate, those inestimable privileges, for which we have been so long contending; if we mean not basely to abandon the noble struggle, in which we have been so long engaged, and which we have pledged ourselves, never to abandon, until the glorious object of our contest shall be obtained—we must fight! I repeat it!—sir, we must fight! An appeal to arms, and to the God of hosts, is all that is left us. They tell us, sir, that we are weak, unable to cope—with so formidable an adversary. But when—shall we be stronger? Will it be the next week, or the next year? Will it be—when we are totally disarm'd, and when a British guard shall be stationed in every house? Shall we gather strength—by irresolution, and inaction? Shall we acquire the means of effectual resistance, by lying supinely on our backs, and hugging the delusive phantom of hope, until our enemies shall have bound us—hand—and foot? Sir, we are not weak, if we make a proper use of those means, which the God of nature hath placed in our power. Three millions—of people, armed—in the holy cause of LIBERTY, and in such a country as that which we possess, are invincible, by any force, which our enemy can send against us. Besides, sir, we shall not fight our battles alone. There is a just God,—who presides over the destinies of nations, and who will raise up friends to fight our battles for us. The battle, sir, is not to the strong—alone; it is to the vigilant, the active, the brave. Besides, sir, we have no election. If we were base enough to desire it, it is now too late—to retire from the contest. There is no retreat, but in submission and slavery! Our chains are forged. Their clanking—may be heard on the plains of Boston! The war is inevitable—and let it come!—I repeat it, sir, let it come!

It is vain, sir, to extenuate the matter. Gentlemen may cry—PEACE—PEACE—but there is no peace. The war is actually begun! The next gale, that sweeps from the north, will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field! Why stand we here idle? What is it, that gentlemen wish? what would they have? Is life—so—dear, or peace—so sweet, as to be purchased—at the price of chains—and slavery? Forbid it,—Almighty God.—I know not—what course others may take,—but, as for me, give me LIBERTY,—or give me—DEATH!!

664. AMERICA.

Still one great clime, in full and free defiance,
Yet rears her crest, unconquer'd and sublime,
Above the fair Atlantic! she has taught
Her Esau brethren that the haughty flag,
The floating fence of Albion's feeblecrag, [brought May strike to those whose red right hands have Rights cheaply earn'd with blood. Still, still, forever
Better, though each man's life-blood were a river,
That it should flow, and overflow, than creep
Through thousand lazy channels in our veins,
Damn'd like the dull canal, with locks and chains,
And moving, as a sick man in his sleep,
Three paces, and then faltering:—better be
Where the extinguish'd Spartans still are free,
In their proud chanel of Thermopylae,
Than stagnate in our marsh,—or o'er the deep
Fly, and one current to the ocean add,
One spirit to the souls our fathers had,
One freeman more, America, to thee!—Byron.

OF THE DREAD OF REFORM. The true and only reason, for not attempting a reform of the state of things is, that the interest of corruption—requires them to remain as they are.

665. FOOTSTEPS OF ANGELS.

When the hours of Day are numbered,
 And the voices of the Night
 Wake the better soul that slumbered
 To a holy, calm delight—
 Ere the evening lamps are lighted,
 And, like phantoms grim and tall,
 Shadows from the fitful fire-light
 Dance upon the parlor-wall—
 Then the forms of the departed
 Enter at the open door ;
 The beloved-one, the true-hearted,
 Come to visit me once more !
 He, the young and strong, who cherished
 Noble longings for the strife—
 By the road-side fell and perished,
 Weary with the march of life !
 They, the holy ones and weakly,
 Who the cross of suffering bore—
 Folded their pale hands so meekly—
 Spake with us on earth no more !
 And with them the being beauteous
 Who unto my youth was given,
 More than all things else to love me,
 And is now a saint in heaven.
 With a slow and noiseless footstep
 Comes that messenger divine,
 Takes the vacant chair beside me,
 Lays her gentle hand in mine ;
 And she sits and gazes at me,
 With those deep and tender eyes,
 Like the stars, so still and saint-like,
 Looking downward from the skies.
 Uttered not, yet comprehended,
 Is the spirit's voiceless prayer—
 Soft rebukes, in blessings ended,
 Breathing from her lips of air.
 Oh ! though oft depressed and lonely,
 All my fears are laid aside,
 If I but remember only
 Such as these have lived and died !

666. THE WAY TO BE HAPPY. All mankind are brethren. Every human being, who comes in our way, and stands in need of our aid, is entitled to our sympathy. Human nature, and distress, form a legitimate claim to our friendly assistance. We are not to withhold our brotherly affection, from any of our fellow men, because an imaginary line, a river, a ridge of mountains, or a channel of the ocean, may have separated their birth-place from ours; because their manners, customs, and political institutions are not the same with our own; because, by reason of difference of climate, and manner of life, their skin is tinged with a different color; because they offer their tribute of homage—to the Creator in a different manner; or, because there is some difference, or shade of difference, between their religious rites, and opinions, and ours.

The sentiment of universal benevolence—expands the heart, humanizes the mind, and fosters every generous affection; but jealousy, malice, hatred, and other malignant passions—pervert the soul, and cramp, and vitiate—the best feelings of our nature. They wage war with every manly, and liberal principle. Instead of sweeping the globe, with the guilty purpose of oppressing the weak, robbing the defenceless, exciting the sound of lamentation in the humble hut, and drawing forth the tears of the widow, and the orphan, let us do what is in our power—to promote the happiness of our fellow men. In the genuine spirit of brotherly affection, let us smoke the pipe of peace—with the untutored wanderer of the western wilderness—or, partake of bread, and salt, with the hardy native of the African desert.

Mankind often complain, that they are unhappy; that they tread in a thorny path, and drink of a bitter stream. But whence do their sufferings, and sorrows flow? Do they not, in a great measure, proceed from their own selfish, and malignant passions! Remove the cause, and the effect will disappear. Banish malice, envy, hatred; let genuine good-will towards each other prevail, and a great portion of human misery—will fade away, like darkness—before the rising sun. It will dissipate the gloom, which often clouds the countenance, and remove the grief, which often preys upon the heart.—Fergus.

EDUCATION.

If thou hast plucked a flower
 Of richest, rarest ray,
 And borne it from its garden bower,
 Thou knowest 't will fade away :
 If thou hast gathered gold,
 Unruined and refined,
 That glittering hoard of worth untold,
 Thou knowest the thief may find.
 There is a plant that fears
 No adverse season's strife,
 But with an inborn fragrance cheers
 The wintry eye of life ;
 There is a wealth that foils
 The robber's roving eye,
 The guerdon of the mind that toils
 For immortality.
 O ye, whose brows are bright,
 Whose bosoms feel no thorn,
 Seek knowledge, by the rosy light
 Of youth's unfolding morn ;
 With ardor uncontrolled,
 Seek wisdom's lore sublime,
 And win the garland, and the gold
 That cannot change with time.—Sigourney

THE LAND OF REST.

Oh, when—shall I go to that land
 Where spirits—beatified dwell ?
 Oh, when shall I join their bright band,
 And bid to this earth—a farewell ?
 I am weary of life—and its care,
 I am weary of life and its woe,
 Oh, when to that country so fair,
 To that country unknown, shall I go ?
 A soft yellow light fills the air
 Of that land, which I long to behold ; [there,
 And the faces and forms—of the saints who are
 Are clothed—in its luster of gold.
 Like angels they look—as they move,
 And like angels they pass the sweet hours ;
 For they are not mortals, but spirits, who rove
 In the light of those beautiful bowers.
 Face to face the truth comes out

667. THE PERFECT ORATOR. Imagine to yourselves—a Demosthenes, addressing the most illustrious assembly in the world, upon a point, whereon the fate of the most illustrious of nations depended. How awful such a meeting! how vast the subject! By the power of his eloquence, the augustness of the assembly is lost—in the dignity of the orator; and the importance of the subject, for a while, superseded by the admiration of his talents.

With what strength of argument, with what powers of the fancy, with what emotions of the heart, does he assault, and subjugate, the whole man; and, at once, captivate his reason, his imagination, and his passions! To effect this, must be the utmost effort of the most improved state of human nature. Not a faculty that he possesses, but is here exerted to its highest pitch. All his internal powers are at work; all his external, testify their energies.

Within, the memory, the fancy, the judgment, the passions, are all busy; without, every muscle, every nerve is exerted; not a feature, not a limb, but speaks. The organs of the body, attuned to the exertions of the mind, thro' the kindred organs of the hearers, instantaneously vibrate those energies—from soul to soul. Notwithstanding the diversity of minds, in such a multitude, by the lightning of eloquence, they are melted into one mass; the whole assembly, actuated in one and the same way, become, as it were, but one man, and have but one voice. The universal cry is—Let us march against Philip, let us fight for our liberties—let us conquer, or die.

668. WIFE, CHILDREN, AND FRIENDS.

When the black-letter'd list to the gods was presented,
The list of what fate for each mortal intends,
At the long string of ills a kind goddess relented,
And slipp'd in three blessings, wife, children, and friends.
In vain surly Pluto declared he was cheated,
And justice divine could not compass her ends,
The scheme of man's penance he swore was defeated,
For earth becomes heaven with wife, children, and friends.
If the stock of our bliss is in stranger hands rested,
The fund, ill-secured, oft in bankruptcy ends,
But the heart issues bills, which are never protested,
When drawn on the firm of—wife, children, and friends.
The soldier, whose deeds live immortal in story,
When duty to far distant latitudes sends,
With transport would barter whole ages of glory,
For one happy hour with wife, children, and friends.
Though valor still glows in life's waning embers,
The death-wounded tar, who his colors defends,
Drops a tear of regret, as he dying remembers,
How blest was his home, with wife, children, and friends.
Though the spice-breathing gale, o'er his caravan hovers,
Though around him Arabia's whole fragrance descends,
The merchant still thinks of the woodbine that covers
The bower where he sat with wife, children, and friends.
The day-spring of youth, still unclouded with sorrow,
Alone on itself for enjoyment depends,
But dearer is the twilight of age, if it horror
No warmth from the smiles of wife, children and friends.
Let the breath of renewen ever freshen and nourish
The burl that o'er her fair favorites bends,
O'er me wave the willow, and long may it flourish,
Besew'd with the tears of wife, children, and friends.

Friendship is constant in all other things,
Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore, all hearts in love use their own tongues.
Let every eye negotiate for itself,
And trust no agent: for beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.

669. TIME—NEW YEAR.

'Tis midnight's holy hour: and silence, now,
Is brooding, like a gentle spirit, o'er [winds,
The still—and pulseless world. Hark! on the
The bell's deep tones are swelling: 'tis the knell
Of the departed—year. No funeral train
Is sweeping past; yet, on the stream, and wood,
With melancholy light, the moonbeam's rest,
Like a pale, spotless shroud: the air is stirred,
As by a mourner's sigh; and, on yon cloud,
That floats so still, and placidly, through heaven,
The spirits—of the seasons—seem to stand. [form,
Young Spring, bright Summer, Autumn's solemn
And Winter, with his aged locks, and breath,
In mournful cadence, that come abroad,—
Like the far wind-harp's wild, and touching wail,
A melancholy dirge—o'er the dead year—
Gone—from the earth—forever.

Tis a time

For memory, and tears. Within the deep,
Still chambers of the heart, a spectre dim,
Whose tones—are like the wizard's voice of Time,
Heard from the tomb of ages, points its cold—
And solemn finger—to the beautiful
And holy visions, that have passed away,
And left no shadow of their loveliness,
On the dead waste of life. That spectre—lifts
The coffin-lid of Hope, and Joy, and Love,
And, bending, mournfully, above the pale, [flowers
Sweet forms, that slumber there, scatters dead
O'er what has passed—to nothingness. The year
Has gone, and, with it, many a glorious throng
Of happy dreams. Its mark—is on each brow,
Its shadow—in each heart. In its swift course,
It waved its sceptre o'er the beautiful—
And they are not. It laid its palid hand
Upon the strong man—and the haughty form—
Is fallen, and the flashing eye—is dim.
It trod the hall of revelry, where thronged
The bright and joyous—and the tearful wail—
Of stricken ones—is heard, where erst, the song,
And reckless shout—resounded. It passed o'er
The battle-plain, where sword, and spear, and shield
Flashed—in the light of mid-day—and the strength
Of serried hosts is shivered, and the grass,
Green from the soil of carnage, waves above
The crushed, and mouldering skeleton. It came,
And faded, like a wreath of mist, at eve;
Yet, ere it melted in the viewless air,
It heralded its millions—to their home—
In the dim land—of dreams.

Looking into the fire is very injurious to the eyes, particularly a coal fire. The stimulus of light and heat united, soon destroys the eyes. Looking at molten iron will soon destroy the sight. Reading in the twilight is injurious to the eyes, as they are obliged to make great exertion. Reading or sewing with a side light, injures the eyes, as both eyes should be exposed to an equal degree of light. The reason is, the sympathy between the eyes is so great, that if the pupil of one is dilated by being kept partially in the shade, the one that is most exposed cannot contract itself sufficiently for protection, and will ultimately be injured. Those who wish to preserve their sight, should preserve their general health by correct habits, and give their eyes just work enough, with a due degree of light.

670. AMERICA. I appeal to history! Tell me, thou reverend chronicler of the grave, can all the illusions of ambition realized, can all the wealth of a universal commerce, can all the achievements of successful heroism, or can all the establishments of this world's wisdom, secure to the empire, the permanency of its possessions! Alas! Troy thought so once; yet the land of Priam lives only in song!

Thelbes thought so once; yet her hundred gates have crumbled, and her very tombs are as the dust they were vainly intended to commemorate! So thought Palmyra—yet where is she! So thought the country of Demosthenes and the Spartan; yet Leonidas is trampled by the timid slave, and Athens insulted by the servile, mindless and enervate Ottoman!

In his hurried march, Time has but looked at their imagined immortality; and all its vanities, from the palace to the tomb, have, with their ruins, erased the very impression of his footsteps! The days of their glory are as if they never had been; and the island, that was then a speck, rude and neglected in the barren ocean, now rivals the ubiquity of their commerce, the glory of their arms, the fame of their philosophy, the eloquence of their senate, and the inspiration of their bards!

Who shall say, then, contemplating the past, that England, proud and potent as she appears, may not, one day, be what Athens is, and the young America yet soar to be what Athens was! Who shall say, that, when the European column shall have mouldered, and the night of barbarism obscured its very ruins, that mighty continent may not emerge from the horizon to rule, for its time, sovereign of the ascendant!—Phillips.

671. THE POWER OF ELOQUENCE.

Heard ye—those loud—contending waves,

That shook—Cecropia's pillared state?

Saw ye the mighty, from their graves

Look up, and tremble at her late?

Who—shall calm the angry storm?

Who, the mighty task periton,

And bid the raging tumult—cease?

See the son of Hermes rise;

With syren tongue, and speaking eyes,

Hush the noise, and soothe to peace!

Lo! from the regions of the north,

The reddening storm of battle pours;

Rolls along the trembling earth,

Fastens—on Olymian towers.

"Where rests the sword: where sleep the brave,

Awake! Cecropia's ally save,

From the fury of the blast;

Burst the storm on Phocis' walls;

Rise! or Greece forever falls,

Up! or freedom—breathes her last!"

The jarring states, obsequious now,

View the patriot's hand on high;

Thunder—gathering on his brow;

Lightning—flashing from his eye!

Borne by the tide of words along,

One voice, one mind, inspire the throng:

"To arms! to arms! to arms!" they cry,

"Grasp the shield, and draw the sword,

Lead us to Philippi's lord,

Let us conquer him—or die!"

Ah eloquence! thou wast undone;

Wast from thy native country driven,

When tyranny—eclipsed the sun,

And blotted out the stars of heaven,

When liberty, from Greece withdrew,

And o'er the Adriatic flew,

To where the Tiber pours his urn,
She struck the rude Tarpeian rock;
Sparks were kindled by the shock—
Again, thy fires began to burn!

Now, shining forth, thou madest complaint,
The conscript fathers—to thy charms;

Roused the world-bestrident giant,

Sinking fast, in slavery's arms!

I see thee stand—by freedom's fame,

Pouring the persuasive strain,

Giving vast conceptions birth:

Hark! I hear thy thunder's sound,

Shake the forum—round—and round,

Shake—the pillars—of the earth!

First-born of liberty divine!

Put on religion's bright array;

Speak! and the starless grave—shall shine,

The portal—of eternal day!

Rise, kindling with the orient beam;

Let Calvary's hill—inspire the theme!

Unfold the garments—rolled in blood!

O touch the soul, touch all her chords,

With all the omnipotence of words,

And point the way to heaven—to God.—Carey.

THE INFLUENCE OF GOLD. A man who is furnished with arguments from the mint, will convince his antagonist much sooner than one who draws them from reason and philosophy. Gold is a wonderful clearer of the understanding; it dissipates every doubt and scruple in an instant; accommodates itself to the meanest capacities, silences the loud and clamorous, and brings over the most obstinate and inflexible. Philip of Macedon was a man of most invincible reason this way. He refuted by it all the wisdom of Athens, confounded their statesmen, struck their orators dumb, and at length, argued them out of all their liberties.—Addison.

THE WORLD TO COME.

If all our hopes, and all our fears,

Were prisoned—in life's narrow bound;

If travelers—through this vale of tears,

We saw no better world beyond;

Oh! what could check the rising sign?

What earthly thing—could pleasure give?

Oh! who would venture then, to die—

Or who would venture then—to live?

Were life a dark, and desert moor,

Where mists—and clouds eternal—spread

Their gloomy vail behind, before,

And tempests thunder—overhead;

Where not a sun-beam—breaks the gloom,

And not a floweret—smiles beneath,

Who would exist—in such a tomb—

Who dwell in darkness—and in death?

And such were life, without the ray

Of our divine religion given;

'Tis this, that makes our darkness, day,

'Tis this, that makes our earth—a heaven!

Bright is the golden sun above,

And beautiful—the flowers, that bloom,

And all is joy, and all is love,

Reflected—from the world to come!

Life is a weary interlude—

Which doth short joys, long woes include:

The world the stage, the prologue tears;

The acts vain hopes and varied fears;

The scene shuts up with loss of breath,

And leaves no epilogue but death!—H. King.

The stomach, hath no ears.

672. MILITARY DESPOTISM AND INSUBORDINATION. Mr. Chairman,—I trust, that I shall be indulged, with some few reflections, upon the danger—of permitting the conduct, on which it has been my painful duty to animadvert, to pass, without a solemn expression of the disapprobation of this house. Recall to your recollection, sir, the free nations, which have gone before us. Where are they now?

“Gone, glimmering through the dream of things that were;
A schoolboy’s tale,—the wonder of an hour.”

And how have they lost their liberties? If we could transport ourselves back, sir, to the ages when Greece, and Rome, flourished, in their greatest prosperity, and, mingling in the throne, should ask a Grecian, if he did not fear, that some daring military chieftain, covered with glory, some Philip, or Alexander, would one day overthrow the liberties of his country.—the confident, and indignant Grecian would exclaim, No! no! we have nothing to fear from our heroes; our liberties will be eternal. If a Roman citizen had been asked, if he did not fear, that the conqueror of Gaul might establish a throne upon the ruins of public liberty, he would have instantly repelled the unjust insinuation. Yet, Greece—has fallen; Cesar—has passed the rubicon; and the patriotic arm even of Brutus—could not preserve the liberties of his devoted country.

Sir, we are fighting a great moral battle for the benefit, not only of our country, but of all mankind. The eyes of the whole world are in fixed attention upon us. One, and the largest portion of it, is gazing with jealousy, and with envy; the other portion, with hope, with confidence, and with affection. Every where—the black cloud of legitimacy is suspended over the world, save only one bright spot, which breaks out from the political hemisphere of the west, to enlighten, and animate, and gladden the human heart. Obscure that, by the downfall of liberty here, and all mankind—are enshrouded—in a pall of universal darkness. Beware, then, sir, how you give a fatal sanction, in this infant period of our republic, to military insubordination. Remember, that Greece—had her Alexander, Rome her Cesar, England—her Cromwell, France her Bonaparte, and, that if we would escape the rock, on which they split, we must avoid their errors.

I hope, sir, that gentlemen will deliberately survey—the awful isthmus, on which we stand. They may bear down all opposition. They may even vote general Jackson the public thanks. They may carry him triumphantly through this house. But, if they do, sir, in my humble judgment, it will be a triumph of the principle of insubordination—a triumph of the military—over the civil authority—a triumph over the powers of this house—a triumph over the constitution of the land; and I pray, sir, most devoutly, that it may not prove, in its ultimate effects and consequences, a triumph over the liberties of the people.

THE EARTH HAS BEEN ALL ALIVE.

What is the world itself? thy world?—a grave!
Where is the dust that has not been alive?
The spade, the plow, disturb our ancestors,
From human mold we reap our daily bread;
The globe around earth’s hollow surface shakes,
And is the ceiling of her sleeping sons:
O’er devastation we blind revels keep;
Whole buried towns support the dancer’s heel.

673. THE FRENCHMAN AND HIS HOST.

A Frenchman once, who was a merry wight,
Passing to town from Dover in the night,
Near the roadside an ale-house chanced to spy:
And being rather tired as well as dry,
Resolved to enter; but first he took a peep,
In hopes a supper he might get, and cheap.
He enters: “Hallo! Garcon, if you please,
Bring me a little bit of bread and cheese.
And hallo! Garcon, a pot of porter too!” he said, “Vich I shall take, and den myself to bed.” [left,

His supper done, some scraps of cheese were
Which our poor Frenchman, thinking it no theft,
Into his pocket put; then slowly crept
To wished-for bed; but not a wink he slept—
For, on the floor, some sacks of flour were laid,
To which the rats a nightly visit paid.

Our hero now undressed, popped out the light,
Put on his cap and bade the world good-night;
But first his breeches, which contained the fare,
Under his pillow he had placed with care.

Sans ceremonie, soon the rats all ran,
And on the flour-sacks greedily began; [round,
At which they gorged themselves; then smelling
Under the pillow soon the cheese they found;
And while at this they regaling sat,
Their happy jaws disturbed the Frenchman’s nap;
Who, half awake, cries out, “Hallo! hallo!
Vat is dat nibbel at my pillow so?

Ah! ’tis one big huge rat!
Vat de diable is it he nibbel, nibbel at?”

In vain our little hero sought repose;
Sometimes the vermin galloped o’er his nose;
And such the pranks they kept up all the night,
That he, on end antipodes upright,
Bawling aloud, called stoutly for a light.

“Hallo! Maison! Garcon, I say!
Bring me the bill for vat I have to pay!”
The bill was brought, and to his great surprise,
Ten shillings was the charge, he scarce believes
With eager haste, he runs it o’er, [his eyes:
And every time he viewed it thought it more.

“Vy zounds, and zounds!” he cries, “I sall no pay;
Vat charge ten shelang for vat I have mange?

A leetal sup of porter, dis vile bed,
Vare all de rats do run about my head?”

“Plague on those rats!” the landlord muttered out;
“I wish, upon my word, that I could make ’em scout:

I’ll pay him well that can.” “Vat’s dat you say?”
“I’ll pay him well that can.” “Attend to me, I
Vil you dis charge forego, vat I am at, [pray:
If from your house I drive away de rat?”

“With all my heart,” the jolly host replies,
“Ecoutez done, ami?” the Frenchman cries.

“First, den—Regardez, if you please,
Bring to dis spot a leetle bread and cheese:
Eh bien! a pot of portar too;

And den invite de rats to sup vid you:
And after—no matter dey be villing—
For vat dey eat, you charge dem just ten shelang:
And I am sure, ven dey behold de score,
Dey’ll quit your house, and never come no more.”

How beautiful—is the swiftly passing light—
On the calm cloud of eve! ’Tis sweet—to mark
Those color’d folds—float round the setting sun,
Like crimson drapery—o’er a monarch’s throne.

674. LOSS OF NATIONAL CHARACTER.

The loss of a firm, national character, or the degradation of a nation's honor, is the inevitable prelude to her destruction. Behold the once proud fabric of the Roman empire; an empire, carrying its arts, and arms, into every part of the eastern continent; the monarchs of mighty kingdoms, dragged at the wheels of her triumphal chariots; her eagle, waving over the ruins of desolated countries. Where is her splendor, her wealth, her power, her glory! Extinguished—forever. Her mouldering temples, the mournful vestiges of her former grandeur, afford a shelter to her muttering monks. Where are her statesmen, her sages, her philosophers, her orators, her generals? Go to their solitary tombs, and inquire. She lost her national character, and her destruction followed. The ramparts of her national pride were broken down, and Vandalism desolated her classic fields.

Citizens will lose their respect and confidence, in our government, if it does not extend over them, the shield of an honorable, national character. Corruption will creep in, and sharpen party animosity. Ambitious leaders will seize upon the favorable moment. The mad enthusiasm for revolution—will call into action the irritated spirit of our nation, and civil war must follow. The swords of our countrymen may yet glitter on our mountains, their blood may yet crimson our plains.

Such, the warning voice of all antiquity, the example of all republics proclaim—may be our fate. But let us no longer indulge these gloomy anticipations. The commencement of our liberty presages the dawn of a brighter period to the world. That bold, enterprising spirit, which conducted our heroes to peace, and safety, and gave us a lofty rank, amid the empires of the world, still animates the bosoms of their descendants. Look back to the moment, when they unbarred the dungeons of the slave, and dashed his fetters to the earth, when the sword of a Washington leaped from its scabbard, to revenge the slaughter of our countrymen. Place their example before you. Let the sparks of their veteran wisdom flash across your minds, and the sacred altars of your liberty, crowned with immortal honors, rise before you. Relying on the virtue, the courage, the patriotism, and the strength of our country, we may expect our national character will become more energetic, our citizens more enlightened, and may hail the age as not far distant, when will be heard, as the proudest exclamation of man: I am an American.—Marcy.

The bell strikes one: We take no note of time,
But from its loss. To give it then a tongue,
Is wise in man. As if an angel spoke,
I feel the solemn sound. If heard aright,
It is the knell of my departed hours: [flood?
Where are they? with the years beyond the
It is the signal that demands despatch;
How much is to be done! my hopes and fears
Start up alarm'd, and o'er life's narrow verge
Look down—on what? a fathomless abyss;
A dread eternity! how surely mine!
And can eternity belong to me,
Poor pensioner on the bounties of an hour?

Reason gains all men, by compelling none.

675. GOOD-NIGHT.

Good-night—to all the world! there's none,
Beneath the "over-going" sun,
To whom, I feel, or hate, or spite,
And so to all—a fair good-night.
Would I could say, good-night to pain,
Good-night to evil and her train,
To cheerless poverty, and shame,
That I am yet unknown to fame!
Would I could say, good-night to dreams,
That haunt me with delusive gleams,
That through the sable future's veil,
Like meteors, glimmer, but to fail.
Would I could say, a long good-night,
To halting, between wrong, and right,
And, like a giant, with new force,
Awake, prepared to run my course!
But time o'er good and ill sweeps on,
And when few years have come, and gone,
The past—will be to me as naught,
Whether remembered, or forgot.
Yet, let me hope, one faithful friend,
O'er my last couch, in tears shall bend;
And, though no day for me was bright,
Shall bid me then, a long good-night.

RESPECT TO OLD AGE. It happened at Athens, during a public representation of some play, exhibited in honor of the commonwealth, that an old gentleman came too late, for a place suitable to his age, and quality. Many of the young gentlemen, who observed the difficulty and confusion he was in, made signs to him, that they would accommodate him, if he came where they sat. The good man bustled through the crowd accordingly; but when he came to the seat, to which he was invited, the jest was, to sit close, and expose him, as he stood out of countenance, to the whole audience. The frolic went round all the Athenian benches. But, on those occasions, there were also particular places reserved for foreigners. When the good man skulked towards the boxes, appointed for the Lacedemonians, that honest people, more virtuous than polite, rose up all to a man, and with the greatest respect, received him among them. The Athenians, being suddenly touched with a sense of the Spartan virtue, and their own degeneracy, gave a thunder of applause; and the old man cried out, "the Athenians understand what is good, but the Lacedemonians practice it."

FORTUNE-TELLER.

A hungry, lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune teller;
A needy, hollow-eye'd, sharp looking wretch,
A living dead man: this pernicious slave,
Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer;
And gazing in my eyes, feeling my pulse,
And with no face, as 'twere outfacing me,
Cries out, I was possess'd.—Shakspeare.

RECREATION.

Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue,
But moody and dull melancholy,
(Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair);
And at her heels, a huge infectious troop
Of pale distemperatures, and foes to life?

676. THE GROVES: GOD'S FIRST TEMPLES.

The groves—were God's first temples. Ere man
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave, [learned
And spread the roof above them,—ere he framed
The lofty vault, to gather, and roll back,
The sound of anthems,—in the darkling wood,
Amidst the cool and silence, he knelt down,
And offered, to the Mightiest, solemn thanks,
And supplication. For his simple heart
Might not resist the sacred influences,
That, from the stilly twilight of the place,
And from the gray old trunks, that, high in heav'n,
Mingled their mossy boughs, and from the sound
Of the invisible breath, that swayed, at once,
All their green tops, stole over him, and bowed
His spirit—with the thought of boundless Power,
And inaccessible Majesty. Ah! why
Should we, in the world's riper years, neglect
God's ancient sanctuaries, and adore,
Only, among the crowd, and under roofs,
That our frail hands have raised? Let me, at least,
Here, in the shadow of this aged wood,
Offer one hymn; thrice happy, if it find
Acceptance in his ear.

Father, thy hand
Hath reared these venerable columns; thou
Didst weave this verdant roof. Thou didst look down
Upon the naked earth, and, forthwith, rose
All these fair ranks of trees. They, in thy sun,
Budded, and shook their green leaves in thy breeze,
And shottowards heav'n. The century-living crow,
Whose birth was in their tops, grew old, and died,
Among their branches; till, at last, they stood,
As now they stand, massy, and tall, and dark—
Fit shrine—for humble worshiper to hold
Communion with his Maker. Here are seen,
No traces of man's pomp, or pride; no silks
Rustle, no jewels shine, nor envious eyes
Encounter; no fantastic carvings—show
The boast of our vain race—to change the form
Of thy fair works. But thou art here; thou fill'st
The solitude. Thou art in the soft winds,
That run along the summits of these trees,
In music; thou art in the cooler breath,
That, from the inmost darkness of the place,
Comes, scarcely felt; the barky trunks, the ground,
The fresh, moist ground, are all instinct with thee.

Here, is continual worship; nature, here,
In the tranquillity that thou dost love,
Enjoys thy presence. Noiselessly, around,
From perch to perch, the solitary bird
Passes; and yon clear spring, that, midst its herbs,
Wells softly forth, and visits the strong roots
Of half the mighty forest, tells no tale
Of all the good it does. Thou hast not left
Thyself without a witness, in these shades,
Of thy perfections. Grandeur, strength, and grace,
Are here to speak of thee. This mighty oak—
By whose immovable stem I stand, and seem Almost annihilated—not a prince,
In all the proud old world, beyond the deep,
E'er wore his crown—as loftily as he Wears the green coronal of leaves, with which Thy hand has graced him. Nestled at his root
Is beauty, such as blooms not in the glare
Of the broad sun. That delicate forest-flower,
With scented breath, and look, so like a smile,

Seems, as it issues from the shapeless mould,
An emanation of the indwelling Life,
A visible token—of the upholding Love,
That are, the soul of this wide universe.

My heart—is awed within me, when I think
Of the great miracle that still goes on,
In silence, round me—the perpetual work
Of thy creation, finished, yet renewed—
Forever. Written on thy works, I read
The lesson of thy own eternity.
Lo! all grow old, and die: but see, again,
How, on the faltering footsteps of decay,
Youth presses—ever gay, and beautiful youth—
In all its beautiful forms. These lofty trees
Wave not less proudly, than their ancestors
Moulder, beneath them. Oh! there is not lost
One of earth's charms: upon her bosom yet,
After the flight of untold centuries,
The freshness of her far beginning lies,
And yet shall lie. Life—mocks the idle hate
Of his arch enemy—Death; yea, seats himself
Upon the sepulchre, and blooms, and smiles,
And of the triumphs of his ghastly foe,
Makes his own nourishment. For he came forth
From thine own bosom, and shall have no end.

There have been holy men, who hid themselves
Deep in the woody wilderness, and gave Their lives to thought, and prayer, till they outlived
The generation, born with them, nor seemed Less aged, than the hoary trees, and rocks,
Around them; and there have been holy men,
Who deemed it were not well—to pass life thus.
But let me, often, to these solitudes
Retire, and, in thy presence, reassure
My feeble virtue. Here, its enemies,
The passions, at thy plainer footsteps, shrink,
And tremble, and are still.

O God! when thou
Dost scare the world with tempests, set on fire
The heavens, with falling thunderbolts, or fill,
With all the waters of the firmament,
The swift, dark whirlwind, that uproots the woods,
And drowns the villages; when, at thy call,
Uprises the great deep, and throws himself
Upon the continent, and overwhelms
Its cities;—who forgets not, at the sight
Of these tremendous tokens of thy power,
His pride, and lays his strifes, and follies by!
Oh! from the sterner aspects of thy face
Spare me, and mine; nor let us need the wrath
Of the mad, unchained elements, to teach
Who rules them. Be it ours to meditate,
In these calm shades, thy milder majesty,
And to the beautiful order of thy works,
Learn to conform the order of thy lives.—Bryant.

Naturally, men are prone to spin themselves a web of opinions out of their own brain, and to have a religion that may be called their own. Men are far readier to make themselves a faith, than to receive that which God hath formed to their hands, and they are far readier to receive a doctrine that tends to their carnal commodity, or honor, or delights, than one that tends to self-denial.

Like dogs in a wheel, birds in a cage, or squirrels in a chain, ambitious men still climb and climb, with great labor, and incessant anxiety, but never reach the top.

677. PHYSICAL EDUCATION. That is, undoubtedly, the wisest, and best regimen, which takes the infant from the cradle, and conducts him along, through childhood, and youth, up to high maturity, in such a manner, as to give strength to his arm, swiftness to his feet, solidity and amplitude to his muscles, symmetry to his frame, and expansion to his vital energies. It is obvious, that this branch of education comprehends, not only food and clothing, but air, exercise, lodging, early rising, and whatever else is requisite, to the full development of the physical constitution. The diet must be simple, the apparel must not be too warm, nor the bed too soft.

Let parents beware of too much restriction in the management of their darling boy. Let him, in choosing his play, follow the suggestions of nature. Let them not be discomposed at the sight of his sand-hills in the road, his snow-forts in February, and his mud-dams in April; nor when they chance to look out in the midst of an August shower, and see him wading and sailing, and sporting along with the water-fowl. If they would make him hardy and fearless, they must let him go abroad as often as he pleases, in his early boyhood, and amuse himself by the hour together, in smoothing and twirling the hoary locks of winter. Instead of keeping him shut up all day with a stove, and graduating his sleeping-room by Fahrenheit, they must let him face the keen edge of a north-wind, when the mercury is below cipher; and, instead of minding a little shivering, and complaining, when he returns, cheer up his spirits, and send him out again. In this way, they will teach him, that he was not born to live in the nursery, nor to brood over the fire; but to range abroad, as free as the snow, and the air, and to gain warmth from exercise.

I love, and admire the youth, who turns not back from the howling wintry blast, nor withers under the blaze of summer; who never magnifies "mole-hills into mountains;" but whose daring eye, exulting, scales the eagle's airy crag, and who is ready to undertake anything, that is prudent, and lawful, within the range of possibility. Who would think of planting the mountain-oak—in a green-house? or of rearing the cedar of Lebanon—in a lady's flower-pot? Who does not know that, in order to attain their mighty strength, and majestic forms, they must freely enjoy the rain, and the sunshine, and must feel the rocking of the tempest?

THE CHASE.

The stag, at eve, had drunk his fill,
Where danced the moon, on Monan's rill,
And deep—his midnight lair had made,
In lone Glenartney's hazel shade;
But, when the sun—his beacon red
Had kindled, on Benvoirlich's head,
The deep-mouthed bloodhound's heavy bay
Resounded up the rocky way,
And faint from farther distance borne,
Were heard the clanging hoof, and horn.
As chief, who hears his warder call,
"To arms! the foeman storm the wall,"
The antlered monarch of the waste—
Sprung from his heathery couch, in haste.
But, ere his fleet career he took,
The dew-drops, from his flanks, he shook:
Like crested leader, proud, and high,

Tossed his beamed frontlet—to the sky;
A moment—gazed—adown the dale,
A moment—snuffed the tainted gale,
A moment, listened to the cry,
That thickened—as the chase drew nigh;
Then, as the headmost foes appeared,
With one brave bound—the copse he cleared,
And, stretching forward, free, and far,
Sought the wild heaths—of Uam-Var.—Scott.

678. MODULATION.

'Tis not enough—the voice be sound, and clear,
'Tis modulation, that must charm the ear.
When desperate heroes grieve, with tedious moan,
And whine their sorrows, in a see-saw tone,
The same soft sounds—of unimpassioned woes,
Can only make the yawning hearers—doze.
The voice—all modes of passion can express,
That marks the proper word, with proper stress:
But none emphatic—can that speaker call,
Who lays an equal emphasis—on all.
Some, o'er the tongue—the labored measures roll,
Slow, and deliberate—as the parting toll;
Point every stop, mark every pause so strong,
Their words, like stage processions, stalk along.
All affectation—but creates disgust;
And e'en in speaking, we may seem too just.
In vain, for them, the pleasing measure flows,
Whose recitation—runs it all to prose;
Repeating—what the poet sets not down,
The verse disjointing—from its favorite noun,
While pause, and break, and repetition join
To make a discord—in each tuneless line.

Some placid natures—fill the allotted scene
With lifeless draws, insipid and serene;
While others—thunder every couplet o'er,
And almost crack your ears—with rant, and roar
More nature, oft, and finer strokes are shown,
In the low whisper, than tempestuous tone;
And Hamlet's hollow voice, and fixed amaze,
More powerful terror—to the mind conveys,
Than he, who, swollen with impetuous rage,
Bulies the bulky phantom of the stage.
He, who, in earnest, studies o'er his part,
Will find true nature—cling about his heart.
The modes of grief—are not included all—
In the white handkerchief, and mournful drawl;
A single look—more marks the internal woe,
Than all the windings of the lengthened—Oh!
Up to the face—the quick sensation flies,
And darts its meaning—from the speaking eyes:
Love, transport, madness, anger, scorn, despair,
And all the passions, all the soul is there.

NATURE'S WANTS ARE FEW.

Man's rich with little, were his judgment true;
Nature is frugal, and her wants are few;
Those few wants answered, bring sincere delights,
But fools create themselves new appetites.
Fancy and pride seek things at vast expense,
Which relish nor to treason nor to sense.
When surfeit or unthankfulness destroys,
In nature's narrow sphere, our solid joys,
In fancy's airy land of noise and show,
Where nought but dreams, no real pleasures grow,
Like cats in air-pumps, to subsist we strive,
On joys too thin to keep the soul alive.—Young.

679. A CURE FOR HARD TIMES. We are too fond of showing off in our families; and, in this way, our expenses far exceed our incomes. Our daughters—must be dressed off in their silks and crapes, instead of their linsey-woolsey. Our young folks—are too proud to be seen in a coarse dress, and their extravagance is bringing ruin on our families. When you can induce your sons to prefer young women, for their real worth, rather than for their show; when you can get them to choose a wife, who can make a good loaf of bread, and a good pound of butter, in preference to a girl, who does nothing but dance about in her silks, and her laces; then, gentlemen, you may expect to see a change for the better. We must get back to the good old simplicity of former times, if we expect to see more prosperous days. The time was, even since memory, when a simple note was good for any amount of money, but now bonds and mortgages are thought almost no security; and this owing to the want of confidence.

And what has caused this want of confidence! Why, it is occasioned by the extravagant manner of living; by your families going in debt beyond your ability to pay. Examine this matter, gentlemen, and you will find this to be the real cause. Teach your sons to be too proud to ride a hackney, which their father cannot pay for. Let them be above being seen sporting in a gig, or a carriage, which their father is in debt for. Let them have this sort of independent pride, and I venture to say, that you will soon perceive a reformation. But, until the change commences in this way in our families; until we begin the work ourselves, it is in vain to expect better times.

Now, gentlemen, if you think as I do on this subject, there is a way of showing that you do think so, and but one way; when you return to your homes, have independence enough to put these principles in practice; and I am sure you will not be disappointed.

680. THE FIRE-SIDE.

Dear Chloe, while the busy crowd,
The vain, the wealthy, and the proud,
In folly's maze advance;
Tho' singularity, and pride,
Be call'd our choice, we'll step aside,
Nor join the giddy dance.

From the gay world, we'll oft retire,
To our own family and fire,
Where love—our hours employs;
No noisy neighbor—enters here,
No intermeddling stranger—near,
To spoil our heart-felt joys.

If solid happiness—we prize,
Within our breast—this jewel lies;
And they are fools, who roam:
The world—has nothing to bestow;
From our own selves—our joys must flow,
And that dear hut, our home.

Of rest, was Noah's dove bereft,
When, with impatient wing she left
That safe retreat, the ark;
Giving her vain excursion o'er,
The disappointed bird, once more
Explor'd the sacred bark.

Tho' fools—spurn Hymen's gentle pow'rs,
We, who improve his golden hours,

By sweet experience know,
That marriage, rightly understood,
Gives to the tender, and the good,
A paradise below.

Our babes, shall richest comfort bring;
If tutor'd right, they'll prove a spring
Whence pleasures ever rise:

We'll form their minds, with studious care,
To all that's manly, good, and fair,
And train them for the skies.

While they our wisest hours engage,
They'll joy our youth, support our age,
And crown our hoary hairs:
They'll grow in virtue ev'ry day,
And thus, our fondest loves repay,
And recompense our cares.

No borrow'd joys! they're all our own,
While, to the world, we live unknown,
Or, by the world forgot;
Monarchs! we envy not your state;
We look with pity—on the great,
And bless our humbler lot.

Our portion is not large, indeed!
But then, how little do we need!
For nature's calls are few:
In this, the art of living lies,
To want no more, that may suffice,
And make that little do.

We'll therefore relish, with content,
Whate'er kind Providence has sent,
Nor aim beyond our pow'r;
For if our stock be very small,
'Tis prudence to enjoy it all,
Nor lose the present hour.

To be resign'd, when ills betide,
Patient, when favors are denied,
And pleas'd, with favors giv'n:
Dear Chloe, this is wisdom's part;
This is that incense of the heart,
Whose fragrance—smells to heav'n.

We'll ask no long protracted treat,
Since winter-life is seldom sweet;
But, when our feast is o'er,
Grateful from table we'll arise,
Nor grudge our sons, with envious eyes,
The relics of our store.

Thus, hand in hand, thro' life we'll go;
Its checker'd paths of joy and wo,
With cautious steps, we'll tread;
Quit its vain scenes, without a tear,
Without a trouble, or a fear,
And mingle with the dead.

While conscience, like a faithful friend,
Shall, thro' the gloomy vale attend,
And cheer our dying breath;
Shall, when all other comforts cease,
Like a kind angel, whisper—peace.
And smooth the bed of death.—Cotton.

Ye glittering towns, with wealth and splendor crown'd;
Ye fields, where summer spreads profusion round
Ye lakes, whose vessels catch the luscious gale;
Ye bending swains, that dress the flowery vale;
For me your tributary stores combine:
Creation's heir, the world, the world is mine.

681. THE NATURE OF ELOQUENCE.
When public bodies are to be addressed, on momentous occasions, when great interests are at stake, and strong passions excited, nothing is valuable in speech, farther than it is connected with high intellectual and moral endowments. Clearness, force, and earnestness, are the qualities which produce conviction. True eloquence, indeed, does not consist in speech. It cannot be brought from far. Labor and learning may toil for it, but they will toil in vain.

Words and phrases may be marshaled in every way, but they cannot compass it. It must exist in the man, in the subject, and in the occasion. Affected passion, intense expression, the pomp of declamation, all may aspire after it, but cannot reach it. It comes, if it come at all, like the outbursting of a fountain from the earth, or the bursting forth of volcanic fires, with spontaneous, original, native force.

The graces taught in the schools, the costly ornaments and studied contrivances of speech, shock and disgust men, when their own lives, and the fate of their wives, their children, and their country, hang on the decision of the hour. Then, words have lost their power, rhetoric is vain, and all elaborate oratory, contemptible. Even genius itself then feels rebuked, and subdued, as in the presence of higher qualities.

Then, patriotism is eloquent; then, self-devotion is eloquent. The clear conception, out-running the deductions of logic, the high purpose, of firm resolve, the dauntless spirit, speaking on the tongue, beaming from the eye, informing every feature, and urging the whole man onward, right onward to his object,—this—is eloquence.—Webster.

682. THE SOUL'S DEFIANCE.

I said—to Sorrow's awful storm,
That beat against my breast,
"Rage on! thou may'st destroy this form,
And lay it low—at rest;
But still—the spirit that now brooks
Thy tempest, raging high,
Undaunted, on its fury looks—
With steadfast eye."

I said—to Penury's meagre train,
"Come on! your threats I brave;
My last, poor life-drop—you may drain,
And crush me—to the grave;
Yet still, the spirit, that endures,
Shall mark your force—the while,
And meet each cold, cold grasp of yours,
With bitter smile."

I said—to cold Neglect, and Scorn,
"Pass on! I heed you not;
Ye may pursue me, till my form,
And being—are forgot;
Yet, still—the spirit, which you see
Undaunted by your wiles,
Draws from its own nobility
Its high-born smiles."

I said—to Friendship's menaced blow,
"Strike deep! my heart shall bear;
Thou canst but add—one bitter word
To those—already there;
Yet still—the spirit, that sustains
This last—severe distress,

Shall smile—upon its keenest pains,
And scorn redress."

I said to Death's uplifted dart,
"Ain sure! oh, why delay?
Thou wilt not find a fearful heart,
A weak, reluctant prey;
For still—the spirit, firm, and free,
Triumphant—in the last dismay,
Wrapt—in its own eternity,
Shall, smiling, pass away."

683. PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.

'Mid the light spray, their snorting camels stood,
Nor bath'd a felloek, in the nauseous flood:
He comes—their leader comes! the man of God,
O'er the wide waters, lifts his mighty rod,
And onward treads. The circling waves retreat,
In hoarse, deep murmurs, from his holy feet;
And the chas'd surges, inly roaring, show
The hard wet sand, and coral hills below.

With limbs, that falter, and with hearts, that swell,
Down, down they pass—a steep, and slippery dell.
Around them rise, in pristine chaos hurl'd,
The ancient rocks, the secrets of the world;
And flowers, that blush beneath the ocean green,
And caves, the sea-calves' low-roof'd haunts, are Down, safely down the narrow pass they tread; [seen.
The beetling waters—storm above their head;
While far behind, retires the sinking day,
And fades on Edom's hills, its latest ray.

Yet not from Israeli—fled the friendly light,
Or dark to them, or cheerless came the night;
Still, in their van, along that dreadful road, [God.
Blaz'd broad and fierce, the brandish'd torch of Its meteor glare—a tenfold lustre gave,
On the long mirror—of the rosy wave:
While its blest beams—a sunlike heat supply,
Warm every cheek, and dance in every eye.
To them alone—for Misraim's wizard train
Invoke, for light, their monster-gods in vain:
Clouds heap'd on clouds, their struggling sight con-
And tenfold darkness broods above their line. [fine,
Yet on they press, by reckless vengeance led,
And range, unconscious, through the ocean's bed,
Till midway now—that strange, and fiery forin, Show'd his dread visage, lightning through the storm;

With withering splendor, blasted all their might,
And brake their chariot-wheels, and marred their coursers' flight.

"Fly, Misraim, fly!" The ravenous floods they see,
And, fiercer than the floods, the Deity.

"Fly, Misraim, fly!" From Edom's coral strand,
Again the prophet stretch'd his dreadful wand:
With one wild crash, the thundering waters sweep,
And all—is waves—a dark, and lonely deep:—
Yet, o'er these lonely waves, such murmurs past,
As mortal wailing swell'd the nightly blast:
And strange, and sad, the whispering breezes bore
The groans of Egypt—to Arabia's shore.—Heber.

CONCEALED LOVE.

She never told her love,
But let concealment, like a worm i' the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought,
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.

684. GREEK LITERATURE. It is impossible—to contemplate the annals of Greek literature, and art, without being struck with them, as by far the most extraordinary, and brilliant phenomenon, in the history of the human mind. The very language, even in its primitive simplicity, as it came down from the rhapsodists, who celebrated the exploits of Hercules, and Theseus, was as great a wonder, as any it records.

All the other tongues, that civilized men have spoken, are poor, and feeble, and barbarous, in comparison of it. Its compass, and flexibility, its riches, and its powers, are altogether unlimited. It not only expresses, with precision, all that is thought, or known, at any given period, but it enlarges itself naturally, with the progress of science, and affords, as if without an effort, a new phrase, or a systematic nomenclature, whenever one is called for.

It is equally adapted to every variety of style, and subject, to the most shadowy subtlety of distinction, and the utmost exactness of definition, as well as to the energy, and the pathos of popular eloquence, to the majesty, the elevation, the variety of the Epic, and the boldest license of the Dithyrambic, no less than to the sweetness of the Elegy, the simplicity of the Pastoral, or the heedless gayety, and delicate characterization of Comedy.

Above all, what is an unspeakable charm, a sort of naivete is peculiar to it, and appears in all those various styles, and is quite as becoming, and agreeable, in an historian, or a philosopher, Xenophon for instance, as in the light and jocund numbers of Anacreon.

Indeed, were there no other object, in learning Greek, but to see—to what perfection language is capable of being carried, not only as a medium of communication, but as an instrument of thought, we see not why the time of a young man would not be just as well bestowed, in acquiring a knowledge of it, for all the purposes, at least of a liberal, or elementary education, as in learning algebra, another specimen of a language, or arrangement of signs perfect in its kind.—Legare.

685. OUR EXIT: THANATOPSIS.

To him, who, in the love of nature, holds Communion with her visible forms, she speaks A various language; for his gayer hours, She has a voice of gladness, and a smile, And eloquence of beauty, and she glides Into his dark musings, with a mild, And gentle sympathy, that steals away Their sharpness, ere he is aware.

When thoughts—

Of the last bitter hour, come like a blight
Over thy spirit, and sad images
Of the stern agony, and shroud, and pall,
And breathless darkness, and the narrow house,
Make thee to shudder, and grow sick at heart;
Go forth into the open sky, and list
To nature's teaching, while, from all around,
Comes a still voice—

“Yet a few days, and thee,
The all-beholding sun shall see no more,
In all his course; nor yet, in the cold ground,
Where thy pale form was laid, with many tears,
Nor in the embrace of ocean, shall exist
Thy image. Earth, that nourished thee, shall claim
Thy growth, to be resolved to earth again;

And, lost each human trace, surrendering up
Thine individual being, shalt thou go,
To mix forever with the elements,
To be a brother—to th' insensible rock,
And to the sluggish clod, which the rude swain
Turns with his share, and treads upon.

The oak—

Shall send his roots abroad, and pierce thy mold.
Yet not, to thy eternal resting place,
Shalt thou retire, alone—nor could'st thou wish
Couch more magnificent. Thou shalt lie down
With patriarchs of the infant world, with kings,
The powerful of the earth, the wise, the good,
Fair forms, and hoary seers of ages past,
All—in one—mighty sepulchre.

The hills,

Rock-ribbed, and ancient as the sun; the vales,
Stretching in pensive quietness between;
The venerable woods; rivers, that move
In majesty, and the complaining brooks [all,
That make the meadows green; and, poured round
Old ocean's gray and melancholy waste,
Are but the solemn decorations all—
Of the great tomb of man. The golden sun,
The planets, all the infinite host of heaven,
Are shining on the sad abodes of death,
Through the still lapse of ages.

All that tread

The globe, are but a handful, to the tribes,
That slumber in its bosom. Take the wings
Of morning, and the Barean desert pierce,
Or, lose thyself in the continuous woods,
Where rolls the Oregon, and hears no sound,
Save its own dashings—yet—the dead are there;
And millions in those solitudes, since first
The flight of years began, have laid them down
In their last sleep: the dead—reign there—alone.

So shalt thou rest; and what, if thou shalt fall,
Unnoticed by the living; and no friend—
Take note of thy departure? All that breathe
Will share thy destiny. The gay will laugh,
When thou art gone; the solemn brood of care
Plod on; and each one, as before, will chase
His favorite phantom; yet, all these shall leave
Their mirth, and their enjoyments, and shall come,
And make their bed with thee. As the long train
Of ages glide away, the sons of men,
The youth, in life's green spring, and he, who goes
In the full strength of years, matron, and maid,
The bowed with age, the infant, in the smiles
And beauty of its innocent age, cut off,—
Shall, one by one, be gathered to thy side,
By those, who, in their turn, shall follow them.

So live, that when thy summons comes, to join
The innumerable caravan, that moves
To the pale realms of shade, where each shall take
His chamber, in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained, and soothed
By an unflinching trust, approach thy grave,
Like one, who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down—to pleasant dreams.”

It is jealousy's—peculiar nature,
To swell small things—to great; nay, out of nought,
To conjure much, and then, lose its reason—
Amid the hideous phantoms,—it has formed.

686. BENEFITS OF AGRICULTURE. Agriculture—is the greatest among the arts; for it is first in supplying our necessities. It is the mother, and nurse—of all other arts. It favors and strengthens population; it creates and maintains manufactures; gives employment to navigation, and materials to commerce. It animates every species of industry, and opens—to nations the surest channels of opulence. It is also the strongest bond of well regulated society, the surest basis of internal peace, the natural association of good morals.

We ought to count, among the benefits of agriculture, the charm, which the practice of it communicates to a country life. That charm, which has made the country, in our view, the retreat of the hero, the asylum of the sage, and the temple of the historic muse. The strong desire, the longing after the country, with which we find the bulk of mankind to be penetrated, points to it as the chosen abode of sublunary bliss. The sweet occupations of culture, with her varied products and attendant enjoyments, are, at least, a relief from the stifling atmosphere of the city, the monotony of subdivided employments, the anxious uncertainty of commerce, the vexations of ambition so often disappointed, of self-love so often mortified, of factitious pleasures, and unsubstantial vanities.

Health, the first and best of all the blessings of life, is preserved and fortified by the practice of agriculture. That state of well-being, which we feel and cannot define; that self-satisfied disposition, which depends, perhaps, on the perfect equilibrium, and easy play of vital forces, turns the slightest acts to pleasure, and makes every exertion of our faculties a source of enjoyment; this inestimable state of our bodily functions is most vigorous in the country, and if lost elsewhere, it is in the country we expect to recover it.

The very theatre of agricultural avocations, gives them a value that is peculiar; for who can contemplate, without emotion, the magnificent spectacle of nature, when, arrayed in vernal hues, she renews the scenery of the world! All things revive her powerful voice—the meadow resumes its freshness and verdure; a living sap circulates through every budding tree; flowers spring to meet the warm caresses of Zephyr, and from their opening petals pour forth rich perfume. The songsters of the forest once more awake, and in tones of melody, again salute the coming dawn; and again they deliver to the evening echo—their strains of tenderness and love. Can man—rational, sensitive man—can he remain unmoved by the surrounding presence! and where else, than in the country, can he behold, where else can he feel—this jubilee of nature, this universal joy!—Mac-Neven.

Let me lead you from this place of sorrow,
To one where young delights attend; and joys,
Yet new, unborn, and blooming in the bud,
Which want to be full-blown at your approach,
And spread like roses, to the morning sun;
Where ev'ry hour shall roll in circling joys,
And love shall wing the tedious—wasting day.
Life without love, is load; and time stands still:
What we refuse to him, to death we give;
And then, then only, when we love, we live.

687. THE AMERICAN FLAG.

When Freedom—from her mountain height,

Unfur'd her standard—to the air,

She tore the azure robe of night,

And set the stars of glory—there.

She mingled, with its gorgeous dyes,

The milky baldrick—of the skies,

And striped its pure—celestial white,

With streakings of the morning light;

Then, from his mansion—in the sun

She called her eagle-bearer—down,

And gave—into his mighty hand,

The symbol—of her chosen land.

Majestic monarch—of the cloud,

Who rear'st aloft—thy regal form,

To hear the tempest—trumpings loud,

And see the lightning lances driven,

When strive—the warriors of the storm,

And rolls—the thunder-drum of heaven,—

Child of the sun! to thee 'tis given,

To guard the banner of the free,

To hover—in the sulphur smoke,

To ward away the battle-stroke,

And bid its blendings—shine, afar,

Like rainbows—on the cloud of war,

The harbingers—of victory!

Flag of the brave! thy folds shall fly,

The sign of hope—and triumph high,

When speaks the signal trumpet tone,

And the long line—comes gleaming on.

Ere yet the life-blood, warm and wet,

Has dunn'd the glistening bayonet,

Each soldier eye—shall brightly turn

To where thy meteor glories burn;

And, as his springing steps advance,

Catch war, and vengeance—from the glance.

And when the cannon—mouthings loud,

Heave, in wild wreaths, the battle-shroud,

And gory sabres rise, and fall,

Like shoots of flame—on midnight's pall;

There shall thy victor glances glow,

And cowering foes—shall fall beneath

Each gallant arm, that strikes below—

That lovely messenger of death.

Flag of the seas! on ocean's wave,

Thy stars shall glitter o'er the brave:

When death, careering on the gale,

Sweeps darkly—round the bellied sail,

And frighted waves—rush wildly back—

Before the broadside's reeling rack,

Each dying wanderer of the sea,

Shall look, at once, to heaven—and thee,

And smile—to see thy splendors fly,

In triumph—o'er his closing eye.

Flag of the free heart's only home!

By angel hands—to valor given;

Thy stars have lit the welkin dome,

And all thy hues—were born in heaven.

Forever float—that standard sheet!

Where breathes the foe—but falls before us,

With Freedom's soil—beneath our feet,

And Freedom's banner—streaming o'er us!

His being was in her alone,

And he not being, she was none.

They joy'd one joy, one grief they griev'd

One love they lov'd, one life they liv'd.

688. TRIBUTE TO WASHINGTON. Hard, hard indeed, was the contest for freedom, and the struggle for independence. The golden sun of liberty—had nearly set, in the gloom of an eternal night, ere its radiant beams illumined our western horizon. Had not the tutelar saint of Columbia—hovered around the American camp, and presided over her destinies, freedom must have met with an untimely grave. Never, can we sufficiently admire the wisdom of those statesmen, and the skill, and bravery, of those unconquerable veterans, who, by their unwearied exertions in the cabinet, and in the field, achieved for us the glorious revolution. Never, can we duly appreciate the merits of a Washington; who, with but a handful of undisciplined yeomanry, triumphed over a royal army, and prostrated the lion of England at the feet of the American eagle. His name,—so terrible to his foes, so welcome to his friends,—shall live forever upon the brightest page of the historian, and be remembered, with the warmest emotions of gratitude, and pleasure, by those, whom he had contributed to make happy, and by all mankind, when kings, and princes, and nobles, for ages, shall have sunk into their merited oblivion. Unlike them, he needs not the assistance of the sculptor, or the architect, to perpetuate his memory: he needs no princely dome, no monumental pile, no stately pyramid, whose towering height shall pierce the stormy clouds, and rear its lofty head to heaven, to tell posterity his fame. His deeds, his worthy deeds, alone have rendered him immortal! When oblivion shall have swept away thrones, kingdoms, and principalities—when human greatness, and grandeur, and glory, shall have mouldered into dust,—eternity itself shall catch the glowing theme, and dwell with increasing rapture on his name!—Gen. Harrison.

689. THE BARON'S LAST BANQUET.

Over a low couch—the setting sun—had thrown its latest ray,
Where, in his last—strong agony—a dying warrior lay,
The stern—old Baron Rudiger, whose frame—had ne'er been bent
By wasting pain, till time, and toil—its iron strength had spent.
“They come around me here, and say my days of life are o’er,
That I shall mount my noble steed, and lead my land no more;
They come, and to my board—they dare to tell me now, that I,
Their own liege lord, and master born,—that I, ha! ha! must die.
And what is death? I’ve dared him oft—before the Paynim spear,
Think ye he’s entered at my gate, has come to seek me here?
I’ve met him, faced him, scorn’d him, when the fight was raging hot,—
I’ll try his might—I’ll brave his power; defy, and fear him not.
Ho! sound the tocsin from my tower,—and fire the culverin,—
But each retainer—arm with speed,—call every vassal in,
Up with my banner on the wall,—the banquet board prepare,— Throw wide the portal of my hall, and bring my armor there!”
An hundred hands were busy then,—the banquet forth was spread,
And rang—the heavy oaken floor, with many a martial tread;
While from the rich, dark tracery—along the vaulted wall,
Lights—gleamed on harness, plume and spear, o’er the proud old Gothic hall.
Foe! hurrying through the outer gate—the mailed retainers pour’d,
On thro’ the portal’s frowning arch, and throng’d around the board.
While, at its head, within his dark, carved oaken chair of state,
Armed cap-a-pie, stern Rudiger, with girdled falchion, sat.
“Fill every breaker up, my men, pour forth the cheering wine,
There’s life, and strength—in every drop,—thanksgiving to the vine!
Are ye all there, my vassals true?—noise eyes are waxing dim;—
Fill round, my tried and fearless ones, each goblet to the brim.
Ye’re there, but yet I see ye not. Draw forth each trusty sword,
And let me hear your faithful steel clash, once around my board:
I hear it faintly:—Londer yet!—What dregs my heavy breath?
Up all,—and shout for Rudiger, ‘Defiance unto Death!’”

Bowl—rang to bowl,—steel—clanged to steel,—and rose a deafening cry,
That made the torches flare around, and shook the flags on high:
“Ho! cravens, do ye fear him?—Slaves, traitors! have ye flown?
Ho! cowards, have ye left me to meet him here alone!
But I defy him!—let him come!” Down rang the massy cup,
While, from its sheath, the ready blade came flashing half-way up;
And, with the black, and heavy plumes—scarce trembling on his head,
There—in his dark, carved, oaken chair, Old Rudiger sat, dead.

690. QUEEN MAB.

O then, I see Queen Mab hath been with you.
She is the fairy’s midwife, and she comes
In shape, no bigger than an agate-stone,
On the forefinger of an alderman;
Drawn with a team of little atomies,
Athwart men’s noses, as they lie asleep:
Her wagon spokes—made of long spinner’s legs;
The cover—of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces—of the smallest spiders web;
The collars—of the moonshine’s watery beams;
Her whip—of cricket’s bone; her lash—of film;
Her wagoner—a small gray-coated gnat,
Not half so big—as a round—little worm,
Prick’d from the lazy finger of a maid;
Her chariot—is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joiner-squirrel, or old grub,
Time out of mind, the fairies’ coach-makers.
And in this state she gallops, night by night,
Thro’ lovers’ brains, and then they dream of love;
On courtiers’ knees, that dream on courties’ strait;
O’er lawyers’ fingers, who straight dream on fees;
O’er ladies’ lips, who straight on kisses dream;
Sometimes, she gallops o’er a courtier’s nose,
And then, dreams he of smelling out a suit:
And sometimes comes she, with a tithe-pig’s tail,
Tieking the parson, as he lies asleep;
Then dreams he—of another benefice.
Sometimes, she driveth o’er a soldier’s neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathoms deep; and then anon
Drums in his ears, at which he starts, and wakes;
And being thus frightened, swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again.—Shakspeare.

YOUTH AND AGE. When the summer day of youth—is slowly wasting away into the twilight of age, and the shadows of past years grow deeper and deeper, as life wears to its close, it is pleasant to look back, through the vista of time, upon the sorrows and felicities of our earlier years. If we have a home to shelter, and hearts to rejoice with us, and friends have been gathered together around our firesides, then, the rough places of our wayfaring will have been worn and smoothed away, in the twilight of life, while the sunny spots we have passed through, will grow brighter and more beautiful. Happy, indeed, are they, whose interference with the world has not changed the tone of their holier feelings, or broken those musical chords of the heart, whose vibrations are so melodious, so tender and touching, in the evening of age.

When Learning’s triumph o’er her barbarous foes
First rear’d the stage, immortal Shakspeare rose.
Each change of many-colored life he drew;
Exhausted worlds, and then imagin’d new:
Existence—saw him spurn her bounded reign;
And panting Time—toil’d after him in vain.

691. THE PASSING OF THE RUBICON. A gentleman, Mr. President, speaking of Cesar's benevolent disposition, and of the reluctance, with which he entered into the civil war, observes, "How long did he pause upon the brink of the Rubicon?" How came he to the brink of that river! How dared he cross it! Shall private men respect the boundaries of private property, and shall a man pay no respect to the boundaries of his country's rights! How dared he cross that river! Oh! but he paused upon the brink! He should have perished upon the brink, ere he had crossed it! Why did he pause? Why does a man's heart palpitate when he is on the point of committing an unlawful deed! Why does the very murderer, his victim sleeping before him, and his glaring eye, taking the measure of the blow, strike wide of the mortal part? Because of conscience! 'Twas that made Cesar pause upon the brink of the Rubicon. Compassion! What compassion! The compassion of an assassin, that feels a momentary shudder, as his weapon begins to cut! Cesar paused upon the brink of the Rubicon! What was the Rubicon! The boundary of Cesar's province. From what did it separate his province! From his country. Was that country a desert! No: it was cultivated and fertile; rich and populous! Its sons were men of genius, spirit, and generosity! Its daughters were lovely, susceptible, and chaste! Friendship was its inhabitant! Love was its inhabitant! Domestic affection was its inhabitant! Liberty was its inhabitant! All bounded by the stream of the Rubicon! What was Cesar, that stood upon the bank of that stream! A traitor, bringing war and pestilence into the heart of that country! No wonder that he paused—no wonder if, his imagination wrought upon by his conscience, he had beheld blood—instead of water; and heard groans, instead of murmurs! No wonder if some gorgon horror had turned him into stone upon the spot! But, no—he cried, "The die is cast!" He plunged!—he crossed!—and Rome was free no more!—Knowles.

692. LORD ULLIN'S DAUGHTER.

A chieftain—to the Highlands bound,
Cries, "Boatman, do not tarry!
And I'll give thee a silver pound,
To row us—o'er the ferry."
"Now, who be ye—would cross Loch-Gyle,
This dark—and stormy water?"
"O! I'm the chief of Ulva's isle,
And this—lord Ullin's daughter."
"And fast before her father's men,
Three days—we've fled together,
For should he find us in the glen,
My blood—would stain the heather."
"His horsemen—hard behind us ride;
Should they our steps discover,
Then who will cheer my bonny bride,
When they have slain her lover?"
Out spoke the hardy, Highland wight,
"I'll go, my chief—I'm ready:
It is not for your silver bright,
But for your winsome lady."
"And, by my word! the bonny bird
In danger, shall not tarry;
So, though the waves are raging white,
I'll row you o'er the ferry."
"By this, the storm grew loud—'apace,
The water-wraith—was shrieking;
And, in the scowl of heaven, each face
Grew dark—as they were speaking.

But still, as wilder grew the wind,
And as the night—grew drearer,
Adown the glen—rode armed men,
Their trampling—sounded nearer.
"O haste thee, haste!" the lady cries,
"Though tempests round us gather;
I'll meet the raging of the skies,
But not an angry father."
The boat—has left the stormy land,
A stormy sea—before her—
When, oh! too strong for human hand,
The tempest—gathered o'er her.
And still they rowed, amidst the roar
Of waters, fast prevailing:
Lord Ullin—reached that fatal shore,
His wrath—was changed to wailing.
For, sore dismayed, through storm, and shade,
His child—he did discover;
One lovely hand—she stretched for aid,
And one—was round her lover.
"Come back! come back!" he cried in grief,
"Across this stormy water;
And I'll forgive your Highland chief:
My daughter! oh, my daughter!"
'Twas vain: the loud waves—lashed the shore,
Return, or aid—preventing:
The waters wild went o'er his child,
And he was left—lamenting.—Campbell.

693. PROGRESS OF GOVERNMENT. In government, as in science, it is useful, often to review its progress, and to revert, even to its simplest elements. It will be salutary, frequently to ascertain, how far society, and laws, in their present condition, accord with those, which we have been accustomed to consider, as their first and purest principles; how far, in the lapse of time, they may have deviated from their original form and structure. Even when we recur to inquiries, merely speculative, to imaginary "social contracts," to abstract rights, we may often gather instruction, and detect some concealed, or neglected truth, applicable to our own times, and to our own immediate condition.

But when a government is derived, not from fictitious assumptions, not from ancient or obscure sources, or traditions, but, from actual, and specific agreement; when many, and various interests have been combined and compromised, and a written covenant has assured to many parties, rights, and powers, and privileges, it becomes a duty to revise this compact frequently and strictly, that no one entitled to its protection may be deprived, through inadvertence on the one part, or encroachment on the other, of his vested rights; and that no changes may be introduced into the compact, but by the actual consent of those, who are parties to the covenant.

—Every spirit, as it is most pure,
And hath in it the more of heavenly light,
So it the fairer body doth procure
To habit in, and it more fairly dight
With cheerful grace, and amiable sight;
For of the soul, the body form doth take,
For soul is form, and doth the body make.
For who, to dumb forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e'er resigned,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing, ling'ring look behind?
On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
Some pious drops the closing eye requires:
Ev'n from the tomb, the voice of nature cries,
Ev'n in our ashes live their wonted fires.

694. ADVANTAGES OF KNOWLEDGE.

Knowledge, in general, expands the mind, exalts the faculties, refines the taste of pleasure, and opens innumerable sources of intellectual enjoyment. By means of it, we become less dependent for satisfaction upon the sensitive appetites; the gross pleasures of sense are more easily despised, and we are made to feel the superiority of the spiritual to the material part of our nature. Instead of being continually solicited by the influence, and irritation of sensible objects, the mind can retire within herself, and expatiate in the cool and quiet walks of contemplation.

The poor man, who can read, and who possesses a taste for reading, can find entertainment at home, without being tempted to repair to the public house for that purpose. His mind can find him employment, when his body is at rest; he does not lie prostrate, and afloat, on the current of incidents, liable to be carried, whithersoever the impulse of appetite may direct. There is, in the mind of such a man, an intellectual spring, urging him to the pursuit of mental good; and if the minds of his family, also, are a little cultivated, conversation becomes the more interesting, and the sphere of domestic enjoyment enlarged.

The calm satisfaction, which books afford, puts him into a disposition to relish, more exquisitely, the tranquil delight, inseparable from the indulgence of conjugal, and parental affection: and as he will be more respectable, in the eyes of his family, than he, who can teach them nothing, he will be naturally induced to cultivate, whatever may preserve, and shun whatever would impair that respect. He, who is inured to reflection, will carry his views beyond the present hour; he will extend his prospect a little into futurity, and be disposed to make some provision for his approaching wants; whence will result, an increased motive to industry, together with a care to husband his earnings, and to avoid unnecessary expense.

The poor man who has gained a taste for good books, will, in all likelihood, become thoughtful, and when you have given the poor a habit of thinking, you have conferred on them a much greater favor, than by the gift of a large sum of money; since you have put them in possession of the principle of all legitimate prosperity.—R. Hall.

TIME'S SOFTENING POWER.

As the stern grandeur of a Gothic tower
Awes not so deeply in its morning hour,
As when the shades of time serenely fall
On every broken arch and ivied wall;
The tender images we love to trace,
Steal from each year a melancholy grace!
And as the sparks of social love expand;
As the heart opens in a foreign land,
And with a brother's warmth, a brother's smile,
The stranger greets each native of his isle;
So scenes of life, when present and confest,
Stamp but their bolder features on the breast;
Yet not an image, when remotely viewed,
However trivial and however rude,
But wins the heart and wakes the social sigh,
With every claim of close affinity.

Hope and fear, alternate, sway'd his breast,
Like light—and shade—upon a waving field,
Coursing each other, when the flying clouds,
Now hide—and now reveal—the sun.

695. VICTIM BRIDE AND MISER.

I saw her—in her summer bower, and oh! upon my sight,
Methought there never beam'd a form more beautiful, and bright;
So young, so fair, she seemed like one of those aerial things,
That dwell—but in the poet's high, and wild imaginings;
Or, like one of those forms, we meet in dreams, from which we wake and weep,
That earth—has no creations, like the figments of our sleep.
Her father—lov'd he not his child—above all earthly things?
As traders love the merchandise, from which their profit springs:
Old age came by, with tottering step, and, for sordid gold,
With which the dotard urg'd his suit, the maiden's peace was sold;
And thus, (for oh! her sire's stern heart—was steel'd against her prayer,)
The hand he ne'er had gain'd from love, he won from her despair.
I saw them through the church-yard pass, and such a nuptial train,
I would not for the wealth of worlds, should greet my sight again;
The bridemaids, each as beautiful as Eve—in Eden's bowers, Shed bitter tears—upon the path they should have strown with flowers;
Who had not thought, that white-rob'd band—the funeral array
Of one—an early doom had call'd—from life's gay scene away?
The priest—beheld the bridal pair before the altar stand,
And sigh'd, as he drew forth his book, with slow, reluctant hand;
He saw the bride's flow'r-wreath'd hair, he mark'd her streaming eyes,
And deem'd it less a christian rite, than a pagan sacrifice;
And when he call'd on Abraham's God to bless the wedded pair,
It seem'd a very mockery—to breath so vain a prayer.
I saw the palsy'd bridegroom too, in youth's gay ensign dress'd,
A shroud—were fitter garment far—for him, than bridal vest;
I mark'd him, when the ring was claim'd, 'twas hard to loose his bold,
He held it—with a miser's clutch; it was his darling gold;
His shrivell'd hand—was wet with tears, she shed, alas! in vain,
And trembled like an autumn leaf—beneath the beating rain.
I've seen her since that fatal morn: her golden fetters rest—
As 'e'en the weight of incubus—upon her aching breast;
And when the victor (death), shall come, to deal the welcome blow,
He will not find one rose—to swell the wreath, that decks his
For oh! her cheek is blanched with grief, that time—may not assuage;
Thus early—beauty—sheds her bloom—on the wintry breast of

696. THE DEW-DROP IN SPRING.

How pure! how bright is the tiny thing!
It beams where the birds of the morning sing;
It looks like the tear from an angel's eye,
Or a pearl that has dropped from the vernal sky,
To deck the silvery robe of the dawn,
As it weds the flowers on the grassy lawn.
In the silver cup of the daisy it lies;
It smiles on the lark as he upward flies;
In a chariot of cloud it shall glide to the sun;
On a pathway of incense its course shall be run;
It returns again on a sunset ray,
And forgets in its slumber the sports of the day.
The emblem of virtue unsullied, it seems—
The emblem of beauty we see in our dreams;
'Tis a pledge of faith, by the breeze to be given,
With amorous sighs to the clouds of heaven.
Oh, who can tell, but the fairies keep
Their nightly watch where the dew-drops sleep?
When the rose unfolds its voluptuous charm,
When the sun is high, and the earth grows warm,
'Tis then that the dew-drop shines most bright,
'Tis then that it rivals the diamond's light,
As it bids farewell to the fairy scene,
And melts into air where its bower has been.
All men—think all men mortal, but themselves;
Themselves, when some alarming shock of fate,
Strikes thro' their wounded hearts the sudden dead.

697. SPECIMEN OF INDIAN LANGUAGE.

We are happy, in having buried, under ground, the red axe, that has so often been dyed—with the blood of our brethren. Now, in this fort, we inter the axe, and plant the tree of Peace. We plant a tree, whose top will reach the sun, and its branches spread abroad, so that it shall be seen afar off. May its growth never be stilled and choked; but may it shade both your country and ours with its leaves. Let us make fast its roots, and extend them to the uttermost of your colonies. If the French should come to shake this tree, we should know it by the motion of its roots reaching into our country. May the Great Spirit—allow us to rest, in tranquillity, upon our mats, and never again dig up the axe, to cut down the tree of Peace! Let the earth be trod hard over it, where it lies buried. Let a strong stream run under the pit, to wash the evil away, out of our sight and remembrance. The fire, that had long burned in Albany, is extinguished. The bloody bed is washed clean, and the tears are wiped from our eyes. We now renew the covenant-chain of friendship. Let it be kept bright and clean as silver, and not suffered to contract any rust. Let not any one pull away his arm from it.

MARSEILLES HYMN OF LIBERTY.

Ye sons of Freedom, wake to glory!
Hark! hark, what myriads bid you rise!
Your children, wives, and grandsires, hoary,
Behold their tears—and hear their cries.
Shall hateful tyrants, mischiefs breeding,
With hireling hosts, a ruffian band,
Affright and desolate the land,
While peace and liberty—lie bleeding?
To arms! to ARMS! ye brave!
Th' avenging sword unsheath:
March on, march on, all hearts resolv'd,
On victory—or death.

Now, now, the dangerous storm is rolling,
Which treacherous kings, confederate, raise;
The dogs of war, let loose, are howling,
And lo! our fields and cities—blaze,
And shall we basely—view the ruin,
While lawless force with guilty stride,
Spreads desolation—far and wide,
With crimes and blood, his hands imbruing?
To arms! to ARMS! ye brave, &c.

With luxury and pride surrounded,
The vile—insatiate despots dare,
Their thirst of power and gold unbounded,
To mete, and vend—the light—and air.
Like beasts of burden—would they load us,
Like gods—would bid their slaves adore,
But man—is man, and who is more?
Then shall they longer lash and goad us?
To arms! to ARMS! ye brave, &c.

Oh, LIBERTY, can man resign thee,
Once—having felt thy generous flame?
Can dungeons, bolts, and bars confine thee;
Or whips thy noble spirit tame?
Too long—the world has wept, bewailing,
That falsehood's dagger—tyrants wield,
But FREEDOM—is our sword, and shield,
And all their arts are unavailing.
To arms! to ARMS! ye brave, &c.

698. OTHELLO'S APOLOGY.

Most potent, grave, and reverend seigniors:
My very noble, and approv'd good masters:
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true, I have married her:
The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent; no more.

Rude am I in speech,
And little blessed with the set phrase of peace:
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
[us'd
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have
Their dearest action in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broils and battle;
And therefore, little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking of myself. Yet, by your patience,
I will, a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms,
What conjuration, and what mighty magic,
(For such proceedings I am charg'd withal)
I won his daughter with.
Her father lov'd me; oft invited me;
Still questioned me the story of my life,
From year to year: the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I had past.
I ran it through, e'en from my boyish days,
To the very moment, that he bade me tell it.
Wherein I spake of most disastrous chances:
Of moving accidents by flood, and field:
Of hairbreath 'scapes, in the imminent deadly
Of being taken by the insolent foe, [breach;
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence,
And with it all my travel's history.

All these to hear,
Would Desdemona seriously incline;
But still the house affairs would draw her thence,
Which ever as she could with haste despatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear,
Devour up my discourse. Which, I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate;
Whereof by parcels, she had something heard,
But not distinctly.

I did consent;
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains, a world of sighs.
She swore in faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing
'Twas pitiful; 'twas wondrous pitiful; [strange;
She wish'd she had not heard it; yet she wish'd
That heaven—had made her such a man.

She thank'd me,
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. On this hint I spake;
She lov'd me, for the dangers I had pass'd;
And I lov'd her, that she did pity them.
This is the only witchcraft, which I've used.

Some, light of heart, may scorn, in later years,
Those dear memorials—of a calmer time;
While others—water them with life's last tears,
And bear their faded charms from clime to clime

699. MAJESTY OF THE LAW. How imposing—is the majesty of the law! how calm her dignity; how vast—her power; how firm, and tranquil, in her reign! It is not by fleets, and arms, by devastation, and wrong, by oppression, and blood—she maintains her sway, and executes her decrees. Sustained by justice, reason, and the great interests of man, she but speaks, and is obeyed. Even those, who do not approve, hesitate not—to support her; and the individual, upon whom her judgment falls, knows, that submission—is not only a duty, he must perform, but, that the security, and enjoyment, of all that is dear to him, depend upon it.

A mind—accustomed to acknowledge no power, but physical force, no obedience, but personal fear, must view, with astonishment, a feeble individual, sitting, with no parade of strength, surrounded by no visible agents of power, issuing his decrees with oracular authority; while the rich, and the great, the first and the meanest—await, alike, to perform his will. Still more wonderful is it—to behold the co-ordinate officers of the same government, yielding their pretensions to his higher influence: the executive, the usual depository instrument of power; the legislature—even the representative of the people, yield a respectful acquiescence—to the judgments of the tribunals of the law, pronounced by the minister, and expounder of the law. Is it enough for him to say—"It is the opinion of the court"—and the farthest corner of our republic—feels, and obeys the mandate. What a sublime spectacle! This is indeed, the empire of the law; and safe, and happy—are all they, who dwell within it.—Hopkinson.

700. SPEECH OF CATILINE, BEFORE THE ROMAN SENATE, ON HEARING HIS SENTENCE OF BANISHMENT.

"Banish'd!—from Rome!"—what's banish'd, but set From daily contact—of the things I loathe! [free]
"Tried—and convicted traitor!"—Who says this? Who'll prove it, at his peril, on my head? [chain!]
"Banished!"—I thank you for't. It breaks my I held some slack allegiance till this hour—
But now—my sword's my own. Smile on, my lords; I scorn—to count what feelings, withered hopes, Strong provocations, bitter, burning wrongs, I have within my heart's hot cells shut up, To leave you—in your lazy dignities.
But here I stand and scoff you:—here I fling hatred, and full defiance in your face.
Your consul's merciful. For this—all thanks. He dares not touch a hair of Catiline.
"Traitor!" I go—but I return. This—trial! Here I devote your senate! I've had wrongs, To stir a fever in the blood of age, Or make the infant's sinew strong as steel.
This day's the birth of sorrows!—This hour's work Will breed proscriptions.—Look to your hearths, my lords,
For there, henceforth, shall sit, for household gods, Shapes hot from Tartarus! all shames, and crimes; Wan Treachery, with his thirsty dagger drawn; Suspicion, poisoning his brother's cup; Naked Rebellion, with the torch, and axe, Making his wild sport—of your blazing thrones; Till Anarchy—comes down on you, like Night, And Massacre seals Rome's eternal grave.—Croly.

701. DOCTOR AND PUPIL.

A pupil of the Esculapian school,
Was just prepared to quit his master's rule:
Not that he knew his trade, as it appears,
But that he then had learnt it seven years.

One morn, he thus addressed his master:

"Dear sir, my honored father bids me say,
If I could now and then a visit pay,
He thinks, with you,—to notice how you do,
My business I might learn a little faster."

"The thought is happy," the preceptor cries;
"A better method he could scarce devise;
So Bob," (his pupil's name) "it shall be so;
And when I next pay visits, you shall go."

To bring that hour, alas! time briskly fled:
With dire intent away they went,
And now, behold them at a patient's bed

The master-doctor solemnly perused
His victim's face, and o'er his symptoms mused;
Looked wise, said nothing—an unerring way,
When people nothing have to say:

Then felt his pulse, and smelt his cane,
And paused, and blinked, and smelt again,
And briefly of his corps performed each motion;
Mancœuvres that for Death's platoon are meant:
A kind of a Make-ready-and-Present,
Before the fell discharge of pill and potion.

At length, the patient's wife he thus addressed:

"Madam, your husband's danger's great,
And (what will never his complaint abate,)
The man's been eating oysters, I perceive."—
"Dear! you're a witch, I verily believe,"
Madam replied, and to the truth confessed.

Skill so prodigious, Bobby, too, admired;
And home returning, of the sage inquired
How these same oysters came into his head?
"Psha! my dear Bob, the thing was plain—
Sure that can ne'er distress thy brain;
I saw the shells lie underneath the bed."

So wise, by such a lesson grown,
Next day, Bob ventured out alone,
And to the self-same sufferer paid his court—
But soon, with haste and wonder out of breath,
Returned the stripling minister of death,
And to his master made this dread report:
"Why, sir, we ne'er can keep that patient under;
Zounds! such a man I never came across!
The fellow must be dying, and no wonder,
For ne'er believe me if he has n't eat a horse!"
"A horse!" the elder man of physick cried,
As if he meant his pupil to deride—
"How got so wild a notion in your head?"
"How! think not in my duty I was idle;
Like you, I took a peep beneath the bed,
And there I saw a saddle and a bridle!"

Mr. Locke—was asked, how he had contrived to accumulate a mine of knowledge so rich, yet so extensive and so deep. He replied, that he attributed what little he knew—to the not having been ashamed to ask for information, and to the rule he had laid down, of conversing with all descriptions of men, on those topics chiefly, that formed their own peculiar professions or pursuits.

702. THE RESURRECTION OF THE LORD.
Twice—had the sun—gone down upon the earth, and all as yet, was silent—at the sepulchre. Death—held his seceptre—over the Son of God. Still—and silent—the hours passed on; the guards—stood at their post; the rays of the midnight moon—gleamed on their helmets, and on their spears. The enemies of Christ—exulted in their success; the hearts of his friends—were sunk in despondency; the spirits of glory—waited, in anxious suspense—to behold the event, and wondered—at the depth—of the ways of God. At length, the morning star, arising in the east, announced the approach of light. The third day—began to dawn upon the world; when, on a subtle, the earth—trembled—to its centre; and the powers of heaven were shaken; an angel of God—descended; the guards—shrank back—from the terror of his presence, and fell prostrate—on the ground. "His countenance—was like lightning, and his raiment—white as snow." He rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre, and sat upon it. But who is this, that cometh forth from the tomb, with dyed garments—from the bed of death? He, that is glorious in his appearance, walking in the greatness—of his strength? It is thy prince, O Zion! Christian, it is your Lord! He hath trodden the wine-press alone; he hath stained his raiment with blood; but now, as the first born—from the womb of nature, he meets—the morning of his resurrection. He arises a conqueror—from the grave; he returns with blessings—from the world of spirits; he brings salvation—to the sons of men. Never—did the returning sun—usher in a day so glorious. It was the jubilee—of the universe. The morning stars sung together, and all the sons of God shouted aloud—for joy. The Father of mercies—looked down from his throne in the heavens; with complacency he beheld his world—restored; he saw his work, that it was good. Then, did the desert rejoice, the face of nature was gladdened before him, when the blessings of the Eternal descended, as the dews of heaven, for the refreshing of the nations.

703. SLANDER.

What is slander?

'Tis an assassin—at the midnight hour
 Urged on by Envy, that, with footstep soft,
Steals on the slumber—of sweet innocence,
 And with the dark drawn dagger of the mind,
 Drinks deep—the crimson current of the heart.
 It is a worm, that crawls on beauty's cheek,
 Like the vile viper—in a vale of flowers,
 And riots in ambrosial blossoms there.
 It is a coward—in a coat of mail,
 That wages war—against the brave, and wise,
 And, like the long lean lizard, that will mar
 The lion's sleep, it wounds the noblest beast.
 Oft have I seen—this demon of the soul,
 This murderer of sleep, with visage smooth,
 And countenance—serene as heaven's own sky;
 But storms—were raving—in the world of thought:
 Oft have I seen a smile—upon its brow;
 But, like the lightning—from a stormy cloud,
 It shocked the soul—and disappeared in darkness.
 Oft have I seen it weep—at tales of woe, [anguish];
 And sigh—as 'twere the heart—would break with
 But, like the drop, that drips from Java's tree,

And the fell blast, that sweeps Arabian sands,
 It withered—every floweret of the vale.

I saw it tread upon a lily fair,
 A maid—of whom the world—could say no harm;
 And, when she sunk—beneath the mortal wound,
 It broke—into the sacred sepulchre,
 And dragged its victim—from the hallowed grave,
 For public eyes to gaze on. It hath wept,
 That from the earth—its victim passed away,
 Ere it had taken vengeance—on his virtues.
 Yea, I have seen this curst child of Envy,
 Breathe milddew—on the sacred fame—of him,
 Who once had been his country's benefactor;
 And, on the sepulchre—of his repose,
 Bedewed with many a trilutary tear,
 Dance, in the moonlight of a summer's sky,
 With savage satisfaction.—Milford Bard.

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

When marshaled—on the nightly plain,
 The glittering host—bestud the sky;
 One star alone, of all the train,
 Can fix the sinner's wandering eye.
 Hark! hark! to God—the chorus breaks,
 From every host, from every gem;
 But one alone, the Savior speaks,
 It is the star of Bethlehem.
 Once, on the raging seas I rode;
 The storm was loud, the night was dark,
 The ocean yawned, and rudely blow'd
 The wind, that tossed my foundering bark.
 Deep horror, then, my vitals froze,
 Death-struck, I ceased the tide to stem;
 When suddenly, a star arose,
 It was the star of Bethlehem.
 It was my guide, my light, my all,
 It bade my dark forebodings cease,
 And through the storm, and danger's thrall,
 It led me—to the port of peace.
 Now, safely moor'd—my perils o'er,
 I'll sing, first in night's diadem,
 Forever, and forever more,
 The star, the star of Bethlehem.—White!

EVE'S LOVE FOR ADAM.

To whom thus Eve, with perfect beauty adorn'd:
 "My author and disposer, what thou bid'st
 Unargued I obey: so God ordains;
 God is thy law, thou mine: to know no more
 Is woman's happiest knowledge and her praise.
 With thee conversing I forget all time;
 All seasons and their change, all pleasure alike.
 Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
 With charm of earliest birds; pleasant the sun,
 When first on this delightful land he spreads
 His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower,
 Glistening with dew; fragrant the fertile earth
 After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
 Of grateful evening mild; then silent night,
 With this her solemn bird, and this fair moon,
 And these gems of heaven, her starry train:
 But neither breath of morn, when she ascends
 With charm of earliest birds; nor rising sun
 On this delightful land; nor herb, fruit, flower,
 Glistening with dew; nor fragrance after showers,
 Nor grateful evening mild; nor silent night,
 With this her solemn bird; nor walk by moon,
 Or glittering starlight, without thee is sweet.

704. THE FEMALE CHARACTER. If we glance at those domestic relations, which woman sustains, she appears in an attitude highly interesting. Is she a daughter? She has a strong hold on the parental bosom. By her kind, discreet, obedient, dutiful conduct, she contributes greatly to the happiness of those, who tenderly love her, and who are her natural guardians, and guides. Or, by the opposite conduct, she disappoints their hopes, and pierces their hearts with sorrow. Just in proportion to the superior strength, and tenderness of parental affection, is the happiness or misery resulting from the kind, or unkind deportment of a daughter.

Is she a sister? If intelligent and virtuous, she sheds the most kindly influence on the little circle of kindred spirits in which she daily moves. Is she a wife? The relation is most endearing, and its duties most important. Taken, originally, from man's heart, she is ever to be his most kind, affectionate and faithful partner. To contribute to his happiness, is always to be her first earthly care. It is hers, not merely to amuse his leisure hours, but to be his intelligent companion, friend, and counsellor; his second self; his constant and substantial helper, both as to the concerns of this life, and as to his eternal interests. She is to do him good, all the days of her life. And by so doing, to dwell in his heart. Is she a mother? It is hers, in no small degree, to form the character of the next generation. Constantly with her children, having the chief care of them in their infancy, and early childhood,—the most susceptible, the forming period of life,—to her, in an important sense, are committed the character, and the destiny—of individuals, and nations. Many of the most distinguished, and of the most excellent men, this, or any country has produced, were indebted, under God, chiefly to the exertions of their mothers, during their early childhood.

Thus viewed in her domestic relations, woman appears in a highly interesting light. So she does, when seen in other stations. See her taking an active part in various benevolent associations. There, she exerts an influence in the cause of humanity, and of religion, the most powerful, and beneficial. Like an angel of mercy on the wing, she performs her part with promptitude and compassion.

705. THE CONSOLATION OF WOMAN.

Woman! Blest partner of our joys and woes!
Even in the darkest hour of earthly ill,
Untarnished yet, thy fond affection glows,
Throbs with each pulse, and beats with every thrill!

Bright o'er the wasted scene thou hoverest
Angel of comfort to the failing soul;
Undaunted by the tempest, wild and chill,
That pours its restless and disastrous roll.
O'er all that blooms below, with sad and hollow

When sorrow rends the heart, when feverish pain
Wrings the hot throbs of anguish from the brow,
To soothe the soul, to cool the burning brain,
O! who so welcome and so prompt as thou!
The battle's hurried scene, and angry glow,—
The death-encircled pillow of distress,—
The lonely moments of secluded woe—
Alike thy care and constancy confess, [bless.
Alike thy pitying hand and fearless friendship

706. ALEXANDER SELKIRK.

I am monarch—of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute;
From the centre—all round to the sea,
I am lord of the fowl and the brute.
Oh solitude! where are the charms,
That sages—have seen in thy face?
Better dwell—in the midst of alarms,
Than reign—in this horrible place.
I am out—of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey—alone;
Never hear the sweet music of speech;
I start—at the sound of my own.
The beasts, that roam over the plain,
My form, with indifference see:
They are so unacquainted with man,
Their tameness—is shocking to me.
Society, friendship, and love,
Divinely bestow'd upon man,
Oh, had I the wings of a dove,
How soon would I taste you again!
My sorrows—I then might assuage,
In the ways of religion and truth;
Might learn from the wisdom of age,
And be cheer'd—by the sallies of youth.
Religion! what treasure untold,
Resides in that heavenly word!
More precious—than silver or gold,
Or all, that this earth can afford.
But the sound of the church-going bell,
These valleys, and rocks, never heard;
Ne'er sigh'd—at the sound of a knell,
Or smil'd, when a sabbath appear'd.
Ye winds, that have made me your sport,
Convey to this desolate shore,
Some cordial, endearing report,
Of a land, I shall visit no more.
My friends, do they now and then send,
A wish, or a thought after me?
O tell me, I yet have a friend,
Though a friend I am never to see.
How fleet is a glance of the mind!
Compar'd with the speed of its flight,
The tempest itself lags behind,
And the swift-wing'd arrows of light;
When I think of my own native land,
In a moment, I seem to be there;
But, alas! recollection at hand,
Soon hurries me back to despair.
But the sea-fowl—is gone to her nest,
The beast is laid down in his lair;
Even here—is a season of rest,
And I—to my cabin repair.
There's mercy—in every place;
And mercy—encouraging thought!
Gives even affliction a grace,
And reconciles man to his lot.—Corper.

BATTLE.

Now shield—with shield, with helmet,—helmet
To armor—armor, lance to lance oppos'd; [clos'd,
Host—against host, the shadowy squadrons drew;
The sounding darts—in iron tempest flew.
Victors, and vanquish'd, join promiscuous cries,
And thrilling shouts—and dying groans arise:
With streaming blood, the slipp'ry fields are dy'd,
And slaughter'd heroes, swell the dreadful tide.

707. THE STREAM OF LIFE. Life—bears us on like the stream of a mighty river. Our boat, at first glides down the narrow channel, through the playful murmurings of the little brook, and the windings of its grassy border. The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads, the flowers, on the brink, seem to offer themselves to our young hands; we are happy in hope, and we grasp eagerly, at the beauties around us; but the stream hurries on, and still our hands are empty.

Our course in youth, and manhood, is along a wider, and deeper flood, and amid objects more striking, and magnificent. We are animated by the moving picture of enjoyment, and industry, which passes before us; we are excited by some short-lived success, or depressed, and made miserable, by some equally short-lived disappointment. But our energy, and our dependence are both in vain. The stream bears us on, and our joys, and our griefs, are alike, left behind us; we may be shipwrecked, but we cannot anchor; our voyage may be hastened, but it cannot be delayed; whether rough or smooth, the river hastens towards its home, till the roaring of the ocean is in our ears, and the tossing of the waves is beneath our keel; and the lands lessen from our eyes, and the floods are lifted up around us, and the earth loses sight of us, and we take our last leave of earth, and of its inhabitants; and of our further voyage, there is no witness, but the Infinite and the Eternal.

And do we still take so much anxious thought for future days, when the days which have gone by, have so strangely, and uniformly deceived us? Can we still so set our hearts on the creatures of God, when we find by sad experience, the Creator only is permanent? Or, shall we not rather lay aside every weight, and every sin which doth most easily beset us, and think of ourselves, henceforth, as wayfaring persons only, who have no abiding inheritance, but in the hope of a better world, and to whom even that world would be worse than hopeless, if it were not for our Lord Jesus Christ, and the interest we have obtained in his mercies.

708. THE OLD HAT.

I had a hat—it was not all a hat—
Part of the brim was gone,—yet still, I wore
It on, and people wondered, as I passed.
Some, turned to gaze—others, just cast an eye,
And soon withdrew it, as 'twere in contempt.
But still, my hat, although so fashionless,
In complement extern, had that within,
Surpassing show—my head continued warm;
Being sheltered from the weather, spite of all
The want (as has been said,) of brim.

A change came o'er the color of my hat.
That, which was black, grew brown, and then men stared

With both their eyes (they stared with one before);
The wonder now, was twofold—and it seemed Strange, that things so torn, and old, should still Be worn, by one who might—but let that pass!
I had my reasons, which might be revealed,
But, for some counter reasons far more strong,
Which tied my tongue to silence. Time passed on.
Green spring, and flowery summer—autumn
brown,

And frosty winter came,—and went, and came—
And still, through all the seasons of two years,

In park, in city, yea, in routs and balls, [wild
The hat was worn, and borne. Then folks grew
With curiosity,—and whispers rose,
And questions passed about—how one so trim
In coats, boots, pumps, gloves, trousers, could
His caput—in a covering so vile. [ensconce

A change came o'er the nature of my hat—
Grease-spots appeared—but still in silence, on
I wore it—and then family, and friends
Glared madly at each other. There was one,
Who said—but hold—no matter what was said,
A time may come, when I—away—away—
Not till the season's ripe, can I reveal
Thoughts that do lie too deep for common minds,
Till then, the world shall not pluck out the heart
Of this, my mystery. When I will—I will!—
The hat was now—greasy, and old, and torn—
But torn—old—greasy—still I wore it on.

A change came o'er the business of this hat.
Women, and men, and children, scowled on me;
My company was shunned—I was alone!
None would associate with such a hat—
Friendship itself proved faithless, for a hat.
She, that I loved, within whose gentle breast
I treasured up my heart, looked cold as death—
Love's fires went out—extinguished—by a hat.
Of those, that knew me best, some turned aside,
And scudded down dark lanes—one man did place
His finger on his nose's side, and jeered—
Others, in horrid mockery, laughed outright;
Yea, dogs, deceived by instinct's dubious ray,
Fixing their swart glare on my ragged hat,
Mistook me for a beggar—and they barked.
Thus, women, men, friends, strangers, lover,
One thought pervaded all—it was my hat. [dogs,
A change—it was the last—came o'er this hat.
For lo! at length, the circling months went round,
The period was accomplished—and one day
This tattered, brown, old, greasy coverture,
(Time had endeared its vile ness,) was transferr'd
To the possession of a wandering son—
Of Israel's fated race—and friends once more
Greeted my digits, with the wonted squeeze:
Once more I went my way—along—along—
And plucked no wondering gaze—the hand of
With its annoying finger—men, and dogs, [scorn
Once more grew careless, jokeless, laughless, growless:

And last, not least of rescued blessings, love—
Love smiled on me again, when I assumed
A bran new beaver of the Andre mould;
And then the laugh was mine, for then came out
The secret of this strangeness,—'twas a BET.
What are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will?
The steps on which we tread, to rise and reach
Our wish; and that obtain'd, down with the scarf folding [served their end,
Of sceptres, crowns, and thrones; they have
And are, like lumber, to be left and scorn'd.
Honor and virtue—are the boons we claim;
Nought gives a zest to life, when they are fled;
Nought else, can fan aright the holy flame:
And, should they perish, every hope is dead.

The man, who builds, and locks wherewith to pay,
Provides a house—from which to run away.

708. CHARACTER OF PITT. The secretary—stood alone; modern degeneracy—had not reached him. Original, and unaccommodating, the features of his character—had the hardihood of antiquity. His august mind overawed majesty: and one of his sovereigns thought royalty—so impaired in his presence, that he conspired to remove him, in order to be relieved from his superiority. No state chicanery, no narrow system of vicious politics, sank him to the vulgar level of the great; but overbearing, persuasive, and impracticable, his object—was England, his ambition was fame. Without dividing, he destroyed party: without corrupting, he made a venal age unanimous.

France—sank beneath him. With one hand, he smote the house of Bourbon, and wielded, with the other, the democracy of England. The sight of his mind—was infinite; and his schemes were to affect, not England, and the present age only, but Europe, and posterity. Wonderful were the means, by which these schemes were accomplished; always seasonable, always adequate, the suggestions of an understanding, animated by ardor, and enlightened by prophecy.

The ordinary feelings, which render life amiable, and indolent, were unknown to him. No domestic difficulty, no domestic weakness reached him; but, aloof from the sordid occurrences of life, and unsullied by its intercourse, he came, occasionally, into our system, to counsel, and to decide. A character so exalted, so strenuous, so various, and so authoritative, astonished a corrupt age; and the Treasury trembled at the name of Pitt, thro' all her classes of venality. Corruption imagined, indeed, that she had found defects in this statesman; and talked much of the ruin of his victories; but the history of his country, and the calamities of the enemy, refuted her.

Nor were his political abilities—his only talents; his eloquence—was an era—in the senate; peculiar, and spontaneous, familiarly expressing gigantic sentiments, and instinctive wisdom; not like the torrent of Demosthenes, or the splendid conflagration of Tully, it resembled sometimes the thunder, and sometimes the music of the spheres. He did not, like Murray, conduct the understanding through the painful subtlety of argumentation, nor was he, like Townshend, forever on the rack of exertion; but, rather, lightened upon the subject, and reached the point by flashings of the mind, which, like those of his eye, were felt, but could not be followed.

Upon the whole, there was something in this man, that could create, subvert, or reform; an understanding, a spirit, and an eloquence, to summon mankind to society, or to break the bonds of slavery asunder, and to rule the wilderness of free minds with unbounded authority—something that could establish, or overwhelm empires, and strike a blow in the world, which should resound throughout the universe.—Grattan.

Reward him for the noble deed, just Heaven!
For this one action, guard him, and distinguish him,
With signal mercies and with great deliverances;
Save him from wrong, adversity and shame:
Let never-fading honor flourish round him,
And consecrate his name ev'n to time's end:
Let him know nothing but good on earth,
And everlasting blessedness hereafter.

709. LOCHINVAR.

O young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
Thro' all the wide border, his steed was the best—
And save his good broadsword, he weapon had
He rode all unarmed, and he rode all alone. [none,
So faithful in love, and so dauntless in war,
There never was knight, like the young Lochinvar.

He staid not for brake, and he stopp'd not for stone,
He swam the Eske river, where ford there was
But ere he alighted, at Netherby gate, [none.
The bride had consented, the gallant came late.
For a laggard in love, and a dastard in war,
Was to wed the fair Ellen, of brave Lochinvar.

So boldly he enter'd the Netherby Hall, [all,
'Mong bridesmen, and kinsmen, and brothers and
Then spoke the bride's father, his hand on his sword,
For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word,
"O come ye in peace, here, or come ye in war,
Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord Lochinvar?"

"I long woo'd your daughter, my suit you denied;
Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide;
And now am I come, with this lost love of mine,
To tread but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
There are maidens in Scotland, more lovely by far,
That would gladly be bride to the young Lochinvar."

The bride kiss'd the goblet, the knight took it up,
He quaff'd off the wine, and he threw down the cup.
She look'd down to blush, and she look'd up to sigh,
With a smile on her lip, and a tear in her eye.

He took her soft hand, ere her mother could bar;
"Now tread we a measure," said young Lochinvar.

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,
That never a hall such a galliard did grace;
While her mother did fret, and her father did fume,
And the bridegroom—stood dangling his bonnet
and plume, [ter by far,

And the bride maidens whispered, " 'T were bet-
To have match'd our fair cousin, with young Lochinvar."

One touch to her hand, and one word in her ear,
When they reach'd the hall door, and the charger stood near,

So light to the croupe, the fair lady he swung,
So light to the saddle, before her he sprang,
"She's won, we are gone, over bank, bush, and scour, [young Lochinvar.

They'll have swift steeds that follow," quoth

There was mounting 'mong Grames of the Nether-by clan, [they ran,

Fosters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and
There was racing, and chasing on Cannobie Lea,
But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they see.
So daring in love, and so gallant in war, [invar?
Have you e'er heard of gallant like young Loch-

The good merchant wrongs not the buyer in number, weight, or measure. These are the landmarks of all trading, which must not be removed: for such cosenage were worse than open felony. First, because they rob a man of his purse, and never bid him stand.
Secondly, because highway thieves defy, but these pretend justice. Thirdly, as much as lies in their power, they endeavor to make God accessory to their cosenage, deceiving, by pretending his weights.

710. EULOGIUM ON KOSCIUSKO.

Speech of Gen. W. H. Harrison, the ninth President, in the Congress of the United States, in the year 1815, on a motion to adopt some public testimony of respect for the memory of General Thaddeus Kosciuszko.

The public papers—have announced an event, which is well calculated—to excite the sympathy—of every American bosom. Kosciuszko, the martyr of Liberty, is no more! We are informed, that he died at Soleure, in France, some time in October last.

In tracing the events—of this great man's life, we find in him, that consistency of conduct, which is the more to be admired, as it is so rarely to be met with. He was not, at one time, the friend of mankind, and at another, the instrument of their oppression; but he preserved, throughout his whole career, those noble principles, which distinguished him in its commencement; which influenced him, at an early period of his life, to leave his country—and his friends, and, in another hemisphere, to fight—for the rights—of humanity.

Kosciuszko was born, and educated, in Poland; (of a noble, and distinguished family,) a country, where the distinctions in society are, perhaps, carried to greater lengths, than in any other. His Creator had, however, endowed him with a soul capable of rising above the narrow prejudices of a caste, and breaking the shackles, which a vicious education had imposed on his mind. When he was very young, he was informed, by the voice of Fame, that the standard of liberty had been erected in America—that an insulted and oppressed people—had determined to be free, or perish—in the attempt. His ardent and generous mind—caught, with enthusiasm, the holy flame, and from that moment he became the devoted soldier of liberty. His rank in the American army—afforded him no opportunity—greatly to distinguish himself. But he was remarkable—through his service, for all the qualities which adorn the human character. His heroic valor in the field, could only be equaled—by his moderation and affability, in the walks of private life. He was idolized by the soldiers—for his bravery, and beloved and respected by the officers, for the goodness of his heart, and the great qualities of his mind.

Contributing greatly, by his exertions, to the establishment of the independence of America, he might have remained, and shared the blessings it dispensed, under the protection of a chief, who loved and honored him, and in the bosom of a grateful and affectionate people. Kosciuszko had, however, other views. It is not known, that until the period I am speaking of, he had formed any distinct idea—of what could, or indeed what ought to be done—for his own country. But in the Revolutionary war, he drank, deeply, of the principles, which produced it. In his conversations with the intelligent men of our country, he acquired new views of the science of government, and of the rights of man. He had seen, too, that, to be free, it was only necessary that a nation should will it; and to be happy, it was only necessary that a nation should be free. And was it not possible—to procure these blessings for Poland! for Poland, the country of his birth, which had a claim to all his efforts, to all his services?

That unhappy nation—groaned under a complication of evils, which has scarcely a parallel in history. The mass of people—were the abject slaves of the nobles; the nobles, torn into factions, were alternately the instruments, and the victims, of their powerful and ambitious neighbors. By intrigue, corruption, and force, some of its fairest provinces had been separated from the republic, and the people, like beasts, transferred to foreign despots, who were again watching for a favorable moment—for a second dismemberment. To regenerate a people—thus debased, to obtain for a country—thus circumstanced, the blessings of liberty, and independence, was a work of as much difficulty, as danger. But, to a mind like Kosciuszko's, the difficulty, and danger of an enterprise—served as stimulants to the undertaking.

The annals of those times—give us no detailed account of the progress of Kosciuszko, in accomplishing his great work, from the period of his return to America, to the adoption of the new constitution of Poland, in 1791. This interval, however, of apparent inaction, was most usefully employed to illumine the mental darkness, which enveloped his countrymen. To stimulate the ignorant and bigotted peasantry with the hope of future emancipation—to teach a proud, but gallant nobility, that true glory is only to be found, in the paths and duties of patriotism;—interests the most opposed, prejudices—the most stubborn, and habits—the most inveterate, were reconbined, dissipated, and broken, by the ascendancy of his virtues and example. The storm, which he had foreseen, and for which he had been preparing, at length burst upon Poland. A feeble and unpopular government—bent before its fury, and submitted itself to the Russian yoke of the invader. But the nation disdained to follow its example; in their extremity, every eye was turned on the hero, who had already fought their battles, the sage, who had enlightened them, and the patriot, who had set the example of personal sacrifices—to accomplish the emancipation of the people.

Kosciuszko—was unanimously appointed generalissimo of Poland, with unlimited powers, until the enemy should be driven from the country. On his virtue, the nation reposed with the utmost confidence; and it is some consolation to reflect, amidst the general depravity of mankind, that two instances, in the same age, have occurred, where powers of this kind were employed—solely for the purposes for which they were given. It is not my intention, sir, to follow the Polish chief—throughout the career of victory, which, for a considerable time, crowned his efforts. Guided by his talents, and led by his valor, his undisciplined, ill-armed militia—charged, with effect, the veteran Russian and Prussian; the mailed cuirassiers of the great Frederic, for the first time, broke—and fled, before the lighter, and more appropriate cavalry of Poland. Hope filled the breasts of the patriots. After a long night, the dawn of an apparently glorious day—broke upon Poland. But to the discerning eye of Kosciuszko, the light which it shed—was of that sickly, and portentous appearance, indicating a storm more dreadful than that, which he had resisted.

He prepared to meet it with firmness, but with means entirely inadequate. To the advantages of numbers, of tactics, of discipline, and inexhaustible resources, the combined despots had secured a faction—in the heart of Poland. And, if that country—can boast of having produced its Washington, it is disgraced also, by giving birth—to a second Arnold. The day at length came which was to decide the fate of a nation and a hero. Heaven, for wise purposes, permitted that it should be the last—of Polish liberty. It was decided, indeed, before the battle commenced. The traitor, Poniski, who covered, with a detachment, the advance of the Polish army, abandoned his position to the enemy, and retreated.

Kosciuszko—was astonished, but not dismayed. The disposition of his army would have done honor to Hannibal. The succeeding conflict was terrible. When the talents of the general—could no longer direct the mingled mass of combatants, the arm of the warrior was brought to the aid of his soldiers. He performed prodigies of valor. The fabled prowess of Ajax, in defending the Grecian ships—was realized by the Polish hero. Nor was he badly seconded by his troops. As long as his voice could guide, or his example fire their valor, they were irresistible. In this unequal contest—Kosciuszko—was long seen, and finally—lost—to their view.

"Hope—for a season, bade the world—farewell,
And Freedom shrieked as Kosciusko fell."

He fell, covered with wounds, but still survived. A Cossack would have pierced his breast, when an officer interposed. "Suffer him to execute his purpose," said the bleeding hero; "I am the devoted soldier of my country, and will not survive its liberties." The name of Kosciusko—struck to the heart of the Tartar, like that of Marius—upon the Cimbrian warrior. The uplifted weapon—dropped—from his hand.

Kosciusko—was conveyed to the dungeons of Petersburg; and, to the eternal disgrace of the Empress Catharine, she made him the object of her vengeance, when he could no longer be the object of her fears. Her more generous son—restored him to liberty. The remainder of his life—has been spent in virtuous retirement. Whilst in this situation, in France, an anecdote is related of him, which strongly illustrates the command, which his virtues and his services had obtained—over the minds of his countrymen.

In the late invasion of France, some Polish regiments, in the service of Russia, passed through the village in which he lived. Some pillaging of the inhabitants brought Kosciusko from his cottage. "When I was a Polish soldier," said he, addressing the plunderers, "the property of the peaceful citizen was respected." "And who art thou," said an officer, "who addressest us with this tone of authority?" "I am Kosciusko." There was a magic in the word. It ran from corps to corps, from heart to heart. The march was suspended. They gathered round him, and gazed—with astonishment, and awe—upon the mighty ruin—he presented. "Could it, indeed, be their hero," whose fame was identified with that of their country? A thousand interesting reflections burst upon their minds; they remembered his patriotism, his devotion to liberty, his triumphs, and his glorious fall. Their iron hearts were softened, and the tear of sensibility trickled down their weather-beaten faces.

We can easily conceive, sir, what would be the feeling of the hero himself in such a scene. His great heart must have heaved with emotion to find himself once more surrounded by the companions of his glory; and that he would have been upon the point of saying to them,

"Behold your general, come once more
To lead you on to laurel'd victory,
To fame, to freedom."

The delusion could have lasted but for a moment. He was himself, alas! a miserable cripple; and, for them! they were no longer the soldiers of liberty, but the instruments of ambition and tyranny. Overwhelmed with grief at the reflection, he would retire to his cottage, to mourn afresh over the miseries of his country.

Such—was the man, sir, for whose memory I ask from an American congress, a slight tribute of respect. Not, sir, to perpetuate his fame, but our gratitude. His fame—will last as long as liberty—remains upon the earth; as long as a votary—offers incense upon her altar, the name of Kosciusko—will be invoked. And if, by the common consent of the world, a temple shall be erected to those, who have rendered most service to mankind—if the statue of our great countryman, Washington—shall occupy the place of the "Most Worthy," that of Kosciusko will be found by his side, and the wreath of laurel—will be entwined with the palm of virtue—to adorn his brow.

Oh grief, beyond all other griefs, when fate
First leaves the young heart—lone and desolate
In the wide world, without that only tie
For which it lov'd—to live, or feared—to die;
Lorn as the hung-up lute, that ne'er hath spoken
Since the sad day—its master—chord was broken.

713. THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH.

Under a spreading chestnut tree,
The village smithy stands;
The smith, a mighty man is he,
With large and sunewy hands;
And the muscles of his brawny arms,
Are strong, as iron bands.

His hair is crisp, and black, and long;
His face—is like the tan;
His brow—is wet with honest sweat;
He earns—whate'er he can,
And looks the whole world in the face,
For he owes not any man.

Week out, week in, from morn till night,
You can hear his bellows blow;
You hear him swing his heavy sledge,
With measured beat and slow,
Like a sexton, ringing the old kirk chimes,
When the evening sun is low.

And children, coming home from school,
Look in at the open door;
They love to see a flaming forge,
And hear the bellows roar,
And catch the burning sparks, that fly
Like chaff—from a threshing-floor

He goes, on Sunday, to the church,
And sits among his boys;
He hears the parson—pray and preach,
He hears his daughter's voice,
Singing—in the village choir,
And it makes his heart rejoice.

It sounds to him, like her mother's voice,
Singing—in Paradise!
He needs must think of her once more,
How in the grave she lies;
And with his hard—rough hand he wipes
A tear from out his eyes.

Toiling—rejoicing—sorrowing—
Onward—through life he goes:
Each morning—sees some task begin,
Each evening—sees it close;
Something attempted—something done,
Has earned a night's repose.

Thanks, thanks to thee, my worthy friend,
For the lesson thou hast taught!
Thus—at the flaming forge of Life,
Our fortunes must be wrought;
Thus, on its sounding anvil shaped,
Each burning deed, and thought.

There's a tear that falls when we part
From a friend whose loss we shall mourn;
There's a tear that flows from the half-brok'n heart,
When we think he may never return—oh, never.
'Tis hard to be parted from those
With whom we forever could dwell.
But bitter, indeed, is the sorrow that flows [ever.
When, perhaps, we are saying farewell—for
There's a tear that brightens the eye
Of the friend, when absence is o'er!
There's a tear that flows not for sorrow, but joy,
When we meet to be parted no more—oh, never!
Then all that in absence we dread
Is past, and forgotten our pain;
For sweet is the tear we at such moments shed,
When we behold the lov'd object again—forever.

713. LAY OF THE MADMAN.

"This is the foul fiend! He begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth. Beware of the foul fiend!"—Shakespeare.

Many a year—hath passed away;
Many a dark, and dismal year,
Since last I roam'd—in the light of day,
Or mingled my own—with another's tear;
Wo to the daughters—and sons of men—
Wo to them all, when I roam again!

Here have I watch'd, in this dungeon cell,
Longer than Memory's tongue can tell;
Here have I shriek'd, in my wild despair,
When the damned fiends, from their prison came,
Sported and gambol'd, and mock'd me here,
With their eyes of fire, and their tongues of flame;
Shouting forever, and aye—my name!
And I strove in vain—to burst my chain,
And longed to be free, as the winds, again,
That I might spring—in the wizard ring,
And scatter them back—to their hellish den!
Wo to the daughters—and sons of men—
Wo to them all, when I roam again!

How long—I have been in this dungeon here,
Little I know, and, nothing I care;
What to me—is the day, or night,
Summer's heat, or autumn serene,
Spring-tide flowers, or winter's blight,
Pleasure's smile, or sorrow's tear?
Time! what care I for thy flight,
Joy! I spurn thee—with disdain;
Nothing love I—but this clanking chain;
Once—I broke from its iron hold,
Nothing I said, but silent, and bold,
Like the shepherd, that watches his gentle fold,
Like the tiger, that crouches in mountain lair,
Hours upon hours, so watch'd I here;
Till one of the fiends, that had come to bring
Herbs from the valley—and drink from the spring,
Stalk'd through my dungeon entrance in!
Ha! how he shriek'd—to see me free—
Ho! how he trembled, and knelt to me,
He, who had mock'd me, many a day,
And barred me out—from its cheerful ray,
Gods! how I shouted to see him pray!
I wreath'd my hand—in the demon's hair,
And choke'd his breath—in its mutter'd prayer,
And dane'd I then, in wild delight,
To see the trembling wretch's—fright.

Gods! how I crush'd—his hated bones!
'Gainst the jagged wall, and the dungeon-stones;
And plung'd my arm—adown his throat,
And dragg'd to life—his beating heart,
And held it up, that I might gloat,
To see its quivering fibres start!
Ho! how I drank—or the purple flood,
Quaff'd—and quaff'd again, of blood,
Till my brain grew dark, and I knew no more,
Till I found myself—on this dungeon floor,
Fetter'd, and held, by this iron chain;
Ho! when I break its links again,
Ha! when I break its links again,
Wo to the daughters and sons of men!

My frame is shrunk, and my soul is sad,
And devils mock, and call me mad;
Many a dark—and fearful sight
Haunts me here, in the gloom of night;
Mortal smile, or human tear
Never cheers, or soothes me here;
The spider shrinks from my grasp away,
Though he's known my form—for many a day;
The slimy toad, with his diamond eye,
Watches afar, but comes not nigh;
The craven rat, with her filthy brood,
Pilers and gnaws—my scanty food;
But when I strive to make her play,
Snaps at my hands, and flees away;
Light of day—or ray of sun,
Friend, or hope, I've none—I've none!

Yet 'tis not always thus; sweet slumber steals
Across my haggard mind, my weary sight;
No more my brain—the iron pressure feels,
Nor damned devils—howl the live-long night,
Visions of hope, and beauty—seem
To mingle—with my darker dream;
They bear me back—to a long-lost day,
To the hours and joys of my boyhood's play,
To the merry green, and the sportive scene,
And the valley, the verdant hills between;
And a lovely form, with a bright blue eye,
Flutters—my dazzled vision by;
A tear starts up to my wither'd eye,
Gods! how I love to feel that tear—
Trickle my haggard visage o'er!
The fountain of hope—is not yet dry!
I feel, as I felt in days of yore,
When I roam'd at large, in my native glen,
Honor'd and lov'd—by the sons of men,
Till, madden'd to find my home defil'd,
I grasp'd the knife, in my frenzy wild,
And plunged the blade—in my sleeping child!

They call me mad—they left me here,
To my burning thoughts, and the fiend's despair,
Never, ah! never to see again
Earth, or sky, or sea, or plain;
Never—to hear soft Pity's sigh—
Never to gaze—on mortal eye;
Doom'd—through life, if life it be,
To helpless, hopeless misery;
Oh, if a single ray of light
Had pierced the gloom of this endless night;
If the cheerful tones of a single voice
Had made the depths of my heart rejoice;
If a single thing had loved me here,
I ne'er had crouch'd to these fiends' despair!

They come again! They tear my brain!
They tumble, and dart through my every vein!
Ho! could I burst this clanking chain,
Then might I spring—in the hellish ring,
And scatter them back to their den again!

They seize my heart!—they choke my breath!
Death!—death! ah, welcome death!—R. M. C.

It is a very poor, though common, pretence to merit, to make it appear by the faults of other men: a mean wit, or beauty, may pass in a room, where the rest of the company are allowed to have none: it is something to sparkle among diamonds; but to shine among pebbles, is neither credit nor value worth the pretending.

BEST CURE FOR TROUBLE.

Ben Brisk—a philosopher was,
In the genuine sense of the word;
And he held, that repining, whatever the cause,
Was unmanly, and weak, and absurd.

When Mat Mope—was assaulted by Trouble,
Though in morals—as pure as a vestal,
He sigh'd, and exclaimed, "Life's a Bubble,"
Then blew it away—with a pistol!

Tom Tiddle, when trouble intruded,
And his fortune, and credit were sunk,
By a too common error deluded,
Drown'd Trouble, and made himself drunk

But Ben—had a way of his own,
When grievance—made him uneasy;
He bade the blue devils begone,
Braved Trouble, and made himself busy.

When sorrow embitters our days,
And poisons each source of enjoyment;
The surest specific, he says,
For Trouble, and Grief is—Employment.

713. INDUSTRY AND ELOQUENCE. In the ancient republics of Greece and Rome, oratory—was a necessary branch of a finished education. A much smaller proportion of the citizens were educated, than among us; but of these—a much larger number became orators. No man—could hope for distinction, or influence, and yet slight this art. The commanders of their armies—were orators, as well as soldiers, and ruled—as well by their rhetorical, as by their military skill. There was no trusting with them—as with us, to a natural facility, or the acquisition of an accidental fluency—by actual practice.

But they served an apprenticeship to the art. They passed through a regular course of instruction in schools. They submitted to long, and laborious discipline. They exercised themselves frequently, both before equals, and in the presence of teachers, who criticised, reprov'd, rebuked, excited emulation, and left nothing undone, which art, and perseverance could accomplish. The greatest orators of antiquity, so far from being favored by natural tendencies, except indeed, in their high intellectual endowments, had to struggle against natural obstacles; and, instead of growing up, spontaneously, to their unrivalled eminence, they forced themselves forward by the most discouraging, artificial process.

Demosthenes—combated an impediment in speech, an ungainliness of gesture, which at first—drove him from the forum in disgrace. Cicero—failed, at first, through weakness of lungs, and an excessive vehemence of manner, which wearied the hearers, and defeated his own purpose. These defects were conquered by study, and discipline. He exiled himself from home; and during his absence, in various lands, passed not a day without a rhetorical exercise, seeking the masters who were most severe in criticism, as the surest means of leading him to the perfection, at which he aimed.

Such, too, was the education of their other great men. They were all, according to their ability and station, orators; orators, not by nature or accident, but by education, formed in a strict process of rhetorical training; admired and followed—even while Demosthenes and Cicero were living, and unknown now, only because it is not possible that any, but the first, should survive the ordeal of ages.

The inference—to be drawn from these observations is, that if so many of those, who received an accomplished education, became accomplished orators, because, to become so was one purpose of their study; then, it is in the power of a much larger proportion among us, to form themselves into creditable and accurate speakers. The inference should not be denied, until proved false by experiment.

Let this art be made an object of attention, and young men train themselves to it, faithfully, and long; and if any of competent talents and tolerable science be found, at last, incapable of expressing themselves in continued, and connected discourse, so as to answer the ends of public speaking, then, and not tilt then, let it be said, that a peculiar talent, or natural aptitude—is requisite, the want of which—must render effort vain; then, and not tilt then, let us acquiesce in this indolent, and timorous notion, which contradicts the whole testimony of antiquity, and all the experience of the world.—Wirt.

714. THE FREEMAN.

He is the freeman, whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves, besides. There's not a chain,
That hellish foes, confederate for his harm,
Can wind around him, but he casts it off,
With as much ease, as Samson, his green withes.
He looks abroad into the varied field
Of nature, and, though poor, perhaps, compared
With those, whose mansions glitter in his sight,
Calls the delightful scenery all his own.

His—are the mountains, and the valleys his,
And the resplendent rivers. His to enjoy,
With a propriety, that none can feel,
But who, with filial confidence inspired,
Can lift to heaven an unpresumptuous eye,
And smiling say—"My Father made them all!"
Are they not his, by a peculiar right,
And, by an emphasis of interest, his,
Whose eye—they fill with tears of holy joy,
Whose heart, with praise, and whose exalted mind,
With worthy thoughts—of that unwearied love,
That plann'd, and built, and still upholds, a world,
So clothed in beauty—for rebellious man?

Yes: ye may fill your garner's—ye that reap
The loaded soil, and ye may waste much good,
In senseless riot; but ye will not find,
In feast, or in the chase, in song or dance,
A liberty like his, who, unimpeach'd
Of usurpation, and to no man's wrong,
Appropriates nature, as his Father's work,
And has a richer use of yours than you.

He is, indeed, a freeman. Free, by birth,
Of no mean city; plann'd, or ere the hills
Were built, the fountains open'd, or the sea,
With all his roaring multitude of waves.
His freedom—is the same in every state;
And no condition of this changeful life.
So manifold in cares, whose every day
Brings its own evil with it, makes it less:
For he has wings, that neither sickness, pain,
Nor penury, can cripple or confine.

No nook so narrow, but he spreads them there,
With ease, and is at large. The oppressor holds
His body bound; but knows not what a range
His spirit takes, unconscious of a chain;
And that, to bind him, is a vain attempt,
Whom God delights in, and in whom he dwells.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

To-day man's dress'd in gold and silver bright,
Wrapt in a shroud before to-morrow-night:
To-day he's feeding on delicious food,
To-morrow dead, unable to do good!
To-day he's nice, and scorns to feed on crumbs,
To-morrow he's himself a dish for worms;
To-day he's honor'd, and in vast esteem,
To-morrow not a beggar values him;
To-day his house, tho' large, he thinks but small,
To-morrow no command, no house at all;
To-day has forty servants at his gate,
To-morrow scorn'd, not one of them will wait!
To-day perfum'd, as sweet as any rose,
To-morrow stinks in everybody's nose;
To-day he's grand, majestic, all delight,
Ghastful and pale before to-morrow night;
True, as the Scripture says, "man's life's a span;"
The present moment is the life of man.

715. CHARACTER OF BONAPARTE.

He is fallen! We may now pause—before that splendid prodigy, which towered amongst us, like some ancient ruin, whose frown—terrified the glance its magnificence attracted. Grand, gloomy and peculiar, he sat upon the throne a sceptred hermit, wrapt—in the solitude of his own originality. A mind, bold, independent, and decisive—a will, despotic in its dictates—an energy, that distanced expedition, and a conscience—pliable to every touch of interest, marked the outline of this extraordinary character,—the most extraordinary, perhaps, that in the annals of this world, ever rose, or reigned, or fell. Flung into life, in the midst of a revolution, that quickened every energy of a people who acknowledge no superior, he commenced his course, a stranger by birth, and a scholar by charity! With no friend, but his sword, and no fortune, but his talents, he rushed in the list—where rank, and wealth, and genius—had arrayed themselves, and competition—fled from him, as from the glance of destiny. He knew no motive, but interest—he acknowledged no criterion, but success—he worshipped no God, but ambition, and, with an eastern devotion, he knelt—at the shrine of his idolatry. Subsidiary to this, there was no creed, that he did not profess, there was no opinion, that he did not promulgate; in the hope of a dynasty, he upheld the crescent; for the sake of a divorce, he bowed before the cross: the orphan of St. Louis, he became the adopted child of the republic; and with a parricidal ingratitude, on the ruins—both of the throne, and tribune, he reared the throne of his despotism. A professed catholic, he imprisoned the pope; a pretended patriot, he impoverished the country; and in the name of Brutus, he grasped, without remorse, and wore, without shame, the diadem of the Cæsars! Through this pantomime of policy, fortune played the clown to his caprices. At his touch, crowns crumbled, beggars reigned, systems vanished, the wildest theories took the color of his whim, and all that was venerable, and all that was novel, changed places with the rapidity of a drama. Even apparent defeat—assumed the appearance of victory—his flight from Egypt confirmed his destiny—ruin itself—only elevated him to empire. But if his fortune was great, his genius was transcendent; decision—flashed upon his councils; and it was the same to decide—and to perform. To inferior intellects—his combinations appeared perfectly impossible, his plans perfectly impracticable; but, in his hands simplicity—marked their development, and success—vindicated their adoption. His person—partook of the character of his mind; if the one—never yielded in the cabinet, the other—never bent in the field. Nature—had no obstacle, that he did not surmount, space—no opposition, that he did not spurn; and whether amid Alpine rocks, Arabian sands, or Polar snows, he seemed proof against peril, and empowered with ubiquity! The whole continent—trembled—at beholding the audacity of his designs, and the miracle of their execution. Scepticism—bowed to the prodigies of his performance; romance—assumed the air of history; nor was there ought too incredible for belief, or too fanciful—for expectation, when the world—saw a subaltern of Corsica—waving his imperial flag—over her most ancient capitals. All the visions of antiquity—became commonplaces in his contemplation; kings were his people—nations were his outposts; and he disposed of courts, and crowns, and camps, and churches, and cabinets, as if they were titular dignitaries of the chess-board! Amid all these changes, he stood—immutable—as adamant.

It mattered little, whether in the field, or in the drawing-room—with the mob, or the levee—wearing the jacobin bonnet, or the iron crown—banishing a Braganza, or espousing a Hapsburg—dictating peace on a raft to the czar of Russia, or contemplating defeat—at the gallows of Leipsig—he was still the same military despot!

In this wonderful combination, his affections of literature must not be omitted. The jailer—of the press, he affected the patronage of letters; the proscriber of books, he encouraged philosophy—the persecutor of authors, and the murderer of printers, he yet pretended to the protection of learning! the assassin of Palm, the silencer of De Stael, and the denouncer of Kotzebue, he was the friend of David, the benefactor of De Lille, and sent his academic prize to the philosopher of England. Such a medley of contradictions, and at the same time such an individual consistency, were never united in the same character. A royalist—a republican, and an emperor—a Mohammedan—a catholic and a patron of the synagogue—a subaltern and a sovereign—a traitor and a tyrant—a christian and an infidel—he was, through all his vicissitudes, the same stern, impatient, inflexible original—the same mysterious, incomprehensible self—the man—without a model, and without a shadow.—Phillips.

716. THE BEAUTIES OF NATURE. Pause, for a while, ye travelers on the earth, to contemplate the universe, in which you dwell, and the glory of him, who created it. What a scene of wonders—is here presented to your view! If beheld with a religious eye, what a temple—for the worship of the Almighty! The earth is spread out before you, reposing amidst the desolation of winter, or clad in the verdure of spring—smiling in the beauty of summer, or loaded with autumnal fruit;—opening to an endless variety of beings—the treasures of their Maker's goodness, and ministering subsistence, and comfort to every creature that lives. The heavens, also, declare the glory of the Lord. The sun cometh forth from his chambers—to scatter the shades of night—inviting you to the renewal of your labors—adorning the face of nature—and, as he advances to his meridian brightness, cherishing every herb, and every flower, that springeth from the bosom of the earth. Nor, when he retires again from your view, doth he leave the Creator without a witness. He only hides his own splendor, for a while, to disclose to you a more glorious scene—to show you the immensity of space, filled with worlds unnumbered, that your imaginations may wander, without a limit, in the vast creation of God.

What a field is here opened, for the exercise of every pious emotion! and how irresistibly do such contemplations as these, awaken the sensibility of the soul! Here, is infinite power—to impress you with awe—here is infinite wisdom—to fill you with admiration—here is infinite goodness—to call forth your gratitude, and love. The correspondence between these great objects, and the affections of the human heart, is established by nature itself; and they need only to be placed before us, that every religious feeling may be excited.—Moodie

There is so great a fever in goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accursed; much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news.—Shakspeare.

718. THUNDER STORM ON THE ALPS.

It is the hush of night; and all between [clear,
Thy margin, and the mountains, dusk, yet
Mellow'd, and mingling, yet distinctly seen,
Save darkened Jura, whose capped heights ap-
Precipitously steep; and drawing near, [pear
There breathes—a living fragrance from the shore, [ear,
Of flowers—yet fresh with childhood; on the
Drops the light drip of the suspended awe, [more.
Or chirps the grasshopper—one good-night carol

He is an evening reveller, who makes
His life—an infancy, and sings his fill!
At intervals, some bird—from out the brakes—
Starts into voice, a moment, then, is still.
There seems a floating whisper, on the hill,
But that is fancy, for the starlight dews
All silently, their tears of love instill,
Weeping themselves away, till they infuse,
Deep into Nature's breast, the spirit of her hues.

The sky is changed! and such a change! O night, [strong!
And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous
Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light
Of a dark eye in woman! Far along,
From peak to peak, the rattling crags among,
Leaps the live thunder! not from one lone cloud:
But every mountain—now hath found a tongue,
And Jura answers through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud!

And this is in the night: Most glorious night!
Thou wert not sent for slumber! Let me be
A sharer in thy fierce, and far delight,
A portion of the tempest, and of thee!
How the lit lake shines! a phosphoric sea!
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth!
And now again—'tis black, and now, the glee
Of the loud hills—shakes with its mountain-mirth, [birth.

As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's
Now, where the swift Rhone—cleaves his way between [parted
Heights, which appear as lovers, who have
In hate, whose mining depths—so intervene,
That they can meet no more, though broken-
hearted! [thwarted,
Though in their souls, which thus each other
Love was the very root—of the fond rage,
Which blighted their life's bloom, and then,
departed!

Itself expired, but leaving them an age [wage!
Of years, all winters! war—within themselves to Now, where the quick Rhone thus hath cleft his way, [stand!
The mightiest of the storms hath taken his
For here, not one, but many, make their play,
And fling their thunderbolts from hand to hand,
Flashing and cast around! of all the band,
The brightest through these parted hills hath
His lightnings, as if he did understand, [forked
That in such gaps as desolation worked,
There the hot shaft should blast whatever therein lurked.—Byron.

Earth smiles around, with boundless bounty blest,
And Heaven—beholds its image—in his breast.

719. MATERNAL AFFECTION. Woman's charms are certainly many and powerful.
The expanding rose, just bursting into beauty, has an irresistible bewitchingness; the blooming bride, led triumphantly to the hy-meneal altar, awakens admiration and interest, and the blush of her cheek fills with delight;—but the charm of maternity, is more sublime than all these.

Heaven has imprinted, in the mother's face, something beyond this world, something which claims kindred with the skies,—the angelic smile, the tender look, the waking, watchful eye, which keeps its fond vigil over her slumbering babe.

These are objects, which neither the pencil nor the chisel, can touch, which poetry fails to exalt, which the most eloquent tongue, in vain, would eulogize, and on which all description becomes ineffectual. In the heart of man lies this lovely picture; it lives in his sympathies; it reigns in his affections; his eye looks around in vain for such another object on earth.

Maternity, extatic sound! so twined round our hearts, that they must cease to throb, ere we forget it! 'tis our first love; 'tis part of our religion. Nature has set the mother upon such a pinnacle, that our infant eyes, and arms, are first uplifted to it; we cling to it in manhood; we almost worship it in old age.
He, who can enter an apartment, and behold
the tender babe, feeding on its mother's beauty—nourished by the tide of life, which flows through the generous veins, without a panting bosom and a grateful eye, is no man, but a monster.

720. TO MARY IN HEAVEN.

Thou lingering star, with less'ning ray,

That lov'st to greet the early morn,
Again, thou usher'st in the day,
My Mary, from my soul was torn.
O, Mary! dear departed shade!

Where is thy place of blissful rest?
Seest thou thy lover, lowly laid?

Hear'st thou the groans, that rend his breast?

That sacred hour—can I forget,

Can I forget the hallow'd grove,
Where, by the winding Ayr we met,

To live one day of parting love!

Eternity—will not efface

Those records dear, of transports past;

Thy image, at our last embrace!

Ah! little thought we, 'twas our last!

Ayr, gurgling, kissed his pebbled shore,

O'erhung with wild woods' thick'ning green;

The fragrant birch, and hawthorn hoar,

Twine'd amorous round the raptur'd scene.

The flowers sprang—wanton to be prest,

The birds sang love—on every spray,

Till too, too soon, the glowing west

Proclaim'd the speed of winged day.

Still o'er these scenes my mem'ry wakes,

And fondly broods, with miser care!

Time, but the impression deeper makes,

As streams—their channels deeper wear.

My Mary! dear departed shade!

Where is thy place of blissful rest?

Seest thou thy lover lowly laid?

Hear'st thou the groans that rend his breast?

Ill-doers—are ill-thinkers.

721. RICHARD.

Now—is the winter—of our discontent—
Made glorious summer—by this sun of York ;
And all the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom—of the ocean—buried :
Now, are our brows—bound with victorious wreaths ;

Our bruised arms—hung up for monuments :
Our stern alarms—chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches—to delightful measures :
Grim-visag'd war—hath smooth'd his wrinkled front ;

And now—instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls—of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly—in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.—
But I—that am not shap'd—for sportive tricks,
Nor made, to court an amorous looking-glass ;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's ma-
To strut before a wanton, ambling nymph ; [jesty,
I, that am curtail'd—of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature—by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent, before my time,
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that—so lamely, and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them ;
Why I, in this weak—piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time ;
Unless to spy my shadow—in the sun,
And descant—on mine own deformity ;
And therefore, since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair—well spoken days,
I am determined to prove—a villain,
And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence, and the king,
In deadly hate—the one, against the other :
And if king Edward—be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day—should Clarence closely be mew'd up ;
About a prophecy, which says that G [George]
Of Edward's heir—the murderer shall be. [comes.
Dive, thoughts, down to my soul ; here Clarence

Not have me ! Not love me ! Oh, what have I
Sure, never was lover so strangely misled. [said ?
Rejected ! and just when I hoped to be blessed !
You can't be in earnest ! It must be a jest.

Remember—remember how often I've knelt,
Explicitly telling you all that I felt,
And talked about poison, in accents so wild,
So very like torture, you started—and smiled.

Not have me ! Not love me ! Oh, what have I
All natural nourishment did I not shun ? [done ?
My figure is wasted ; my spirits are lost ; [ghost.
And my eyes are deep sunk, like the eyes of a

Remember, remember—ay, madam, you must—
I once was exceedingly stout, and robust ;
I rode by your palfrey, I came at your call,
And nightly, went with you, to banquet and ball.

Not have me ! Not love me ! Rejected ! Refused !
Sure, never was lover so strangely ill-used !
Consider my presents—I don't mean to boast—
But, madam, consider the money they cost !

Remember you've worn them ; and just can it be
To take all my trinkets, and not to take me ?
Nay, don't throw them at me !—You'll break—
do not start— [heart !

I don't mean my gifts—but you will break my
Not have me ! Not love me ! Not go to the church !
Sure, never was lover so left in the lurch !

My brain is distracted, my feelings are hurt ;
Oh, madam, don't tempt me to call you—a flirt.

Remember my letters ; my passion they told ;
Yes, all sorts of letters, save letters of gold ;
The amount of my notes, too—the notes that I penned,—

Not bank notes—no, truly, I had none to send !

Not have me ! Not love me ! And is it, then

To yield to the terrors of rivalry's clutch. [much

Remember—remember I might call him out ;
But, madam, you are not worth fighting about ;
My sword shall be stainless, in blade, and in hilt ;
I thought you a jewel—I find you—a jilt.

723. DESERTED WIFE.

He comes not—I have watched the moon go down,
But yet, he comes not.—Once, it was not so.

He thinks not, how these bitter tears do flow,
The while he holds his riot in that town.

Yet he will come, and chide, and I shall weep ;
And he will wake my infant from his sleep,
To blend its feeble wailing with my tears.

O ! how I love a mother's watch to keep, [cheers
Over those sleeping eyes, that smile, which
My heart, though sunk in sorrow, fix'd, and deep.

I had a husband once, who loved me ;—now,

He ever wears a frown upon his brow,
And feeds his passion—on a wanton's lip,
As bees, from laurel flowers, a poison sip ;
But yet, I cannot hate—O ! there were hours,

When I could hang, forever, on his eye,
And time, who stole, with silent swiftness by,

Strew'd, as he hurried on, his path with flowers.
I loved him then—he loved me too. My heart

Still finds its fondness kindle, if he smile ;

The memory of our loves—will ne'er depart ;

And though he often sting me with a dart,
Venom'd, and barb'd, and waste upon the vile

Caresses, which his babe and mine should share ;
Though he should spurn me, I will calmly bear

His madness,—and should sickness come, and
Its paralyzing hand upon him, then, [lay

I would, with kindness, all my wrongs repay,
Until the penitent should weep, and say,

How injured, and how faithful I had been !

DISCOVERIES. From time to time, a chosen band, sometimes directed by chance, but more commonly guided by reflection, experiment and research, touches a spring, till then unperceived ; and through what seemed a blank and impenetrable wall,—the barrier to all further progress,—a door is thrown open into some before unexplored hall in the sacred temple of truth. The multitude rushes in, and wonders that the portals could have remained concealed so long. When a brilliant discovery or invention is proclaimed, men are astonished to think how long they had lived on its confines, without penetrating its nature.

722. NO EXCELLENCE WITHOUT LABOR.

The education, moral, and intellectual, of every individual, must be, chiefly, his own work. Rely upon it, that the ancients were right—Quisque suæ fortunæ faber—both in morals, and intellect, we give their final shape to our own characters, and thus become, emphatically, the architects of our own fortunes. How else could it happen, that young men, who have had precisely the same opportunities, should be continually presenting us, with such different results, and rushing to such opposite destinies? Difference of talent will not solve it, because that difference very often is in favor of the disappointed candidate. You shall see, issuing from the walls of the same college—nay, sometimes from the bosom of the same family—two young men, of whom the one—shall be admitted to be a genius of high order, the other, scarcely above the point of mediocrity; yet you shall see the genius sinking and perishing in poverty, obscurity, and wretchedness: while, on the other hand, you shall observe the mediocre, plodding his slow, but sure way—up the hill of life, gaining steadfast footing at every step, and mounting, at length, to eminence and distinction, an ornament to his family, a blessing to his country. Now, whose work is this? Manifestly their own. They are the architects of their respective fortunes. The best seminary of learning, that can open its portals to you, can do no more than to afford you the opportunity of instruction: but it must depend, at last, on yourselves, whether you will be instructed or not, or to what point you will push your instruction. And of this be assured—I speak, from observation, a certain truth: there is no excellence without great labor. It is the fiat of fate, from which no power of genius can absolve you. Genius, unexerted, is like the poor moth that flutters around a candle, till it scorches itself to death. If genius be desirable at all, it is only of that great and magnanimous kind, which, like the condor of South America, pitches from the summit of Chimborazo, above the clouds, and sustains itself, at pleasure, in that empyreal region, with an energy—rather invigorated, than weakened, by the effort. It is this capacity for high and long-continued exertion—this vigorous power of profound and searching investigation—this careering and wide-spreading comprehension of mind, and those long reaches of thought, that “—Pluck bright honor from the pale-faced moon,

Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom line could never touch the ground,
And drag up drowned honor by the locks—”

This is the prowess, and these the hardy achievements, which are to enroll your names among the great men of the earth.—Wirt.

723. LIFE IS REAL.

Tell me not—in mournful numbers,
Life—is but an empty dream!
For the soul is dead—that slumbers,
And things are not—what they seem.

Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave—is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not written—of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end, and way,

But to act, that each to-morrow
Find us farther—than to-day.

Art is long, and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches—to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero—in the strife!

Trust not future, howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead past—bury its dead!
Act!—act in the living present!
Heart—within, and God—o'er head.

Lives of great men—all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footsteps—on the sands of time;

Footsteps, that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwreck'd brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor, and to wait.—Longfellow.

724. DIGNITY OF HUMAN NATURE. In forming our notions of human nature, we are very apt to make a comparison betwixt men, and animals, which are the only creatures, endowed with thought, that fall under our senses. Certainly, this comparison is very favorable to mankind! On the one hand, we see a creature, whose thoughts—are not limited, by the narrow bounds, either of place, or time, who carries his researches—into the most distant regions of this globe, and beyond this globe, to the planets, and heavenly bodies; looks backward—to consider the first origin of the human race; casts his eyes forward—to see the influence of his actions upon posterity, and the judgments which will be formed of his character—a thousand years hence: a creature, who traces causes and effects—to great lengths and intricacy; extracts general principles from particular appearances; improves upon his discoveries, corrects his mistakes, and makes his very errors profitable. On the other hand, we are presented with a creature—the very reverse of this; limited in its observations and reasonings—to a few sensible objects which surround it; without curiosity, without foresight, blindly conducted by instinct, and arriving, in a very short time, at its utmost perfection, beyond which—it is never able to advance a single step. What a difference is there betwixt these creatures! and how exalted a notion must we entertain of the former in comparison of the latter.—Hume.

SURE REWARDS FOR VIRTUE.

There is a morning to the tomb's long night,
A dawn of glory, a reward in heaven,
He shall not gain, who never merited.
If thou didst know the worth of one good deed
In life's last hour, thou wouldst not bid me lose
The power to benefit. If I but save
A drowning fly, I shall not live in vain.

I had rather see some women praised extraordinarily, than to see any of them suffer by detraction.

725. EMMET'S VINDICATION—IN FULL.

My Lords—What have I to say, why sentence of death should not be pronounced on me, according to law? I have nothing to say, that can alter your predetermination, nor that it will become me to say, with any view to the mitigation of that sentence, which you are here to pronounce, and I must abide by. But I have that to say, which interests me more than life, and which you have labored, (as was necessarily your office in the present circumstances of this oppressed country,) to destroy. I have much to say, why my reputation should be rescued—from the load of false accusation and calumny, which has been heaped upon it. I do not imagine that, seated where you are, your minds can be so free from impurity, as to receive the least impression—from what I am going to utter—I have no hopes, that I can anchor my character—in the breast of a court, constituted and trammelled as this is—I only wish, and it is the utmost I expect, that your lordships—may suffer it to float down your memories, untainted by the foul breath of prejudice, until it finds some more hospitable harbor—to shelter it from the storm, by which it is at present buffeted. Was I only to suffer death, after being adjudged guilty by your tribunal—I should bow in silence, and meet the fate that awaits me, without a murmur—but the sentence of the law, which delivers my body to the executioner, will, through the ministry of that law, labor, in its own vindication, to consign my character to obloquy—for there must be guilt somewhere: whether in the sentence of the court, or in the catastrophe, posterity must determine. A man, in my situation, my lords, has not only to encounter the difficulties of fortune, and the force of power over minds, which it has corrupted, or subjugated, but, the difficulties of established prejudice.—The man dies, but his memory lives: that mine may not perish, that it may live, in the respect of my countrymen, I seize upon this opportunity—to vindicate myself from some of the charges alleged against me. When my spirit shall be wafted to a more friendly port; when my shade shall have joined the bands of those martyred heroes, who have shed their blood on the scaffold, and in the field, in defence of their country, and of virtue, this is my hope; I wish that my memory and name—may animate those, who survive me, while I look down, with complacency, on the destruction of that perfidious government, which upholds its domination by blasphemy of the Most High—which displays its power over man, as over the beasts of the forest—which sets man upon his brother, and lifts his hand, in the name of God, against the throat of his fellow, who I believe, or doubt, a little more, or a little less, than the government standard—a government, which is steeled to barbarity by the cries of the orphans, and the tears of the widows which it has made.

[Here, Lord Norbury interrupted Mr. Emmet, saying, that the man and wicked enthusiasts who felt as he did, were not equal to the accomplishment of their wild designs.]

—I appeal to the immaculate God—I swear by the throne of Heaven, before which I must shortly appear—by the blood of the murdered patriots, who have gone before me—that my conduct has been, through all this peril, and all my purposes, governed only, by the convictions which I have uttered, and by no other view, than that of their cure, and the emancipation of my country—from the superhuman oppression, under which she has so long, and too patiently travelled; and that I confidently and assuredly hope, that, will and chimerical as it may appear, there is still union and strength in Ireland to accomplish this noblest enterprise. Of this, I speak with the confidence of intimate knowledge, and with the conviction that appertains to that confidence. Think not, my lord, I say this for the petty gratification of giving you a transitory uneasiness; a man, who never yet raised his voice to assert a lie, will not hazard his character with posterity, by asserting a falsehood on a subject, so important to his country, and on an occasion like this. Yes, my lords, a man who does not wish to have his epitaph written, until his country is liberated, will not leave a weapon in the power of envy; nor a pretence to impeach the probity, which he means to preserve, even in the grave—to which tyranny consigns him.

[Here, he was again interrupted, by the court.]

Again, I say, that what I have spoken, was not intended for your lordship, whose situation I commiserate—rather than envy—my expressions were for my countrymen: if there is a true Irishman present, let my last words cheer him in the hour of his affliction—

[Here, he was again interrupted. Lord Norbury said he did not sit there to hear treason.]

I have always understood it to be the duty of a judge, when a prisoner has been convicted, to pronounce the sentence of the law;

I have, also, understood that judges, sometimes, think it their duty to hear, with patience, and to speak with humanity; to exhort the victim of the laws, and to offer, with tender benignity, his opinions of the motives, by which he was actuated in the crime, of which he had been adjudged guilty; that a judge has thought it his duty so to have done, I have no doubt—but where is the boasted freedom of your institutions, where is the vaunted impartiality, clemency, and mildness of your courts of justice? if an unfortunate prisoner, whom your policy, and not pure justice, is about to deliver into the hands of the executioner, is not suffered to explain his motives, sincerely and truly, and to vindicate the principles, by which he was actuated.

My lords, it may be a part of the system of angry justice, to bow a man's mind by humiliation—to the purposed ignominy of the scaffold; but worse to me than the purposed shame, or the scaffold's terrors, would be the shame of such foul and unfounded imputations—as have been laid against me in this court: you, my lord, are a judge, I am the supposed culprit; I am a man, you are a man, also; by a revolution of power, we might change places, though we never could change characters; if I stand at the bar of this court, and dare not vindicate my character, what a farce is your justice? If I stand at this bar and dare not vindicate my character, how dare you calumniate it? Does the sentence of death, which your unhallowed policy inflicts upon my body, also condemn my tongue to silence, and my reputation to reproach? Your executioner may abridge the period of my existence, but while I exist, I shall not forbear to vindicate my character, and motives—from your aspersions; and as a man to whom fame is dearer than life, I will make the last use of that life, in doing justice to that reputation, which is to live after me, and which is the only legacy I can leave to those I honor and love, and for whom I am proud to perish. As men, my lord, we must appear on the great day, at one common tribunal, and it will then remain—for the searcher of all hearts—to show a collective universe, who was engaged in the most virtuous actions, or actuated by the purest motives—my country's oppressors or—

[Here, he was interrupted, and told to listen to the sentence of the law.]

My lord, will a dying man be denied the legal privilege of exculpating himself, in the eyes of the community, of an undeserved reproach, thrown upon him during his trial, by charging him with ambition, and attempting to cast away, for a paltry consideration, the liberties of his country? Why did your lordship insult me? or rather why insult justice, in demanding of me, why sentence of death should not be pronounced? I know, my lord, that form prescribes that you should ask the question; the form also presumes a right of answering. This, no doubt, may be dispensed with—and so might the whole ceremony of the trial, since sentence was pronounced at the castle, before your jury was empanelled; your lordships are but the priests of the oracle, and I submit; but I insist on the whole of the forms.

[Here the court desired him to proceed.]

I am charged with being an emissary of France! An emissary of France! And for what end? It is alleged that I wished to sell the independence of my country! And for what end? Was this the object of my ambition! And is this the mode by which a tribunal of justice reconciles contradictions? No, I am no emissary; and my ambition was—to hold a place among the deliverers of my country; not in power, nor in profit, but in the glory of the achievement! Sell my country's independence to France! And for what? Was it for a change of masters? No! But for ambition! O, my country, was it personal ambition that could influence me! Had it been the soul of my actions, could I not, by my education and fortune, by the rank and consideration of my family, have placed myself among the proudest of my oppressors? My country was my idol; to it I sacrificed every selfish, every enduring sentiment; and for it, I now offer up my life. O God! No, my lord; I acted as an Irishman, determined on delivering my country—from the yoke of a foreign, and unrelenting tyranny, and from the more galling yoke of a domestic faction, which is its joint partner and perpetrator, in the patrie, for the ignominy of existing with an exterior of splendor, and of conscious depravity. It was the wish of my heart to extricate my country, from this doubly riveted despotism.

I wished to place her independence beyond the reach of any power on earth; I wished to exalt you to that proud station in the world.

Connection with France was indeed intended, but only as far as mutual interest would sanction, or require. Were they to assume any authority, inconsistent with the purest independence, it would be the signal for their destruction; we sought aid, and we sought it as we had assurances we should obtain it; as auxiliaries, in war—and allies, in peace.

Were the French to come as invaders, or enemies, uninvited by the wishes of the people, I should oppose them to the utmost of my strength. Yes, my countrymen, I should advise you to meet them on the beach, with a sword in one hand, and a torch in the other; I would meet them with all the destructive fury of war; and I would animate my countrymen to inundate them in their boats, before they had contaminated the soil of my country. If they succeeded in landing, and if forced to retire before superior discipline, I would dispute every inch of ground, turn every blade of grass, and the last intrenchment of liberty should be my grave. What I could not do myself, if I should fall, I should leave as a last charge to my countrymen to accomplish; because I should feel conscious that life, any more than death, is unprofitable, when a foreign nation holds my country in subjection.

But it was not as an enemy—that the succors of France were to find! I looked indeed for the assistance of France; but I wished to prove to France, and to the world, that Irishmen—deserve to be assisted! That they were indignant at slavery, and ready to assert the independence and liberty of their country.

I wished to procure for my country the guarantee, which Washington procured for America. To procure an aid, which, by its example, would be as important as its valor; disciplined, gallant, pregnant with science and experience; who would perceive the good, and polish the rough points of our character; they would come to us as strangers, and leave us as friends, after sharing in our perils, and elevating our destiny. These were my objects, not to receive new task-masters, but to expel old tyrants; these were my views, and these only became Irishmen. It was for these ends I sought aid from France, because France, even as an enemy, could not be more implacable than the enemy already in the bosom of my country.

[Here he was interrupted by the court.]

I have been charged—with that importance in the efforts—to emancipate my country, as to be considered the key-stone of the combination of Irishmen, or, as your lordship expressed it, “the life and blood of conspiracy.” You do me honor over-much: You have given to the subaltern—all the credit of a superior. There are men engaged in this conspiracy, who are not only superior to me, but even to your own conceptions of yourself, my lord; men, before the splendor of whose genius and virtues, I should bow with respectful deference, and who would think themselves dishonored to be called—your friend—who would not disgrace themselves by shaking your blood-stained hand—

[Here he was interrupted.]

What, my lord, shall you tell me, on the passage to that scaffold, which that tyranny, of which you are only the intermediary executioner, has erected for my murder,—that I am accountable for all the blood that has, and will be shed, in this struggle of the oppressed—against the oppressor?—shall you tell me this—and must I be so very a slave—as not to repel it?

I do not fear to approach the omnipotent Judge, to answer for the conduct of my whole life; and am I to be appalled and falsified by a mere remnant of mortality here? by you too, who, if it were possible to collect all the innocent blood that you have shed in your unhallowed ministry, in one great reservoir, your lordship might swim in it.

[Here the judge interfered.]

Let no man dare, when I am dead, to charge me with dishonor! let no man attain my memory, by believing that I could have engaged in any cause but that of my country's liberty and independence; or, that I could have become the pliant minion of power, in the oppression, or the miseries, of my countrymen. The proclamation of the provisional government speaks for our views; no reference can be torture I from it, to countenance barbarity, or debasement at home, or subjection, humiliation, or treachery from abroad; I would not have submitted to a foreign oppressor, for the same reason that I would not resist the foreign and domestic oppressor; in the dignity of freedom, I would have fought upon the threshold of my country, and its enemy should enter—only by passing over my lifeless corpse. Am I, who lived but for my country, and who have subjected myself to the dangers of the jealous and watchful oppressor, and the bondage of the grave, only to give my countrymen their rights, and my country her independence, and am I to be loaded with calumny, and not suffered to resent or repel it—No, God forbid!

If the spirits—of the illustrious dead—participate in the concerns, and cares of those, who are dear to them—in this transitory life—O ever dear—and venerated shade—of my departed father, look down with scrutiny, upon the conduct of your suffering son; and see if I have, even for a moment, deviated from those principles of morality and patriotism, which it was your care to instill into my youthful mind; and for which I am now to offer up my life.

My lords, you are impatient for the sacrifice—the blood, which you seek, is not concealed by the artificial terrors which surround your victim; it circulates warmly and untroubled, through the channels, which God created for noble purposes, but which you are bent to destroy, for purposes so grievous, that they cry to heaven.—Be yet patient! I have but a few words more to say.—I am going to my cold—and silent grave; my lump of life—is nearly extinguished; my race is run: the grave opens to receive me, and I sink into its bosom! I have but one request to ask at my departure from this world,—it is the charity of its silence!—Let no man write my epitaph: for, as no man, who knows my motives, dare now vindicate them, let not prejudice or ignorance asperse them. Let them, and me, repose in obscurity, and peace, and my tomb remain unadorned, until other times, and other men, can do justice to my character: when my country takes her place among the nations of the earth, then—and not till then—let my epitaph be written.—I have done.

726. LUCY.

Three years she grew, in sun, and shower,
Then, Nature said, “a lovelier flower,

On earth, was never sown;
This child I, to myself, will take;
She shall be mine, and I will make—
A lady of my own.

Myself will, to my darling, be
Both law, and impulse: and with me,
The girl, on rock and plain,
In earth, and heaven, in glade, and bower,
Shall feel an over-seeing power,
To kindle, and restrain.

She shall be sportive, as the fawn,
That, wild with glee, across the lawn,
Or up the mountain, springs;
And hers, shall be the breathing balm,
And hers, the silence, and the calm—
Of mute, insensate things.

The floating clouds—their state shall lend
To her; for her—the willow bend;
Nor, shall she fail to see,
Even in the motions of the storm,
Grace, that shall mould the maiden's form,
By silent sympathy.

The stars of midnight—shall be dear
To her; and she shall lean her ear,
In many a secret place,
Where rivulets dance their wayward round;
And beauty, born of murmuring sound,
Shall pass into her face.

And vital feelings of delight—
Shall rear her form—to stately height,
Her virgin bosom swell;
Such thoughts, to Lucy, I will give,
While she, and I, together live,
Here, in this happy dell.”

Thus Nature spake.—The work was done—
How soon my Lucy's race was run!

She died,—and left me
This heath, this calm, and quiet scene;
The memory—of what has been,

And never more—will be—Wordsworth.

When thou doest good, do it because it is good; not because men esteem it so. When thou avoidest evil, flee from it because it is evil; not because men speak against it. Be honest for the love of honesty, and thou shalt be uniformly so. He that doeth it without principle—is wavering.

727. CICERO'S ORATION AGAINST VERRES. I ask now, Verres, what have you to advance against this charge? Will you pretend to deny it? Will you pretend that anything false, that even anything aggravated—is alleged against you? Had any prince, or any state, committed the same outrage against the privileges of Roman citizens, should we not think we had sufficient reason—for declaring immediate war against them? What punishment, then, ought to be inflicted on a tyrannical and wicked prætor, who dared, at no greater distance than Sicily, within sight of the Italian coast, to put to the infamous death of crucifixion, that unfortunate and innocent citizen, Publius Gavius Cosanus, only for his having asserted his privilege of citizenship, and declared his intention of appealing to the justice of his country, against a cruel oppressor, who had unjustly confined him in prison, at Syracuse, whence he had just made his escape? The unhappy man, arrested as he was going to embark for his native country, is brought before the wicked prætor. With eyes darting fury, and a countenance distorted with cruelty, he orders the helpless victim of his rage to be stripped, and rods to be brought; accusing him, but without the least shadow of evidence, or even of suspicion, of having come to Sicily as a spy. It was in vain, that the unhappy man cried out, "I am a Roman citizen, I have served under Lucius Pretius, who is now at Panormus, and will attest my innocence." The bloodthirsty prætor, deaf to all that he could urge in his own defence, ordered the infamous punishment to be inflicted. Thus, fathers, was an innocent Roman citizen publicly mangled, with scourging; whilst the only words he uttered amidst his cruel sufferings were, "I am a Roman citizen!" With these he hoped to defend himself from violence, and infamy. But of so little service was this privilege to him, that while he was asserting his citizenship, the order was given for his execution,—for his execution upon the cross!

O liberty! O sound, once delightful to every Roman ear! O sacred privilege of Roman citizenship! once—sacred, now—trampled upon! But what then! is it come to this! Shall an inferior magistrate, a governor, who holds his power of the Roman people, in a Roman province, within sight of Italy, bind, scourge, torture with fire and red-hot plates of iron, and at last put to the infamous death of the cross, a Roman citizen! Shall neither the cries of innocence, expiring in agony, nor the tears of pitying spectators, nor the majesty of the Roman commonwealth, nor the justice of his country, restrain the licentious and wanton cruelty of a monster, who, in confidence of his riches, strikes at the root of liberty and sets mankind at defiance!

VANITY.

—O, vanity,

How are thy painted beauties doted on,
By light and empty idiots! how pursued
With open and extended appetite!
How they do sweat and run themselves from breath,
Raised on their toes, to catch thy airy forms,
Still turning giddy, till they reel like drunkards,
That buy the merry madness of one hour
With the long irksomeness of following time.

Time flies, and never dies.

728. MOLOCH'S ORATION FOR WAR.

My sentence—is for open war: of wiles,
More unexpert, I boast not; them, let those Contrive, who need; or, when they need; not now;
For while they sit contriving, shall the rest,
Millions, that stand in arms, and longing, wait
The signal to ascend, sit lingering here,
Heaven's fugitives, and for their dwelling-place,
Accept this dark, opprobrious den of shame,
The prison of his tyranny, who reigns
By our delay! No,—let us rather choose,
Armed with hell-flames, and fury, all at once,
O'er heaven's high towers, to force resistless way,
Turning our tortures, into horrid arms—
Against the torturer; when, to meet the noise
Of his almighty engine, he shall hear
Infernal thunder; and, for lightning, see
Black fire and horror-shot, with equal rage,
Among his angels: and his throne, itself,
Mixed with Tartarean sulphur, and strange fire,
His own invented torments.—But, perhaps,
The way seems difficult, and steep to scale,
With upright wing, against a higher foe.
Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench,
Of that forgetful lake—benumb not still,
That in our proper motion, we ascend
Up to our native seat: descent, and fall,
To us—is adverse. Who, but felt of late,
When the fierce foe—hung on our broken rear,
Insulting, and pursued us, through the deep,
With what compulsion, and laborious fight,
We sunk thus low!—The ascent is easy then:
The event is feared:—should we again provoke
Our stronger, some worse way his wrath may find,
To our destruction; if there be, in hell,
Fear to be worse destroyed.—What can be worse,
Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemn'd
In this abhorred deep—to utter wo;
Where pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end,
The vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour
Call us to penance?—More destroyed than thus,
We should be quite abolished, and expire.
What fear we then?—What doubt we to incense
His utmost ire! which, to his height, enraged,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce
To nothing this essential; happier far,
Than miserable to have eternal being;
Or, if our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are, at worst,
On this side nothing; and, by proof, we feel
Our power sufficient,—to disturb his heaven,
And, with perpetual inroad, to alarm,
Though inaccessible, his fatal throne;
Which, if not victory, is yet revenge.—Milton.

THIS WORLD.

"'Tis a sad world," said one, "a world of woe,
Where sorrow—reigns supreme." Yet from my
The all-sustaining hope did not depart; [heart
But, to its impulse true, I answered—"No!
The world hath much of good—nor seldom, joy
Over our spirits—broods with radiant wing;
Gladness from grief, and life from death may Treasures are ours the grave cannot destroy; [spring;
Then chide not harshly—our instructress stern,
Whose solemn lessons—wisdom bids us learn "

729. INFLUENCE OF THE WISE AND GOOD.

The relations between man, and man, cease not with life. They leave behind them their memory, their example, and the effects of their actions. Their influence still abides with us. Their names, and characters dwell in our thoughts, and hearts—we live, and commune with them, in their writings. We enjoy the benefit of their labors—our institutions have been founded by them—we are surrounded by the works of the dead. Our knowledge, and our arts are the fruit of their toil—our minds have been formed by their instructions—we are most intimately connected with them, by a thousand dependencies.

Those, whom we have loved in life, are still objects of our deepest, and holiest affections. Their power over us remains. They are with us in our solitary walks; and their voices speak to our hearts in the silence of midnight. Their image is impressed upon our dearest recollections, and our most sacred hopes. They form an essential part of our treasure laid up in heaven. For, above all, we are separated from them, but for a little time. We are soon to be united with them. If we follow in the path of those we have loved, we, too, shall soon join the innumerable company of "the spirits of just men made perfect." Our affections, and our hopes, are not buried in the dust, to which we commit the poor remains of mortality. The blessed retain their remembrance, and their love for us in heaven; and we will cherish our remembrance, and our love for them, while on earth.

Creatures of imitation, and sympathy as we are, we look around us for support, and countenance, even in our virtues. We recur for them, most securely, to the examples of the dead. There is a degree of insecurity, and uncertainty about living worth. The stamp has not yet been put upon it, which precludes all change, and seals it up as a just object of admiration for future times. There is no greater service, which a man of commanding intellect can render his fellow creatures, than that of leaving behind him an unspotted example.

If he do not confer upon them this benefit; if he leave a character, dark with vices in the sight of God, but dazzling qualities in the view of men; it may be that all his other services had better have been forborne, and he had passed inactive, and unnoticed through life. It is a dictate of wisdom, therefore, as well as feeling, when a man, eminent for his virtues and talents, has been taken away, to collect the riches of his goodness, and add them to the treasury of human improvement. The true christian—liveth not for himself; and it is thus, in one respect, that he dieth not for himself.—Norton.

730. HUMAN LIFE.

I walk'd the fields—at morning's prime,
The grass—was ripe for mowing;
The sky-lark—sung his matin chime,
And all—was brightly glowing.

"And thus," I cried, the "ardent boy,
His pulse, with rapture beating,
Deems life's inheritance—his joy—
The future—proudly greeting."

I wandered forth at noon:—alas!
On earth's material bosom

The scythe—had left the withering grass,
And stretch'd the fading blossom.

And thus, I thought with many a sigh,
The hopes—we fondly cherish,
Like flowers, which blossom, but to die,
Seem only born—to perish.

Once more, at eve, abroad I stray'd,
Through lonely hay-fields musing;
While every breeze, that round me play'd,
Rich fragrance—was diffusing.

The perfumed air, the hush of eve,
To purer hopes appearing,
O'er thoughts perchance too prone to grieve,
Scatter'd the balm of healing.

For thus "the actions of the just,"

When Memory hath enshrined them,
E'en from the dark and silent dust

Their odor leaves behind them.—Barton.

731. PUBLIC FAITH. To expatiate on the value of public faith—may pass—with some men, for declamation—to such men, I have nothing to say. To others, I will urge—can any circumstance mark upon a people, more turpitude and debasement? Can anything tend more to make men think themselves mean, or degrade, to a lower point, their estimation of virtue, and their standard of action?

It would not merely demoralize mankind, it tends to break all the ligaments of society, to dissolve that mysterious charm which attracts individuals to the nation, and to inspire, in its stead, a repulsive sense of shame and disgust.

What is patriotism? Is it a narrow affection for the spot, where a man was born? Are the very clods, where we tread, entitled to this ardent preference, because they are greener? No, sir, this is not the character of the virtue, and it soars higher for its object. It is an extended self-love, mingling with all the enjoyments of life, and twisting itself with the minutest filaments of the heart.

It is thus—we obey the laws of society, because they are the laws of virtue. In their authority we see, not the array of force and terror, but the venerable image of our country's honor. Every good citizen makes that honor his own, and cherishes it, not only as precious, but as sacred. He is willing to risk his life in its defence, and is conscious, that he gains protection while he gives it. For, what rights of a citizen will be deemed inviolable, when a state renounces the principles, that constitute their security?

Or, if this life should not be invaded, what would its enjoyments be in a country, odious in the eyes of strangers, and dishonored in his own? Could he look—with affection and veneration, to such a country as his parent? The sense of having one—would die within him; he would blush for his patriotism, if he retained any, and justly, for it would be a vice. He would be a banished man—in his native land.—Fisher Ames.

If thou well observe

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught,
In what thou eat'st and drink'st, seeking from thence
Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight,
Till many years over thy head return:
So mayst thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap, to be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd, in death mature.

732. POLITICAL CORRUPTION. We are apt to treat the idea of our own corruptibility, as utterly visionary, and to ask, with a grave affectation of dignity—what! do you think a member of congress can be corrupted! Sir, I speak, what I have long and deliberately considered, when I say, that since man was created, there never has been a political body on the face of the earth, that would not be corrupted under the same circumstances. Corruption steals upon us, in a thousand insidious forms, when we are least aware of its approaches.

Of all the forms, in which it can present itself, the bribery of office—is the most dangerous, because it assumes the guise of patriotism—to accomplish its fatal sorcery. We are often asked, where is the evidence of corruption! Have you seen it! Sir, do you expect to see it! You might, as well, expect to see the embodied forms of pestilence, and famine—stalking before you, as to see the latent operations of this insidious power. We may walk amidst it, and breathe its contagion, without being conscious of its presence.

All experience teaches us—the irresistible power of temptation, when vice—assumes the form of virtue. The great enemy of mankind—could not have consummated his infernal scheme, for seduction of our first parents, but for the disguise, in which he presented himself. Had he appeared as the devil, in his proper form: had the spear of Ithuriel—disclosed the naked deformity of the fiend of hell, the inhabitants of paradise would have shrunk with horror from his presence.

But he came—as the insinuating serpent, and presented a beautiful apple, the most delicious fruit in all the garden. He told his glowing story to the unsuspecting victim of his guile. “It can be no crime—to taste of this delightful fruit. It will disclose to you the knowledge of good, and evil. It will raise you to an equality with the angels.”

Such, sir, was the process; and, in this simple, but impressive narrative, we have the most beautiful and philosophical illustration of the frailty of man, and the power of temptation, that could possibly be exhibited. Mr. Chairman, I have been forcibly struck, with the similarity, between our present situation, and that of Eve, after it was announced, that Satan was on the borders of paradise. We, too, have been warned, that the enemy is on our borders.

But God forbid that the similitude should be carried any farther. Eve, conscious of her innocence, sought temptation and defied it. The catastrophe is too fatally known to us all. She went, “with the blessings of heaven on her head, and its purity in her heart,” guarded by the ministry of angels—she returned covered with shame, under the heavy denunciation of heaven’s everlasting curse.

Sir, it is innocence—that temptation conquers. If our first parent, pure as she came from the hand of God, was overcome by the seductive power, let us not imitate her fatal rashness, seeking temptation, when it is in our power to avoid it. Let us not vainly confide in our own infallibility. We are liable to be corrupted. To an ambitious man, an honorable office will appear as beautiful and fascinating—as the apple of paradise.

I admit, sir, that ambition is a passion, at once the most powerful and the most useful.

Without it, human affairs would become a mere stagnant pool. By means of his patronage, the president addresses himself in the most irresistible manner, to this the noblest and strongest of our passions. All that the imagination can desire—honor, power, wealth, ease, are held out as the temptation. Man was not made to resist such temptation. It is impossible to conceive,—Satan himself could not devise, a system, which would more infallibly introduce corruption and death into our political Eden. Sir, the angels fell from heaven with less temptation.—McDuffie.

733. CATO’S SOLILOQUY ON IMMORTALITY.

It must be so—Plato, thou reasonest well!

Else, whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire, This longing—after immortality?

Or, whence—this secret dread, and inward horror, Of falling—into nought? Why—shrinks the soul—

Back on herself, and startles—at destruction?—

’Tis the Divinity—that stirs within us:

’Tis Heaven itself, that points out—a hereafter, And intimates—Eternity—to man.

Eternity!—thou pleasing—dreadful thought!

Through what variety—of untried being, [pass!

Through what new scenes, and changes, must we

The wide, the unbounded prospect lies before me;

But shadows, clouds, and darkness, rest upon it.—

Here—will I hold. If there’s a Power above us,

(And that there is, all Nature cries aloud—

Through all her works,) He must delight in virtue:

And that, which He delights in must be happy.

But when? or where? This world—was made for Cesar?

I’m weary of conjectures—this—must end them.—

[Laying his hand on his sword.

Thus—I am doubly armed. My death—and life,

My bane—and antidote, are both before me.

This—in a moment, brings me to an end;

But this—informs me—I shall never die.

The soul, secured in her existence, smiles—

At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.—

The stars—shall fade away, the sun himself

Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years;

But thou shalt flourish—in immortal youth,

Unhurt—amidst the war of elements,

The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds.

INLENES— is the badge of gentry, the bane of body and mind, the nurse of naughtiness, the step-mother of discipline, the chief author of all mischief, one of the seven deadly sins, the cushion upon which the devil chiefly reposes, and a great cause not only of melancholy, but of many other diseases: for the mind is naturally active; and if it be not occupied about some honest business, it rushes into mischief, or sinks into melancholy.

GRAVE OF THE RENOWNED.

When, to the grave, we follow the renowned

For valor, virtue, science, all we love, [beam

And all we praise; for worth, whose noontide

Mends our ideas of ethereal pow’rs,

Dream we, that lustre of the moral world

Goes out in stench, and rottenness the close?

Why was he wise to know, and warm to praise,

And strenuous to transcribe, in human life,

The mind almighty! could it be that fate,

Just when the lineaments began to shine,

Should snatch the draught, and blot it out forever.

734. DUTIES OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Fellow-citizens: let us not retire from this occasion, without a deep and solemn conviction of the duties, which have devolved upon us. This lovely land, this glorious liberty, these benign institutions, the dear purchase of our fathers, are ours; ours to enjoy, ours to preserve, ours to transmit. Generations past, and generations to come, hold us responsible for this sacred trust. Our fathers, from behind—admonish us with their anxious, paternal voices; posterity—calls out to us from the bosom of the future; the world turns hither its solicitous eyes; all, all conjure us to act wisely, and faithfully, in the relation which we sustain. We can never, indeed, pay the debt which is upon us; but, by virtue, by morality, by religion, by the cultivation of every good principle, and every good habit, we may hope to enjoy the blessing, through our day, and leave it, unimpaired, to our children.

Let us feel deeply, how much of what we are, and what we possess, we owe to this liberty, and to these institutions of government. Nature has, indeed, given us a soil, which yields bounteously—to the hands of industry; the mighty and fruitful ocean is before us, and the skies, over our heads, shed health and vigor. But what are lands, and seas, and skies—to civilized man, without society, without knowledge, without morals, without religious culture; and how can these be enjoyed, in all their extent, and all their excellence, but under the protection of wise institutions, and a free government! Fellow-citizens, there is not one of us here present, who does not, at this moment, and at every moment, experience, in his own condition, and in the condition of those most near and dear to him, the influence, and the benefits—of this liberty, and these institutions. Let us then, acknowledge the blessing; let us feel it deeply, and powerfully; let us cherish a strong affection for it, and resolve to maintain, and perpetuate it. The blood of our fathers, let it not have been shed in vain; the great hope of posterity, let it not be blasted.

The striking attitude, too, in which we stand to the world around us,—cannot be altogether omitted here. Neither individuals, nor nations—can perform their part well, until they understand, and feel its importance, and comprehend, and justly appreciate, all the duties belonging to it. It is not to inflate national vanity, nor to swell a light and empty feeling of self-importance; but it is, that we may judge justly of our situation and of our duties, that I earnestly urge this consideration of our position, and our character among the nations of the earth.

It cannot be denied, but by those who would dispute against the sun, that with America, and in America, a new era commences in human affairs. This era is distinguished by free representative governments, by entire religious liberty, by improved systems of national intercourse, by a newly awakened and an unquenchable spirit of free inquiry, and by a diffusion of knowledge through the community, such as has been before, altogether unknown, and unheard of. America, America, our country, fellow-citizens, our own dear and native land, is inseparably connected, fast bound up, in fortune, and by fate, with these great interests. If they fall, we fall with them; if they stand, it will be because we have upheld them.

Let us contemplate, then, this connection, which binds the posterity of others to our own; and let us manfully discharge all the duties it imposes. If we cherish the virtues, and the principles of our fathers, Heaven will assist us to carry on the work of human liberty, and human happiness. Auspicious omens cheer us. Great examples are before us. Our firmament now shines brightly upon our path. Washington is in the clear, upper sky. Adams, Jefferson, and other stars have joined the American constellation; they circle round their center, and the heavens beam with new light. Beneath this illumination, let us walk the course of life; and, at its close, devoutly commend our beloved country, the common parent of us all, to the divine benignity.—Webster.

735. LANDING OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

The breaking waves—dashed high
On a stern—and rock-bound coast,
And the woods—against a stormy sky,
Their giant branches—tossed;
And the heavy night—hung dark—
The hills—and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles—moored their bark
On the wild—New England shore.

Not—as the conqueror—comes,
They, the true-hearted, came,
Not with the roll—of the stirring drums,
And the trumpet—that sings of fame.

Not—as the flying—come,
In silence,—and in fear;
They shook—the depth—of the desert's gloom,
With their hymns of lofty cheer.

Amidst the storm—they sang,
And the stars—heard, and the sea;
And the sounding aisles—of the dim woods rang
To the anthem—of the free.

The ocean-eagle—soared
From his nest—by the white wave's foam,
And the roeking pines—of the forest roared;
This—was their welcome home.

There were men—with hoary hair,
Amidst that pilgrim band,
Why had they come—to wither there,
Away—from their childhood's land?

There was woman's—fearless eye,
Lit—by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow, serenely high,
And the fiery heart—of youth.

What—sought they—thus, afar?
Bright jewels—of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?
They sought—a faith's pure shrine!

Aye, call it holy ground,
The soil—where first they trod! [found—
They have left, unstained—what there—they Freedom—to worship God!—Hemans.

'Twas Slander—filled her mouth with lying words,
Slander, the foulest whelp of Sin. The man
In whom this spirit entered—was undone.
His tongue—was set on fire of hell, his heart
Was black as death, his legs—were faint with haste
To propagate the lie—his soul had framed;
His pillow—was the peace of families
Destroyed, the sigh of innocence reproached,
Broken friendships, and the strife of brotherhoods.
Yet did he spare his sleep, and hear the clock
Number the midnight watches, on his bed,
Devising mischief more; and early rose,
And made most hellish meals of good men's names

736. THE PILGRIMS, AND THEIR DESTINY. Methinks I see it now;—that one, solitary, adventurous vessel, the Mayflower—of a forlorn hope, freighted—with the prospects of a future state, and bound—across the unknown sea. I behold it pursuing, with a thousand misgivings, the uncertain, the tedious voyage. Suns rise—and set, and weeks, and months—pass, and winter—surprises them on the deep, but brings them not—the sight—of the wished-for shore. I see them now, scantily supplied with provisions, crowded, almost to suffocation, in their ill-stored prison, delayed by calms, pursuing a circuitous route,—and now, driven in fury, before the raging tempest, on the high and giddy waves. The awful voice of the storm—howls through the rigging. The laboring masts—seem straining from their base; the dismal sound of the pump—is heard—the ship leaps, as it were, madly, from billow to billow; the ocean breaks, and settles with engulfing floods—over the floating deck, and beats, with deadening weight, against the staggered vessel. I see them escaped from these perils, pursuing their all but desperate undertaking, and landed, at last, after a five months' passage, on the ice-clad rocks of Plymouth,—weak, and weary from the voyage,—poorly armed, scantily provisioned, depending on the charity of their ship-master—for a draft of beer on board, drinking nothing but water on shore,—without shelter,—without means,—surrounded by hostile tribes. Shut, now, the volume of history, and tell me, on any principle of human probability, what shall be the fate of this handful of adventurers? Tell me, man of military science, in how many months were they all swept off—by the thirty savage tribes, enumerated within the early limits of New England? Tell me, politician, how long did this shadow of a colony, on which your conventions and treaties had not smiled, languish on the distant coast? Student of history, compare for me—the baffled projects, the deserted settlements, the abandoned adventures, of other times, and find the parallel of this. Was it the winter's storm, beating upon the houseless heads of women and children; was it hard labor and spare meals; was it disease,—was it the tomahawk; was it the deep malady of a blighted hope, a ruined enterprise, and a broken heart, aching in its last moments, at the recollection of the loved and left, beyond the sea; was it some, or all of these united, that hurried this forsaken company to their melancholy fate? And is it possible, that neither of these causes, that not all combined, were able to blast this bud of hope? Is it possible, that from a beginning so feeble, so frail, so worthy, not so much of admiration as of pity, there has gone forth a progress so steady, a growth so wonderful, a reality so important, a promise yet to be fulfilled, so glorious?—Everett.

737. TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM PENN. William Penn—stands the first, among the law-givers, whose names, and deeds are recorded in history. Shall we compare with him Lycurgus, Solon, Romulus, those founders of military commonwealths, who organized their citizens in dreadful array—against the rest of their species! taught them to consider their fellow-men as barbarians, and themselves as alone worthy to rule over the earth? What benefit did mankind derive from their boasted institutions? Interrogate the shades of those who fell in the mighty contests, between Athens and Lacedaemon, between Carthage and Rome, and between Rome and the rest of the universe. But see our William Penn, with weaponless hands, sitting down, peaceably, with his followers, in the midst of savage nations, whose only occupation was shedding the blood of their fellow-men, disarming them by his justice, and teaching them, for the first time, to view a stranger without distrust. See them bury their tomahawks, in his presence, so deep, that man shall never be able to find them again. See them under the shade of the thick groves of Quaunnoek, extend the bright chain of friendship, and promise to preserve it, as long as the sun, and moon shall endure. See him, then, with his companions, establishing his commonwealth on the sole basis of religion, morality, and universal love, and adopting, as the fundamental maxims of his government, the rule handed down to us from HEAVEN, "Glory to God on high, and on earth peace, and good will to all men."

Here was a spectacle—for the potentates of the earth to look upon, an example for them to imitate. But the potentates the earth did not see; or, if they saw, they turned away their eyes from the sight; they did not hear; or, if they heard, they shut their ears against the voice.

The character of William Penn alone, sheds a never-fading lustre upon our history. No other state in this Union can boast of such an illustrious founder; none began their social career, under auspices so honorable to humanity. Every trait of the life of that great man, every fact, and anecdote, of those golden times, will furnish many an interesting subject for the fancy of the novelist, and the enthusiasm of the poet.—Duponceau.

738. WOLSEY'S SOLILOQUY ON AMBITION.

Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness! This—is the state of man: To-day, he puts forth The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow, blossoms, And bears his blushing honors—thick upon him; The third day, comes a frost, a killing frost; And, when he thinks, good, easy man, full surely His greatness is a ripening, nips his root; And then he falls, as I do.

I have ventur'd, Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders, These many summers—in a sea of glory, But far beyond my depth; my high-blown pride At length—broke under me; and now has left me, Weary, and old with service, to the mercy Of a rude stream, that must forever—hide me. Vain pomp, and glory of this world, I hate you! I feel my heart now open'd.

O! how wretched Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favors! There are, betwixt that smile—he would aspire to, That sweet aspect of princes, and his ruin, More pangs and fears, than war or women have; And when he falls, he falls, like Lucifer, Never—to rise again.—Shakspeare.

Meditation—here— May think down hours—to moments; here, the May give a useful lesson—to the head, [heart And learning, wiser grow—without his books.

739. BASQUE GIRL, OR LOVE'S SACRIFICE.

'Twas one of those sweet spots, which seem just
For lovers' meeting, or, for minstrel haunts—made
The maiden's blush—would look so beautiful,
By those white roses, and the poet's dream,
Would be so soothing, lull'd by the low notes,
The birds sing—to the leaves, whose soft reply—
Is murmur'd by the wind : the grass beneath,
Is full of wild flowers, and the cypress boughs
Have twined o'erhead, graceful, and close as love.
The sun—is shining cheerfully, though scarce his
May pierce—through the dim shade, yet, still, [rays
Some golden hues are glancing o'er the trees,
And the blue flood is gliding by, as bright,
As hope's first smile. All, lingering, stayed to Upon this Eden—of the painter's art, [gaze
And looking on its loveliness, forgot—
The crowded world—around them! But a spell,
Stronger than the green landscape—fixed the
The spell—of woman's beauty! By a beech, [eye—
Whose long dark shadow—fell upon the stream,
There stood a radiant girl! her chestnut hair—
(One bright gold tint was on it)—loosely fell
In large rich curls—upon a neck, whose snow
And grace—were like the swan's : she wore the
Of her own village, and her small white feet [garb
And slender ankles, delicate, as carved
From Indian ivory—were bare.—the turf [stood!
Seem'd scarce to feel their pressure. There she
Her head—leant upon her arm, the beech's trunk
Supporting her slight figure, and one hand,
Press'd to her heart, as if to still its throbs!
You never might forget that face.—so young,
So fair, yet trac'd—with such deep characters
O' inward wretchedness! The eyes were dim
With tears, on the dark lashes : still, the lip
Could not quite lose—its own accustomed smile,
Even by that pale cheek—it kept its arch,
And tender playfulness : you look'd, and said,
What can have shadow'd—such a sunny brow?
There is so much of natural happiness,
In that bright countenance, it seems but formed,
For Spring's light sunbeams, or yet lighter dews.
You turned away—then came—and look'd again,
Watching the pale, and silent loveliness,
Till even sleep—was haunted by that image.
There was a sever'd chain upon the ground—
Ah! love is e'en more fragile than its gifts!
A tress of raven hair!—oh! only those,
Whose souls have felt this one idolatry.
Can tell—how precious—is the slightest thing,
Affection gives, and hallows! A dead flower
Will long be kept, remembrancer of looks,
That made each leaf a treasure. The tree
Had two slight words—graven upon its stem—
The broken heart's last record—of its faith—
“Adieu Henri!”

I learnt the hist'ry of the lovely picture :
It was a peasant girl's, whose soul was given
To one—as far above her, as the pine—
Towers o'er the lovely violet ; yet still
She lov'd, and was belov'd again,—ere yet
The many trammels of the world—were flung
Around a heart, whose first and latest pulse, Throb'd—but for beauty : him, the young, the brave,
Chivalrous prince, whose name, in after years,

A nation—was to worship—that young heart—
Beat with its first wild passion—that pure feeling,
Life only once may know. I will not dwell
On how affection's bark was launch'd, and lost :
Love, thou hast hopes, like summer's—short,
and bright

Moments of ecstasy, and maddening dreams,
Intense, delicious throbs! But happiness
Is not for thee. If ever thou hast known
Quiet, yet deep enjoyment, 'tis, or ere
Thy presence is confessed ; but, once reveal'd,
We bow us down—in passionate devotion,
Vow'd at thy altar; then the serpents wake,
That coil around thy votaries—hopes that make
Tears—burning arrows—lingering jealousy,
And last, worst poison, of thy cup—neglect.

It matters little, how she was forgotten,
Or what she felt—a woman—can but weep.
She pray'd her lover, but to say—farewell,—
To meet her, by the river, where such hours
Of happiness had passed, and said, she knew
How much she was beneath him ; but she pray'd,
That he would look upon her face—once more !

He sought the spot,—upon the beechen tree
“Adieu Henri” was given—and his heart—
Felt cold—within him! He turned to the wave,
And there—the beautiful peasant floated—Death
Had seal'd—“Love's—sacrifice!”

740. HOME.

There is a land, of every land the pride,
Belov'd by heaven—o'er all the world beside ;
Where brighter suns—dispense serenest light,
And milder moons emparadise the night ;
A land of beauty, virtue, valor, truth,
Time tutored age, and love exalted youth.
The wandering mariner, whose eyes explore
The wealthiest isles, the most enchanting shores,
Views not a realm—so beautiful and fair,
Nor breathes a spirit of a purer air ;
In every clime—the magnet of his soul,
Touch'd by remembrance, trembles to that pole ;
For in this land—of heaven's peculiar grace,
The heritage—of nature's noblest race,
There is a spot of earth—supremely blest,
A dearer, sweeter spot—than all the rest,
Where man, creation's tyrant, casts aside
His sword, and sceptre, pageantry, and pride ;
Within his softened looks, benignly blend
The sire, the son, the husband, father, friend :
Here, woman reigns ; the mother, daughter, wife,
Strews, with fresh flowers, the narrow way of
In the clear heaven of her delightful eye, [life :
An angel guard of loves and graces lie ;
Around her knees, domestic duties meet,
And fire-side pleasures gambol at her feet.
Where shall that land, that spot of earth be found?
Art thou a man? a patriot? look around :
Oh! thou shalt find, howe'er thy footsteps roam,
That land—thy country, and that spot—thy home!
He, who, malignant, tears an absent friend,
Or, when attack'd by others, don't defend :
Who trivial bursts of laughter strives to raise,
And counts of prating petulance the praise ;
Of things he never saw, who tells his tale,
And friendship's secrets knows not to conceal ;
This man is vile ; here, Roman, fix your mark ;
His soul is black.

741. MARIA DE TORQUEMADA TAKING THE VAIL.

"My lord! you should have seen her, as she stood,
Bidding the world—farewell. Her pretty hands,
Like two enclasping lilies; in her eyes,
Two quivering crystal drops,—her cheek—a rose,
Yet of the whitest, turned upon the sky,
To which her thoughts were wing'd! I never saw
So heavenly touch'd a sorrow!"

There is a spot, a holy spot,

A refuge for the wearied mind;
Where earth's wild visions—are forgot,
And love, thy poison spell 's untwined.

There, learns the withered heart—to pray—

There, gently breaks earth's weary chain;

Nay, let me weep my life away—

Let me do all,—but love again.

Oh! thou that judgest of the heart,

Look down upon this bosom bare;

And all, all mercy as thou art,

Save from that wildest, worst despair.

There—silent, dreamless, loveless, lone,

The agony, at length, is o'er;

The bleeding breast—is turned to stone,

Hope dies—and passion—wakes no more.

I ask not death,—I wait thy will;

I dare not—touch my fleeting span:

But let me, oh! not linger still,

The slave of misery and man!

Why sink my steps! one struggle past,

And all the rest—is quiet gloom;

Eyes—look your longest, and your last,

Then, turn ye to your cell, and tomb.

Fly swift, ye hours!—the convent grate,

To me—is open Paradise:

The keenest bitterness of fate,

Can last, but till the victim—dies!

742. FALL OF BEAUTY, BY TEMPTATION.

Once on a lovely day, it was in spring—

I rested on the verge of that dread cliff,

That overlooks old Sterling. All was gay;

The birds—sang sweet; the trees—put forth their leaves, [soms;

So pale, that in the sun, they looked like blossoms;

Some children wandered, careless, on the hill,

Selecting early flowers. My heart rejoiced,

For all was glad around me. One sweet maid

Came tripping near, eyeing, with gladsome smile,

Each little flower, that bloomed upon the hill:

Nimble she picked them,—minding me of the swan,

That feeds upon the waste. I bless the girl,—

She was not maid, nor child; but of that age,

'Twixt both, when purity of frame, and soul,

Awaken dreams of beauty, drawn in heaven.

Deep in a little den, within the cliff.

A flower-ret caught her eye,—it was a primrose,

Fair flaunting in the sun. With eager haste,

Heedless of risk, she clambered down the steep;

Pluck'd the wish'd flower, and sighed! for when she saw

The depth she had descended, then, she woke

To sense of danger! All her flowers she dropped,

And tried to gain the height: but—tried in vain!

I hastened to her rescue: but—alas!

I came too late!—O God! she fell.

Far, far down—on the rocks below,

Her lovely form was found—at rest!

I saw her, in mid air, fall like a seraph

From out the firmament. The rooks and daws,

That fled their roosts, in thousands, at the sight,

Curtain'd her exit—from my palsied eye,

And dizzy brain. O! never, will that scene

Part from my heart! whence'er I would be sad,

I think of it.

743. THE BEST OF WIVES.

A man had once a vicious wife—

(A most uncommon thing in life); [ceasing.

His days—and nights—were spent in strife—un-

Her tongue went glibly—all day long,

Sweet contradiction—still her song, [done.

And all the poor man did—was wrong, and ill—

A truce without doors, or within,

From speeches—long as tradesmen spin,

Or rest from her eternal din, he found not.

He every soothing art displayed;

Tried of what stuff her skin was made:

Failing in all, to Heaven he prayed—to take her.

Once, walking by a river's side,

In mournful terms, "My dear," he cried, [them.

"No more let feuds our peace divide,—I'll end

"Weary of life, and quite resigned,

To drown—I have made up my mind,

So tie my hands as fast behind—as can be,—

"Or nature—may assert her reign,

My arms assist, my will restrain,

And swimming, I once more regain, my troubles"

With eager haste—the dame complies,

While joy—stands glistening in her eyes;

Already, in her thoughts, he dies—before her.

"Yet, when I view the rolling tide,

Nature revolts"—he said; "beside,

I would not be a suicide, and die thus.

"It would be better, far I think,

While close I stand—upon the brink,

You push me in,—nay, never shrink—but do it.

To give the blow—the more effect,

Some twenty yards—she ran direct, [do.

And did—what she could least expect, she should

He slips aside—himself to save,

So souse—she dashes, in the wave, [pleasure.

And gave, what ne'er she gave before—much

"Dear husband, help! I sink!" she cried;

"Thou best of wives—" the man replied,

"I would,—but you my hands have tied,—heaven help you."

The modern device of consulting indexes, is to read books hebraically, and begin where others usually end. And this is a compendi-ous way of coming to an acquaintance with authors; for authors are to be used like lobsters, you must look for the best meat in the tails, and lay the bodies back again in the dish. Your cunningest thieves (and what else are readers, who only read to borrow, i. e.

to steal) use to cut off the portmanteau from behind, without staying to dive into the pockets of the owner.—Swift.

Desire, (when young) is easily suppressed;

But, cherished by the sun of warm encouragement,

Becomes too strong—and potent—for control;

Nor yields—but to despair, the worst of passions

744. ALEXANDER'S FEAST.

'Twas—at the royal feast, for Persia won,
By Philip's warlike son.—
Aloft, in awful state, the godlike hero sat
On his imperial throne.
His valiant peers—were placed around,
Their brows, with roses, and with myrtles bound;
So, should desert, in arms be crownded.
The lovely Thais, by his side,
Sat, like a blooming Eastern bride,
In flower of youth, and beauty's pride.—
Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave, none but the brave,
None but the brave—deserve the fair.

Timotheus, placed on high,
Amid the tuneful choir.
With flying fingers—touched the lyre;
The trembling notes ascend the sky,
And heavenly joys inspire.
The song—began from Jove,
Who left his blissful seats above;
Such is the power—of mighty love.
A dragon's fiery form belied the god:
Sublime, on radiant spheres he rode,
When he, to fair Olympia pressed, [the world.
And stamped an image of himself, a sovereign of
The listening crowd—admire the lofty sound:
A present deity! they shout around;
A present deity! the vaulted roofs rebound.
With ravished ears, the monarch hears;
Assumes the god, affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.

The praise of Bacchus, then, the sweet musician
Of Bacchus, ever fair, and ever young. [sung,
The jolly god in triumph comes!
Sound the trumpets, beat the drums
Flushed with a purple grace,
He shows his honest face. [comes!
Now, give the hauboy's breath—he comes! he Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain.
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure;
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure.
Rich the treasure; sweet the pleasure;
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

Soothed with the sound, the king grew vain;
Fought his battles o'er again; [the slain.
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew
The master saw the madness rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And, while he heaven and earth defied,
Changed his hand, and checked his pride.—
He chose a mournful muse, soft pity to infuse,
He sung Darius, great and good, [len,
By too severe a fate, fallen, fallen, fallen, fal-
Fallen from his high estate,
And weltering in his blood.
Deserted, in his utmost need,
By those, his former bounty fed,
On the bare earth—exposed he lies,
With not a friend—to close his eyes.—
With downcast look—the joyless victor sat,
Revolving, in his altered soul,
The various turns of fate below,
And, now and then, a sigh he stole,
And tears—began to flow.

The master smiled, to see,
That love—was in the next degree;
'Twas but a kindred sound to move;
For pity—melts the mind to love.
Softly sweet in Lydian measures,
Soon, he soothed his soul to pleasures;
War, he sung, is toil and trouble;
Honor, but an empty bubble;
Never ending, still beginning,
Fighting still, and still destroying,
If the world be worth thy winning,
Think, oh! think it worth enjoying!
Lovely Thais sits beside thee;
Take the good the gods provide thee.—

The many rend the skies with loud applause;
So love was crowned, but music—won the cause.
The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gazed on the fair, who caused his care,
And sighed and looked; sighed and looked;
Sighed and looked; and sighed again:
At length, with love, and wine, at once oppress'd,
The vanquished victor—sunk—upon her breast.
Now, strike the golden lyre again;
A louder yet, and yet a louder strain:
Break his bands of sleep asunder,
And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.
Hark! hark!—the horrid sound [dead,
Hath raised up his head, as awaked from the
And amazed he stares around.
Revenge, revenge! Timotheus cries—
See the furies arise! See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in the air,
And the sparkles that flash from their eyes!
Behold a ghastly band, each a torch in his hand!
These are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain,
And, unburi'd, remain inglorious on the plain.
Give the vengeance due to the valiant crew!
Behold, how they toss their torches on high!
How they point to the Persian abodes,
And glittering temples of their hostile gods!
The princes applaud, with a furious joy; [stroy:
And the king seized a flambeau, with zeal to de-
Thais led the way, to light him to his prey;
And, like another Helen—fired another Troy.

Thus, long ago, ere heaving bellows learned to
While organs yet were mute; [blow,
Timotheus, to his breathing flute and sounding lyre,
Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire.
At last, divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame.
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length—to solemn sounds, [fore.
With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown be-
Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both—divide the crown;
He—raised a mortal—to the skies;
She—drew an angel down.—Dryden.

ORATOR PUFF.

Mr. Orator Puff—had two tones—in his voice,
The one—squeaking thus, and the other down so;
In each sentence he utter'd he gave you your choice,
For one half was B alt, and the rest G below.
Oh! oh! Orator Puff,
One voice for an orator's surely enough.
But he still talked away, spite of coughs and of frowns,
So distracting all ears with his ups and his downs,
That a wag once, on hearing the orator say,
"My voice is for war," ask'd him, "Which of them, pray?"
Oh! oh! &c.
Reeling homewards, one evening, top-heavy with gin,
And rehearsing his speech on the weight of the crown,
He tripp'd near a saw-pit, and tumbled right in,
"Sinking fund," the last words as his noddle came down.
Oh! oh! &c.
"Good Lord!" he exclaim'd, in his he-and-she tones,
"Help me out!—help me out!—I have broken my bones!"
"Help you out!" said a Paddy, who pass'd, "what a bother!"
Why, there's two of you there; can't you help one an-Oh! oh! &c. [other?"

CHARACTER OF A GOOD PARSON.

His preaching much, but more his practice wro't;
(A living sermon of the truths he taught;)
For this by rules severe his life he squared,
That all might see the doctrine which they heard.
For priests, he said, are patterns for the rest;
(The gold of heav'n, who bear the God impress'd;
But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The sovereign's image is no longer seen.
If they be foul on whom the people trust,
Well may the baser coin contract a rust.

745. PRIDE OF PROFESSION. We are very apt to be fond of that which we excel in ourselves, and to underrate the acquirements and powers of others in a different sphere, without reflecting that the field of human thought and occupation is broad, and that a man may carefully cultivate one part without being in the least acquainted with the products of another. With what contempt a skillful musician sometimes regards one who cannot turn a tune, but who, perhaps, is an excellent book-keeper, or an adroit ship-builder!

What a conscious pride and pomp of erudition a profound linguist betrays while quoting familiarly from Homer and Horace, Dante, or Lopez de Vega, before a simple student, only master of his mother tongue, and who in turn sneers at the mistakes made by others in speaking of natural philosophy and astronomy. I never suffer myself to be led away thus by a man's accidental accomplishments or attainments.

If I find a sensible good-hearted fellow (as I frequently do,) who has never even read Milton and Shakspeare, I respect him notwithstanding; for I say to myself, it is probable he is an adept at something besides literature, where perhaps I should require a similar indulgence from him.—Fay.

746. ODE FOR THE FOURTH OF JULY.

I see that banner proudly wave,
Yes, proudly waving yet,
Not a stripe is torn—from the broad array,—
Not a single star—is set;
And the eagle, with unruffled plume,
Is soaring aloft—in the welkin dome
Not a leaf—is pluck'd from the branch he bears:
From his grasp—not an arrow has flown;
The mist—that obstructed his vision—is past,
And the murmur of discord—is gone; [plain,
For he sees, with a glance over mountain, and
The union—unbroken, from Georgia—to Maine.
Far southward, in that sunny clime,
Where bright magnolias bloom,
And the orange—with the lime-tree vies,
In shedding rich perfume,
A sound was heard—like the ocean's roar,
As its surges break—on the rocky shore.
Was it the voice—of the tempest loud,
As it fell'd—some lofty tree,
Or sudden flash—from a passing storm—
Of heaven's artillery?
But it died away, and the sound of doves
Is heard again—in the scented groves.
The links—are all united still,
That form the golden chain.—
And peace, and plenty—smile around,
Throughout the wide domain:—
How feeble—is language,—how cold—is the lay,
Compar'd with the joy—of this festival day—
To see that banner—waving yet,
Aye, waving proud, and high,—
No rent—in all its ample folds;
No stain—of crimson dye:
And the eagle—spreads his pinions fair,
And mounts aloft—in the fields of air.—James.

Nature, in her productions slow, aspires,
By just degrees, to reach perfection's height.

747. MARIA. Her early youth—passed away in sorrow: she grew up in tears, a stranger to the amusements of youth, and its more delightful schemes, and imaginations. She was not, however, unhappy; she attributed, indeed, no merit to herself for her virtues, but for that reason—were they the more her reward. The peace which possesseth all understanding, disclosed itself in all her looks, and movements. It lay on her countenance, like a steady, unshadowed moonlight; and her voice, which was naturally at once sweet and subtle, came from her, like the fine flute-tones of a masterly performer, which, still floating at some uncertain distance, seem to be created by the player, rather than to proceed from the instrument. If you had listened to it, in one of those brief sabbaths of the soul, when the activity and discursiveness of the thoughts are suspended, and the mind, quietly eddies round, instead of flowing onward—(as at late evening, in the spring, I have seen a bat, wheel in silent circles round and round a fruit-tree, in full blossom, in the midst of which, as within a close tent, of the purest white, an unseen nightingale was piping its sweetest notes)—in such a mood, you might have half-fancied, half-felt, that her voice had a separate being of its own—that it was a living something, whose mode of existence was for the early only; so deep was resignation, so entirely had it become the unconscious habit of her nature, and in all she did, or said, so perfectly were both her movements, and her utterance, without effort, and without the appearance of effort.—Coleridge.

748. PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION.

There is a philosophy—hollow, unsound,
To matter—confining its false speculation;
Whose flight is confin'd within Nature's dull round,
Its pinions—the web—of sophistic persuasion.
And, there's a philosophy—truly Divine,
That traces effects—to—spiritual causes,
Determines the link—of the chain where they join,
And soars—to an infinite height—ere it pauses.
That—meanly debases—the image of God,
To rank with the brute—in the scale of creation;
This—raises the tenant of light—from the sod,
And bears him to heaven—his primitive station.
Hail! science—of angels! Theosophy—hail!
That shows us the regions of bliss by reflection;
Removes from creation's broad mirror—the veil,
Where spirit—and matter appear in connection.
It breaks on the soul—in an ocean of light, [ions,
She starts from her lethargy—stretches her pin-
Beholds a new world—bursting forth on her sight,
And—soaring in ecstasy—claims her dominions.
A sense of original, dignified worth,
Her bosom expands—with sublime exaltation;
She tastes immortality—even on earth.
In light, that eclipses—the sun's emanation.
Be sages, and pedants—to nature—confined, [ence;
As the bat—darkly flutters—in Luna's pale pres-
I'll soar, like the eagle—thro' regions of mind,
In the blaze of that sun—which is truth—in its essence.—Woodworth.
The man th't's resolute, and just,
Firm to his principles, and trust,
Nor hopes, nor fears, can bind.

References and Testimonials.

EXTRACT—From the Faculty of the Hanover College, Ia. Having attended Prof. Bronson's prelections to the students of this College, in the art of Elocution, we take great pleasure in bearing testimony, no less to his laborious fidelity to his pupils, than to the soundness of his principles, and his own thorough acquaintance with the subject he professes to teach. Mr. Bronson is no charlatan in his profession. Not content with communicating abstract knowledge, nor with exhibiting his own power of applying that knowledge, his great aim seems to be—to make the student a practical Elocutionist. We most cheerfully recommend him to the patronage of an enlightened public; and, especially, to the patrons of public Institutions of Learning.

EXTRACT—From the Committee of the classes at Princeton Theological Seminary. We take pleasure in expressing our approbation of the principles of Prof. Bronson's system, and the manner in which he inculcates them in his practical Lectures. His model is NATURE; and therefore, his primary object is to bring into active operation all those organs which nature designed to be employed in the production of vocal sounds. This object once attained, the beneficial consequences, which follow, are numerous; and, to the Public Speaker, invaluable. Articulation becomes easy and distinct, the voice acquires increased clearness, strength, flexibility and compass; and exhaustion, arising from protracted vocal labor, is avoided; together with inflammation of the lungs, and BRONCHITIS—those fearful forms of disease, which darken the prospects and curtail the usefulness of so many at the present day. Mr. B's oral instruction is entirely practical, and well calculated to verify the truth of his theory. We all join in expressing our high approbation of his system, and our firm conviction that it is well worthy the attention of all who aim at becoming good Singers, Readers, or public Speakers.

EXTRACT—From the Classes in the Miami University, Ohio. We take pleasure in expressing our entire satisfaction with him as a teacher, and of his mode of instruction. By this analysis and exposition of the elementary principles of language, he places within the hands of his pupils a Key to their faults, together with a definite mode of correcting them, and guiding their further efforts to improve in the art of Elocution. By his faithful attention, he has succeeded in giving entire satisfaction to all who have attended his Lectures. Being convinced that his plan is founded upon correct philosophical principles, and is adequate to the accomplishment of its professed object,—and having every confidence in his capability and faithfulness, we cheerfully recommend Prof. Bronson to all to whom he may offer his services, as a competent teacher of Elocution.

EXTRACT—From some of the Professors in Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.—Having attended Professor Bronson's Course of Lectures, we cheerfully bear witness to his COMPETENCY and faithfulness as an instructor; and are well satisfied that his system of discipline, if duly followed up, cannot fail to impart distinctness of articulation, with an easy and impressive elocution.

EXTRACT—From the students of Jefferson College, Canonsburgh, Pa.—We take this opportunity of expressing our approbation of Prof. Bronson's system, and of his capability to instruct others in this most important art. He is a perfect master of all he teaches, and the principles on which he bases his instructions are so accordant with Philosophy and common sense, as to recommend them to the approval of every admirer of elegant enunciation, either in Reading or Oratory. We recommend him to all persons who feel desirous of acquiring the art of Reading and Speaking with science and effect.

From the Mercantile Journal, Boston. We have no doubt but that Prof. Bronson is master of his subject; his instructions are of vast importance to public speakers. His appearance, his manner, his voice, and his mode of treating the subject of Elocution, are altogether original. His Recitations are well done, and give an agreeable variety to the Lectures. His Instructions must prove of immense value.

EXTRACT—From the Lexington, Ky. Intelligencer. Reader, do you ever spend money for superfluities, such as balls, circuses, menageries or theatres? If so, we are not going quarrel with you, or criticise your taste. But we are about to say, that a source of amusement, cheaper, more intellectual, more decidedly improving, and at the same time unquestionably innocent and entertaining, is presented in the Lectures on Elocution and Music now in progress by Professor Bronson.

Prof. Bronson is evidently master of his profession: he not only understands Oratory theoretically and practically, but possesses a most happy faculty of teaching it. Those who are fond of splendid specimens of Elocution should not fail of attending these Lectures. The knowledge obtained from this system is especially necessary for Mothers, and those who have the training of children, or the teaching of vocal music.—Daily Democrat, (Rochester), N. Y.

The mere announcement of Prof. Bronson's Lectures and Recitations, will be sufficient, in Trenton, to draw a large audience.—N. J. State Gazette.

Among the professors of Elocution of the present day, perhaps no one has attained the fame of Mr. Bronson. He understands the art of speaking theoretically and practically—medically and philologically—in every shape and in every form. Such varied qualifications as he possesses are rarely found, and all who read the Herald should hear him.—N. Y. Herald.

Professor Bronson's lectures have been listened to by crowded audiences. He has been compelled, for want of room to leave Masonic Hall, and occupy the Westminster Street Chapel.—Proc. R. I. Journal.

EXTRACT—From a letter by MR. LOWELL MASON, Boston, a celebrated composer and teacher of Music.

"As far as I can judge of your principles, I approve; they appear to me to be founded in truth and nature. I have introduced something of your system into my classes. Knowing what I now know, I should certainly give the money right over again for the knowledge I acquired; yes, double, were it necessary. Could I command the time I should like to pursue the study much longer with you; but what I have already acquired I consider highly important, and you have my THANKS as well as my MONEY."

EXTRACT—From the Journal of Commerce, N.Y. Mr. Bronson is certainly one of the most original and entertaining men with whom we meet. He treats on all matters relating to sound, and its organs, and illustrates his principles by examples of singing and rhetorical rehearsal of a high character.

The Recitations of Prof. Bronson were received with great satisfaction, by one of the largest assemblies that we have ever seen in College Hall. No author need ask more, than to have the delicate touches of his fancy, and the hidden meaning of his thought, brought out by the professor.—Cincinnati Daily Gazette.

Prof. Bronson's Lectures and Recitations have been received with decided favor in almost every City in the Union, and in our principal Towns and Literary Institutions. We heard him some years since, and derived much instructions and profit from his original theory of the Human Voice; and of the means of strengthening and perfecting it, and of curing the prevalent diseases of the vocal organs Bronchitis, &c. N. Y. Daily Tribune.
